QUISTBUNDEE, or MONTHLY REVENUE INSTALMENT, as proposed by the MALGOOZARS.

	KURRELF INSTALMENT.					RUBBEE INSTALMENT.			Jaith.	TOTAL.
	Kooar.	Katiek.	Aghan.	Poos.	Maugh.	Phagoon.	Chyt.	Bysakh.
1st PUTTEE:		Eight Annas.				Eight Annas.
Bance Ram ..	85 0 0	248 0 0	248 0 0	248 0 0	248 0 0	248 0 0	330 0 0	660 0 0	335 0 0	2,650 0 0
2d PUTTEE:		Nine Annas.				Seven Annas.
Hurkeo & others ..	86 0 0	172 0 0	172 0 0	172 0 0	86 0 0	86 0 0	172 0 0	285 0 0	172 14 0	1,403 14 0
TOTAL ..	171 0 0	420 0 0	420 0 0	420 0 0	334 0 0	334 0 0	502 0 0	945 0 0	507 14 0	4,053 14 0

TRANSLATION of the UMMUL DUSTUCK, or Agreement between Government and Managers of Revenue.

AGREEMENT as per Puttee, granted to Bance Ram, zemindar of 13 biswas and 15 biswansees of Mouza Silareeh, pergunnah Chuprowlee.

WHEREAS the settlement of 13 biswas and 15 biswansees of this village having been concluded from 1235 to 1246 F., a term of twelve years, under the provisions of Regulation VII. of 1822, at the total jumma of 31,800 rupees of the Furruckabad kaldar, 45 sun rupee, the half of which is 15,900: this agreement is executed under the following specifications:

1st. The persons engaging for the Government Revenue are to obey orders as underwritten, to the end of the present lease. No increase of jumma to be demanded.

2d. Should it at any time be proved that the malgoozars or engaging proprietors have either directly or indirectly used collusive means to conceal any part of the lands appertaining to the village, or of having withheld any point of information connected with the revision of the settlement, they will be dealt with accordingly.

3d. The ryots are to be treated kindly, every exertion made to improve the cultivation of the soil, and extending the population.

4th. The settlement is to be formed upon an equitable basis with reference to average pergunnah and village rates, and a due observance of tenderness to the village community, carefully avoiding all manner of excess in the demands.

5th. The fixed assessment is to be regularly paid into the public treasury, according to the instalments. All profits and losses are to be borne by the parties holding the farming interests of the estate.

6th. The repair of the public roads to be at the expense of the malgoozars as heretofore, according to ancient usage.

7th. No deviation from established rules as to the rights of persons, whether of the lower classes or village servants, shall be allowed.

8th. Every attention is to be afforded to strangers and travellers, and the protection and safety of the roads.

9th. To be answerable for the adjustment of the dues of the putwary and village watchman.

10th

10th. A rigid adherence to all the legislative enactments now in force, and which may hereafter be enacted; being accountable for every transaction either of a judicial or fiscal nature.

11th. Should it be at any time established to the satisfaction of the Revenue authorities, that the cultivation of the lands has been wilfully neglected, and thereby causing a decrease in the assets of the estate, no consideration whatever will be allowed.

Dated 28 June 1827.

Annual jumma	Rs. 2,650 0
Harkoo, Sunlook, Bustee, Hinta, Behal, for					1,403 14, on same conditions.
					<hr/> 4,053 14 <hr/>

Rates per Beegah of every kind of land cultivated for staple articles of produce, viz.—

						Rs.	A.	P.
Sugar-cane	8	6	0
Murwa	1	15	10
Cotton	4	4	7½
Carrots	2	4	0
Churree	1	15	10
Oil Seed	2	4	0

Division of the grain produce, viz.—

The Government share; the cultivator's share; both in equal moieties.

PUTTEE UMMUL DUSTUCK, or agreement between Landlord and Tenant.

Whereas this agreement granted to A. B., cultivator in Mouza Selanch, pergunnah Chuprowlee, witnesseth, that I have assigned twenty-five beegahs out of my own puttee to him, to cultivate from 1235 to 1246 F. inclusive. He may confidently prosecute his labours, and use his best endeavours in the cultivation of the land, liquidating, harvest after harvest, the amount of rent at the subjoined rates: no excess whatever shall be demanded of him, even on account of village expense, saving what may be incurred in ordinary and necessary cases, and then not to exceed five per cent. upon the Government jumma.

Rates per Beegah of every kind of land producing staple articles, viz.

						Rs.	A.	P.
Sugar-cane	8	6	0
Murwara	1	15	10
Cotton	4	4	7½
Churree	1	15	10
Carrots	2	4	0
Oil Seeds, &c.	2	4	0

Division of the grain produce in every kind of land, viz.—

The Government's share; the cultivator's share; both in equal moieties.

(Signed) R. C. GLYN, Collector.

No. 10.—RESOLUTION of GOVERNMENT.

THE Governor-general in Council, having deliberately considered and fully discussed the subject of the above Minutes, proceeds to record the conclusions to which he has been led, and the final arrangements which it appears to be desirable to adopt for establishing in the Revenue department a better system of direction and control; and for providing in the Judicial department for the more efficient and prompt administration of criminal justice.

In the Revenue department, it appears to his Lordship in Council to be unquestionable that the present Boards neither adequately superintend the executive officers of the districts under their authority, nor afford to Government that aid in the administration of Revenue affairs, which its other avocations render it indispensably necessary to require.

In the various instances of embezzlement which have occurred, it has almost uniformly appeared that the defalcation might be traced to the prevalence, for a long period, of abuses which could not have escaped the knowledge of a controlling authority resident in the vicinity, and frequently visiting the districts. In scarcely any instance has it been found that the criminals have suddenly formed the design of converting to their own use any part of the public money intrusted to their charge. Their guilt has grown out of minor offences, to which they have been generally prompted by some neglect or misplaced confidence, gradually leading them to the grossest fraud, through a long course of irregularity.

Proceedings frequently come under the notice of Government, which manifest the existence of misunderstanding between the Board and collectors, that could not exist if the former had the power of frequently holding a personal communication with the latter; which seriously hinder the transaction of business, and which load the public records with voluminous correspondence on the merest matters of detail. In a recent case, the Board and Government were left for some time in doubt whether the collector of a district was really able to discharge the ordinary duties of his office. The Beerbhoom doubt was not cleared up until a member was specially deputed to the spot by Government; and the result of his inquiries, though on the whole satisfactory, was not such as to remove the impression that a much closer control should be exercised over the affairs of the district than has yet been applied. It is understood that the Board are by no means satisfied with the conduct of the collector of Mymensing. The benefits which have resulted from the institution of a collectorship at Bakergunge appear to fall greatly below the prospect of advantage with which Government resolved upon the measure. In Chittagong and Sylhet, a number of years have passed in endeavours to assert the right of Government to lands, stated to be certainly liable to assessment. Measurements and other proceedings have been adopted, involving a considerable expense; but as yet little or no practical benefit has resulted to the state.

The collector of Bhaugulpore, Mr. Ward, himself long ago suggested to the Board the great advantage that would result from a visitation by one of the members, particularly in the speedy determination of various questions involving no inconsiderable amount of revenue, and otherwise of much importance, of which the decision must, under the present system of management, be protracted through a long course of correspondence; and the Board, from their late report regarding the progress made by that officer on the settlement of the Dominickoh, appear to be fully sensible of the great benefit to be derived from a personal communication with him.

In Moorshedabad, the Board have recently stated, that there are many important arrangements to be effected, some of them likely to be productive of a considerable increase of revenue, which ought not apparently to have been so long delayed; and in several other districts there is said to be much to be done that is left undone.

The precise extent to which the interests of the Government or those of the people suffer suffer from the want of a more energetic control, or the degree in which the executive officers fail, where they do fail, cannot of course be precisely stated; in fact, one of the strongest grounds for inferring the inefficiency of the present system is, his Lordship in Council conceives, to be found in the want of precision which characterizes the information attainable in regard to the circumstances of the several districts and the administration of them.

In the above remarks, the Governor-general in Council has immediate reference to the Lower Provinces. In the unsettled districts, where every collector is now engaged in a course of detailed inquiry affecting most deeply the interests of Government and of the agricultural community, it would be idle to enter at length on any course of argument to prove the indispensable necessity of placing the executive officers under the direction and control of superiors, whose sphere of authority may admit of their frequently visiting the several districts under them, and of their being always accessible to the petitions of the people. The conduct of the Central Board has very frequently obtained for it the approbation of Government. Their reports are always highly valuable. But it is impossible not to perceive that the extent of country under their authority seriously hindered them from doing what they otherwise would have done, in stimulating and directing the collectors under them in the revision of the settlement and detailed assessment of the country, to add largely to the public resources, and at the same time to afford, where necessary, relief to those by whom or at whose risk and charge the land is cultivated. On this head it is sufficient to refer to the districts of Allahabad and Goruckpore. And if the financial advantages that might be secured are important, still more so must his Lordship in Council regard the sum of happiness and comfort which the substitution of a moderate and equal assessment for a system of undefined taxation may be expected to create. At the present moment, the Board is very properly about to visit Goruckpore, for the purpose of instructing the collector on various points of detail, which can only properly be settled in personal communication; yet their presence appears to be required with equal urgency in the opposite side of their jurisdiction, viz. in Bundelcund, where the Revenue officers have the difficult task to perform of correcting the evils of over-assessment, and of remedying, as far as possible, the mischiefs which have resulted from public sales, and the injudicious application of unsuitable laws.

In the Western provinces, the Board has for some years ceased to exist as a collective body, the senior member being employed in Rohilcund, Mr. Fraser having separate charge of the northern districts of the Doab, and Mr. Newnham superintending the remainder of the Board's jurisdiction with his head station at Furruckabad. As far, therefore, as advantage is to be found in personal discussion at the Board, the object of its constitution is wholly lost. The efficiency of the individual member is at the same time seriously impaired by the necessity under which they are placed of making frequent references to their distant colleagues, which at once lessens their authority with the collectors and the people, and takes from them that sense of responsibility which, under such circumstances, is the best security for the faithful and zealous discharge of a high trust.

On the whole, therefore, his Lordship in Council is decidedly of opinion that, in the Revenue department, very great advantage will result from the employment of commissioners, as proposed, to superintend the affairs of a moderate extent of country; and it appears to be clearly necessary that a Board should be established at the Presidency to maintain a general control; to secure, as far as local circumstances admit, consistency of proceedings; and to relieve Government from many of the questions of detail on which it is now required to decide.

In the Judicial department, his Lordship in Council would anticipate not less advantage from vesting the commissioners with the powers that now belong to the courts of circuit. On this head, the general observations contained in Mr. Bayley's Minute seem almost to supersede the necessity of further argument. Instances are fresh in recollection, in which very serious abuses and errors of management have been allowed to prevail prevail for a long time unchecked by the courts of circuit and superintendence of police ; which could not possibly have had existence without being known to an officer exercising the powers of a commissioner, frequently visiting the districts under him, and with all the avenues of information which will open themselves to one exercising jointly Judicial and Revenue authority. In the hurried visits which judges of circuit now pay to the stations of different magistrates under their authority, they have no leisure or opportunity to acquire that accurate knowledge of men and circumstances which is essential to any thing like an energetic control ; and the people can scarcely expect to find adequate protection from an officer who is destined to revisit them only after a long interval, who in the changes of the service may probably never revisit them at all, and who has little knowledge, and can take no cognizance, of those matters on which hang the most valuable interests and the strongest attachments of the prevailing classes of the community.

Under the proposed plan, his Lordship in Council confidently expects that the commissioners will attain to such a thorough acquaintance with their respective divisions, as to render it next to impossible that any systematic abuse can be practised, or any serious wrong sustained, by the act or omission of the executive officers, without coming to their knowledge. It will be the care of Government to make such a selection as may afford a satisfactory assurance that this expectation shall not be disappointed, and that the knowledge of abuse or wrong being obtained, remedy and redress shall promptly follow.

Independently too of the greater efficiency of the controlling authority, his Lordship in Council is disposed to anticipate much advantage from the greater punctuality which will be observed in effecting the general gaol deliveries throughout the country. The necessity of making their circuits for this purpose will obviate any risk of disappointment in the expectations which Government have hitherto failed fully to realize, of the advantage anticipated from the frequent visitation by the superior Revenue authorities of the districts under their control : and on the whole his Lordship in Council sees no reason to conclude, that the proposed arrangement will not only provide a remedy for the evils that have arisen out of the irregularities and delays which have occurred in holding the sessions, contrary to the original design of Government in instituting the courts of circuit (evils which on any other plan could be remedied only by measures involving a considerable increase of expense), but will at no distant period secure for the people a better administration of criminal law, and a more complete security against the abuses incident in all countries to the powers necessary for police and for the collection of revenue (abuses here aggravated by peculiar circumstances), than could be hoped for under the existing system.

In so far as the Revenue department is concerned, the Governor-general in Council conceives that, in adopting the proposed arrangements, he is only following the course that has been pointed out by the instructions of the honourable Court. The separation of the controlling and executive authority is an improvement on the scheme followed at Madras, of which his Lordship in Council confidently anticipates their entire approval ; and such separation of authority is a circumstance that appears to remove all the objections which might otherwise be urged to the union of Revenue and Judicial powers. For, as is justly remarked by Mr. Bayley, even allowing the danger of abuse from giving magisterial powers to collectors, there seems to be no rational ground of apprehension from an union of power in the controlling authority, excepting under circumstances which would forbid Government from confiding in it at all.

The union of civil and criminal powers in the provincial courts appears to form no essential part of the existing system. It is an arrangement which is generally condemned as injurious to the administration of civil justice, not only in those courts, but in the sudder and in the district Adawlut. The separation, consequently, of the functions of the courts of circuit from those of the court of appeal, will be generally regarded as an improvement improvement in the latter ; and on the fullest consideration of the subject, his Lordship in Council can perceive no ground on which the transfer of the former to the Revenue commissioners can be justly objected to, even by those who most strenuously desire to preserve in its essential features the general scheme of administration prescribed by the rules of 1793. In both capacities the commissioners will act as deliberative functionaries, entirely free from the haste and passion which may be supposed occasionally to influence the executive. In neither can they have objects to carry in the one department through any perversion of their powers in the other. The proposed arrangement leaving untouched the jurisdiction of the civil courts, does not break down any of the barriers which have been supposed to be necessary or useful for the protection of the people against the errors of the Revenue authorities. The objection which may be urged on the score of the subordination of the magistrates to the commissioners appears to have little weight. It has no application to districts in which the civil judge does not hold the magistracy ; and under the plan which Mr. Bayley contemplates for the extension of that system, it would altogether cease.

In the cases (there are now many) in which the collectors or sub-collectors are also magistrates, a corresponding union of powers in the controlling authorities is indeed almost essential to their efficiency. Nothing can well be less reasonable in itself, nothing can appear to the natives of the country so preposterous, as that the young officers who hold the situations of sub-collectors and joint magistrates should be legally authorized, in the latter capacity, utterly to disregard the injunctions and advice of the Board to which they are subject as Revenue officers ; and that the members of the Board, vested with the important trust of regulating (subject to the control of Government alone) the assessment to which the whole lauded property of the country shall be subjected, should yet be unable to interpose to protect the zemindars and cultivators from the lowest retainer of the police, but are compelled to inform those whom they see injured before their eyes that they must seek redress at a distant tribunal. What conclusion can the people of the remoter parts of Sheranpoor and of the central Doab be expected to draw, when they see Mr. Fraser in the one quarter, and Mr. Newnham in the other, sedulously scrutinizing the acts of the Revenue officers, village by village, yet hearing without notice, at least without redress, the complaints which the people may prefer of the violence or extortion of the police ? What, but that in the sight of Government the collection of revenue is as every thing, and the protection of the people an object of altogether secondary importance ? And of all causes of discontent, there is probably none so pregnant with mischief among the people of India, as any symptom, on the part of Government or its officers, of an indisposition to hear the petitions of the people. Much actual injustice and much denial of justice they will bear with comparative patience, attributing, really as well as in words, to the errors of their rulers the unhappiness of their fate. But to turn a deaf ear to the voice of complaint ; to deny to those who think themselves aggrieved the consolation, however poor, of stating their grievances, and the chance, however slight, of obtaining redress, is felt by the sufferer, and regarded by the community as an unequivocal mark of the most odious tyranny.

These last observations are applicable with peculiar force to the Western provinces ; because there, not only are the people less patient of wrong, but because the arrangements of the Revenue officers, in the settlement of villages, and those of the magistrates for the establishment of the police, are constantly found to be closely connected with each other. In truth, every scheme of police not built upon the institutions of the people, or fashioned to meet them, must be inefficient if not mischievous. It may suffice to prevent open violence and atrocities, but it will do so nearly in the same way as the military occupation of the country would do, with the same vigour, the same show of success, but with the same inherent evils and the same want of every tendency to improvement.

In a word, to frame Judicial measures under such circumstances, without a full advertence to Revenue arrangements, is to build in the dark and without a foundation.

On the other hand, the rights that belong to Government in the Revenue settlement of the country are such, as that the mode in which they are exercised must have a very important influence on the whole frame of society. To exercise them in ignorance or carelessness of their effects upon the Judicial administration of the country, is to leave to chance the direction of one of the most powerful instruments by which a government can work upon the will and destiny of its subjects.

In whatever light, therefore, his Lordship in Council contemplates the proposed measure, he sees abundant reason to conclude that it will be greatly conducive to the public interests. Nor must it be forgotten, that we are not now discussing the question how a scheme which has generally answered its object can be improved, but how glaring defects, urgently calling for the interposition of Government, can be remedied.

As to the expediency of introducing generally that union of Judicial and Fiscal powers which prevails in the districts to which the printed Regulations do not extend, the Governor-general in Council does not now propose to enter upon any discussion. His Lordship in Council will only observe generally, that in all departments, and under all forms, real control, and our security for good government, must rest chiefly on the authority of superior over inferior men; failing that, on the authority of those who have time to deliberate over those who are obliged to act with little or no deliberation, and in the necessity on the part of the executive of rendering an account to a controlling authority, possessed of sufficient knowledge to make deception as to facts unlikely. In all cases, control without knowledge must be nugatory or mischievous; and while the proposed arrangement appears to involve no consequence likely to prove injurious, it has a manifest tendency to ensure the possession, by the controlling officers, of that local information which is essential to their efficiency, and to the acquisition of which, in jurisdictions so extensive as now belong to them, the variety of rights and institutions prevalent in different quarters, and various other circumstances peculiar to the country, oppose extraordinary obstacles.

Whatever may be finally resolved in regard to the administration of civil justice, the measure now proposed can be no impediment to its adoption. On the contrary, if it should be resolved altogether to disjoin that branch of Judicial function from the police and the punishment of crime, a step towards that end will have been made by relieving the judges of appeal from the duties of the circuit; and on the other hand, should it be ultimately deemed expedient to effect a more general union of municipal functions, the attainment of the object will be facilitated by the appointment of the commissioners. His Lordship in Council observes that, even in the Regulation provinces, the union of the powers belonging to the Courts of Circuit and Revenue Boards is not now for the first time to be tried. In Cuttack the plan, with a similar union in the civil department, has now been in operation for about ten years, and has been attended with benefit. In part of Rungpore, also, it has been tried successfully; and out of the Regulation provinces, Government has had every reason to be satisfied with the result of a system, under which the principle of united power is carried much further. In Delhi, especially, a vast improvement in the resources of the country; a corresponding augmentation of revenue, collected without any recourse to the measure of public sale; the preservation of the village communities and institutions; an entire prevention of that confusion as to private rights which besets the Revenue and Judicial officers in Bengal and the Western provinces; a change from utter disorganization in the general government to a state of tranquillity and order not less complete than is known in any other quarter of the country, appear to evidence the advantage of the system; and the more one may be disposed to anticipate evils from the union of powers in the executive, the stronger must the argument appear in favour of such an union in the controlling authority, if we allow that it has sufficed to prevent or correct them.

If the plan was not equally successful under the Western Board, during the few years in which they administered the affairs of the Delhi territory, the result is to be attributed bated to causes that will not be found in the proposed arrangement; the jurisdiction of the commissioners being limited, their powers accurately defined, and their responsibility undivided.

In Cuttack, the only change which his Lordship in Council deems to be necessary, is, that of placing the commissioner under the authority of the sudder court in the civil; as he actually is in the criminal department; and in revenue matters he will, like other provincial commissioners, correspond with the Presidency Board. It appears to be also advisable, that he should exercise the same powers in the district of Midnapore, which is to be annexed to his division.

There are two other quarters in which also his Lordship in Council considers it to be advisable to adopt the system followed in Cuttack (modified as above stated), viz. the districts which are to be placed under the commissions of Assam and Arracan.

For a considerable time to come, it will be obviously inexpedient to introduce into those provinces any complicated system of government, and to the commissioners employed in the superintendence of them, there must necessarily be confided a larger trust than is generally necessary in our older possessions. The officers appointed for the duty will consequently be, like Mr. Scott and Mr. Pakenham, select men, to whom the full powers of the Cuttack commission, with such modifications as local circumstances may suggest, may unobjectionably be confided, even though the general union of powers in the controlling authorities should not be deemed expedient. Whether the commissioners shall, in their ordinary Judicial and Revenue administration of Assam and Arracan, act under the authority of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut and of the Presidency Board, is a question that will remain for future consideration. Ultimately such a measure may be contemplated, as one calculated to secure the more regular administration of civil and criminal justice and of the Revenue affairs, and to relieve Government from the necessity of exercising any minute interference; and in the mean time, by the arrangement above mentioned, the efficiency of the commissioners of Arracan and Assam will be augmented, and the inconsistency of their possessing different degrees of trust in tracts immediately adjoining to each other, and likely by colonization to be occupied, partially at least, by the same or similar races, will be obviated.

As suggested by Sir Charles Metcalfe, his Lordship in Council proposes to place the several divisions of the Delhi territory under a single commissioner; the adjoining districts of the North Doab to form a separate charge. If both officers are to reside at Delhi, this will certainly be the most convenient arrangement: and though, supposing the officer in charge of the northern districts to have his head-quarters at Paniput, some advantage on the score of proximity would result from the union of districts on both sides the Jumna, yet on the whole the plan of keeping them distinct appears to be preferable.

It at the same time appears to his Lordship in Council to be advisable to extend to the districts in question the plan of administration so successfully followed in Cuttack, with the modification obviously suggested by local circumstances, that the resident at Delhi shall, in regard to them, exercise the powers possessed by the Sudder Adawlut and Presidency Board, which he is to continue to exercise in the Delhi territory while relieved from the duty of holding the sessions of gaol delivery at the stations of the principal assistants, and from that of exercising a minute control over those officers in the Revenue department.

From such an arrangement, great advantage may be anticipated in all branches of the administration.

At Delhi, the history, functions, and plans of the different rulers and managers who preceded us in the Northern Doab, with many other particulars importantly affecting the interests of Government and those of the people, are to be ascertained with a facility not enjoyed by tribunals stationed within the territories ceded by the Oude government, still less by one fixed at Calcutta. The village communities and popular institutions in the Delhi territory having been preserved entire, afford to an officer, conversant with the details of Revenue management there, very great advantage in steering his way amidst the Papers referred to in Letter from the

Bengal
Government,
10th Dec. 1828.

the doubts and difficulties in which public sales and erroneous records, and the other intricacies of an artificial and exclusive system, have involved the rights and interests of the different classes of the agricultural community on this side the Jumna; and it is accordingly worthy of remark, that the first officer who satisfactorily developed the state of property as existing under a great variety of tenure in Seharunpore, was a gentleman (Mr. Cavendish) who had been trained in the Delhi territory, and whose reports, with the defects naturally incident to a new undertaking, and notwithstanding the shortness of his deputation, are stated to afford more real information relative to the district than is to be found in the accumulated records of twenty years, and have been frequently recognized by Government as possessing the highest value.

The course of trade in all the great staples of the country lies in lines running across the Jumna; the arrangements of the merchants embrace the marts lying on both sides of that river; the price of agricultural produce, and the prospects consequently of the zemindars in the one quarter, are materially affected by events in the other. That important work the Doab Canal, from the completion of which a great improvement in the cultivation of the country and a large increase of revenue has been anticipated, is under the superintendence of officers residing at Delhi. But what is much more important, the people on both sides the Jumna are stated to be, generally speaking, of the same tribes, and closely connected together.

One prevalent caste in the north of the Doab, the Goojuns, are still notorious for their predatory habits, their gross ignorance, and their aversion to industry. A few years ago many of them were in a state of open resistance to authority, and for a long time to come they will, in a peculiar degree, require an energetic government, equally to secure their rights and to enforce their obedience; for in proportion as they are too rude to understand, or too insubordinate to obey laws, is their liability to suffer by the acts of designing men.

The Revenue and Judicial administration of Seharunpore especially was for a considerable time very imperfectly calculated to meet the exigency of the case; the disorders occasioned by the usurpations of the Revenue farmers and Sudder malgoozars, and by the abuses of an ill controlled police, are still, it is understood, very imperfectly corrected; and they can be corrected only by a system of administration that shall carry justice to the doors of the people, with a close observation of the state of things as actually found to exist, rather than as exhibited in records, or represented in formal memorials.

By the arrangement in question, the communities on both sides the Jumna will have one head to look to. Those within the Doab will, if they deem themselves aggrieved by the commissioners, find a higher tribunal comparatively close at hand, in the natural capital of that part of the country, a tribunal which is at present occupied by one well known to them for extensive experience in Revenue and Judicial affairs, and possessing in a singular degree the respect of his fellow-servants, and which is likely always to be occupied by gentlemen of rare qualifications. The advantage of such an arrangement, contrasted with one which shall refer suitors resident within sight of the walls of Delhi to the provincial court at Bareilly, and thence to Calcutta, merely because they live in the Doab, or, though living in Delhi (and there are many such), because the property in contest, lying possibly within a coss of that capital, is separated from it by the Jumna, need not be insisted upon. In the police, the complete co-operation of the authorities on the two banks of the river, which will thus be more effectually secured, is likely to be attended with advantage, and in all departments, in short, the connexion of the districts in question with Delhi appears to be likely to promote the interests of the people and those of Government, independently of the high character of the resident; while it is obvious, that any relief which may thus be given to the sudder court will also in its degree be advantageous.

With the above exceptions of the Assam, Arracan, Cuttack, and Delhi commissioners, his Lordship in Council proposes that the judicial functions to be exercised by the commissioners shall be confined to those which belong to the courts of circuit and superintendents dents of police. It does not immediately occur to his Lordship in Council that any of the powers vested in those courts ought to be withheld from the commissioners, nor that they can in any case require further authority in matters of police and criminal justice than what those courts and the superintendents of police possess. But some new rules, in regard to the employment of the law officers, will apparently be necessary.

The offices of superintendents of police may certainly be abolished, and are to be abolished accordingly; and the commissioners of revenue and circuit will, for their respective divisions, perform all the duties and exercise all the powers now belonging to the superintendents, with exception to that given to them by Regulation X. 1824, in regard to the pardon of persons charged with or suspected of criminal offences. It appears to his Lordship in Council, that the magistrates and joint-magistrates should be authorized to tender a pardon in the several cases specified in the said Regulation, without reference to any superior authority, under their responsibility to the superior courts and to Government for the sound exercise of the discretion vested in them.

The commissioners acting under Regulation I. 1821, may likewise, his Lordship in Council conceives, be now advantageously dispensed with, and their powers transferred to the commissioners.

The use made of the process of sale in the early stage of our administration in the Western provinces is deeply to be lamented. No error has been productive of so much misery and mischief. In districts, especially, containing large communities of zemindars, who have been accustomed to account to Government for its revenue through the agency of head men, the evil has been of the most aggravated description. The existence of such communities, like that of parish and country associations, appears to offer to Government an invaluable facility in the administration of affairs; the details of which, if not administered by the people for themselves, can never be well administered. The union they secure, while thus municipally advantageous, seems to present no danger of political inconvenience; but, on the contrary, to offer in some cases, under good management, the prospect of political security. To preserve them, as in the Delhi territory they have been preserved, should be an object of our most anxious care. To restore is a far more difficult task. The revolution caused by public sales has therefore been of the worst consequence to Government. To individuals it has in all instances occasioned much distress; and in the case of the communities now referred to, it has thrown into an almost inextricable confusion the rights and interests of the people: no one can say precisely what has been sold. On the one side, the great body of the landholders have to urge, that a just government can never have designed to deprive thousands of their hereditary property because the heavens denied their rain; or to subject them to a cruel confiscation, because some of their body were improvident. On the other hand, the purchasers allege that an honest government cannot have exposed to sale what it did not intend they should possess. On the whole, his Lordship in Council is of opinion, an opinion strengthened by the consideration of the proceedings of the special commissioners, that justice and policy equally require us to proceed with a decided resolution to allow the zemindars who have suffered by sales the benefit of every doubt. The process was in fact, in most cases, a confiscation incurred by alleged default; and in their suits for the recovery of the property so lost by them, the parties may equitably claim to benefit by every circumstance which ought to have availed them before the forfeiture took effect.

Adequate compensation must of course be made, as prescribed in Regulation I. 1821, to the purchasers in cases in which they may be deprived of property, except on clear proof of their title being bad. But the utmost amount of compensation likely to be chargeable on this principle, in a country in which the Government demand is still variable, must, his Lordship in Council conceives, bear but a small proportion to the expense incurred by Government in maintaining the establishment of a separate commission; and under the plan now contemplated, our progress in giving redress will, it may be hoped, be much more rapid. The facts touching the sales and the arrears for or on pretence of which they were made do not seem to be, generally speaking, difficult of ascertainment.

In

In the majority of the cases reported to Government, the injury done to the zemindars has been manifest. The nature of the evidence (the documentary evidence especially) is ordinarily such as to fall properly under the cognizance of the Revenue officers; and no opportunity can present itself more favourable to the full development of all the circumstances necessary to a sound judgment than that enjoyed by a collector when engaged in making a detailed settlement of the lands in dispute. This remark is in an especial degree applicable to those investigations which the special commissioners have been required to prosecute, in order to give effect to their decrees relative to Putwarree estates, when the claims of numerous parceners have to be adjusted. In such cases, it seems to be scarcely possible to come to any satisfactory conclusion except upon the spot and among the people, with all the lights which a field measurement and detailed census throw upon the village concerns, and with the power of immediate reference to every one concerned in the event, and to all in the vicinity who are cognizant of the truth. In such cases it frequently happens, that the original rights of inheritance from the common ancestor have been modified by respect for long possession, and the actual distribution of fields differs widely from the nominal divisions of the village: among different tribes and in different places, the community of property will be found to prevail in very different degrees. The modes of distributing the common burthen are equally various. Men professing the Moslem faith will, in some cases, be found to retain the name and almost all the usages of Hindoos; and, independently of any intermixture of religion, the general law of inheritance, more especially the inheritance of females, will be found to yield to long usage. In such a state of things there is infinite danger of mischief in any attempt to settle the rights of a large coparcenary, otherwise than in the mode prescribed for collectors when employed in revising the settlement. The result of the settlements which have been made seems to show that the people are by no means unreasonably litigious, when their claims are investigated under circumstances favourable to the discovery of truth. In their villages, and surrounded by their fellows, they yielded readily to what is condemned by the general voice. On the spot points notorious and palpable are settled without delay, which in a distant cutcherry would lead to endless litigation and falsehood; and the officer who has to decide is at once saved the labour of much useless inquiry, and finds a thousand facilities for investigation and decision which he must otherwise look for in vain. It is understood that the Mofussil special commissioners are themselves strongly impressed with the views above stated: they are consequently desirous of keeping distinct the duty of deciding on the primary point of the validity of the sale, and that of ultimately adjusting the relative rights of the zemindars among each other. It appears however to be very desirable, on grounds that have more than once been explained, that the two things should, as far as possible, be determined simultaneously; and his Lordship in Council is not less satisfied of the expediency of combining the redress of wrongs sustained through the operation of public sales and errors of record with the settlement of the revenue. The collectors and other officers vested with the powers of collectors may ascertain and report all the necessary facts; and the Revenue commissioners will be authorized to decide upon them (after such further inquiry as may appear necessary) with the same powers as belong to the special commission acting under the provisions of Regulation I. 1821. With the exception of cases (few such are likely to occur) which may be appealable to England, it seems to be proper that a special appeal only should be allowed from the decision of the commissioners; and this appeal his Lordship in Council is of opinion should lie to the Presidency Board, which will thus take the place of the Sudder Special Commission. The cognizance of the commissioners should extend to all cases, however recent the cause of action; it appearing to be certain that there are many claims of the nature in question requiring to be promptly investigated and properly cognizable by collectors making detailed settlements, which have their origin in acts done subsequently to the period assumed in Regulation I. 1821, and there being no sufficient reason for denying to wrongs of later the same remedy as is afforded to those of older date, but many reasons to the contrary.

The cases actually before the Sudder Special Commission in appeal, and the appeals which may be preferred to them previously to the legal enactment of the arrangement now contemplated contemplated, will be tried and decided as heretofore. And it being the intention of his Lordship in Council to separate the office of commissioner, under Regulation III. of the present year, from that of judge in any of the established courts, the gentlemen who are commissioners under the last-mentioned law for the divisions of Calcutta and Moorshedabad, will continue temporarily to act as a Sudder Special Commission under Regulation I. 1821, for the trial and decision of the appeals in question. In concluding this part of the subject, his Lordship in Council cannot omit to record the expression of his hope, that a recourse to public sale for the recovery of arrears of revenue, especially in the unsettled districts, may hereafter be almost if not altogether avoided; and in no case ought the progress to be enforced without a full and accurate knowledge of the nature of the interest possessed by the party whose estate may be proposed for sale.

In respect to the Revenue department, his Lordship in Council generally approves the principles sketched in the secretary's memorandum, for the determination of the duties and powers to belong respectively to the Presidency Board and the commissioners. But on these points, as well as in regard to the final distribution of districts, on which head, with exception of the Delhi division, the Governor-general in Council sees no immediate reason to object to that proposed by Mr. Bayley, his Lordship in Council will postpone his decision. It appears to be desirable, in the first place, to have them separately considered and reported on, and for this purpose his Lordship in Council directs that the secretaries to Government in the Territorial and Judicial departments, and Mr. Blunt (whom it is his Lordship's intention to appoint to a seat in the Presidency Board), may immediately associate themselves as a committee. The same officers will prepare a draft of the rules necessary to give effect to the present resolution, with such subsidiary arrangements of detail as they may see reason to recommend; distinguishing carefully those which it may be necessary to publish in the form of a law, from those which will be better promulgated to the officers concerned in the shape of instructions. They will also prepare schedules of the uncovenanted and native establishments to be allowed to the Presidency Board and to the several commissioners, observing every practicable degree of economy; and of course availing themselves to the utmost of the establishments now attached to the several courts of circuit, Boards and commissioners.

The subject of the allowances to be assigned to the commissioners will be separately considered. The change which the proposed arrangement will make in the functions to be discharged by a number of the Judicial and Revenue officers appears to render it proper to enter on a general consideration of the allowances attached to the several offices held by covenanted civil servants in those departments; and the state of the finances of British India at the same time urgently suggests the expediency of extending the revision to all other branches of the civil service.

The subject will be resumed in the Financial Department.

350 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

No. 11.—STATEMENT showing the INCREASE and DECREASE of EXPENSE in ALLOWANCES to COVENANTED CIVIL SERVANTS, that will result from the proposed Appointment of a GENERAL REVENUE BOARD and of COMMISSIONERS of REVENUE and CIRCUIT, with eventual Alteration in the Office of JUDGE of APPEAL.

	Present Allowance.	PROPOSED ALLOWANCES.		Future Saving to be effected as Vacancies occur.	Immediate Saving.	Immediate Increase of proposed Allowances to be granted to Commissioners, &c.	REMARKS.
		Sonat.	Siccas.
SUDDER DEWANEE & NIZAMUT } ADAWLUT, 4 Judges ..	2,25,000 0	—	2,00,000	25,000
Successor to } Mr. W. Blunt } 5th ditto ..	55,000 0	—	50,000	—	5,000
SUDDER BOARD.
Two Seniors of present Board and } Mr. Blunt	1,67,412 0	—	1,50,000	17,412
COMMISSIONERS OF REVENUE AND CIRCUIT.
1. Second of Western Bd. 52,250	50,000 0	42,000	40,191	9,809
2. Third of ditto .. 46,270	44,275 0	42,000	40,191	4,084
2. Sup. of Police, Western } Provinces	43,890	42,000 0	42,000	40,191	1,809
4. Third of Bareilly Court 40,080	38,351 8	42,000	40,191	—	—	1,839 8
5. Second of Central Board 52,250	50,000 0	42,000	40,191	9,809
6. Third of Central Board ..	40,000 0	42,000	40,191	—	—	191 0
7. Third of Mofussil Spe- } cial Commission ..	40,000	38,275 0	42,000	40,191	—	191 6
8. Second of Benares Court 41,805	40,001 10	42,000	40,191	—	—	189 6
9. Fourth of Benares Court 36,600	35,021 10	42,000	40,191	—	—	5,169 6
10. Fifth of Benares Court 36,600	35,021 10	42,000	40,191	—	—	5,169 6
11. Second of Patna Court ..	40,000 0	42,000	40,191	—	—	191 0
12. Third ditto ditto ..	35,000 0	42,000	40,191	—	—	5,191 0
13. Second of Moorshedabad Court } and Special Commissioner	46,000 0	42,000	40,191	—	5,809
14. Third of Moorshedabad ..	35,000 0	42,000	40,191	—	—	5,191 0
15. Third of Dacca Court ..	35,000 0	42,000	40,191	—	—	5,191 0
16. Third of Calcutta ditto ..	35,000 0	42,000	40,191	—	—	5,191 0
17. Fourth of ditto ditto ..	35,000 0	42,000	40,191	—	—	5,191 0
18. Second of Lower Board ..	45,000 0	42,000	40,191	4,809
19. Third of Lower Board ..	40,000 0	42,000	40,191	—	—	191 0
20. Cuttack Commissioner ..	45,000 0	42,000	40,191	4,809
21. Assam Commissioner ..	52,000 0	42,000	40,191	11,809
	13,02,358 6	—	12,44,011	88,350	10,809	40,811 10

(continued.)

IV.—JUDICIAL.

351

STATEMENT shewing the INCREASE and DECREASE OF EXPENSE in ALLOWANCES, &c.—continued.

	Present Allowance.	PROPOSED ALLOWANCES.		Future Saving to be effected as Vacancies occur.	Immediate Saving.	Immediate Increase of proposed Allowances to be granted to Commissioners, &c.	REMARKS.
JUDGES OF APPEAL.
Bareilly, First .. F. R.	50,400	48,226 8	Sonat. 36,000	Siccaas. 34,440	13,786 8
— Second	45,000	43,059 6	36,000	34,440	8,619 6
Benares, First	47,925	44,997 0	36,000	34,440	10,557 0
Fourth of Bareilly ..	36,600	35,021 10	36,000	34,440	581 10
Third	36,600	35,021 10	36,000	34,440	581 10
Patna, First		45,000 0	36,000	34,440	10,560 0
— Fourth		35,000 0	36,000	34,440	560 0
Moorshedabad, First ..		45,000 0	36,000	34,440	10,560 0
— Fourth		35,000 0	36,000	34,440	560 0
Dacca, Second		40,000 0	36,000	34,440	5,560 0
— Fourth		35,000 0	36,000	34,440	560 0
Calcutta, successor to senior Judge		45,000 0	36,000	34,440	—	10,560 0
Superintendent of Police, Lower } Provinces		45,600 0	36,000	34,440	11,160 0
— Fifth		35,000 0	36,000	34,440	560 0
COMMISSIONERS UNDER REGULATION III. OF 1829.
First of Dacca Court		45,000 0	45,000	43,062	1,938 0
First of Mofussil Special } Commission .. F. R. }	42,000	40,188 12	45,000	43,062	—	2,873 4
Second of Calcutta Court ..		40,000 0	45,000	43,062	—	3,062 0
Retiring Second Member } of Mofussil Special Com- } mission	40,000	38,275 0	—	—	—	38,275 0
Abolished Secretary and } Sub-secretary, Western } Board	38,400	36,744 0	—	—	—	36,744 0
Sub-secretary, Central Board	14,400	13,779 0	—	—	—	13,779 0
Surgeons	18,559	17,758 11	—	—	—	17,758 11
First Secretary, Sudder Board, in- } cluding Commission		24,060 0	36,000	34,440	—	10,380 0
Second Secretary ditto ditto ..		29,186 0	30,000	28,708	478 0
Sub-secretary .. ditto ditto ..		9,600 0	14,400	13,770	—	4,170 0
		21,63,875 15	—	19,32,275	1,64,972 2	1,27,925 0	61,296 14
Deduct Increase						61,296 14
Net immediate Saving						66,628 13
Add future Saving						1,64,972 2
TOTAL ULTIMATE SAVING ..						2,31,600 15
							Of this Sum, Rs. 9000 will be drawn as Personal Allowances to Mr. Gorton, Mr. E. Barwell, and Mr. Hallid.

To this might be added the expense now incurred in giving up the services of three Provincial Judges to the Special Commissions, independently of what must otherwise have been incurred for the superintendence of Arracan.

Of this Sum, Rs. 9000 will be drawn as Personal Allowances to Mr. Gorton, Mr. E. Barwell, and Mr. Halled.

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 4.

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

352 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

APPENDIX, No. VI.

A SELECTION of PAPERS respecting the Alterations of System which have recently been made, or are in contemplation.

(1.) Minute
of Mr. B. Bayley,
5th Nov. 1829.

(1.)—MINUTE of Mr. BUTTERWORTH BAYLEY, dated 5th November 1829.

THE Board have been long apprized of my intention to submit to their consideration some suggestions connected with the administration of civil justice within the provinces subject to this Presidency. In apology for the delay which has taken place in the fulfilment of that intention, I beg to state that, on maturing my opinions, I doubted if I had sufficiently allowed for certain objections which had not at first struck me so forcibly, and I was anxious to communicate on those points with some individuals in whose judgment and practical experience I had confidence. The result of my communications has induced me to modify or abandon some portions of the plan which I had originally contemplated; and I am aware that much of what I have even now to propose is in opposition to the judgment of several experienced and highly respectable officers in the Judicial department. I further hoped that the annual report, exhibiting the actual state of the business in the civil courts up to the beginning of the present year, as well as the sentiments and instructions of the honourable the Court of Directors, promised in their letter of the 23d July 1828, would have been received in time to have aided my judgment, before formally placing on record the measures which I contemplated. Lastly, it appeared to me to be undesirable that any extensive changes in the tribunals for the administration of civil justice should be carried into effect, until the new scheme for the superintendence of revenue business and of criminal justice, by means of commissioners, should have been fairly introduced and carried into practical operation. The near approach of the period fixed for the departure of the Government to the Western provinces renders it proper, however, that I should no longer postpone placing my sentiments on the records of Government. Many years having passed since I have had any share in the practical administration of civil justice, I have the less confidence in the soundness of my own views, even when assisted by those of the friends whom I have consulted; but I hope the measures I have to propose may not only meet with the fullest attention from Government, to which their paramount importance entitle them, but that the opinions regarding them entertained by the judges of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, and of other experienced public officers, may be collected and considered. I think it better at once to avow that it is my intention to afford as brief an exposition of my view as may be consistent with clearness. I am not only unwilling to occupy the time of the Board and my own time, by entering on any lengthened argument, but it appears to me that the subject, in its general bearings, has so repeatedly been discussed, (and more especially in the despatch of this Government to the honourable the Court of Directors of the 22d February 1827, which conveyed the expression of my opinions on most of the points now to be considered), that I could scarcely expect to throw any new light upon it. It must be conceded, I imagine, by those who think most favourably of Lord Cornwallis' plan for the administration of civil justice, that the machinery was, from the very first, inadequate to accomplish more than a small portion of the work it was expected to perform. It was, in fact, very soon found necessary to introduce various modifications cations in the system. The higher courts were, from time to time, relieved from many details of minor importance; the powers of the inferior European courts were increased; the aid of the revenue officers and of assistant judges was called in; the jurisdiction of the native tribunals was largely though very gradually extended; objectionable forms were amended or dispensed with, and more summary processes were introduced. Scarcely a year has passed since the promulgation of the code of 1793, in which attempts have not been made to remove the grounds of civil controversies, to expedite their adjustment, or to reduce arrears of suits, which have nevertheless continued to accumulate. It was the principle of Lord Cornwallis' system to provide for the administration of civil as well as of criminal justice, by the almost exclusive agency of European functionaries. The districts into which the country was parcelled out were far too extensive and too populous to be successfully superintended by the individuals to whose charge the Judicial administration was intrusted; and where the population amounted to between one and two millions, the duties expected or required from the judge and magistrate were far beyond the powers of the most active and intelligent officer. The difficulties thus experienced have been since augmented in the degree in which the extension of trade and cultivation, the advance in the value of land, and the progressive increase of population, have multiplied the demands of the public on the time of the civil tribunals. It is obvious that we began by aiming at more than could possibly be accomplished; that the expectation of being able to carry on the administration of justice, civil and criminal, by European agency, was utterly fallacious; that no addition of numerical strength to the European portion of the judicial establishments, which the public finances can at present afford, will do more than yield a partial or temporary relief; and that we must necessarily look to the still more extended employment of natives (subject to European superintendence), if we desire to secure a moderately prompt and efficient administration of civil justice. It is true, as stated in the letter to the honourable the Court of Directors, under date the 5th of October 1826, that the system, when originally introduced in the year 1793, was ill calculated to encourage the formation of a class of natives qualified by their education and character to fill high and responsible situations in the administration of justice throughout the country. They were employed at first either in matters only of very inferior importance, or under the immediate eye of the judges; but as the necessity of having recourse to their assistance became more and more obvious, the original principle was gradually departed from, and an establishment of native judicial officers has consequently grown up, who already exercise very considerable powers. At first they were intrusted only with the decision of suits for money to the extent of fifty rupees; but in the year 1803 a new class of officers, called Sudder Ameens, was established, and invested with power to determine claims referred to them for real and personal property to the amount of 100 rupees. In 1814 their powers, and likewise those of the moonsiffs, were increased, and their situations rendered in all respects more efficient and respectable. In 1821 they were still more enlarged, the cognizance of the moonsiffs being extended to cases of 150 rupees, and the sudder ameens to cases of 500 rupees; and in 1827 a Regulation was passed, authorizing the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut to invest the latter with power, when necessary, to try claims to the amount of 1,000 rupees; so that, as stated in a Minute of one of the judges of that court, nineteen-twentieths of the original suits instituted in the civil courts throughout the country are now determined by the native judicial officers. Thus it appears, that although the system was ill calculated originally for the encouragement of native officers of this description, yet at the present moment a very considerable proportion of the administration of civil justice is actually intrusted to them; and the mode in which they have very generally discharged their duties encourages their still further employment. Referring to the testimony which has been borne in their favour by many of the authorities to whom they are subordinate, it is hardly too much to say, that in the districts where, comparatively speaking, the inhabitants enjoy the benefit of an efficient administration of civil justice, it is ascribable in a very extensive degree to the instrumentality of those officers. The sudder ameens especially are now generally men of experience and legal learning. They are assimilated in religion, manners, habits, and customs with the people, and they are are generally regarded with respect and confidence, both by Europeans and natives. The moonsiffs, when proper persons have been selected, are likewise found to be extremely serviceable, and are peculiarly well fitted, from the local position which they occupy, not only to render justice more easily accessible to the great body of the people, but to execute a variety of duties assigned to them in the interior of the districts, by the superior tribunals. In order, however, to render them still more efficient, they should now be placed on a higher footing in respect to emolument. If the natives are put into offices of trust and confidence, "We are bound," say the honourable Court in their despatch of the 23d July 1824, "to grant them adequate allowances; and unless we do, we have no right to expect that they will distinguish themselves by integrity and ability in the discharge of the duties required from them." With our past experience, moreover, we have, I think, every reason to believe that, if the moonsiffs, as well as the sudder ameens, meet with liberal and due encouragement, the agency of both may be safely employed to a much greater extent than it is at present in the administration of civil justice; and that in course of time they may, as suggested by the honourable Court, be made available for disposing, in the first instance, of all suits now cognizable by the civil courts. The points, therefore, for immediate decision are, first, the extent to which their powers may be enlarged without occasioning the evils arising from too sudden and violent change in the established system; and, second, what other modifications will be necessary in order to adapt the system to such an alteration.

In the despatch from the honourable Court, dated the 23d of July 1828, it is stated as their opinion, that the Regulations should authorize the appointment of sudder ameens of a superior class, whose jurisdiction might generally correspond with that now belonging to registers, with special powers; that is to say, they should be allowed to decide all original suits to the value of 5,000 rupees, and appeals from sudder ameens of an inferior class. "When we consider the extent to which these officers are now trusted, and, as we understand, very deservedly trusted; when we advert to the securities which are provided for the due performance of their duties, and to the opinion you have expressed as to the expediency of enlarging their powers, we cannot but think that, in order to prevent the great evil of delay of justice, the measure we have suggested might with perfect propriety be resorted to."

Adverting therefore to the very heavy arrears which appear from the reports of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut to be outstanding in all the courts, and to our inability, with reference to the demands of other branches of the service and to the state of the finances, to employ for the purpose of reducing them a sufficient number of covenanted servants, it is obviously expedient and proper to adopt the suggestions above referred to, and by placing the system of native agency on an extensive and respectable footing, to endeavour to obtain for the Judicial branch of the administration a greater degree of real and permanent efficiency than has hitherto at any period belonged to it. It has been suggested, that the powers of the sudder ameens should be increased to a still greater extent; but I ascribe much of the success which has attended our progress hitherto in the amelioration of the native institutions to the slowness and caution which have marked the several steps of our advance; and it appears to me, that the character and popularity of the present scheme might be hazarded, by an innovation which should suddenly elevate the native judge to the exercise of the full extent of jurisdiction heretofore possessed by the European functionary alone. The number of original suits too, for an amount exceeding 5,000 rupees, is not so considerable as to be likely to embarrass the courts. By multiplying the number and enlarging the powers of the native judicial functionaries in the mode above suggested, much of the delay in the decision of suits, from which serious inconvenience is now experienced, will be put an end to; and by placing them on a respectable footing in point of emolument, the general character of these establishments will be improved. Such an arrangement, moreover, will serve to attach to us that influential class of natives who are most eminent for education and talents. We have done, I hope, something for the middling and lower orders; wealth is more generally diffused than heretofore, and protection is to a considerable extent afforded to every man in the enjoyment of the profits of his own industry. It is the higher classes who have suffered most, and on every account it is very desirable to conciliate them. Nor would the native community in general be otherwise than well affected towards the arrangement. It is probable that, viewing the Europeans as the source of all power and emolument, and deeply impressed with their moral superiority, they would at first be better pleased that the administration of justice should remain entirely in their hands; yet, when they find from the change that the inferior courts are well looked after, and that while all reasonable precautions have been taken to secure the integrity of the judges, the judicial business of the country is more speedily performed, it may be expected that they will perceive the full advantages of having their cases investigated by persons more familiar with their language and customs than foreigners can ever become, and that the new arrangement will grow in popularity with all classes. It is therefore proposed, 1st. That the moonsiffs be empowered to decide suits for money and other personal property to the amount of 300 rupees, without any restriction as to the period within which the cause of action has arisen beyond what at present is imposed by the Regulations on the institution of such suits in the civil courts at large; and that they be remunerated for their trouble, to the extent of 100 rupees per mensem, from the fees leviable under the rules in force on the suits decided by them; compensation being made by Government, as far as fifty, when these fees fall short of that sum: provided the deficiency be not attributable to their own neglect. 2d. That the present sudder ameens be empowered to decide, generally, all original cases referred to them to the extent of 1,000 rupees, as well as appeals from moonsiffs, on a monthly salary of 200 rupees, including establishment and contingencies, with an increase of fifty rupees for such as hold the office of moulvee or pundit. And 3dly. That a superior class of sudder ameens be entertained, for the trial and decision of civil suits between 1,000 and 5,000 rupees, with powers to determine likewise appeals from such decisions of the second class of sudder ameens and moonsiffs as may be referred to them for that purpose. They should be selected from the law officers of the provincial courts, or from such of the individuals, of whatever class or religious persuasion, now holding or eligible to hold the office of sudder ameen under the rules at present in force, as may in the opinion of Government, on the joint report of the local commissioner and judge, be deemed qualified for the purpose; and should receive a monthly allowance, including establishment and contingencies, of not less than 500 Sonat rupees. This allowance is as low as can be reasonably fixed, with reference to the duties to be discharged; if lower, it may justly be imputed to us that we have not taken proper precautions to secure their good conduct; nor will the individuals employed, unless raised as it were above temptation, acquire as a body (whatever may be the merits of particular individuals) the confidence of the community. A trifling increase is proposed in the pay of the ordinary sudder ameens, who, as they are to be trusted to a greater extent than formerly, will consider themselves entitled to some remuneration. As to the moonsiffs, it is necessary to place them on a more respectable footing, but with the increase of powers which are to be vested in them, the institution fee will generally remunerate them: and it may, I think, be assumed that whatever expense Government may be put to by indemnifying those who are unable to earn so much as fifty rupees per mensem, will be more than repaid by the saving which will accrue from restricting the maximum allowance to 100. Care should of course be taken in every district to proportion the number of these officers to the state of business, and if this be properly done, the necessity of affording them any indemnification at all ought to arise but seldom. This arrangement will provide for the disposal, through native agency, of the whole of the original suits regularly cognizable by the zillah and city courts up to 5,000 rupees. The appeals from the moonsiffs will be referrible to the ordinary sudder ameens, and appeals from the ordinary sudder ameens in like manner referrible to the principal sudder ameens, with a special appeal, in both cases, to the zillah or city judge; the latter will be at liberty, of course, to retain on his own file any suits he may think proper, to recall cases referred to those authorities whenever there may be sufficient grounds for so doing, or to transfer suits from one moonsiff or sudder ameen to another; and it will be also peculiarly his duty to superintend and regulate their proceedings, reporting through the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut periodically the degree of estimation

APPENDIX,

No. 4.

continued.

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

estimation in which they are held, and whether their conduct be such as to deserve or not the approbation of Government. For these purposes, it will be necessary to relieve the judges in question (especially as they will no longer have the assistance of the registers) from part of their present miscellaneous duties, and this, together with other considerations, suggests the abolition of the summary jurisdiction with which they are now invested in matters of rent, by transferring it altogether to the collectors. Summary process cannot without inconvenience be entirely dispensed with; but there seems to be no good reason, especially since all suits of this description are, under the provisions of Regulation XIV. 1824, referred to and decided by the collector, for requiring that they should be instituted before the judge. They clog the files of the courts, and serve greatly to increase the miscellaneous business, while with the decision of them the courts have nothing to do. Were these suits to begin and end with the collector, it would probably tend greatly to diminish this description of litigation, inasmuch as the imposition of an unjust demand on the one hand, or the evasion of a just one on the other, being more easily detected at first sight by the Revenue authorities than by the Judicial, from the greater familiarity of the former with revenue accounts, such claims would be less frequently brought forward. The judge, however, might be empowered to direct by a precept, containing his reasons for exercising such a power, that the collector transmit any depending cause of the above description for decision before himself. The decisions of the collector should of course, as at present, be open to revision by the zillah and city judges, on the institution of a regular suit; but the parties should still retain the option of instituting a regular suit in the first instance in any court, instead of having recourse to summary process, as already sanctioned by Section 4, Regulation II. 1821. That course, if rightly understood and promptly enforced, would perhaps be the most convenient for all parties. The smallness of the amount in most cases at issue, and the great distance at which the parties frequently reside from the sudder station, occasion great inconvenience to the agricultural community, and render it desirable that the means of adjusting Revenue suits should be brought home to their own doors. But as this is not always practicable (although I trust it might be greatly promoted by placing the office of moonsiff on a better footing), and as the power of imprisoning defaulters cannot be safely withdrawn, the option of having recourse to summary process in the first instance must be reserved; but it should, for the reasons above stated, be vested solely in the collectors. There are some miscellaneous duties, such as signing the processes of sudder ameens, and other matters of form, from which I should propose to relieve the judges, and which may subsequently be adverted to, should the present outline be approved by the Board. The next point to be considered refers to the provincial courts. It is proposed that they should be dissolved; and it will be necessary, in order to accelerate that object, to put a stop to the institution before them of new claims of whatever description; for even supposing that the original jurisdiction with which they are invested were transferred to the zillah and city judges, still the regular and special appeals from the latter, superadded to the mass of miscellaneous business with which the courts in question for the most part are overloaded, would postpone the dissolution of several of these establishments to a remote period. Besides, it is desirable, as they are not to be permanent, that they should be altogether excluded from the new arrangement, which, to prevent further change, should be made wholly independent of them. Under these circumstances, and with reference to the expense with which they are attended, it would be better to get rid of them as soon as possible; and for that purpose provision must be made for the exercise of the appellate jurisdiction with which they are invested. This jurisdiction must necessarily be transferred to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, but that tribunal is already so much encumbered with arrears, that it can go on no longer without an additional number of judges; and if (as will probably be the case) the new arrangements, both Revenue and Judicial, are attended with an increase of business, those arrears must increase in proportion, notwithstanding such addition. Moreover, however effectual the control of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at the Presidency may prove, without the intervention of the provincial courts over the local judicial authorities within the limits of Bengal and Behar, it cannot, in my opinion, be exercised with due effect at remoter stations; and insulated as these authorities are now become the immediate superintendence of a tribunal of the highest class seems to be indispensably necessary; many of the arguments therefore before advanced in favour of a separate sudder for the Upper Provinces, will have acquired additional force by the new arrangements. The expense, which in fact is the only obstacle that has prevented the Court of Directors from giving it their express sanction, will now be merely nominal. Unless a new sudder be established in the Upper Provinces, or several new judges added to the old one in Calcutta, the provincial courts must be kept up, which would in the end be attended with a much heavier cost, and is otherwise, as has been already stated, undesirable. To augment the numerical strength of the present sudder court would not produce a corresponding increase of efficiency, and the control of the judges over the remote districts of the Western Provinces would be exceedingly imperfect and highly unsatisfactory. The recent measure, by which individual commissioners have been substituted for a succession of judges of circuit, or a collective court of circuit, will require more close and active superintendence over the subordinate tribunals, than could be exercised by the Nizamut Adawlut at the Presidency. Under the former arrangement, the defects or omissions of one judge of circuit were in some degree neutralized or amended by his colleagues; while it is one of the disadvantages of the new system, that any deficiency in a commissioner cannot be so readily corrected. A superior tribunal of the highest rank, within reach of the petitions of the people, appears to me to be the only mode of supplying that control over the commissioners which ought to be exercised, with whatever caution they may be selected. In the Criminal department, therefore, the erection of a separate Court of Nizamut Adawlut for the Western Provinces, appears almost a necessary part of the recent arrangements; and in the administration of civil justice, the superiority of a stationary court invested with full powers over ambulatory judges exercising limited authority, need hardly be dwelt upon here. The perpetual fluctuation of judges in the court of appeal by the return of the periodical circuits, materially interfered with a regular application to civil business, and almost inevitably threw much power into the hands of the native officers; while the restricted nature of their authority encouraged the local judges frequently to dispute their injunctions, to the great interruption of the more important business, both of these courts and of that of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, to whom a reference was necessary.

The present allowances of the judges of the provincial courts amount to nearly six lacs of Sonaut rupees annually; and if there be added to this the expense of a sixth sudder judge, which, according to Mr. Secretary Shakespear's Note, and the Minute of Mr. Ross therein referred to, is immediately necessary for the relief of that court, the aggregate amount may be estimated at 6,50,000. A separate sudder, consisting of three judges a register and an assistant, would not cost per annum more than 2,20,000, so that the annual expense attending the adoption of this measure, so strongly advocated by many of the ablest and most experienced public officers, will eventually be less by 4,30,000 per annum than what must otherwise be incurred to place the existing establishment in a state even of doubtful efficiency.

By relieving, too, the Calcutta sudder of the business connected with the Western Provinces, a saving of one or two judges may be anticipated, as soon as the present arrears are reduced. There remains only to refer to the office of magistrate. It will of course continue united to that of judge, where the civil business of the district is so light as to admit of it. This can be the case but seldom; still it is proper, with reference to existing opinions, that the trial should be made in all practicable cases. The high state of efficiency which the police has at length attained, compared with what it was twenty years ago, and the security both of person and property resulting therefrom, throughout the whole of the extensive country subject to this Presidency, is perhaps the greatest blessing which its inhabitants yet enjoy under the British Government. It was attained by the sacrifice of the administration of civil justice; and the inability of an individual holding the office of magistrate to discharge with effect the duties of judge, has already, with the sanction of the Court of Directors, been a source of inconvenience to those offices being intrusted to separate persons. By several several late regulations, the criminal powers of the magistrates have been greatly increased, and their duties augmented; and it may be justly doubted whether, in many districts, the heavy duties of the collector could be superadded thereto, without imminent danger to the public interests. In those provinces where the detailed settlement absorbs, and in the opinion of the best informed persons will continue for very many years to absorb, the attention of the collectors, and where they are in future, by a recent enactment, to undertake the investigation of almost every question which can arise relative to rights and interests connected with landed property, it is difficult to contemplate the conjunction of the two offices in the same individual, without entertaining serious apprehensions that, as heretofore, one or other department must suffer in the union. It is most important, therefore, that separate magistrates should be appointed wherever practicable; and the abolition of the office of register will admit of its being done to a considerable extent, without incurring an extra expense for that purpose. It is to the office of collector that we must principally look, to have our young servants trained to the administration of civil justice; and considering that the largest, most important, and most complex branch of civil controversies immediately relates to land, I entertain a hope that in this particular there will be no material deterioration. The arrangements above proposed will, it is expected, be attended not only with no additional expense, but will expedite the administration of justice, and prove in other respects of solid advantage to the country. The following schedule exhibits, in a concise point of view, the nature and extent of the alterations which will be effected thereby in the present system:

JUDICIAL ESTABLISHMENT.

PRESENT SYSTEM.

1. Moonsiffs: Empowered to receive, try, and determine suits preferred to them for money and other personal property, not exceeding 150 sicca rupees, provided the cause of action shall have arisen within the period of three years previously to the institution of the suit.

2. Sudder Ameens: Authorized to determine original suits referred to them to the extent of 500, and specially 1,000; and to hear appeals from the decisions of the moonsiffs.

3. Registers: Empowered to determine suits up to 500 rupees, and specially, to any extent, referred from the judge's file; as well as appeals from the moonsiffs and sudder ameens.

4. Zillah and City Judges: Empowered to determine suits to the amount or value of 10,000 rupees, and regular and special appeals from the register and native functionaries.

5. Provincial Courts: With original jurisdiction in all cases preferred to them above the value of 5,000 rupees, and appeals, regular and special, from the zillah and city judges and sudder ameens.

PROPOSED SYSTEM.

Powers extended to 300 rupees, without any restriction in regard to the limitation of time beyond what is contained in the Regulations with reference to suits generally.

Powers extended to 1,000 rupees generally, and appeals from the moonsiffs, as before.

Office of register discontinued, and special sudder ameens established for determining suits from 1,000 rupees to 5,000, and appeals from the ordinary sudder ameens.

Original jurisdiction restricted generally to suits the amount of which is not less than 5,000; and to the cognizance of appeals from the native judicial functionaries; jurisdiction in summary suits for rent transferred entirely to the collector.

Provincial courts to be abolished, so that as they shall have completed the business now depending before them.

6. Courts

S. Court of Sudder Dewanny and Nizamat Adawlut. Consisting of five judges, a register, deputy, &c.

Two sudder courts, one for the Lower Provinces, on the same establishment as before, and the other for the Western Provinces, to consist of three judges, one register, assistant, &c.

November 5th 1829.

(Signed) W. B. BAYLEY.

(1.) Minute
of Mr. B. Bayley.
5th Nov. 1829.

(2.)—MINUTES of the JUDGES of the SUDDER ADAWLUT, in reference to Mr. BAYLEY'S Minute.

(2.) Minutes of the Judges of the
Sudder Adawlut

Mr. LEYCESTER'S MINUTE.

1. THE important objects contemplated in the plan proposed by the Minute of Mr. Bayley are,—1st, To secure a prompt and efficient administration of civil justice. 2dly, To give suitable employment to the higher classes of natives and those most eminent for education and talents, under proper precautions for their good conduct; and finally, so to give effect to those measures that a considerable saving shall result to the state.

2. The plan suggested is argued as necessary in consequence of the defective system established by Lord Cornwallis, and has as its avowed basis the several changes which have taken place in our system during the last nine years, and more particularly the last great change effected by Regulation I. of 1829.

3. I have been so long accustomed to hold in reverence the name of Cornwallis, that I cannot willingly withdraw my admiration of many of the wise and sound measures adopted by that statesman; and I reckon his system for the administration of justice as the foremost in the first rank. But let not Lord Cornwallis be condemned, or appear to be so, for that which he never attempted. He was far too sagacious to suppose it possible that, in the then nearly disorganized state of the country, a system could be devised while all was changing about it—poverty turned to riches, wastes and barren fields to gardens, deserts to populous places—which should alone stand still, should be created perfect and remain perfect, unimpaired by age, and needing no new adaptations to suit the changes that were to come.

4. The existing system of justice is in all essentials the same as that established by Lord Cornwallis, and it has only been deteriorated by mutilations made, not by time but by man. It is in praise of that system, and not in its condemnation, that it was capable of uniting with the modifications which experience had shown to be desirable. The foundations and the frame-work remained still the same, and it is only on those foundations and within that frame-work that it can be safe to work; and if the hand of man has effected some ravage on the system, I heartily pray for its restoration in all its fullness and all its beauty.

5. Many of the propositions by Mr. Bayley are perfectly consistent with the old system: the 40th Regulation of 1793 provided native functionaries in the administration of justice. The present plan regarding sudder ameen does no more; it only extends the sphere of their power, and on that point a dissenting voice will probably not be found in India; it is only where a structure is proposed to be raised on shifting and uncertain foundations that doubts will arise. I will proceed to examine the proposed changes in detail, and first of that which I most object to, the abolition of the provincial courts; and if this measure can really be considered a necessary part of the recent arrangements, I find an added and a far stronger cause for lamenting their adoption; while unconsulted, I held it a duty to be silent, but now duty prescribes a contrary course.

6. I do not see any reason assigned for the abolition of the provincial courts. It clearly is not from the absence of business to perform; the contrary indeed is avowed. By whom

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

whom then is it to be done? It is proposed to be done by a court called a Second Sudder Adawlut for Benares and the Ceded and Conquered Provinces, to consist of three judges.

7. There is one thing I hold to be impossible, and another to be very near it. The one to do more work with fewer hands, the other to do it equally well at less expense. Here, then, will be one court of three judges superseding two courts, one of three judges, the other with two. How one court is to do more than two, I cannot devise; that, however, is for the Upper Provinces.

8. But for the Lower Provinces, the work of the four Provincial courts of Patna, Moorshedabad, Dacca, and Calcutta, is to be transferred to this court, with the anticipation, too, that fewer judges may hereafter be sufficient for this court.

9. Is it possible to expect that this can succeed? The mere statement of the position seems sufficient for the answer; but the chief boon desired is the expedition of justice, and can it possibly be for a moment concealed, that the more business is done in the lower courts, the more must come to the higher? In fact, the present proposed plan would be no more likely to be lasting without further changes engrafted on it than that of 1793, and though the courts of appeal be left, it is quite easy to foresee that those courts and the zillah judges will gradually be as much burthened with appeals and other business as they are now.

10. I deem it then impossible that the courts of appeal can be abolished without seriously impeding the course of justice; a second sudder has always been deemed by me objectionable as a thing out of nature, as impossible to dissuade the people but that there must be a court of last resort at the seat of government, an essential requisite, in my judgment. I consider it impossible that a sudder court stationed in the interior can be looked up to with that confidence and respect by the European or the Native public, or by the Government, which is essential to its well-doing, and that the same sources of intelligence can never be within their reach: feelings of this nature were understood to have occasioned the suppression of the Boards of Revenue in the interior not long ago.

11. On the subject of the moonsiffs and sudder ameens, I fully agree in the principles of Mr. Bayley's Minute. I consider, however, that there are two very important points to be laid down. 1st. That the salaries be fixed. 2d. That the officers on the establishment and their allowances be fixed also, and controlled as to appointment and removal by the zillah judges, under the rules in force for the control by the provincial courts over the establishments of the judges and magistrates; that the moonsiffs and sudder ameens be prohibited acting through other agency, and that the officers of those establishments should be liable for malversation as all other officers.

12. I would give the moonsiffs a fixed salary of 300 rupees, and give them cognizance of suits to the amount of 500 rupees. I would give them cognizance of all suits for arrears of rent up to that amount, and I would have these heard and tried as regular suits, giving them a precedence in the hearing of them over other suits, and rendering the decisions in such cases open to appeal. There can be no use in a summary suit open to a regular suit. It is a mere play of words, or not perhaps so innocuous; it leads to misconception, the one and the other being necessarily decided on the same grounds. I would declare generally that in all common cases, vacancies among the sudder ameens should be filled by selection from the moonsiffs.

13. I would have no secondary class of sudder ameens; I can see no good in it, and it would give rise to bickerings, jealousies, and intrigues, and might often be unjust. I would give them 500 rupees a month, with jurisdiction as proposed up to 5,000 rupees, and cognizance of claims for arrears of rent from above 500 rupees to 5,000 rupees, and regulate their establishments as the moonsiffs. I would not give them larger jurisdiction at present. Hereafter, having seen our way well, particular merit may be rewarded with enlarged powers and increased allowances.

14. I would elect Mahomedan and Hindu law officers to the zillah establishments.

of the former to the circuit and one of the latter to the appeal court, appointing the others to be sudder ameen; and the sudder ameen should sign their own processes, use a public seal, and no witness should be examined excepting in their presence.

15. I would not allow the judge, as it would defeat the object of the measure, to retain any suit on his own file, nor to recall it after reference; but I would allow the transfer from one moonsiff to another or to a sudder ameen, or from one sudder ameen to another, on sufficient ground shown to, and previous permission obtained from, the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut. But I would allow no report of conduct to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut or to Government, as to the merit of individuals or their comparative estimation among the people. It is a sufficient security when no blame is imputable and the necessity of such periodical reports would impose an invidious task, liable to abuse and prejudice, and, as being secret, most objectionable.

16. The intention is to provide a sufficient number of moonsiffs and sudder ameen to do the duty assigned them, to answer the demand of the people on our Judicial establishments in a reasonable period. I would consequently add a new moonsiff or new sudder ameen whenever there were ten cases of longer standing than eighteen months. This would equally act as a stimulus to exertion, as a remedy to the people against denials of justice through delays.

17. The objects of the proposed rules are of too great magnitude to the people and of too paramount a duty to the state, to allow of its being made a revenue question; but it is still obvious to remark, that the institution fees, the value of stamp paper used, will go to defray or to diminish, and in fact to reduce to nothing the amount of expenditure as compared with the object in view. At the same time I cannot say that the system of precautionary control would be much: a man's sight and discernment is limited. The real control must be sought among the people themselves, and their appeals or remonstrances will be found to form the only efficient controls; and if an error, I acknowledge it, that I do not think the decision of these officers will ever be more satisfactory to the people as having been passed by persons of their own habits nearly, for I believe them to have far too much penetration not to be able satisfactorily to appreciate the public functionaries to whom they have been accustomed.

18. I would again strongly urge the abolition of Regulation XV. of 1824, as not answering its object, as incapable of answering its object, as spreading far and wide a system of oppression and chicanery never known before. In fact, Regulation XV. of 1824 holds out strong inducements to infringe the peace, for it is only through an affray or indication of it that a man can get his case before a magistrate, and though he may have had no possession for fifty years, a bribed report from a thannah and a few tutored witnesses will give him a very tolerable chance of ousting the rightful owner, who is taken off his guard and destitute of his defences by a summary proceeding in a criminal court.

19. This power is not at all useful or necessary to keep the peace, or even if it were, it would be paid for at far too high a price; all experience of the effect of that Regulation points out the necessity of its abolition and the revival of the rules superseded by it.

20. I do not clearly perceive where Mr. Bayley would propose that actions to an amount above 5,000 rupees should lie; but if the provincial courts are retained, they will as heretofore belong to that court, and the probable, nay certain, increase of business being admitted, I do not see how the provincial courts can be dispensed with; I consider their abolition as likely to impede and paralyse the whole system. There is a great deal done in those courts which cannot be left undone consistent with a common regard for justice, but which ought not to be suffered to embarrass the higher tribunal.

21. It is admitted by Mr. Bayley to be undesirable that any extensive change in the course of civil justice should take place, until the new scheme for the superintendence of the civil and criminal justice should have been fairly introduced and carried into

APPENDIX,
No. 4.
continued.

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

into practical operation; a system which is also admitted to be divested of the power, which the former courts of circuit possessed, of correcting their own errors and defects.

22. I perceive no symptom of the successful development of that system, on which to ground any further changes in the country. No criterion has yet been established to define what cases now pending in the courts of the Upper Provinces are to be transferred to the commissioners under Clause 2, Section 10, Regulation I. of 1829; a definition which is equally necessary to prevent the institution of new suits of questionable cognizance.

23. The new system in several branches has not, I apprehend, commenced its operation. The rules of Regulation I. of 1821 and I. of 1823 are extended to all the Ceded and Conquered Provinces under the Section above quoted, and their operation expanded over a further period of nineteen years, or to the 1st March 1829.

24. The Government in 1821 urged, for the upholding of that Regulation, the great and extensive injury which had been done during the two first triennial settlements, by forced permutations of property, through the unjust and iniquitous practices by which public sales and transfers were procured, and the almost unbounded influence of the tehsildars, and the perversion of that influence for the purposes of personal aggrandizement, and they fixed the limit of those sales up to 1217 Fusly. The rules were established as an exception, and bore only on a particular period, and applicable only to particular districts, at the discretion of Government.

25. On this Regulation, the late Mr. Dorin made the following remarks: "Viewed as a judicial regulation, and constituting a commission vested with judicial powers, it seems to be at variance with every established principle with which I am acquainted. The general tone of it appears to cast a slur on the established courts and their constitution and proceedings, which, making every due allowance for their defects, or rather for the defects of those who occasionally preside in them, they do not seem to me to merit. But the grand objection is, that the Regulation must unavoidably do away all confidence on the part of the natives in the stability of our laws, and of the tenures by which property has hitherto been held under the sanction of decrees of the courts. If it goes on in Cawnpore (where, by the by, it was shortly after shown that no public sale had taken place while the supposed arch-malefactor Nasir Ally was in office), the inhabitants of other districts will also expect that it shall be extended to them, and the whole property of the country will be thrown into confusion. The almost unlimited discretion given to the commissioners is quite at variance with my ideas as a judicial officer of the Government; and though I have been myself selected as a sudder commissioner, and cannot be otherwise than personally gratified by the confidence placed in me, I must still observe, that I think the constitution of the office as dangerous and difficult: that every thing being left to discretion, with no landmarks for a guide, there is no security that even with good intentions caprice shall be excluded."

26. Now, however, what were then exceptions, are made the general rules applicable all over the Ceded and Conquered Provinces, up to the 1st March last, and the duty intrusted to the revenue officers. So that almost every decree passed regarding land for the last nineteen years, and every public sale, and every private transfer, are liable to be reversed.

27. The strong grounds assumed for enacting Regulation I. of 1821, are not even said to exist.

28. This is a part of the authority of the commissioners, which, as yet, I suppose has not been brought into operation, but which will be brought into action in time to come.

29. Of the motives and grounds of this extension I have not heard, but I cannot conceive why they should apply to the Upper Provinces and not to the Lower Provinces. The purchasers, private bargainera, and holders of decrees, are exposed to the hazard of losing their property at Allahabad, and secured from losing it at Moorshedabad.

30. One effect has arisen from the new system, which, I fear, is irreparable. It is the creation creation of dissensions and violent discussions between the commissioners and the magistrates. One man does not much like to be controlled by one other man. He thinks he may be right and the other wrong, and there is no plurality of voices against him, which might induce his acquiescence. The magistrate, of course, must obey; but where any thing like blame is attached to him, or where he thinks the commissioner not upheld in law, he of course cannot be expected to be silent. Hence from these conflicting elements, storms and rebellions arise little known before. Neither can it be expected that the magistrates or the public will have the same deference and respect for an individual as they had for a body, among whom, by collisions of opinion, by discussion and consultation with each other, many errors were necessarily avoided.

31. Another trust, too, vested in the commissioners has not yet probably been much brought into operation, the powers they possess as superintendents of police to commit for trial, and use all the authority of the magistrates: in the former, contrary to express law, he would have to try his own commitments, or some other officer must be appointed; and in the latter, he would remove the supervision and control, deemed necessary safeguards for the people.

32. I rejoice to observe that Mr. Bayley is adverse to the union of the magisterial powers with those of a collector. It is out of human nature that, while acting in one capacity, he should forget the interest he takes in his other character. As collector, he has often to appeal to the magistrate, and it involves a confusion of ideas, from which nothing but confusion can proceed, that a man should appeal in his own favour to himself. This is liable to happen too when he is acting in a matter merely meum et tuum as a local agent; as such, he thinks a forgery to have been perpetrated to defraud some vested rights intrusted to his guardianship as local agent, and he sends the supposed offenders to his other self, to the magistrate: being unable to differ from himself in his other capacity, he commits, and unable to divest himself of the weakness and prejudices common to our nature, he holds the accused as convicted, and refusing bail, imprisons in irons the accused delinquent; or the offence being of minor criminality, he punishes.

33. The same feeling is liable to operate in a thousand ways; in frauds on the stamp-office, evasions of Abkarry duties, in which it would be unwise in the legislature and unsafe to the public, to allow the coalition of the accuser and the accused.

34. Neither do I think that we have seen sufficiently into the modus operandi of a system uniting certain judicial powers in the hands of the revenue commissioners, holding also criminal jurisdiction. All arguments, all reason, all experience adverse to it. We are reverting to schemes abandoned over and over again as untenable; and the question is whether in adopting the rejected, we are not merely paving the way to its recurring fall, and keeping the people in doubt, uncertainty, and consequent distress.

35. As connected with circuit duties I have only known one case involving the question in which, without desiring to impute blame or questioning in any way the purity of intention, I still think that no circuit judge of the good old school would have passed sentence against the accused.

36. The adding of criminal powers to the previous union of revenue authority and the cognizance of all or almost all judicial matters, in which the rights and interests of the Government are involved, was obviously making more questionable what was quite sufficiently so without it. The union of all these powers, and without any appeal to a regular judicial court, forms a state of things unknown to the world, excepting, of course, in those misgoverned countries where despotic rule is claimed, and where the fiat of power stands instead of all inquiries, all appeal, and all judgments.

37. It seems to be quite impossible that the commissioner and collectors trying suits and matters between the Government and the people, should go to work without any feeling wholly unprejudiced. The trials are to be originated by themselves, and they are not supposed to give an impartial judgment, without fear of censure and without hope of favour.

That

IV.

364 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

APPENDIX,

No. 4.

continued.

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

That which a man has bantled, fostered, and protected, cannot weigh equal in his mind with the disowned, against which he has been struggling. It is impossible then to expect, with every desire to be just, that the decisions should come up to the standard of justice, or that the public should feel confidence in their impartiality, an ingredient most important in the consideration.

38. I never can do otherwise than lament any departure from the principles which influenced the sentiments promulgated in the preamble of Regulation II. of 1793, and in various other places, that "Proprietors can never consider the privileges which have been conferred on them as secure, while the revenue officers are intrusted with judicial powers, and that all financial claims of the public must be subjected to the cognizance of courts of judicature, superintended by judges who, from their official situation and the nature of their trusts, shall not only be wholly uninterested in the result of their decisions, but bound to decide impartially, so that no power may exist in the country by which the rights vested in the landholders can be infringed, or the value of landed property affected." And I look to those principles as to the only solid foundation on which the content, the attachment, and affection of the people can be grounded, as the only one effectual to secure their rights, properties, and possessions.

39. I deprecate the idea of having said any thing with the mere view of finding fault. That which I feel honestly I have expressed openly.

(Signed) W. LRYCESTER.

Mr. ROSS's MINUTE.

MR. BAYLEY truly says,* that the inadequacy of the machinery employed "to accomplish the work to be performed," is the great defect of the present Judicial system in the provinces under this Presidency; and he points out that a recourse to native agency is the only means by which that defect can be remedied. Every one, I presume, will agree with him "that the expectation of being able to carry on the administration of justice, civil and criminal, by Europeans, is utterly fallacious; that no addition of numerical strength to the European portion of the judicial establishments, which the public finances can at present afford, will do more than yield a partial or temporary relief, and that we must necessarily look to the still more extended employment of natives (subject to European superintendence) if we desire to secure a moderately prompt and efficient administration of civil justice."

2. Mr. Bayley has likewise recorded his testimony to the capability of the natives to discharge the judicial functions, in the following terms: "It is not too much to say, that in the districts where, comparatively speaking, the inhabitants enjoy the benefit of an efficient administration of justice, it is ascribable, in a very extensive degree, to the instrumentality of those officers" (the sudder ameens and moonsiffs). "The sudder ameens especially are now generally men of experience and legal learning; they are assimilated in religion, manners, habits, and customs with the people, and they are generally regarded with respect and confidence both by Europeans and natives."

3. This testimony from one so well qualified to form a judgment on the subject will, I hope, be considered by the Government entitled to greater weight than the opinion of those who, looking only to what has been the conduct of the moonsiffs under a system which employed men of low character in that capacity, without salary, and without check in the exercise of the powers given to them, think the administration of justice cannot be improved by means of native agency under any system. Against this opinion there is the testimony of many others besides that of Mr. Bayley; but if there were nothing else to oppose this consideration would be sufficient, that, taking the native character to be as low as it can be and incapable of amendment, even on that illiberal and unfounded supposition, a great improvement in the administration of justice by natives could not fail to result, merely from attaching adequate salaries to the offices of trust committed to them; it being obvious, that a bribe which might be sufficient to induce the commission of a corrupt act by a functionary of the low moral character, supposed holding an office of little value, would not be sufficient to induce the same functionary to commit the same act in an office of greater value. In the one case, the value risked and of course the premium required to cover the risk, would be greater than in the other, and doubtless both the value and the risk might be so raised, that in the majority of suits the premium required to cover the latter would be greater than suitors could afford to pay.

* Mr. Bayley's Minute, proposing a Plan for the Improvement of the Administration of Civil Justice.

4. Clearly as Mr. Bayley has pointed out the defect of the existing system, and highly as he values the means at command for its amendment, I cannot but think the plan of reform proposed by him much less satisfactory than might have been expected. It neither embraces the criminal branch of the system, nor that portion of the civil branch which is administered by the revenue functionaries, and in regard to the portion of the civil branch to which it is confined, the measures proposed are not, I conceive, calculated to produce the degree of amendment attainable.

5. The measures proposed are, 1st. An addition to the allowances of the moonsiffs and sudder ameens; 2d. An enlargement of the value for which suits may be taken cognizance of by those functionaries; 3d. The removal of the existing limit to the amount of suits cognizable by the European zillah judges; 4th. The dissolution of the provincial courts of appeal; and 5th. The establishment of a sudder court in the Western provinces.

6. The first of the above measures is indispensable, but the addition proposed to be made to the allowances both of the moonsiffs and sudder ameens is too small. It will increase but little the inducement they now have to discharge their duties faithfully, and consequently will not produce any material effect in raising the character of the native tribunals.

7. In regard to the second measure, it appears to me to be objectionable with reference both to the courts of moonsiffs and those of the sudder ameens. The limitation of the powers of the former to the trial of suits for money, or other personal property of small amount, is calculated to prevent those courts being as useful as they may be. If they can be rendered capable of deciding claims to personal property, they may be made capable also of deciding claims to real property; and as it is of importance to the prosperity of the community, that every possible facility should be afforded for obtaining a speedy adjustment of both descriptions of claims, no good reason seems to be assignable for not allowing the same facility to the adjustment of both. Much of the benefit derivable from the courts of the sudder ameens will likewise be lost by the proposed limitation of their powers to the trial of suits for an amount not exceeding 5,000 rupees.

8. The third measure proposed, namely, that of confining to the European zillah courts the cognizance of all original suits exceeding 5,000 rupees in amount, is even more objectionable than the foregoing. It will not only leave the parties in the causes exceeding the proposed limit subject to all the disadvantages and evils of imperfect investigation and dilatory decision, now experienced in the prosecution of original suits in the zillah courts, but by diminishing the time which the zillah judge will be able to give to the hearing of appeals, it must weaken his power of control over the proceedings and conduct of the native tribunals: a power which above all things it is necessary he should be enabled to exercise with effect. It should not be forgotten, that the proportion of the suits under the limit of 5,000 rupees is at least 79-80ths of the whole number instituted, and that to diminish the security for the right decision of this very great majority in order to ensure to the few what, if really an advantage, is but a very small one, cannot be just.* It should also be kept in mind, mind, that the native tribunals (the consequence of having been left entirely free from check) are generally believed to be venal, and that therefore no plan of reform extending their jurisdiction can be expected to give satisfaction to the people, unless it secure not only the right of appealing to an European judge, but also the certainty of the appeal being promptly attended to and speedily decided.* It may further be observed, that the opinion of the moral superiority of the Europeans with which, as Mr. Bayley remarks, the native population are impressed, would be best preserved by the Europeans exercising only the powers of control, and being the authorities to whom all persons deeming themselves aggrieved by the errors or misconduct of the native functionaries, would look to for redress. There is nothing, I conceive, more likely to degrade the European judge in the opinion of the community than making him the ostensible author of the corruptions of a court, in which the principal part of the business to be done is committed to irresponsible native officers, as is the case in all the European courts of primary jurisdiction.

* Nor can it be politic: for upon the degree of security afforded to the inferior and most numerous classes, in the enjoyment of the fruits of their industry, must mainly depend the efficacy of the laws in promoting the prosperity of the community.

9. To the fourth measure proposed by Mr. Bayley, the dissolution of the provincial courts of appeal, I am aware of no objection that can be urged, the advantage of allowing an immediate appeal from the zillah courts to the tribunal of highest authority being obvious.†

10. The fifth measure proposed, or that of establishing a sudder court in the Western provinces, I consider to be both objectionable and unnecessary, as the end in view may be attained not only better, but at a less expense, by adding to the number of the judges of the Sudder Court at the Presidency.

11. A sudder court can only perform the important functions of superintending and regulating the general administration of justice, by hearing appeals from the decision and orders of the local judicial officers, and revising their proceedings; consequently, the efficiency of its controlling authority must depend much more upon the time required to obtain its decision on an appeal or representation preferred to it, than on the actual distance of its position from the functionaries to be controlled. In this respect, therefore, the whole advantage which the inhabitants of the Western provinces could derive from the establishment of a court of final resort in those provinces would amount only to a few days' reduction of the time required to convey an appeal or petition to the present court in Calcutta. As to the argument that the measure would afford to petitioners in the Western provinces greater facility than they now have of personally attending the sudder court, it is sufficient to observe, that if the personal attendance of petitioners were necessary, or if it gave any advantage which was not otherwise obtainable, then justice could not be equally administered by a sudder court without placing it within the reach of every individual subject to its jurisdiction, which is impossible. That their distance from the sudder court in Calcutta is no material impediment to appeals from the Western provinces is proved by the fact, that more appeals in proportion to the number of decisions are received from those provinces than from the provinces of Bengal.

12. The advantage to be derived from the establishment of a second sudder being then so inconsiderable, the other mode of effecting the object in view, viz. that of adding to the number of the judges in the sudder court at Calcutta, should obviously be preferred. Besides the economy of this last-mentioned measure, it is recommended by two other considerations of importance: one is, that uniformity in the interpretation of the laws (which is essential to their beneficial operation) is more likely to be preserved by a single controlling tribunal than by two possessing equal authority; the other is, that the authority of a supreme controlling tribunal must be in proportion to the confidence felt by the people in its decisions, and

* This consideration also seems to forbid, for a time at least, the employment of the native sudder amins to try appeals from the moonsiffs, as proposed by Mr. Bayley, even were not the union of appellate and primary jurisdiction in the same tribunal objectionable on other grounds.

† The decision of the tribunal of highest authority is clearly most likely to be right; and if an appeal may be preferred to that tribunal, and a decision obtained from it in nearly as short a time, and with as little expense as from the inferior intermediate court, the latter must surely be admitted to be useless.

continued.(2.) Minutes of the Judges of the
Sudder Adawlut.

and that confidence must be greatest when the court is placed at the seat of the Government, where all its acts and proceedings are exposed to the observation of a far larger and more intelligent public than they would be in any other position within its jurisdiction. Of the value of the check upon the conduct and decisions of the court which such a position affords, the people are not insensible, and I am persuaded they would not regard a tribunal placed any where else as a sudder, or be satisfied with its decisions, however high its powers might be. In proof of this I may mention the fact, that appeals are sometimes made to the sudder in Calcutta from the resident's court in the Delhi territory.

13. But besides the foregoing objections to the measures of reform proposed by Mr. Bayley, his plan is chargeable with the two defects I before adverted to. One of these defects is, that it does not provide for any amendment of the administration of the portion of civil justice which is intrusted to the revenue authorities; and yet that portion Mr. Bayley admits, comprises "the largest, most important, and most complex branch of civil controversies;" and, it may be added, its administration requires reform as much as that of the other portion.*

14. It is, I conceive, indispensable to the establishment of a judicial system calculated to give security and satisfaction to the people, and capable of progressively improving, that the Judicial and Revenue authorities should be separated, and the latter subjected to the control of the former; and that the judicial office should be so raised and the possession of it so secured to those appointed to it, as to hold out an inducement to men of ability to devote themselves to the acquisition of the learning and knowledge requisite to the due performance of the judicial functions. Such a system cannot be established while, to use the words of Mr. Bayley, "it is to the office of collector we must principally look to have our young servants trained to the administration of civil justice." A system administered by judges so trained cannot possibly improve, and Mr. Bayley does not venture to express in its favour more than a hope that it will not materially deteriorate.

15. The chief reason assigned by Mr. Bayley for not proposing any alteration of the cojoined Revenue and Judicial system is the expediency, with a view to speedy decision, of giving the cognizance of summary suits for rent to the collectors. This appears to me to be a very insufficient reason. The collectors have never yet speedily decided summary suits for rent, nor are their courts peculiarly adapted for the cognizance of such suits. On the contrary, they are less so than the courts of the zillah judges; the uncertainty of their position rendering them more difficult of access to the parties between whom disputes about rent arise. Moreover, a summary decision,† which, being a decision given upon a hasty and imperfect inquiry, must often be wrong, and often made the instrument of oppression, would not be necessary, were the courts of the moonsiffs placed on a respectable footing; since in those courts suits for rent could be brought to a termination after full investigation in one-fourth of the time in which the same suits are now disposed of by the summary process in the courts of the collectors. As to the powers of arresting and imprisoning alleged defaulters on mesne process, which Mr. Bayley thinks should be vested solely in the hands of the collectors, I would observe, that it does not seem necessary that it should be vested in any hands; the power of distraining the personal property of defaulters and of

* I have heard it urged in favour of the existing system, that since 1808 an increase of more than 2½ crores of rupees of net revenue has been obtained from the permanently assessed provinces alone, exclusive of the increase derived from new acquisitions; but I would observe that this fact, although it may be a proof that the system has been ably superintended, does not afford an argument in favour of the system itself, but the contrary: for admitting that the increase stated has been justly obtained by means of the Revenue tribunals, it could have been obtained under the same superintendence by means of the ordinary courts of justice, had those courts been rendered efficient, without shaking, as has been done, the confidence of the people, either in the permanency of the settlement of the provinces referred to, or in the promise recorded by Government, to leave its own suits, as well as the suits of private individuals, to the decision of impartial judges.

† A summary suit, in the language of our Regulations, does not mean a suit tried by the shortest process of inquiry by which right decision may be attained. It means a suit decided without investigation of its merits, and which, because so decided, may be tried again, if the losing party can afford the expense of a second trial.

APPENDIX,
No. 4.
continued.Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

of imprisoning them after obtaining judgment for the arrears claimed, if not satisfied by the process of distraint, being amply sufficient to enable landholders to realize their rents with regularity.

16. The other defect of Mr. Bayley's plan to which I have adverted, is the omission to make any provision for amending the present system of administering criminal justice.

17. Mr. Bayley seems to think the extension, as far as may be practicable, of the measure already authorized and partially adopted of separating the office of magistrate from that of civil judge, is all that is required to be done in this department. But I beg to observe, that although it is quite true, as Mr. Bayley remarks, "that the state of efficiency which the police has at length attained, compared with what it was twenty years ago, and the security both to person and property resulting therefrom throughout the whole of the extensive country subject to this presidency, is perhaps the greatest blessing which its inhabitants enjoy under the British Government;" it is no less true, that the system which affords this protection from open violence and rapine, subjects the people to a degree of extortion and harassment which is grievously oppressive and loudly calls for remedy.

18. Having stated what appear to me to be serious objections to Mr. Bayley's plan for a reform of our judicial system, I will now venture to suggest for consideration such measures as I conceive are calculated to obviate those objections.

19. I beg, however, it may be understood, that the measures I am about to suggest are recommended, not as likely to produce any great immediate advantage beyond a saving of revenue,* but chiefly as calculated to effect what in the present circumstances of the country is perhaps the utmost that can be immediately accomplished, namely, the establishment of a system admitting of the possibility of a gradual advance to the degree of improvement which may be hoped to be attained. I beg also to observe, that a separation of the Judicial powers from the Revenue functions being indispensable to the attainment of the object contemplated, and a revision of the establishments of all offices in which those powers and functions are united being necessary in order to effect their separation, my suggestions must extend to the Revenue as well as to the Judicial department of our administration. Further I beg to explain, that my suggestions will have reference only to the territories denominated the Lower and Western provinces or those subject to the operation of the Bengal code of Regulations, and in those provinces to the establishments in the Revenue department, which are maintained for the collection and assessment of the land revenue and the decision of suits relative to land, its produce, and its liability to assessment, and to all the establishments in the Judicial department, maintained for the administration of both civil and criminal justice; the whole annual charge for these establishments being at present, as nearly as I can estimate, about one crore and fifty-five lacs of rupees.†

20. Having premised these explanations, I proceed to submit my suggestions, commencing with those relating to

THE REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

21. According to the plan which I am hereafter to submit for the administration of civil and criminal justice, it is proposed to divide the territories to which this Minute refers into 52 zillahs, each containing about a million of inhabitants, by which division the Lower provinces (including Cuttack) would comprise 37 zillahs, and the Western (including the districts specified in Regulations II. 1803 and VIII. 1805) 15 zillahs.

22. For the collection of the revenue in the territories above specified, I would propose that one collector should be appointed for every two zillahs, in the permanently settled

* The annual saving of revenue which they would produce would be nearly 37½ lacs of rupees after allowing a large addition to the salaries of the judicial functionaries, proportionate to the importance of the duties intrusted to them. See annexed Schedule.

† See annexed Schedule.

part of the Lower provinces, and two for each zillah in Cuttack and the Western provinces; in other words, that two zillahs should form a collectorship in the permanently settled provinces, and one zillah two collectorships in the provinces not yet permanently settled; further I would propose, that the collectors appointed both in the Lower and the Western provinces should be divested of all judicial powers, and that those in the Western as well as those in the Lower should be relieved from the duty of making settlements.

23. The business of a collector being thus reduced to the realization of the public demand, assessed upon the mehals or estates comprised within his collectorship, a salary of Rs. 1,000 per mensem would, I conceive, be sufficient to ensure the requisite qualifications for the office, and that salary, with about Rs. 500 per mensem for an office establishment to each collector, would constitute the whole charge which it would be necessary to defray from the public treasury, for the collection of the land revenue.

24. In the Lower provinces, where an advertisement or notification of a public sale of the lands of defaulters generally ensures the recovery of the revenue due from them, no other item of charge than the above is now incurred, and in the Western provinces no other is, I conceive, really necessary; for although in these last mentioned provinces, where the zemindary right being of little value, the realization of the revenue could not be ensured by merely advertising defaulting estates for sale, it could be effected by the process of attachment, of which the whole expense would fall upon the defaulters. In point of fact, in the provinces referred to, where disputes among the numerous putteedars or co-sharers possessing an interest in the estates, are the most frequent cause of arrears, attachment is the only process by which the public revenue can be secured; and if, when necessary to have recourse to it, it were judiciously carried into execution, by deputing an intelligent sezawal, with an efficient establishment at the season for reaping the crops, to levy the rents payable by the under tenants or ryots according to the conditions of their pottahs or tenures, and to realize the amount which might remain due after those rents were paid, together with the whole expense of the attachment from the crops of the putteedars, each putteedar being required to contribute to the discharge of the sum due in proportion to the quantity of land occupied and cultivated by him, I feel persuaded from experience, that the advertisement or notification of the collector's intention to attach, would operate with the same efficacy that the advertisement of a public sale now does in Bengal.

25. The substitution of the measure of attachment properly enforced for that of public sale, would be moreover attended with the important advantage of removing the only reason that exists for not rescinding the Regulation which renders leases liable to be annulled by the default of the proprietors who grant them. This law operates as a bar to men possessing capital (by whom only any material improvement of the agriculture of the country can be effected) entering into farming speculations, which is perhaps the greatest of all the evils resulting from the liability of the lands to public sale.

26. On this consideration, should it not be thought advisable to remove that liability for an arrear of revenue, I would suggest the expediency of rescinding the rule which makes leases liable to be annulled by a sale. The revenue might be secured against injury from collusive leases being granted in anticipation of a sale, by enacting instead of the rule in question that leases stipulating for a less rent than the average amount paid for the lands, including them during the five years preceeding the date of their commencement, if in a permanently settled estate, or for a less rent than that at which the lands were rated at the last settlement, if in an estate not permanently assessed, should be held liable to be annulled, in the event of the proprietary right in the lands being sold for the recovery of revenue.

27. But whether the practice of selling or that of attaching were adopted, it would perhaps be unadvisable to discontinue at once the tehsildaree establishments, which have hitherto been employed for collecting the revenue in the Western provinces. Establishments of that description might therefore be maintained in those provinces on a reduced scale, scale, as a temporary arrangement; and by employing the canoongoes as tehsildars, the present charge on the revenue for the office of canoongoe might be applied to defray the expense of these temporary establishments, without the advantage derivable from the knowledge possessed by the individuals who now hold the office of canoongoe being relinquished. The following scale of a tehsildarree establishment, for a district containing a hundred thousand inhabitants (the extent of the district hereafter proposed for a moonsiff's and a police daroga's jurisdiction), would, I conceive, be sufficient for every purpose:

370 APPENDIX to REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

	Salary per Mensem.
Tehsildar	Rs. 50
Treasurer	15
2 Mohurrirs...	20
10 Peons	40
Paper, &c.	5
Total per Mensem ...						Rs. 130

28. The business of settlement-making in the Western provinces and in Cuttack, where the assessment of the land revenue has not been fixed in perpetuity, remains to be provided for; and as the establishments requisite for that purpose must depend upon the nature of the settlements to be formed, I trust I shall be excused for here obtruding my opinions on that subject.

29. In the first place I have to observe, that if the system of periodically adjusting the assessment in the provinces above mentioned is to be continued, the period between the adjustments should be long. It should be at least sufficiently long to admit of the advantages expected from agricultural speculations being realized by those engaging in them before its expiration. About twenty-five years is supposed to be required for the return, with the ordinary rate of profit, of capital laid out on land with a view to a permanent improvement; and it would seem therefore advisable to adopt that as the term for which temporary settlements should be concluded. The landholder engaging with Government should also be competent to grant leases for twenty-five years; which leases, although extending beyond the term of the government settlement during which they might be granted (as those granted in the second or any subsequent year of that term would do), should not be liable to annulled at the formation of a new settlement; provided the annual rent conditioned to be paid for the lands included in them was ten per cent., or any other rate which it might be thought proper to fix, more than the rent which the same lands were rated in the jumma bundee or rental on which the assessment was adjusted at the preceding settlement. This rule would limit the increase of revenue demandable at the formation of a new settlement to a certain per-centage on the assessment of the last settlement, with such further addition as might be chargeable, according to the ordinary rules of assessment on the rents yielded by lands brought into cultivation after the conclusion of that settlement.

30. The formation of temporary settlements on this principle, the assessment being charged only on the rents actually received by the proprietors of the lands, and consequently not affecting farming profits, would, I conceive, be nearly as favourable to the improvement of the country as a permanent settlement; whilst it would leave the progressively rising rents of the lands, a source from which might be supplied the revenue required to meet the increasing exigencies of the state, without taxing the profits derived from capital vested in any productive employment whatever.

31. In forming a temporary settlement of a mehal or estate on the principle above suggested, the objects to be accomplished should, I think, be limited to the following.

1st. The

1st. The ascertainment of the boundary line, and of the total quantity (without inquiry as to the quality) of the land included within it, and the adjustment of the public assessment on the amount of the actual rental of the lands under cultivation, as exhibited in the jumma bundee and other village accounts.*

2d. The ascertainment of the names of all the putteedars or biswadars (co-sharers in the zemindarry right) and the extent of the share or interest of each.

3d. The ascertainment of the nature and conditions of tenures about which disputes might exist, between the zemindars and the occupants of the lands included in such tenures, and the ascertainment of the validity or otherwise of rent-free tenures.

4th. The formation of a record of the usages of the mehal, in regard to allotting to the biswadars the lands cultivated by them individually, and settling the amount to be contributed by each to the payment of the public assessment; also in regard to allotting or leasing to residents and other ryots or cultivators, the lands not occupied by the biswadar, and adjusting and collecting the rents of these lands.

32. The jumma bundee, and the other accounts connected with and serving as checks to the jumma bundee, would exhibit in regard to every mehal or zemindarry, the names of the cultivators not being biswadars or proprietors and the quantity of land occupied, with the rate and amount of rent paid by each at the time of a settlement. Inquiries, for the purpose of obtaining further information than might be found in these accounts in regard to such cultivators and the quality of the lands they occupy, with a view to fixing the rents to be paid by them to the proprietors either in perpetuity or for any given period, are, I conceive, unadvisable; in the first place, because it is quite impossible for a few, or even for any number of public functionaries, to ascertain all the circumstances influencing the amount of rent which should be paid for every field or small parcel of land throughout an extensive country; and in the second place, because conferring the right of perpetual occupancy of the lands at fixed rents upon men possessing neither intelligence nor capital, and merely cultivating for a subsistence, would be impolitic, as tending to increase the number and deteriorate the condition of the cultivating classes, and as opposing a bar not only to agricultural but to manufacturing and commercial improvement, by preventing the production of any articles but those necessary to supply the few wants of an impoverished population. Nor is such an impolitic measure necessary for the protection of the cultivators of the description referred to; against unjust exactions, against infringement of the terms on which they engage to cultivate, and against infringement also of their right to engage wherever they please, and to employ their labour as they may find most advantageous, they should unquestionably be protected. But such protection may be, and indeed can only be effectually afforded, by providing courts of justice accessible to them, and able speedily to give them redress when oppressed or unjustly treated.

33. I come now to explain the means which I would employ for making the settlements in the manner above contemplated.

34. It is obvious that for the settlement of an extensive tract of country for a long term of years, higher qualifications and greater experience are required than for the mere collection of the revenue. With a view therefore to the speedy as well as satisfactory execution of the work, I would propose, that officers selected on account of their superior knowledge of revenue business should be appointed special commissioners for the formation of each periodical settlement; that those commissioners should have no other duty to attend to; that they should be empowered to act singly; and that they should receive their instructions from

* Where the jumma bundee account did not exhibit the real rent of the lands in the occupancy of the putteedars, those lands might be estimated as capable of yielding the rate of rent paid for the nearest land in the same village, cultivated by a chupperbund or resident ryot. It may here be remarked, that although no reliance can be placed on the village accounts usually produced to public functionaries, it would be far from impossible to devise means for making it the interest of the holders to keep regular and true accounts, and to produce them when either a court of justice or a collector might be authorized to inspect them.

(2.) Minutes of the Judges of the
Sudder Adawlut.

IV.

APPENDIX,

No. 4.

continued.

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

372 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

from and make their reports to Government, through the secretary in the Revenue department.

35. The commissioners should, I think, be allowed a salary of Rs 45,000 per annum, to cover all their personal expenses, and an efficient office establishment, the annual charge for which might amount to Rs. 10,000.

36. I reckon that the first settlement of all the mehals or estates in the Western provinces and in Cuttack could be completed, in the manner contemplated, in five years by eleven commissioners (ten in the Western provinces and one in Cuttack); and in that case as the first would occupy a longer time than any subsequent settlement, the average annual charge for settlement-making in the provinces referred to, would not exceed one lac and twenty-one thousand rupees.*

37. The business of the collectors being reduced to the simple duty of collecting the revenue, and the work of settling the assessment of revenue where it has not been fixed in perpetuity, being committed to officers possessing the greatest knowledge and experience of revenue affairs of any in the service, there would be no necessity for commissioners of revenue to superintend the collectors, and Boards of Revenue to superintend those commissioners, as there could be nothing for those authorities to do which might not be done in the office of the secretary to Government in the Revenue or Territorial department.

38. The office, therefore, of Commissioner of Revenue, established by Regulation I. 1829, and the Sudder Board of Revenue, might be abolished, and the business of preparing periodical Reports of the general state of the Revenue for the information of the Government, and of submitting to the Government the Reports made by commissioners employed in making settlements, might be provided for by adding to the establishment of the office of Revenue Secretary two deputies, each with a salary of Rs. 30,000 per annum.

39. The office of commissioner established in the Lower provinces by Regulation III. 1828, might likewise be abolished, as under an efficient system of judicature the suits committed to the cognizance of those commissioners would be more satisfactorily investigated and decided in the ordinary tribunals.

40. If it were deemed advisable to adopt the system of Revenue administration which I have suggested, the total annual charge for Revenue establishments would be reduced to about Rs. 17,30,000,† which would leave about Rs. 1,37,50,000 of the revenue now annually expended, under the heads, before particularized, applicable to the maintenance of efficient establishments for the administration of justice.

41. The suggestions I have to offer in regard to the administration of justice, I now proceed to submit.

ADMINISTRATION OF CIVIL JUSTICE.

42. In order to the establishment of an efficient system of civil judicature in the provinces referred to in this Minute, I would suggest as follows:

1st. That those provinces should be divided into districts, containing each about one hundred thousand inhabitants (every city or town being reckoned for part of a district, for one district, or for more than one district according to the number of its inhabitants), and that every ten districts should form a zillah.

2d. That in every district there should be a court of primary jurisdiction, denominated the Moonsiff's Court, the judge (moonsiff) of which should have a personal salary of Rs. 300 per mensem.

3d. That

* The total charge for eleven commissioners and their office establishments, at Rs. 55,000 per annum each, for five years, would be Rs. 30,25,000, which, being divided by twenty-five, the number of years for which each settlement is proposed to be concluded, would give for each year Rs. 1,21,000.

† See appended Schedule (A).

3d. That in every zillah there should be one superior court of primary jurisdiction, denominated the Sudder Ameen's Court, the judge of which (sudder ameen) should have a personal salary, of Rs. 1,000 per mensem.

4th. That in every zillah there should be one court to superintend and regulate the proceedings of the primary courts by hearing appeals from their decisions, denominated the Zillah Court of Appeal, the judge of which should have a personal salary of Rs. 3,000 per mensem.

(2.) Minutes of the Judges of the
Sudder Adawlut.

43. For the reasons I have already stated in this Minute (paragraph 7), the court of the moonsiff, as well as that of the sudder ameen, should be empowered to receive and try, in the first instance, suits of all descriptions and for any amount: plaintiffs being allowed the option of preferring their claims, either in the court of the moonsiff for the district in which the defendant might reside or the property in dispute might be situated, or in the court of the sudder ameen, and defendants having also the right to require suits instituted against them in the court of the sudder ameen, for a value not not exceeding a thousand rupees, to be transferred for trial to the court of the moonsiff, and suits instituted against them in the latter court for a greater value than a thousand rupees, to be transferred to the former: by thus rendering the courts of the moonsiffs and sudder ameens competent to take cognizance of all suits, both plaintiffs and defendants might avail themselves, for the decision of their differences, either of the convenience which a near tribunal of inferior, or of the advantage which a distant one of superior qualifications might be supposed to afford, in all cases in which their being allowed such an option would not be likely to enable one party to subject the other to an expense and trouble which might be prejudicial to him.

44. The zillah court of appeal should have unlimited power to receive appeals from, and to confirm, alter, or reverse all decrees and orders passed by the courts of the moonsiffs and sudder ameen within the zillah subject to its jurisdiction; and it should be obligatory upon the court to receive every appeal referred to it within one month from the date of the decree or order objected to, and to make a special report to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut of the cause of delay in regard to every appeal not decided within the period of three months from the date of its being preferred. The decisions of this court should be final; but it should be competent to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut to call for its proceedings in any case in which there might appear ground for so doing, and to reverse or alter its decision. This general liability of the proceedings of the zillah court of appeal to the immediate revision of the tribunal of highest authority would operate as a powerful check, and would be necessary to ensure the due discharge of the important functions proposed to be committed to that court.

45. In regard to the salaries to be attached to the offices of moonsiff, sudder ameen, and zillah judge of appeal, it is obvious that they should be sufficiently liberal to induce men of ability to qualify themselves for those offices, and to render the self-interest of the individuals appointed a motive to the faithful discharge of the duties to be performed. Liberality in this respect towards the moonsiffs and sudder ameens is advisable, moreover, with a view to economy, as want of qualification in those judges must increase the appeals from their decision, and make it necessary to appoint a greater number of judges of appeal with high salaries than would otherwise suffice. On these considerations, I think the personal salaries I have proposed should not be liable to any deductions; and that for the establishment of their courts, the moonsiffs should be allowed one rupee, and the sudder ameens two rupees, for every suit decided by them, and not reversed on appeal; and that a fixed sum of Rs. 650 per mensem should be allowed for the establishment of the zillah court of appeal.

46. My reason for proposing to give to the moonsiffs and sudder ameens an allowance for their establishments, the amount of which would depend upon the number of the suits decided by them, and not reversed on appeal, rather than either a fixed monthly sum or a percentage on the value of the suits, is, that such a mode of providing for their establishments would operate as a stimulus to exertion, without having any tendency to induce greater attention to causes of large than to causes of small amount.

47. As necessary, in order to afford the same facility to all in obtaining justice, and to prevent the courts of judicature being perverted from the end of their institution into instruments for legally oppressing the poor, I would propose that the levy of the fees payable under the existing regulations on the institution, and during the trial of suits and appeals, should be postponed till after the decision of the question litigated, and then levied with other costs from the losing party. By this means the revenue derived from the taxes imposed on law proceedings, instead of being, as it now is, the cause of impediment to honest and necessary, and of encouragement to dishonest and mischievous litigation, would operate wholly as a check to the latter.

48. With the same view of checking injustice, by affording to those wronged every possible facility of obtaining redress, I would propose that litigants should be allowed to prosecute or defend their suits either in person or by any agent or attorney whom they might think proper to employ; and that the individual employed, whether a professional pleader or any other person, should be permitted to stipulate with his client for the remuneration to be received by him for his services, the fee allowed by existing regulations continuing to be the amount chargeable to the losing party for the pleader's fees of his adversary. Men of all classes would thus be admitted to plead in the several courts; from which this advantage could not fail to result, that only individuals of superior ability and knowledge would practise as professional pleaders, and these latter would have the strongest possible inducement to exert themselves in the advocacy of the causes undertaken by them.

49. I would propose also that the offices of moonsiff and sudder ameen should be open to all persons duly qualified; and I would submit whether it would not be wise policy, with a view to induce men of ability to devote themselves to the acquisition of the knowledge required for the proper performance of the judicial functions, and to ensure a continuance of exertion and good conduct on the part of those appointed to the discharge of those functions, to declare them eligible to be promoted to the highest offices in the judicial administration of the country.

50. A system of civil judicature on the footing above suggested, would consist of 572 courts of primary jurisdiction (viz. 520 moonsiffs' and 52 sudder ameens' courts), and 52 zillah courts of appeal, besides the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut;* and that those establishments would be sufficient to ensure a prompt administration of justice in the provinces referred to, in their present condition, will appear from the following facts and considerations.

51. The total number of original suits instituted in the Lower and Western provinces in 1828 was as follows:

LOWER PROVINCES.
Regular suits	135,155
Summary suits, about	30,000
			165,155
WESTERN PROVINCES.
Regular suits	27,511
Summary ditto, about	8,000
			85,511
† Total	...		200,666

52. In

	L. P.	W. P.
* Moonsiffs' Courts	370	150
Sudder Ameens' Courts	37	15
Zillah Courts of Appeal	37	15

† This number includes the 52 summary suits for rent preferred to the collectors; the suits formerly cognizable by the special commissioners, under Regulations I. 1821, and I. 1833, and now transferred to the commissioners of the

52. In the Lower Provinces the introduction of an improved and prompt administration of justice would in all probability have the effect of reducing the business of the courts, by frustrating the dishonest purpose for which many suits are there either groundlessly preferred or groundlessly defended; and although a different effect might be anticipated in the Western Provinces, where, from the deficiency of moonsiffs' courts, many claims that are just cannot now be prosecuted, it is not likely that the business in those provinces would be more than double its present amount: it might therefore be safely assumed, that the number of original causes of all descriptions to be decided on the trial of their merits would not exceed the following estimate:—

(2.) Minutes of the Judges of the
Sudder Adawlut.

LOWER PROVINCES.

Number of suits instituted, the same as at present	...	165,155
Deduct,
Number withdrawn or dismissed for default, the same proportion as at present, or one-fourth	41,288
To be decided on trial	123,867

WESTERN PROVINCES.

Number of suits instituted, estimated at double the present number	71,022
Deduct,
Number withdrawn or dismissed for default, one-fourth	...	17,755
To be decided on trial	53,267
TOTAL to be decided on trial	177,134

53. This would give only about 310 suits to be decided on trial annually, or about 26 monthly, by each of the 572 courts of primary jurisdiction, which is not much above the average number at present decided by the sudder ameens, in addition to the criminal cases which they dispose of.

54. The business of a zillah court of appeal would consist of appeals from the decisions of the eleven courts of primary jurisdiction subject to its authority, and of appeals from orders passed by those courts in regard to the execution of their decrees. The number of appeals of the first description annually preferred from the present moonsiffs and sudder ameens is about a fourteenth of the number of their decisions;* but the proportion would not venue, with exception to the few suits of that description which may have been instituted in 1828, in the zillah in which the special commissioners had authority to act in that year; also the suits relating to rent-free land coming under the provisions of Regulation II. 1819, now cognizable by special commissioners, under Regulation III. 1828

* In the year 1828, the proportion of appeals from the moonsiffs, in the Lower Provinces, was 1-23d, and from the sudder ameens 1/14th of the number of their decisions. The value litigated in the suits decided by the moonsiffs was limited to Rs. 150, and of the whole number of suits of every description, instituted in all the courts, at least 1/14th were for a less value than that sum. The following estimate of the number of appeals likely to be preferred monthly to the zillah judges formed on these data (even without assuming that the inducement to appeal would be diminished under a system of judicature administered by efficient judges), gives nearly the same result as the estimate contained in this paragraph.

Number of decisions passed monthly by ten moonsiffs and one sudder ameen, at 26 each	...	286
viz.:
1/14th for a value not exceeding Rs. 150	213
1/14th for a value exceeding Rs. 150	73
Number of appeals from decisions of the first class (1-28th of 213)	7 1/2
Number of appeals from decisions of the second class (1/14th of 73)	9
Total of probable number of appeals about	16 1/2

IV.

376 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

APPENDIX,
No. 4.
continued.

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

not probably exceed a twentieth under an improved system, which would provide for the office of moonsiff as well as that of sudder ameen being filled by men of higher qualifications and more confided in than the present moonsiffs, and which would ensure a groundless appeal being speedily followed by a decision, adjudging the expenses attending it to be paid by the appellant. Taking, therefore, the number of suits annually decided in a zillah by its eleven courts of primary jurisdiction at 3,410 (being 310 by each court as above estimated), that number would give only about 170 appeals annually, or 14 monthly, to the court of appeal; a number which, considering that much less time is required for the disposal of an appeal than for the trial of an original suit, would not occupy the court more than ten or twelve days at most every month. The appeals from orders, in regard to the execution of decrees, would not probably be more than a twentieth of the number of decrees of which execution would require to be enforced. They would therefore be fewer than the appeals from decrees, and being of a simple nature, the disposal of them could not occupy more than two or three days every month.

55. It seems thus almost certain, that the business of the zillah courts of appeal would not be more than would give employment to the judges of those courts for half or two-thirds of every month. The other portion of the month, it is proposed, should be employed by them in the capacity of criminal judges, as hereafter explained.

ADMINISTRATION OF CRIMINAL JUSTICE.

56. The criminal branch of our judicial system, as I have already observed, requires amendment nearly as much as the civil branch, particularly that part of it which provides for bringing the perpetrators of crimes to punishment. In nineteen cases out of twenty, the apprehension of an offender brings a far greater amount of evil upon the individual injured and his neighbours, than has been done by the offence committed. Although all these may have no other means of subsisting themselves and families but the produce of their daily labour, they are compelled, in order that the offender may be punished, to take a long journey to the magistrate's court, where they are often detained for months from their homes and occupations. This is a grievance of intolerable magnitude, far greater than any evil that could result from a petty thief being allowed to go unpunished, or even from a person of suspicious character being sometimes subjected to a slight punishment for an offence not committed by him;* and while the laws which render all classes constantly liable to this grievance continue in force, it is vain to expect from the people that aid towards the detection of offenders which is essential to an efficient police. It is impossible to remove the evil by multiplying European magistrates, so as to bring their courts within a short distance of all who are amenable to them, and it can only, therefore, be remedied by divesting the officers of police of the power to inflict it, as far as that can be done consistently with the duty of protecting the community from dangerous and heinous crimes, against which they cannot protect themselves, and by appointing intelligent and respectable men to fill the office of darogah of police.

57. With a view to the application of these remedies, I would suggest as follows :

1st. That the same division of the country into districts and zillahs proposed for the administration of civil justice in the provinces referred to, should be adopted for the administration of criminal justice in those provinces.

2d. That every city containing more than 100,000 inhabitants (and consequently comprising more than one district), with such portion of adjacent country as might be required to complete 200,000 inhabitants (or two districts), should form a cutwallah or city police jurisdiction, and that a cutwal, with a salary of 200 rupees per mensem, should be appointed to every such jurisdiction.

3d. That

* The present system does not afford security against this; on the contrary, it inflicts punishment upon all persons apprehended, the innocent as well as the guilty, by subjecting them to imprisonment for a longer time than might be necessary for investigating the charges preferred against them.

3d. That every district not comprised within the limits of a cutwallee or city jurisdiction should form a mofussil or country thanuah jurisdiction, and that a darogah or thanadar, with a salary of 150 rupees per mensem, should be appointed to every such jurisdiction.

4th. That every zillah (comprising ten districts) should form a magistracy, and that a magistrate, with a salary of Rs. 1,500 per mensem, should be appointed to each zillah.

5th. That in every zillah there should be a criminal court for the trial of prisoners committed by the magistrate, and for hearing appeals from sentences passed by him, and that the office of judge of the criminal court should be held by the judge of the zillah court of appeal.

58. In cases of theft and burglary unattended with any act of personal violence, and affrays unattended with homicide or severe wounding, as well as in the cases the cognizance of which is already taken from them;* cutwals and thanadars should be peremptorily prohibited from interfering on any pretence whatever, unless applied to by an individual injured or expressly ordered by the magistrate to bring the offenders to punishment. But in every case of any of the descriptions above mentioned, in which an individual injured might complain, or in which the magistrate might see proper to order investigation, it should be competent to the cutwal or thanadar, to whom the injured individual's application might be made, or to whom the magistrate's order might be directed, to make full enquiry into the complaint or charge preferred, and after hearing both the evidence for the accuser and that for the accused, to release the latter if the complaint or charge should be deemed not proved, or if proved, to adjudge him to suffer the punishment to which he might be liable under the regulations in force: in which latter event, the accused should be forwarded to the magistrate (without the prosecutor and witnesses being bound over to attend†), to be dealt with as, upon a revision of the cutwal's or thanadar's proceedings, the magistrate might judge proper.

59. In cases of murder, robbery by violence, and other heinous and dangerous crimes, which the magistrates are not competent to punish, it should be the duty of cutwals and thanadars as hitherto, on receiving information from any source of the occurrence of any such crime, to institute the local inquiry directed in Regulation XX. 1817, and to forward to the magistrate the person or persons whom there might be reasonable ground for believing guilty of the crime committed; at the same time taking recognizances from the prosecutors and witnesses to attend when summoned by the magistrate, to give their evidence on the trial of the prisoners before the criminal court of the zillah.

60. The zillah magistrate should possess all the powers vested in magistrates by the existing Regulations, with exception to those given by Regulation XV. 1821; and in the exercise of those powers he should be authorized to release, punish, or to commit for trial before the criminal court of the zillah all persons apprehended and forwarded to him by the cutwals and thanadars on the evidence taken by those functionaries,‡ in like manner as magistrates are now authorized to do on the evidence taken by the officers of their courts; a discretion, however, being reserved to the magistrate, in every case in which he might think the measure necessary for the ends of public justice, to require the personal attendance of the prosecutors and witnesses, and to take their examination in the same manner as magistrates may now do.

61. On

* These are cases of adultery, fornication, abusive language, slight trespass, and inconsiderable assault. Section xii. Regulation XX. 1817.

† The great grievance of a long journey, and a long detention from home and daily occupations, being thus removed, prosecutors and witnesses would not have to bribe the police officers to be exempted from it, and so one great source of corruption would be closed.

‡ The arguments for and against this proposition are stated at length in the annexed Paper, marked (B).

(2.) Minutes of the Judges of the
Sudder Adawlut.

378 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

61. On the first of every month the zillah magistrate should send to the criminal judge of the zillah a calendar of the prisoners committed for trial in the preceding month, with the prisoners and witnesses named in the calendar.

62. The zillah criminal judge should exercise all the powers vested in a commissioner of circuit by Regulation I. 1829. He should hold a sessions of gaol delivery for his zillah on the first of every month, and continue to sit daily until all the prisoners in the calendar (whose cases it might not be necessary to postpone for further evidence) should be tried, and until all appeals from sentences and orders passed by the magistrates in the preceding month should be disposed of.

63. The establishments which it would be necessary to maintain at the charge of Government, for the cutwallce and thanah jurisdictions, need not be large. It is obvious that the physical force of the few burkundaues whom Government could afford to pay would be utterly inadequate, if unaided by the people, to maintain an efficient police in a populous city, or in a district including an area of more than four hundred square miles, and that consequently the main strength of the police must be derived from the watchmen maintained in cities at the charge of the inhabitants under Regulation XXII. 1816, and those maintained in villages by the landholder and village communities under Regulation XX. 1817.

64. If the subsidiary police force maintained under the Regulations above cited were efficient, and it might easily be rendered efficient, and if its co-operation and that of the people with the Government police officers were ensured, as it might be if the people were relieved from the annoyances and grievances to which these latter subject them, the following scale of Government establishments under cutwals and thanadars would, I conceive, be sufficient for every necessary purpose.

CITY OR CUTWALLEE JURISDICTIONS.

For every ward or division containing 25,000 inhabitants:—

1 Jumadar, at per mensem	Rs. 15
1 Mohurrir, ditto	10
10 Burkundaues, at 4	40
Paper, &c.	5
					<hr/> Rs. 70

THANNAH OR MOFUSSIL JURISDICTIONS.

1 Jumadar, at per mensem	Rs. 15
1 Mohurrir, at ditto	10
20 Burkundaues, at 4	80
Paper, &c.	5
					<hr/> Rs. 110

65. In the Western Provinces it has been found necessary to station burkundaues on the high roads for the protection of travellers against highway robbery, and as it would not, perhaps, yet be safe to withdraw these guards, it might be advisable to allow on that account, for each thannah jurisdiction in those provinces, twenty burkundaues in excess of the number above proposed for a thannah jurisdiction in the Lower Provinces.

66. An efficient establishment for the court of the magistrate, including an establishment for the gaol, might, I conceive, be maintained at a monthly charge of Rs. 800. In addition to what may be denominated the ordinary establishments, there are in most of the magistracies subsidiary establishments of guard-boats, balagushtee burkundaues, and sowars paid by Government; the annual charge for which amounts to about Rs. 2,11,000. These subsidiary establishments require revision. I think it likely they might be immediately reduced to one-half their present amount, without any diminution of the efficiency of the police.

67. For

67. For the zillah criminal court, a small establishment in addition to that of the zillah court of appeal would suffice, the monthly charge for which would not exceed Rs. 200.

68. A system of criminal judicature on the plan above suggested would consist of 519 native subordinate magistrates (cutwals and thanadars), fifty-two European superintending magistrates, and fifty-two criminal courts for the trial of heinous offenders, exclusive of the court of Nizamut Adawlut in Calcutta.* The quantity of business to be disposed of monthly by each of those functionaries, estimating it from the state of business in the year 1828, as exhibited in the reports furnished for that year, would be as follows :

By a NATIVE MAGISTRATE.	L. P.	W. P.
Complaints and charges to be inquired into	8	6
By a EUROPEAN MAGISTRATE.
Cases inquired into by ten native magistrates acting under the superintendence of the European magistrate, to be revised by the latter and disposed of by him, or made over to the criminal judge of the zillah	80	60
By a CRIMINAL JUDGE.
Cases made over by the zillah magistrate, to be tried at the monthly sessions of gaol delivery	A little under 3	A little above 3
Appeals from sentences and orders of zillah magistrates, to be heard and disposed of at the monthly sessions of gaol delivery; estimated at about $\frac{1}{20}$ th of the number of sentences and orders passed by the magistrate	4	3

69. In the beginning of this Minute (para. 10 to 13), I submitted it as my opinion that there should be only one tribunal of supreme civil and criminal jurisdiction for both the Lower and the Western provinces, and that the seat of that one tribunal should be in Calcutta; urging, in support of this opinion, that the security for the due discharge of the important functions intrusted to the court, derived from its proceedings being open to public observation, (the most effective of all securities) is much greater in Calcutta than it would be elsewhere; and that were the court constituted so as to be enabled to hear and decide every appeal preferred to it without any delay, it could, wherever seated, exercise its controlling and regulating authority as effectively over the most remote as over the nearest of the subordinate courts within its jurisdiction.

70. Under a system of civil and criminal judicature, such as I have ventured to suggest, the business to be disposed of monthly by the sudder court would not probably exceed the following estimate.

CIVIL BUSINESS.

Petitions for admission of appeals from the decrees of 52 zillah judges of appeal, estimated at $\frac{1}{10}$ th of the whole number (728) of decrees, which would be passed in a month by those 52 judges	36 $\frac{1}{2}$
Appeals admitted, estimated at $\frac{3}{4}$ ds of the number of petitions for admission	24
Appeals from orders of the zillah judges of appeal, in regard to the execution of decrees, estimated at $\frac{1}{10}$ th of the number of orders passed	24
Appeals

	L. P.	W. P.
Native Magistrates	369	150
European do	37	15
Criminal Judges	37	15

† For the reasons stated in para. 54, 1-20th has been assumed as the probable proportion of the decrees of the native judges which would be appealed from; the same proportion is assumed here, it being unlikely that there would be more appeals from the decisions of the Europeans than from those of the natives.

‡ This proportion of the number of special appeals applied for, likely to be admitted, is much above the proportion now admitted.

(2.) Minutes of the Judges of the
Sudder Adawlut.

Courts of Sudder
Dewanny Adawlut
and Nizamut Adawlut.

IV.

380 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

APPENDIX,

No. 4.

continued.

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

Appeals from orders of zillah judges of appeal relating to regular appeals pending in their courts, passed prior to the decision of the appeals, and from other orders of a miscellaneous nature, estimated at only one-fourth of the number of appeals of this description which are now preferred, it being certain that there would seldom be occasion for making such appeals under a system which would enable the lower courts to decide the causes on their files without any delay ... 16

CRIMINAL BUSINESS.

Trials referred by the zillah criminal judges, estimated at the number now referred by the commissioners of circuit ... 50

Appeals from orders of the criminal judges on petitions preferred to them while holding the sessions of gaol delivery, estimated at about one-fourth of the number of appeals of the same description now preferred ... 16

71. Besides the civil and criminal business above detailed, there would be the English correspondence to be disposed of, which would probably exceed what it now is.

72. Although, from the foregoing estimate, it seems evident that the business of the sudder court would be, upon the whole, reduced, I am nevertheless persuaded that the appointment of a sixth judge, with a corresponding increase of establishment, would be requisite to prevent the accumulation of arrears, and to ensure every appeal and application preferred to the court being heard and determined with the degree of promptitude which is necessary to an effective exercise of its controlling and regulating authority. It would be also requisite to enlarge the powers of the judges, by rendering them competent singly to decide conclusively, whether for affirming, altering, or reversing the decrees, sentence, or order of a lower court, all civil cases, excepting such as might involve a disputed question of law not before settled by a decision of the court; in which last-mentioned cases the unsettled point should be referred to and determined by the opinion of the court collectively; and all criminal cases, excepting those in which a sentence of death might be passed, for the confirmation of which the concurring opinion of two judges should, as at present, be necessary.

73. But whatever alteration in the existing system of judicature it may be deemed advisable to adopt, an addition to the present number of judges in the sudder court will be indispensable. In a Minute recorded by me on the 30th of July 1828, urging the expediency of making provision for the increasing business of the court, I showed that the number of appeals, regular and special, then on its file was 496; that the average number annually decided was only 105; and that consequently an appeal to the court could not be heard in less than four years and a-half from the time of its being preferred. The number of appeals has been somewhat reduced since that time, but the arrear of general business has increased,* and occasions a delay in the hearing and disposing of applications to the court, which renders it almost wholly inefficient for the end of its institution. At the same time it is to be observed, and it is due to the judges to state, that the accumulation has increased since July 1828, notwithstanding more cases have been decided in the period that has elapsed since that date than ever were decided in any preceding period of the same duration; and that this greater number of decisions has been effected by some of the judges labouring daily on the bench from 10 A.M. till sunset,† a degree of labour which

	Number of Cases in Arrear.
	On 1st July 1828.	On 1st March 1829.
* Appeals regular and special	496 ..	436
Applications for admission of special appeals.. ..	287 ..	350
Summary appeals, civil and criminal	154 ..	267
Returns to precepts	206 ..	409
TOTAL	1,143 ..	1,462

† I do not take to myself the credit of being one of the judges who thus labour.

which few men are capable of enduring, and which ought not in this exhausting climate to be imposed on any one.

74. The annexed Schedule, marked (A.) shows the present charge for the Judicial and Revenue administration of the provinces subject to the operation of the Bengal Code of Regulations, as nearly as I have been able to ascertain it, and an estimate of the charge that would be incurred under the plan explained in the foregoing pages. The latter charge amounts to Rs. 1,17,86,772, being less than the former by nearly thirty-seven lacs of rupees; and it will be observed that, while this saving of revenue would be effected, all functionaries, native as well as European, would receive salaries more proportionate to the importance of the duties to be performed by them than they now do.

(Signed) A. Ross.

(2.) Minutes of the
Judges of the
Sudder Adawlut.

(A. 1.)

A SCHEDULE, showing the AMOUNT of the PRESENT and of the PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENTS for the Revenue and Judicial Administration of the Provinces subject to the operation of the Bengal Code of Regulations; viz.

LOWER PROVINCES; comprising Bengal, Behar, Orissa, Benares, and Cuttack.

WESTERN PROVINCES; comprising the Provinces specified in Regulations II. 1803, and VIII. 1805.

PRESENT ESTABLISHMENTS.

I.—REVENUE DEPARTMENT.
		Rupees.	Rupees.	Rupees.
59 Collectors of Land Revenue and their Establishments:
Lower Provinces, 36 Collectors	23,36,762
Western Provinces, 23 Collectors	25,63,312	49,00,074
20 Commissioners of Revenue and Circuit, and their Establishments:
Lower Provinces .. 11 Commissioners	5,36,976
Western Provinces, 9 ditto	4,58,874	9,95,850	58,95,924
4 Commissioners and their Establishments, for the trial of Suits regarding the liability of Lands to Public Assessment, under Regulation III. 1828:
Lower Provinces .. 4 Commissioners	2,12,112
Western Provinces	—	2,12,112
Revenue Surveys	1,96,992
Sudder Board of Revenue and Establishments	2,69,160
Contingencies	5,33,796	12,12,060
TOTAL of ESTABLISHMENTS in the } REVENUE DEPARTMENT	71,07,984

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 4.
continued.

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

382 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

	Rupees.	Rupees.	Rupees.
Brought forward	71,07,984
II.—JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT.
Lower Provinces :
31 Judges and Magistrates, and Office Establishments	Annual Charge.
*Registers	28,83,348
*Covenanted Assistants
31 Civil Surgeons
122 Law Officers and Sudder Ameens ..	1,42,400
476 Moonsiffs; amount of fees received by them, about	9,14,724
529 Police Thanna Establishments	6,58,932
Contingencies		45,99,404
Western Provinces :
14 Judges and Magistrates
*Registers	12,20,988
*Covenanted Assistants
14 Civil Surgeons
36 Law Officers and Sudder Ameens
72 Moonsiffs; amount of fees received, about	21,600
323 Police Thanna Establishments	7,92,324
Contingencies	6,29,700	26,64,612
Courts of Appeal :
Lower Provinces .. 5 Courts	5,29,544
Western Provinces, 1 ditto	1,13,536
		6,43,080
Courts of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut and Nizamut Adawlut :
5 Judges' Salaries	2,80,000
1 Register and Deputy Register	39,600
5 Covenanted Assistants	34,800
2 Translators of Regulations	9,600
3 Mahomedan Law Officers	15,000
1 Pundit	1,800
1 Vakeel of Government	480
15 Uncovenanted Assistants	22,920
49 Moonshees', Mohurrirs', and Nazirs' Establish- ments, &c. &c.	27,428
Contingencies	30,720	4,63,348
Allypore Gaol		9,180
TOTAL of ESTABLISHMENTS in JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT			83,78,624
GRAND TOTAL of PRESENT ESTABLISHMENTS in the REVENUE & JUDICIAL DEPARTMENTS }			1,54,86,608

* The number of Registers and Covenanted Assistants should be equal to the number of judges, but there are not so many actually employed. Were the full complement employed, the annual charge for the Zillah Establishments under the existing system would exceed the amount exhibited in this Estimate.

(A. 2.)

(2.) Minutes of the Judges of the
Sudder Adawlut.

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENTS.

LOWER PROVINCES to be divided into 37 Zillahs.

WESTERN PROVINCES to be divided into 15 Zillahs.

(See para. 42 of Minute.)

I.—REVENUE DEPARTMENT.		Rupees.	Rupees.	Rupees.
50 Collectors, each with a salary of Rs. 1,000, and an Office Establishment of Rs. 500 per annum; to have no duty to perform but that of collecting the Assessed Revenue—(See para. 21 to 23 of Minute):		Annual charge.
Lower Provinces .. 20 Collectors (allowing 2 for Cuttack)	}	3,60,000
Western Provinces, 30 ditto	}	5,40,000	9,00,000
155 Tehsildars, each with a salary of Rs. 50, and an Establishment of Rs. 80 per mensem—(See para. 27 of Minute):
Lower Provinces .. 5 Tehsildars (in Cuttack) ..		7,800
Western Provinces, 150 ditto		2,34,000	2,41,800
11 Commissioners for making settlements of the Districts not permanently assessed, for a term of 25 years, each with a salary and establishments of Rs. 55,000 per annum, for 5 years, or Rs. 11,000 per annum, for 25 years—(See para. 33 to 36 of Minute):
Lower Provinces .. 1 Commissioner (in Cuttack) ..		11,000
Western Provinces, 10 ditto		1,10,000	1,21,000
Revenue Surveys: present Charge of Rs. 1,96,992 per annum for 5 years, is Rs. 9,84,960, which, divided by 25, gives per annum	39,398
Contingencies (estimated at 2/3ds of their present amount)	3,55,864
Addition to the Establishment of the Office of Secretary to Government in the Revenue Department, instead of the present Sudder Board of Revenue; viz .
2 Deputy Secretaries, each with a Salary of Rs. 30,000, and an Establishment of Rs. 6,000 per annum.—(See para. 38 of Minute)	}	..	72,000
TOTAL of PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENTS in the REVENUE DEPARTMENT		17,30,062
Carried forward	17,30,062

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 4.
continued.

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

384 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

Brought forward		Rupees. ..	Rupees. ..	Rupees. 17,30,069
II.—JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT.
CIVIL BRANCH.
520 Moonsiffs (10 in every Zillah), each with a salary of Rs. 300 per mensem, and an allowance for Court Establishment of one rupee for every suit decided, and not reversed on appeal, estimated at Rs. 30 per mensem.
These Judges to be empowered to take cognizance of all original suits for a value not exceeding Rs. 1,000, which either the plaintiffs or the defendants may desire to be tried by them ; and also of original suits for any value above Rs. 1,000 which both the plaintiffs and the defendants may desire to submit to their decision—(See para. 42—46 of Minute):
Lower Provinces .. 370 Moonsiffs		14,65,200	20,59,200
Western Provinces, 150 ditto		5,94,000
52 Sudder Ameens (one in every zillah), each with a salary of Rs. 1,000 per mensem, and an allowance for Court Establishment of two rupees for every suit decided and not reversed on appeal, estimated at Rs. 60 per mensem.
These Judges to be empowered to take cognizance of all original suits preferred to them for a value exceeding Rs. 1,000, and also of original suits preferred to them for a less value than Rs. 1,000, which the defendants may not desire to be transferred for trial to the Moonsiff of the district to which they reside—(See para. 42—46 of Minute):
Lower Provinces .. 37 Sudder Ameens		4,70,640	6,61,440
Western Provinces, 15 ditto		1,90,800
52 Judges of Appeal (one in every zillah), each with a salary of Rs. 3,000, and an allowance for Court Establishment of Rs. 650 per mensem.
The Judges of Appeal to be empowered to hear appeals from the decisions of the Moonsiffs and Sudder Ameens, and to perform all the functions of the present Provincial Courts of Appeal, with exception to trying original suits—(See para. 42—46 of Minute):
Lower Provinces .. 37 Judges of Appeal		16,20,600	22,77,600
Western Provinces, 15 ditto		6,57,300
TOTAL of CIVIL BRANCH, exclusive of Contingencies and of the Court of S. D. At.	49,98,240
Carried forward	49,98,240	17,30,069

(2.) Minutes of the
Judges of the
Sudder Adawlut.

	Rupees.	Rupees.	Rupees.
Brought forward	49,98,240	17,30,062
II.—Judicial Department— continued.
CRIMINAL BRANCH.
4 Cutwals, or native magistrates of cities, containing 100,000, or more than 100,000 inhabitants, each with a salary of Rs. 200, and an establishment of Rs. 70 per mensem, for every ward, or every 25,000 inhabitants contained in his jurisdiction—(See para. 56—67 of Minute):
Lower Provinces, 4 Cutwallee Jurisdictions	26,400
Viz.
City Benares .. 8 Wards	} equal to 5 Districts.
— Patna .. 4 ditto
— Moorshedabad, 4 ditto
— Dacca .. 4 ditto
Western Provinces*	—
	26,400
(A. 3)
515 Thannadars, or native magistrates of thannahs or country districts, each with a salary of Rs. 150 per mensem, and an Establishment of Rs. 110 per mensem in the Lower Provinces, and Rs. 190 per mensem in the Western Provinces.
These native magistrates, and also the cutwals of cities, to take cognizance of all crimes of a dangerous nature, without application from the persons injured, and of offences not of a dangerous nature, upon application only from the injured parties, or upon order from the magistrate of the zillah—(See para. 56—67 of Minute):
Lower Provinces, 365 Thannadars of Mofussil or country districts (exclusive of the 5 districts included in the Cutwallee jurisdictions of the cities of Benares, Patna, Moorshedabad, and Dacca)	11,38,800
Western Provinces, 150 Thannadars	6,12,000
52 European Magistrates (one in every zillah), each with a salary of Rs. 1,500, and an Establishment of Rs. 800 per mensem.
These magistrates to have all the powers possessed by the present magistrates, and to be authorized to confirm or alter the sentences of the native magistrates, on a revision of the proceedings of the latter, and to commit prisoners charged with heinous crimes for trial before the criminal court of the zillah, on a consideration of the depositions of the witnesses
Carried forward	17,77,200	49,98,240	17,30,062

* In these Provinces there are no cities containing so many as 100,000 inhabitants.

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 4.
continued.

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

386 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

	Rupees.	Rupees.	Rupees.	Rupees.
Brought forward	17,77,200	49,98,240	17,30,062
II.—Judicial Department— continued.
Criminal Branch— continued. examined by the native magistrates—(See para. 56-67 of Minute):	Annual Charge.
Lower Provinces .. 37 European Magistrates ..	10,21,200
Western Provinces, 15 ditto	4,14,000	14,35,200
Subsidiary Police Establishments, attached to Magistracies—(Vide para. 66 of Minute):
Lower Provinces .. Balagushlee Police Officers } and Guard-boats .. }	26,316
Western Provinces, Police Sowars	79,488	1,05,804
52 Criminal Judges (one in every zillah). These judges to be vested with the powers of the present Commissioners of Circuit, and to hold a sessions of gaol-delivery every month.
The office of Criminal Judge to be held by the Judge of the Zillah Court of Appeal, and Rs. 200 per mensem allowed for the establishment of the Criminal Court, in addition to the establishment allowed for the Court of Appeal—(See para. 56—67 of Minute):
Lower Provinces .. 37 Criminal Court Establishments .. }	88,800
Western Provinces, 15 ditto	36,000	1,24,800
TOTAL OF CRIMINAL BRANCH, exclusive of Contingencies, and of Court of Nizamut Adawlut }	..		34,43,004
TOTAL OF CIVIL & CRIMINAL BRANCHES, exclusive of Contingencies, and of the Courts of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut and Nizamut Adawlut }	..		84,41,244
CONTINGENCIES in Civil and Criminal Branches (estimated at 2/3ds* of their present amount):
Lower Provinces	4,39,286
Western Provinces	4,19,800	8,59,086
COURTS OF SUDDER DEWANNY and NIZAMUT ADAWLUT—(See para. 69—73 of Minute):			93,00,380
6 Judges, each with a salary of Rs. 55,000 per annum }	3,30,000
Carried forward	3,30,000	..	93,00,330	17,30,062

* By not incurring any contingent expense but what was really necessary, the charge under this head might, I think, be reduced to about the amount here estimated.

IV.—JUDICIAL.

387

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 4.
continued.

(2) Minutes of the
Judges of the
Sudder Adawlut.

	Rupees.	Rupees.	Rupees.	Rupees.
Brought forward	3,30,000	..	93,00,300	17,30,062
Courts of Sudder Dewanny, &c.—continued.	Annual Charge.
1 Register, with a salary of	36,000
1 Deputy Register, with a salary of	18,000
2 Translators of Regulations in the Persian and Bengallee languages, each with a salary of Rs. 4,800	9,600
2 Mahomedan Law-officers, each with a salary of Rs. 12,000	24,000
1 Pundit, with a salary of *	1,800
1 Vakeel of Government, with a salary of .. would be a situation for which a covenanted servant, if qualified, might be eligible.	4,800
15 English Writers	22,920
Native Amlahs	30,000
Contingencies, estimated at 2/3ds of the present amount	20,480
Gaol at Allypore	4,97,600 9,180
TOTAL of ESTABLISHMENTS in the JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT	5,06,780	98,07,110
				1,15,37,172
(A. 4.)
52 Surgeons, each with a salary of Rs. 4,800	2,49,600
GRAND TOTAL of the PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENTS in both the REVENUE and JUDICIAL DEPARTMENTS	1,17,86,772
Which being deducted from the amount of the present Establishments	1,54,86,608
Leaves an immediate annual Saving of	36,99,836
This saving would be further increased, when the following proposed temporary Establishments became unnecessary; viz. Tehseeldarry Establishments in the Western Provinces and Cuttack, per annum	2,41,800
(See para 27 of Minute.)
Carried forward	2,41,800	36,99,836

* The numerous recorded Bawustahs, containing expositions of almost every point of Hindoo law likely to come under the consideration of the court, render the services of a pundit now but little wanted; an increase of the salary of that officer is not therefore deemed necessary.

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 4.
continued.

388

APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

	Rupees.	Rupees.	Rupees.	Rupees.
Brought forward	2,41,800	36,99,836
Supernumerary Police Burkundauzes, allowed for guarding the high-roads in the Western Provinces, per annum (See para. 65 of Minute.)	1,44,000
Subsidiary Establishment of Sowars in the Western Provinces might hereafter be re- duced from Rs. 79,488, allowed in the forego- ing Schedule, to Rs. 40,500 per annum, which would maintain 15 Sowars in each magistracy, and leave an annual saving of (See para. 66 of Minute.)	38,988	4,24,788
Probable future Saving	41,24,624
The following covenanted civil servants would be supernumeraries, were the above plan im- mediately adopted; the annual charge for maintaining whom on their present allowances would be about	8,08,800
Viz.
52 Registers, at Rs. 6,000 each per annum	3,12,000
60 Assistants, drawing	2,88,000
58 Collégians, drawing	2,08,800
			8,08,800

(Signed)

A. Ross.

(B. 1.)

EXTRACTS from a MINUTE of Mr. Ross, judge of the Court of Nizamut Adawlut, relative to the Administration of Criminal justice in the Provinces subject to the Bengal Government, dated 21st July 1827.

Para. 12. "It is also to be observed, that authorizing the magistrates to decide as to the guilt or innocence of accused persons upon the faith of testimony not delivered in their presence, would not introduce a new practice, the magistrates being already authorized by the regulations in force to employ the native officers of their courts to take the depositions of the prosecutors and witnesses in all cases coming before them. In fact, the only change proposed in this respect is, the substitution of depositions taken by native officers in the Mofussil for depositions taken by native officers at the adder station of the zillah; and regarding the former merely as more likely to be trustworthy than the latter, I cannot but think that the change would be an improvement of the present practice."

13. "In support of this opinion, I would submit whether a person having a knowledge of a fact or circumstance to be ascertained, is not more likely to be willing to state what he knows, and to adhere to truth in his statement, when examined without being previously subjected subjected to inconvenience and annoyance near the place where the fact or circumstance in question occurred, and in the presence of a number of people acquainted with him and capable of judging as to the truth or otherwise of what he may say, than when examined (as witnesses are now examined) at a distant station, to which he has been dragged from his home and occupations, and where no one hearing him knows or cares whether he speaks truth or not. I would submit also, whether a police darogah making an inquiry on the spot into the circumstances attending the commission of a crime, responsible for the manner in which the inquiry is conducted, and having his proceedings closely observed by the people among whom the crime was committed, is not more likely to be able, by putting proper questions to the witnesses examined, to elicit the truth from them and more likely to record their depositions faithfully, than a common mohurrir of a magistrate's court, who can have no knowledge of the circumstances of the case but what he derives from a hurried and careless perusal of the thannah proceedings, who is under no responsibility, and whose sole object is to finish the task assigned to him as quickly and with as little trouble to himself as possible. And further I would submit, whether it must not be presumed that a person holding the office of darogah of police is better qualified in point of intelligence and education for performing the duty of examination than a mohurrir, whose office only requires that he shall be able to write quickly and legibly."

* The practice is doubtless liable to objection; but small as the number of magistrates is, it cannot be dispensed without putting almost an entire stop to the administration of justice in cases of minor delinquency, or intrusting it wholly to native functionaries.

14. "In point of qualification, the superiority of the darogahs ought to be great. It is to be recollected that their office requires that they shall be capable of conducting the initiatory process of every criminal prosecution, of which the examination of witnesses is an essential, and indeed the principal part; and that upon their being qualified for that duty depends the result of all prosecutions instituted; in other words, the degree of efficiency with which criminal justice is administered."

15. "It is indeed particularly necessary, as the law now stands, that the office in question should be properly filled; for it is obvious how much the evils which compulsory prosecution in trivial cases produces must be aggravated, when the power of inflicting them is intrusted to ignorant and unprincipled men."

(B. 2.)

EXTRACTS from a LETTER from the Secretary to Government in the Judicial Department to the Register of the court of Nizamut Adawlut, dated 12th September 1827, communicating the observations of Government on the suggestions contained in the minute above quoted from:

Para. 15. "But the most important of Mr. Ross's suggestions is that which contemplates such an unreserved and implicit confidence in the integrity of the police darogahs as shall warrant a magistrate in proceeding to judgment after reading their reports and the evidence taken by them, without hearing the prosecutor and witnesses before him."

EXTRACTS from a MINUTE by Mr. Ross, Judge of the court of Nizamut Adawlut, dated the 5th February 1828.

"I beg it may be understood that I did not recommend this rule as unobjectionable; and that I do not advocate the practice which it would sanction, of magistrates giving judgment upon a mere perusal of written depositions. I recommend the rule only as being less objectionable in every point of view than the rule now followed, which also sanctions the same practice; a practice, it must be kept in mind, which it was found necessary long ago to have recourse to, and which cannot be discontinued under existing circumstances."

APPENDIX,

No. 4.

continued.

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

Para. 14. "The Vice-president in council cannot help thinking that such a rule would afford far more opportunities for corrupt conduct than the partial discretion allowed to them (the darogahs) of staying the execution of process against the accused, which has been adverted to."

"In opposition to the opinion expressed in this paragraph, I would submit, that the power of giving annoyance being the main source from which the darogahs of police derive a corrupt advantage from their office, a rule which would take from them that power, in the cases which afford the most frequent occasions for its exercise, must take from them most of the opportunities they now have for corrupt conduct. This the rule proposed by me would do. In the most numerous class of cases, that rule would in fact leave to the darogahs no other source of corruption but the power of making false reports, favourable or unfavourable to the parties accused, in voluntary prosecutions; a source which would not be so productive as that which would be closed. The number of voluntary prosecutors would not be so great as the number of involuntary prosecutors is under the present system; and although it is probable enough that the former (the voluntary prosecutors) might be disposed to give a bribe to ensure the punishment of the persons accused by them, it cannot be supposed that, to obtain a report which might fail of its object and bring themselves into trouble, they could be induced to give so much as the latter (the involuntary prosecutors) may be believed very willing to give, to be exempted from what is in reality equivalent to an infliction of punishment upon themselves, namely, the evils of a prosecution as now conducted, an infliction from which, at present, exemption can be obtained only by bribery. There would be still less likelihood of any thing considerable being obtained from prisoners for reports falsely favourable to them, because the presence of the prosecutors and other persons observing the proceedings of the darogahs would render it difficult to make such report, without greater risk of detection than it would be prudent to incur for a bribe of the small amount which the generality of prisoners could give."

Para. 15. "In the absence of the prosecutors and witnesses, the magistrate would possess no means of knowing whether the darogah had acted honestly and impartially or not. A favourable turn given to the case would ensure the prisoner's release; while on the other hand, if the report were against him,

"In almost every case which the magistrate now decides, the evidence is taken by a native officer of his court. The only means the magistrate has of knowing that it has been fairly taken is that of examining the prosecutors and witnesses himself; and he would have the same means of ascertaining its him, he would always be able to defeat the object of the rule, and compel the attendance of his accusers, by asserting that the darogah had reported their evidence unfairly."

its fairness were it taken by a darogah of police. The advantage derived from the present course of procedure is in reality very little: it amounts only to this, that prosecutors and witnesses being present in court, the magistrate, if desirous personally to examine them after they have been examined by the native officer, may do so as soon as his other business will permit, without having to wait a few days to procure their attendance, as he would have to do were they not present. But then it is to be considered, that a personal examination by the magistrate is seldom resorted to, and that the necessity for such an examination would exist only in the cases in which the evil would be least felt, namely, those in which the accusers or accused might be able to offer a more than ordinary temptation for the darogah's favour. In all other cases (on the considerations stated in the 8th para. of this, and in the 13th para. of my former Minute), the magistrate might place at least as much reliance on the examination taken by a darogah as he now does those taken by a mohurrir of his court.

"As to prisoners being able to defeat the object of the rule, by asserting that the darogahs had unfairly reported the evidence adduced against them, I submit that the object in view could not be defeated in that manner. Doubtless prisoners would often assert the partiality of the darogahs as a shift to avoid punishment; but when obviously a mere shift, the assertion would not be permitted to avail; and when supported by such a degree of probability as to raise doubt in the magistrate's mind in regard to the darogah's proceedings, the prisoner might be released without punishment, if the prosecutor declined to attend after receiving a notification that his presence before the magistrate was required. No greater evil would ensue from a really guilty prisoner being thus released with impunity, than from an offender being allowed to go unpunished in consequence of the person injured by his offence declining in the first instance to prosecute him."

Para. 10. In short the proposed rule would, in the opinion of Government, be wholly inadvisable to any good purpose, and would be like unsatisfactory to all parties; to

"Had the considerations which I have now submitted been adverted to, Government, I am inclined to think, would not have adopted the opinion expressed in this paragraph

APPENDIX,
No. 4.
*continued.*Papers respecting Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

to the prosecutor, to the accused, and above all to the magistrate, who would never, under such circumstances, feel that he was proceeding upon sure grounds."

graph as to the probable operation of the proposed rule.

"The rule would obviously enable the magistrate to lessen, in a very considerable degree, the harassment and difficulties to which they are now compelled in administering the laws to subject the people; nor does there appear to be reason to apprehend that it would cause any dissatisfaction.

"To prosecutors the rule could hardly be unsatisfactory, because they would have the option of attending the court of the magistrate and prosecuting their complaint in person, if they preferred that course.

"Nor would the parties accused have much cause to be dissatisfied. One very great advantage, at least, would result to them, namely, that of being speedily released if apprehended on insufficient evidence, without suffering (as now frequently happens) a term of imprisonment equal to what they would deserve if guilty.

"The magistrates also, I should think, would generally approve the rule. It would enable them, as already observed, to avoid giving unnecessary vexation and trouble in the discharge of their duties. It would at the same time afford at least as sure grounds for their decisions as the rule now prescribed, and it would be always in their power to follow the latter rule when they might think it advisable so to do.

"I have only further to observe, that the weight of the objections to a modification of the existing law, such as I ventured to suggest, will be much reduced, and that of the arguments in favour of it much increased, when Government shall give effect to its intention of raising the allowances of the darogahs of police and placing them on a respectable footing.

(Signed) A. Ross.

MR. TURNBULL'S MINUTE.

THE professed object of Mr. Bayley's plan is to provide for the more extended employment of native agency, with a view to the more prompt and efficient administration of civil justice. This proposition cannot but command general assent. It is not to be denied that our present means are inadequate, and there can be little doubt that if due care be taken in the selection, and the situation of native judge be raised to a proper standard of respectability,

(2.) Minutes of the Judges of the
Sudder Adawlut.

respectability, individuals will be found fully qualified by character, talent, and learning to discharge the functions proposed to be confided to them. The only question on which a difference of opinion may arise, is as to the extent of the powers which should be vested in the native tribunals, "without occasioning the evils arising from a too sudden and violent change in the established system." On this point the observation is no doubt entitled to weight, that much of the success which has attended our progress hitherto, in the amelioration of the native institutions, "is to be ascribed to the slowness and caution which have marked the several steps of our advance." But I am still disposed to think, provided always, as above stated, that due care be taken in the selection, that the principle of the new arrangement might be carried further than Mr. Bayley's plan proposes, especially in regard to the office by moonsiff. The salary of 100 rupees (inclusive of establishment) proposed for those officers is I think much too low, and is indeed less than many of them receive already. To render them more extensively useful and efficient, I would raise the salary to 200 rupees, and increase their jurisdiction to the extent vested in our present higher class of sudder ameen, giving them cognizance of suits not exceeding in value or amount 1,000 rupees. The number of the new class of sudder ameen, with the higher salary of 500 rupees, would of course be proportionally diminished. Considering the respectable footing on which it is proposed to place the latter officers (who will receive a higher salary than has yet been enjoyed by a native under our Government, with the single exception, I believe, of the Cawzee Ool Koozzat), it may be questioned whether their jurisdiction might not be extended to the trial of suits even beyond 5,000 rupees. But the necessity of this must depend on the nature of the arrangements which may ultimately be adopted in regard to the European courts; for to whatever extent it may be determined to raise the powers of the native tribunals, it will obviously be of primary importance to provide for a vigilant and active control over their proceedings by the European authorities; and as the zillah judge will be the immediate appellate and controlling jurisdiction, he must be relieved to the fullest extent possible, so that his time and attention shall be principally directed to the trial of appeals from the acts and decisions of the native courts. The extensive power which will thus be vested in the zillah judge leads to the consideration of the proposed abolition of the provincial courts; this measure, as well as the further proposition for abolishing the office of register to the zillah courts, being, I presume, deemed necessary to meet the additional expense which will be incurred in raising the character of the native tribunals. On this subject I can only say, that if the main object in view cannot be attained otherwise than at the proposed sacrifice, I deeply lament the necessity, being strongly impressed with the belief that the abolition of the intermediate controlling authority of the provincial courts will be attended with serious hazard to the efficiency of the whole scheme. We have daily experience at present of the necessity of check and control over the acts and conduct, whether of our native or European tribunals; and it requires little foresight to contemplate the extent to which that necessity will increase under the operation of the new system, which will place such large powers in the hands of the natives in the first instance, and render the fiat of the zillah judge final and conclusive in a large majority of the cases brought before him. This control has heretofore been exercised immediately by six provincial courts, consisting for many years past of four or five judges; the whole being subject to one general superintending authority, to which all classes have been accustomed to look with confidence for redress in the final resort, and to which, as placed at the seat of Government, they will still look, notwithstanding the establishment of a second or more courts of similar denomination in the interior of the country. In lieu, then, of these six courts, it is proposed to establish a separate sudder for the Western Provinces, to consist of three members, thereby placing in the hands of three individuals the multifarious* duties heretofore performed by nine or ten and transferring those of the remaining nineteen

* On the subject of Mr. Bayley's Minutes. "The mass of miscellaneous business with which the courts in question are at present burdened, is such as to require the attention of the judges to be divided between the trial of suits and the management of the courts."—Minutes of the Sudder Adawlut, 1834-35, p. 10.

teen or twenty to the already overwhelming duties of the present sudder; while in all the provinces the means before afforded of more immediate appeal and redress, at a moment when they will be so much more urgently called for, will be removed to a distance which will render them inaccessible and unavailable to the people at large. Under such circumstances, I would strongly advocate the continuance, if practicable, of the provincial courts, even on their reduced scale, in preference to the establishment of a second sudder. But if the necessity of economy be so urgently pressing as to leave us no alternative, it will be absolutely necessary to introduce an intermediate authority between the native courts and that of the zillah judge, as well for the trial of original suits exceeding in value or amount the sum of 5,000 rupees, as to assist the zillah judge in the trial of the numerous appeals which will be referred to him from the decisions and acts of the native tribunals. An office too of this description, which might be denominated as formerly assistant judge, independently of its necessity, would provide an intermediate grade of promotion and encouragement to junior servants as well as the means of acquiring judicial knowledge and experience, in respect to which the proposed plan seems to be defective: though the mode in which it is suggested to employ them on their first entering the public service, viz. as assistants to the collectors, is highly desirable. They should at the same time, however, be made assistants to the magistrates, to prepare them for filling the latter office; nor can I perceive any reason why they should not be denominated registers also, and intrusted with the office of registry of deeds and other miscellaneous duties which the zillah registers now perform, and for which no provision is made in Mr. Bayley's plan. At all events, I hold it to be quite impracticable that the zillah judge singly will be able to discharge, with any proper degree of efficiency, the burthensome duties which, under the plan as it stands, would be imposed on him. In this I do not lose sight of the further relief which the plan has in view, of transferring to the collectors of revenue the cognizance, in the first instance, of all summary suits for rent, which is the next and a most important subject for consideration. On this point it may first be considered, whether, with reference to the increased powers proposed to be given to the native tribunals, the system of summary suit, now allowed by our Regulations, might not be abolished, and all suits of the nature referred to tried and decided as other civil claims, on a full investigation of their merits; open to one appeal of right, and a second on good cause shown, provision being at the same time made for empowering the courts, in any stage of the cause, to order summarily what may be necessary for securing the rights and interests of the parties, subject to the final award. In many of the cases wherein a summary suit or inquiry is now authorized, the investigation which the courts are frequently compelled to make, as for instance in cases of disputed boundaries or possession of lands, is sufficient to enable them to decide on the whole merits, the right as well as the fact. In others, where the investigation is less perfect, it is obvious that great injustice must be done by a hasty decision. If the injured party can afford the time and expense of a new trial, he is exposed unnecessarily to a double process, where one should suffice; if not, the system operates as a denial of justice, while the courts are overloaded by duty twice performed; though it is clear that the first investigation must have advantages which are partially or often wholly lost to the second. The absence or death of a material witness, and many other circumstances, may be fatal to a just claim, especially the lapse of time, which is always the more unfavourable in the ratio of its increase, to a true ascertainment of the facts on which the court has to decide. I am not aware that, in any of the cases in which a summary suit is now authorized, the proposed measure would prove injurious. It supposes that the court should be vested with ample power to act as at present, according to the exigency of the moment, to attach lands or crops, to release them on proper security, or to do in fact, pendente lite, whatever may be required; but it provides only that the suit shall not be thrown out of court upon a hasty and imperfect inquiry, when circumstances are favourable to a just decision, and brought in again perhaps years afterwards,* when the means of arriving at the true facts are partially or wholly lost to the parties and to the court; saving, at the same time, the parties and witnesses the harassment of double attendance, to which they are now exposed. If, however, objections should exist which do not immediately occur to me, and a summary action be deemed absolutely necessary, I can perceive no sufficient reason why the duty should not be transferred to the different tribunals by which the case would be cognizable, according to the value or amount at issue, if preferred as a regular suit. Thus distributed, the duty would be more expeditiously performed, especially in suits of smaller amount (by far the greater proportion), as they would be tried by the local moonsiffs. The relief, too, which this would afford to the poorer classes, in saving them the necessity of travelling to the sudder station, a distance of fifty or perhaps a hundred miles, would be no trifling benefit, though it might be advisable to leave a discretion with the zillah judge, to order the transfer of any suits from one jurisdiction to another, especially on application by the ryot. At all events, as I have ever deprecated the encroachments which have of late years been gradually made on the principles of Lord Cornwallis's system, so would I still deprecate any further return to the mal-adawlut system; the reasons for the abolition of which, as set forth in the preambles to Regulations II. and III. of 1793, remain yet in full force, unanswered and unanswerable. Moreover, independently of the objection in principle to the union of judicial and revenue powers in one individual, I am satisfied that the numerous other avocations of the collectors would render it quite impracticable for them to discharge the additional duty with any proper degree of despatch. In a report from this court to Government, under date the 30th October 1816, it was observed that in the zillah of Burdwan alone, independently of zillahs Hoogly and Jungle Mehals, and part of zillah Beerbhoom, which were then included in the collectorship of Burdwan, the number of summary and regular suits relative to demands and exactions, or arrears of land-rent, instituted in a twelvemonth, viz. from the 1st July 1815 to the 30th June 1816, was as follows:—

* I have known a regular suit instituted eleven years after the disposal of the summary suit.

Summary suits	2,655
Regular ditto, before the moonsiffs	1,439
Ditto in the zillah court	2,493
TOTAL					6,587
In Nuddea, the number was	...	Summary	...	1,317
		Regular	...	390
TOTAL					1,707
And in the 24 Pergunnahs	...	Summary	...	1,508
		Regular	...	547
TOTAL					2,055

The following is an extract of a report from the commissioner of the tenth division now before the court, dated 31st October 1829.

Para. 16. "The want of a register is also much felt. There are now three hundred and eighty-nine regular suits pending on his file, and the collector has so much to do in his own department, that he cannot decide the summary suits sent to him with that despatch so requisite in such cases. At the end of September last, there were two hundred and sixty-eight suits referred to him: he made fifty-two returns; but the balance of arrears amounted to no less than six hundred and forty-one cases. Many of these might be decided with due despatch, if a register was stationed at Arrah. The judge should, I submit, be directed to recall a considerable portion of these suits from the collector, otherwise a great delay in the administration of that branch of justice which especially calls for despatch will inevitably ensue; from the want of leisure on the part of the revenue authorities of the zillah."

A similar state of things no doubt exists in many other districts. If therefore the system of of summary suit should be continued, and it should not be deemed expedient to distribute the duty in the manner above proposed. I would suggest the appointment of an additional sudder ameen or two, for the special duty of trying the suits referred to, as well as suits for the contested possession of lands or crops, with which they are frequently connected. Being under the immediate eye of the zillah judge, the power of issuing process of arrest would no doubt be less objectionable than if intrusted to the local moonsiffs. This process cannot, I fear, be dispensed with, without endangering the rights of the zemindars. But as it is much abused, and frequently made the instrument of oppression and injustice to the ryot, I think the rules might be modified, and the power of causing personal arrest restricted to cases in which proof should be exhibited with the petition of plaint, affording prima facie ground to presume the justness of the demand. In preferring his claim, the zemindar must well know, and can have no difficulty therefore in exhibiting the kooboolat or other documentary proof, on which it is to be maintained, as well as filing a list of the witnesses required to substantiate it, at the time of instituting his suit equally as at any subsequent stage of the proceeding. If this were done, subpoenas might issue for the witnesses at the time of serving the process of arrest on the ryot; and if the latter should still dispute the demand, the plaintiff's case would be fully before the court before the ryot was thrown into gaol, and might in many instances be disposed of without delay; or, if necessary to postpone the decision, some ground would be shown for the ryot's detention, instead, as at present, of his being committed to gaol on the mere application of the zemindar, and perhaps kept there for months, being in the mean time ejected of his tenure and his crops and property distrained and sold, so that he is turned out of prison a beggar, soon to be brought in again as a robber. The powers which the landholders are allowed to exercise for enforcing payment of the rents due to them from their ryots are no doubt necessary to enable them to discharge with punctuality their own obligations to Government; but this renders it the more necessary, for the protection of the ryot, to impose every possible check against an abuse of the power; and every measure which can tend to expedite the decision of the suit must of course conduce to the attainment of this object. It remains to consider those parts of Mr. Bayley's plan which have relation to the criminal courts. In the supposition then that the provincial courts are to be abolished, while the old courts of circuit are no longer in existence, it appears to me that we may go further in the general break up of the old and the remodel of a new system. In this view, and provided sufficient aid be afforded to the zillah judge, I would propose the abolition of the present commissioners of revenue and circuit, transferring the controlling authority in the former department to the Board of Revenue for the Lower Provinces, or to a separate revenue commissioner for each division in Calcutta, Dacca, Moorshedabad, and Patna (giving each commissioner the full powers of the Board), and to such number of commissioners as may be necessary for the unsettled districts in the western divisions, including Benares, and making over the circuit duties to the zillah judges, constituting the latter superintendents of the criminal, as well as civil courts of their respective districts, and raising the salary of the joint office to 50,000 rupees per annum. I am sensible of the objection to which such a plan is liable, in placing the controlling authority in such close connexion and intimacy with the controlled; but this already exists in a great degree under the present system, as well as the further objection (which is admitted by Mr. Bayley) of vesting the controlling power in one individual, instead of a collective court, as provided under the old system. It seems, however, that measures must be framed in adaptation to our means, even at some sacrifice of principle; and if this be admitted, there cannot, I think, be a question as to the superior advantages which will be derived from the arrangement of placing the duties and powers of the circuit commissioners in the hands of the local judges.

1st. It would induce a considerable saving of expense in the abolition of several of the offices referred to, as well as their replacement.

2d. It would materially expedite and improve the administration of justice, in providing for a monthly session in each district, and the immediate trial of all cases committed by the magistrates.

8d. It

3d. It would prove an incalculable benefit and blessing to the people, in saving hundreds, I should say thousands annually, from the necessity of a double, or sometimes treble attendance on our courts.

4th. It would diminish in a very extensive degree the enormous expense to which the Government is now subjected, on account of diet-money to prosecutors and witnesses, who are sometimes detained for a long period at the sessions.

5th. It would provide for immediate appeal and redress against the acts and orders of the magistrates, and the other inferior criminal courts; which the present roving commissioners, with the overburthened duties they have to perform, are but ill-calculated to afford.

6th. This facility of appeal and check over the conduct of the subordinate courts would induce greater care and circumspection, and consequently greater regularity and correctness in their proceedings, which they well know are subject to immediate revision.

7th. The zillah judges, by a fixed and long-continued residence, would have the means of acquiring a thorough knowledge of the state of their respective districts in every department, and of the character, habits, and usages of the people subject to their jurisdiction; a knowledge which cannot possibly be afforded, to any useful extent, by a cursory visit of a few days.

8th. The anomalies which occasionally arise in the practical operation of the present system, and which must always exist in the union of revenue and judicial powers, would be avoided.

9th. Facility would be afforded of immediate reference to the magistrate and his records, for explanations on various points which arise on an appeal; and the necessity which now exists of transmitting the voluminous and bulky proceedings of the magistrates from one district to another would be obviated.

The relief, too, which this would afford to the post-office department, independently of a saving of expense, and avoiding the risk of loss or injury to the proceedings, would be considerable.

10th. We should have judicial officers to perform judicial functions, and vice versa in the Revenue department; and not, as under the new system, men thrown suddenly from one branch to another, and called upon to discharge highly important duties of which they never had a day's experience, and are utterly ignorant of every rule and regulation under which they are to act.

With regard to the office of magistrate, it should I think in all cases, be made a distinct and separate appointment, wholly unconnected with the revenue. There is no district in which, if he does his duty, he will not have ample to occupy his whole time and attention, frequently indeed, requiring the aid of one or more sudder ameen, in addition to the European assistant. The collectors, too, should be confined to their own immediate duties, which are as much as they can well perform. Upon a general consideration of the whole subject, I venture to suggest the following outline.

Such judges as may be required, with reference to the state of civil business in each district. The number of present employed appears unnecessarily large and unequally apportioned. In Buxar there are thirteen munsiffs, and 5,341 suits were instituted during the year 1828; while in Midnapore there are twenty-four, though the number of suits instituted in the same period was considerably less, viz. 3,133. Again, in Backergunge there are thirteen, and only 473 suits were instituted; and in Mynensing thirteen, and 6,063. For a few of the larger districts probably twelve or fifteen would be sufficient, and in general eight or ten would be sufficient, care being taken to circumscribe their jurisdictions as far as possible. If the salary, inclusive of establishments,

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 4.
continued.

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

398 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

establishments, be raised as I have suggested to 200 rupees per month, they might be intrusted with power to receive, try, and decide any suits for an amount or value not exceeding 1,000 rupees, limitation of action in suits for money being fixed at six years. In all other cases, as under the rules at present in force, limitation of appeal to the zillah judge, six weeks, with discretion to extend, on sufficient cause shown for the delay, to execute their own process and decrees.

Sudder Ameeris.

Of these I think two classes might be established; the one at a salary of 350 rupees, to be employed principally in hearing appeals from the moonsiffs, with such original suits as may be referred by the judge, for an amount not exceeding 2,000 rupees. The other to receive a monthly salary of 500 rupees, with original jurisdiction in suits as far as 5,000 rupees, and to be employed principally in the trial of those suits, but authorized also to hear appeals from the moonsiffs, on reference from the judge. Of the former class, three might be required in some districts, but two would generally suffice; and of the latter, a single individual would be equal to the duty, with very few exceptions.

Register of the Civil Courts.

To be employed on such miscellaneous duties as the zillah judge may deem it proper to intrust to them with reference to their qualifications. After a certain period of service, say five or six years, and on special report by the zillah judge to Government, to be intrusted with higher powers, according to their capacity and fitness; and the salary to be gradually increased at the discretion of Government, from 500 to 1,000 rupees per month, in proportion to the nature of the powers and duties confided to them.

Magistrates and Joint Magistrates.

Jurisdiction and powers under the rules now in force, the office being always a distinct and separate appointment.

Assistants to Magistrates (Europeans).

Similar rules to be observed as above proposed with regard to the office of register; not to be entrusted with authority to pass sentence of corporal punishment by stripes, unless specially empowered by Government in the manner there stated.

Assistants to Native or Sudder Ameeris.

In districts requiring the additional aid of these officers, the appointment should be distinct, and their duties confined to the criminal department. Being under the immediate eye of the magistrate, they might be empowered to pass sentence of fine as far as 50 rupees, and imprisonment not exceeding six months; but no cases should be referred to them excepting such as they may be competent to dispose of, especially in from the nature of the offence charged, the accused be liable to commitment for trial at the sessions. The salary of these officers may be fixed at 200 rupees, inclusive of establishment.

Zillah Judges, or Superintendents of Civil and Criminal Courts, 2,500 rupees per mensem.

In their civil capacity to hear appeals from the decisions of moonsiffs and sudder ameeris, with a second appeal, on special grounds, in cases decided by the latter, on appeal from the former, always retaining on their own file a sufficient number of regular appeals from the moonsiffs, as may be necessary to enable them to form a judgment of and to exercise a due control over, the conduct and proceedings of those officers. To be empowered, on sufficient cause shown by either party, to transfer suits and appeals from one tribunal to another. As criminal judges, to hold a monthly session for their respective districts.

with discretion to try cases at any time during the month, immediately on the commitment by the magistrate. In such trials, and in all other matters, to perform the same duties and exercise the same powers as are vested in the present commissioners of circuit, reporting periodically or specially on matters of police directly to Government, and half yearly to the Nizamut Adawlut on other points, in the manner prescribed by section 12. Regulation IV. 1797.

Provincial Courts, six; salary 3,000 rupees per mensem.

Each to consist of two judges; original jurisdiction in suits above 5,000; appeals on special grounds from decisions of the zillah judge, in cases decided by the latter, on appeal from original decisions of moonsiffs and sudder ameens. Each judge to exercise the full powers of the court.

Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, six Judges.

Appeal of right in cases decided originally by the provincial courts; but in these, as well as in all other cases, to be empowered, on petition against the decisions of the zillah judges and provincial courts, to correct what may be obviously defective or erroneous on the face of the decree, or as shown by documents exhibited with it, without calling for the proceedings or admitting an appeal pro forma. To call for explanations when necessary; to order further investigation and revisions of judgment, when the decision may have been passed evidently on insufficient inquiry, requiring a report of such revised judgment, or leaving the party to appeal against it according to circumstances. In particular cases, where strong grounds may exist, rendering it necessary or advisable that a final judgment should be passed by this court on the whole merits, an appeal to be admitted and the case decided, as at present, on a review of the proceedings and in the presence of the parties. Experience has satisfied me of the necessity and expediency of enlarging the powers of the court in the manner above proposed, and these powers might, I think, be safely intrusted to single judges of the court. A few instances will suffice to show the justness of the general position.

In a suit instituted under Regulation II. 1819, the zillah judge proceeds to trial and judgment without any reference to the collector, as prescribed by the first clause of section 30 of that enactment; the terms for which are imperative, requiring that the judge shall make such reference in the first instance. The court of appeal has equally omitted to advert to the rule. Both judgments therefore are obviously, on their own showing, illegal and invalid. On this ground a special appeal is admitted by this court. Why then should it be necessary, in such a case as this, to admit an appeal pro forma, to call for the proceedings, to require the attendance of both parties; to decide years afterwards what might be determined on the moment without the slightest risk of injustice to either party? and why also, should the opinions of two judges be required to correct such an obvious defect?

In another case which has recently been decided by the court, it appeared that the decrees of the zillah judge and provincial court, had both been founded on the report of an ameen; to the truth of which the latter had not been sworn, as required by section 17, Regulation IV. 1797.

A special appeal was admitted on this sole ground in 1826, two judges being required for such admission, and the decrees in the lower courts being positively wrong on their own showing. It has been done in 1830, four years afterwards, after calling for the proceedings, and requiring the attendance of both parties; again by two judges which might have been done in the first instance by one in ten minutes. The same reasoning applies to all such cases. In the case of the appeal of right, the court has been required to call for the proceedings, and to require the attendance of both parties, and in the provincial court, which has been pending for a period of three or four years.

applies equally to cases in which the decision wholly turns upon a point of law; where the decree, upon its own showing, is evidently erroneous, either as being directly and obviously in opposition to the law, or on disputed points, when these have been settled by well established precedents. Again, if the decision ought to have been founded upon matter of fact, and evidence and an erroneous ground has been assumed, the defect might be corrected, by pointing out the error and showing the proper course of proceeding. Finally, however erroneous and unjust a decision may be, yet if it has been passed on a second appeal by any of the lower courts, it must, under the present rules, be allowed to stand uncorrected, this court having no authority to interfere in such cases.

In all these and many other cases, the power of correction might, I think, be safely trusted to a single judge, particularly in proceedings of a summary nature, where the case is open to further investigation on a regular suit. The same principle might also be applied to the Nizamut Adawlut, where the opinion of the single judge may be in favour of the prisoner, either for acquittal or mitigation of punishment. I would further suggest a modification of the rule,* which requires a reference to the Nizamut Adawlut, in cases wherein the commissioner of circuit may differ in opinion with the law officer, in regard to one of many prisoners included in the same trial.

In such cases there seems no reason why this court should be required to give an opinion, except as regards the prisoner, in respect to whom the reference is made. In a case, for instance, of dacoity, including thirty or forty prisoners, if the commissioner differs only as to one of the prisoners, and the sentence is within his competency as to the rest, it should merely be necessary for this court to decide as to the former, unless there should appear particular reason to interfere with regard to the whole. In such cases, however, execution of the sentence of the commissioner should be suspended as at present, pending the reference to this court.

15th January 1830.

(Signed) M. H. TURNBULL.

MINUTE OF Mr. SEALY.

My sentiments regarding the advantages to be derived from the establishment of a court of Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut in the Upper Provinces are unchanged. In my opinion, it would not merely give satisfaction to our subjects in those provinces who have occasion to resort to our courts, but would be hailed by all classes of the people as the greatest boon that could be bestowed upon them. Should any doubt on this subject exist, it would be removed by calling for the opinions of the public officers at present employed in those provinces upon it. That this measure will be resorted to, sooner or later, I entertain not the slightest doubt.

2. When our opinions were last called for on the expediency of this measure, it was generally understood that the principal objection to it that had previously existed had been removed, namely, that our finances would admit of its adoption without interfering with the other branches of our judicial system. Our circumstances are now changed; it is publicly acknowledged that our finances are reduced to the lowest ebb, and that no new measure of a costly nature can be adopted but by the sacrifice of some part of our present establishment. On this ground, it is now proposed to form a new sudder court in the Upper Provinces, at the expense of the present provincial courts of appeal. Desirable as I still think an additional sudder is in every point of view, I would not purchase it at this price.

3. It is the miscellaneous business in the sudder that is found so heavy and oppressive as to prevent that court from deciding a greater number of suits than it does at present.

If the provincial courts are abolished as proposed, the miscellaneous business which has hitherto been carried to four of those courts, and which has, as admitted, occupied so much of the time of those courts as to interfere materially with the reduction of their regular files, will now be transferred to this court. It will be impossible to get through this additional load of business, putting out of the question the appeals, regular and special, from the zillah and city courts, which may be expected to be very numerous. In fact, the miscellaneous business, which cannot be put aside, will engage the whole of our time, and our regular suits will of necessity be totally neglected. The new sudder court will have to contend with the same difficulties.

4. The zillah and city courts would not, I fear, be found more effective. Their inability to decide, with any common promptitude, suits to the amount of Rs. 5,000, induced the Government to invest the sudder ameens with powers to decide suits to the amount of 500 and 1,000 rupees. I confess I am not sanguine enough to expect that those courts will now be able to keep down their files when loaded with suits to an unlimited amount, and at the same time to dispose of the appeals that may be made to them from the decisions of the sudder ameens.

5. In my opinion the provincial courts cannot be dispensed with. At all events, I think it would not be prudent to abolish them until we see if the zillah and city courts can perform the duties that will devolve on them on the introduction of native courts with increased powers. If they cannot exercise a vigilant superintendence over the new courts, by promptly disposing of the appeals that may be made from their decisions, no one, I am sure, will wish to burden them with additional duties.

6. To remove from our courts the charge now imputed to them of a denial of justice, and to remedy in part our inability to supply a sufficiency of European agency for the administration of civil justice, it has become absolutely necessary to enlarge the powers of our native courts. In those districts where the civil suits are so numerous as to make it hopeless that the European functionaries will be able to reduce their number with any common despatch, recourse must be had to this measure. But even in these cases I should consider it unadvisable to extend the powers of our native judges beyond the limit fixed by Mr. Bayley. To allow them to decide suits to an unlimited amount, as suggested apparently by the Honourable Court, for one, I should consider not merely unadvisable but highly objectionable, and likely to create general alarm, dissatisfaction, and distrust amongst our native subjects. Some of them, certainly, will naturally enough be gratified at the chance held out of being selected to fill lucrative offices; but by far the greater portion of them, and especially those who have suits to institute, would prefer courts superintended by Europeans. Much as they may estimate the talents of some of their countrymen, they place greater dependence and trust on the established integrity of the European functionary, than they do on the advantage possessed by the native functionary, with reference to his more thorough and extensive acquaintance with their customs and language; and in introducing courts of justice to be superintended by natives, with additional powers, it need not be observed that we ought to consult the feelings of those who are likely to apply to them.

7. It would be better to leave the moohissas as they are. They are, generally speaking, cazoes of those portions of the districts where their courts are situated. Their offices are necessary to the wants of the ryots and the poorer classes of the people. They ought not to be tempted to neglect suits of small for those of larger amount; and it may be found that they are not strictly fitted for such responsible trusts as it is proposed to give them. The sudder ameens, who are at present employed to decide suits to the amount of 500 and 1,000 rupees, might, and be fit, if they are, and a superior class of sudder ameens appointed to decide suits to the amount of 1,000 and 5,000 rupees, to be selected as suggested by Mr. Bayley. This would admit of suits to the amount of 5,000 to 10,000 rupees being referred to the zillah and city courts, with every hope of their being quickly adjusted. All suits beyond that amount should remain in the courts of appeal, where they are at present.

8. Appeals

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 4.
continued.

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

402 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

8. Appeals from the decisions of the moonsiffs might be made to the sudder ameen of the first class, open to a special appeal to the zillah and city judges. But appeals from the decisions of all sudder ameens ought to be made to the zillah and city judges, open to a special appeal to the provincial courts; appeals from the decisions of the European functionaries remaining as they are at present.

9. The services of the junior part of the service might be made available on this occasion. The junior servants, after having been employed two years on the public service, might be allowed to decide suits to the amount of 100 or 200 rupees. They might be denominated Deputy Registers, Assistants to the Judges, or by any other name that may be preferred. Their powers should be extended as they display experience and judgment. As economy is the object in view it is our interest to make use of them, as, in whatever department of the public service in the Judicial line they may be employed, they must in some degree decrease the expenses of the state. Registers also of acknowledged judgment and experience might lend their aid in this way, if their powers were extended to those proposed to be given to the first class of sudder ameens, for I still hope that that office will not be abolished.

10. The offices of judge, magistrate, and collector ought to be separate in each district. These offices can never be united with any hope of efficiency.

11. It must be kept in mind that the people we govern are averse to all changes; that the changes already introduced in the Criminal and Revenue departments of the service have created considerable alarm and distrust in their minds; that any further changes must inevitably increase those feelings, and that therefore whatever changes it may now be deemed necessary to adopt ought to be of a permanent nature, and declared to be so, with the view of allaying the excitement that prevails throughout the country on this subject, and above all, that every change that may take place must encroach on the system of Lord Cornwallis, whose memory and measures are cherished with affection and confidence by natives of all classes, more particularly by those of these provinces, whom he governed successfully and happily for so many years, and amongst whom he closed his earthly career, venerated and lamented.

• 31st March 1830.

(Signed) C. T. SEALY.

MR. RATTRA'S MINUTE.

On Mr. Bayley's
Minute, dated
Nov. 5th 1829,
submitted by the Judicial Secretary to Government,
Nov. 24th 1829.

THE minute in question has been submitted, with a request from the Right Honourable the Governor-general in Council, that the Court will report their sentiment on the several suggestions which it contains for the improvement of the administration of civil justice. The wish is, I am quite satisfied, to elicit a free and candid expression of opinion, not upon these suggestions exclusively, but generally upon whatever does or may obtain, involving the great question of Judicial Administration. With this impression I proceed.

2. The plan now proposed is that of superstructure to be raised upon a foundation ready and approved of, and to consider the one independently of the other would be palpably unsatisfactory and improper. The whole of Mr. Bayley's proposition rests upon the rules which have of late years been enacted, under which, a very large proportion of the Judicial administration of the country has been committed to the revenue authorities, as to the revenue courts, under other titles, constituted for particular objects, in no connection with or dependence on the regularly established tribunals to which the people had before been accustomed to refer their real or imagined grievances.

3. The foundation, then, of the plan proposed must be carefully examined before a fair estimate can be formed of that which is suggested as suitable to be placed upon it. Long before the present question came before me, I had deeply considered that upon which it is made to depend. The subject was forced upon my attention in a thousand ways in the course of official duty; and no day has passed that has not strengthened my conviction that any change change from former practice and principle was devised in error, was viewed with universal dissatisfaction and distrust, and was so viewed as fraught with consequences which a people must dread and deprecate. What these are, I will ensure attention to by appealing to a higher authority to describe them: "The proprietors can never consider the privileges which have been conferred upon them as secure, while the revenue officers are vested with judicial powers, exclusive of the objections arising to those courts (of Mâl-Adawlut), from their irregular, summary, and often ex-parte proceedings, and from the collectors being obliged to suspend the exercise of their judicial functions whenever they interfere with their financial duties; it is obvious, that if the regulations for assessing and collecting the public revenue are infringed, the revenue officers themselves must be the aggressors; and that individuals who have been wronged by them in one capacity can never hope to obtain redress from them in another. Their financial occupations equally disqualify them from administering the laws between the proprietors of land and their tenants: other security must therefore be given to landed property, and to the rights attached to it, before the desired improvements in agriculture can be expected to be effected. Government must divest itself of the power of infringing, in its executive capacity, the rights and privileges which, as exercising the legislative authority, it has conferred on the landholders. The revenue officers must be deprived of their judicial powers. All financial claims of the public, when disputed under the Regulations, must be subjected to the cognizance of courts of judicature, superintended by judges who, from their official situations and the nature of their trusts, shall not only be wholly uninterested in the result of their decisions, but bound to decide impartially between the public and the proprietors of land, and also between the latter and their tenants. The collectors of the revenue must not only be divested of the power of deciding upon their own acts, but rendered amenable for them to the courts of judicature, and collect the public dues subject to a personal prosecution for every exaction exceeding the amount which they are authorized to demand on behalf of the public, and for every deviation from the Regulations prescribed for the collection of it. No power will then exist in the country by which the rights vested in the landholders by the Regulations can be infringed, or the value of landed property be affected. Land must in consequence become the most desirable of all property, and the industry of the people will be directed to those improvements in agriculture which are as essential to their own welfare as to the prosperity of the state."

4. So thought and spoke Lord Cornwallis, at once exhibiting the evil and its remedy. According to my ideas, this contains within its rules the true principles of justice, sound policy, and, if it be necessary to add in distinction from other expediency, it was a system equally honourable and beneficial to the ruling power; while the subject regarded it, in gratitude, as a sure barrier against the invasion of his rights, an excitement to his industry, a protection to the fruits of his labour, and a consequent security for the fulfilment of the first wish of his heart, the continuance of his name and family in respectability and independence. These feelings involved others of paramount value to a wise government, goodwill at all times, and loyalty and fidelity in those of trial and danger.

5. While entering into a detail of the gradual encroachments which have of late years been made upon it, it is enough to turn to the enactments of these years,† and to observe that it has no longer an existence. It has been undermined and demolished, and with it has subsided the confidence, the respect, and the affection which had grown into life and flourished at maturity.

Upon

See Preamble to Regulation II. of 1798.

1819	Regulation V.	1825
1821	III.	1828
1822	IV.	1828
1823	I.	1829
1824

† The effect of the Regulations of the Sudder Adawlut, and the distressing effects of its operations, may be seen in Regulation IV. of 1824, the revision of which I again would respectfully urge. See Minutes of February 13th 1829.

APPENDIX,
No. 4.
*continued.*Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

6. Upon the basement, which has been raised piecemeal upon these ruins (requiring only the abolition of the provincial courts to be utterly complete), Mr. Bayley proposes to establish what he has submitted on this occasion; which is in substance an extension of powers to native judicial functionaries, and a second Sudder Adawlut for the supervision and control of the courts generally of the Upper Provinces.

7. Upon the expediency, or rather necessity,* of the first of these measures being sooner or later adopted, under this or some other form and arrangement, there does not appear to have been two opinions for some years past; and (keeping the groundwork out of mind) except that I deem the powers proposed to be conferred too limited, and the salary (most objectionably burthened with the expense of the establishment) inadequate, I have no material objection to offer.† But however all this may tend to what appears to be the grand object in view, the disposal of the greatest possible quantity of work upon the cheapest or most profitable terms, it will not, I am confident, make the return anticipated. The principle must be sound and good before sound and good can emanate, and, founded as this system will be, I will venture to predict a return in no long period to that which has been subverted; and that unless made spontaneously, this will be forced upon the Legislature by results which shall show how just the arguments were which were disregarded as futile, or opposed as prejudicial.‡

8. I shall now proceed to state what occurs to me upon the suggested establishment of a second Sudder Adawlut. The proposal is to form this in and for the Upper Provinces, leaving the business of the Lower Provinces to be disposed of by the present sudder court in Calcutta.

9. I think the objections against such a measure many, and the presumed advantages altogether imaginary. In the first place, the Sudder Adawlut has been the one supreme court of the country from the first introduction of a regular judicial system, and has grown to be regarded by all classes as their tribunal of last resort, towards which they might look with that confidence which, from many circumstances, it was calculated to and did inspire; amongst others, and not the least, from its being fixed in the capital and holding its sittings under the eye of the Supreme Government. To this may be replied, that the court of the Upper Provinces being made the court of last resort for those provinces, will be as much the sudder or supreme court within its jurisdiction as the present court now is, and that with properly qualified judges the business will be as well conducted and the confidence as great as can obtain at the Presidency. I deny the whole of this; the mo-fussil court will never be regarded by the native community as the sudder; the business will not be so well conducted; and were it infinitely better, they will never look upon those who conduct it as other than subordinate functionaries, and will never be convinced they have received that justice which they might have obtained had the judgment issued from the one supreme tribunal, the Sudder Adawlut of the land. I do not maintain this on my own opinion merely; the rumour has for some years repeatedly been abroad that such a measure was in agitation, and as often has it been in contemplation to avert the adoption of it by a general appeal to the Government against it. At this moment, the knowledge of the renewed proposition by Mr Bayley is more or less known, and the sentiments which have been expressed tally in all respects with those I allude to as connected with former occasions in other parts of the country, and confirm what I before understood to be the popular feeling upon the question. It may be urged that this is no consequence, admitting it to be the fact. For those who would so argue I have no reply; I am quite sure a little reflection will dictate a better and more liberal sentiment.

10. I

* It is remarkable that the natives themselves (with exception to the candidates for office) have generally refused to any extension of judicial powers being allowed to their fellow countrymen.

† A great increase in the number of sudder ameen, and moonseefs, I presume, of some towns, has only not mentioned as being already provided for by Section 61 Regulation XXIII. 1816, and Section 10 Regulation II. 1821.

‡ See paragraph 14, and note to ditto.

10. I have said that the business would not be so well conducted elsewhere as at the Presidency. I spoke from what I believe to be human nature, under any and all circumstances. I think the best judge that ever sat on a seat of justice would perform his duty, I will not say worse, but less thoroughly well, elsewhere than where the public might at all hours walk into his court and scrutinize his performance of his duty. If this public be that of the metropolis, any where, the advantage is increased, and in this country we have no public beyond the metropolis; there only are those whose opinions will be openly expressed, and there only is the Government, the crowning security that what is expected shall be performed.

11. Another objection is, the contradiction and consequent confusion that must ensue in the construction given to the same points of law left doubtful and open to opinion in the two courts, and the vexation and dissatisfaction which must attend all trials in these courts, where the decisions dependent upon such construction differ. This could only be remedied by references from either court to the other, and such a necessity, with the delay attending it, might of itself be deemed sufficient to negative the proposal.

12. Mr. Bayley observes, that "however effectual the control of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut may prove at the Presidency, without the intervention of the provincial courts," which are, it seems, to be totally abolished, "over the local judicial authorities within the limits of Bengal and Behar, it cannot be exercised with due effect at remote stations; and insulated as those authorities are now become, the immediate superintendence of a tribunal of the highest class seems to be indispensably necessary." In answer to this, I would ask whether the present sudder court is better acquainted with the proceedings of, or has in the most distant degree more control over the judicial authorities at Moorshedabad or Patna, than the same at Benares or Bareilly? Most certainly not; and to exercise such a superintendence as is here contemplated, that is, with an intimate individual knowledge of every local proceeding, two courts were, to all intents and purposes, as inefficient as one. Nothing less (in number and distribution) than substitutes, of some description, for the courts about to be abolished will ever answer this object, and I have not a doubt that this will ere long so manifest itself, that (I cannot imagine the substitute) the provincial courts themselves will again be what they are, or rather have been. Judicial officers of the higher class should, I conceive, ever act in a body, assisting each other in questions of doubt and difficulty; and preventing injustice where error may, as error will, lie with the one and be exposed and corrected by the many. Mr. Bayley admits that "under the former arrangement, the defects or omissions of one judge of circuit were in some degree neutralized or amended by his colleagues; while it is one of the disadvantages of the new system, that any deficiency in a commissioner cannot be so readily corrected." It is, indeed; and to what a degree the disadvantage extends Mr. Bayley probably had no suspicion when this was penned by him. To afford the required correction is one of his motives to the establishment of a second sudder court. That it would not afford it in a degree beyond what the present court now does, I am satisfied, and have endeavoured to prove the fallacy.

13. "A superior tribunal of the higher class within reach of the petitions of the people appears" to Mr. Bayley "the only mode of supplying that control which ought to be exercised." Now the petitions of the people to the sudder court are appeals from decisions of two inferior courts, or, as it may be, against the judgment of the superior of the two, by which the award of the inferior shall have been set aside. It will not, I take for granted, be assumed, either that two concurring judgments are likely to have been given where any palpably gross injustice opposed them; and it is, I think, as little to be apprehended that a judgment by one authority would be set aside by another, without at least some plausible ground of proceeding on the part of the latter. All I mean to advance is, that whether the first appeal against such decisions reach the sudder court in five days or ten, the difference to the party appealing is literally nothing. The appeal, whether regular or summary, must justly be attended to but according to its number on the file, and whether meanwhile it have been lying in the office, or in the post-bag on its way to it, seems

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 4.
continued.

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

406 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

seems perfectly immaterial. Interference with the lower courts, civil or criminal, is required only when on due inquiry they are discovered to have erred, and this is necessarily in strict connexion with and dependent upon what is here exhibited.

14. Any further facility to a personal attendance of the parties in appealed cases I deem a very questionable benefit, and indeed rather likely to induce evil and inconvenience; evil, inasmuch as the first consequence would probably be intrigue and corruption amongst the officers of the court; and inconvenience, because if any additional evidence be required in a case, it must be taken in the zillah where the case was originally tried, and the party attendant on the sudder court must return thither, instead of being already on the spot to furnish it. It may be further observed, that the cases of the Upper Provinces are not intrusted to foreigners and strangers to the people of those provinces, for I believe I may say a full half of the pleaders of the present sudder are natives of them and Patna, so if there be any cause of complaint on this score, the people of Bengal have the same with those above; and yet the principal in a trial is very seldom present, although so many are residents of the immediate neighbourhood, and might attend without personal inconvenience.

15. Another and no weak argument still remains. The whole of the Upper Provinces (i.e. Benares and Bareilly) do not furnish much above one-fourth of the labour which devolves upon the present sudder court. The regular appeals last year from them amounted to forty-six; while from the Lower there were 121, and the business generally is in the same proportion.* With this fact before them, I cannot suppose the Government will deem such an establishment necessary for the performance of the comparatively easy duty which alone by such a measure would be provided for. In the course of a short period the judgeships would be sinecures; and then a recurrence of inconveniences and vexations would attend all concerned in the abolition which of course would follow. The addition of the Saugor division would (if I am correctly informed) add so little to the business of the court that it does not affect the question; a couple of hard-working supernumerary members added to the present court, for the trial of regular civil suits only, and having nothing to do with the miscellaneous or any other business of the court whatever but those suits, would reduce the file in eighteen months† to a degree that would render the present court, certainly with one additional member, perfectly efficient, and equal to all it would thenceforth be called to a discharge of.

16. I have said that I anticipated a speedy return to the principles and to the system of judicial administration which has been subverted for what now prevails; I assuredly do. There was nothing before that was wrong in itself; the whole failure lay in the deficiency of hands to perform the work. If native agency had been resorted to before the machine became clogged as it now is, the existing accumulation never had occurred. As it is a little ingenuity might provide for the disposal of the arrears, and then why the aid to be derived from native functionaries should not avail under courts constituted with some trifling modifications, as formerly, I cannot perceive.‡ Where the circuits are too extensive, it would seem not difficult to reduce them, and with so large a portion of the civil business provided for, any number of circuit judges might be commanded, without the addition

* Lest it should be supposed that the distance of the Sudder Adawlut is any bar to appeals to it, it may be as well to show what the fact really is. The total number of suits decided in the Western provinces, in the year 1822, was 38,933; in the Lower, 134,813. From the former 46 appeals eventually reached the Sudder that is, 1 in 846 decisions: from the latter, 121; that is, 1 in 1,114 decisions; so that the proportion of appeals from the Western provinces (as compared with local decisions) was above a fourth greater than from the Lower Provinces.

† Decisions per mensem, by two judges, at 10 decisions each, 20; months, 18: total decisions, in 18 months, 360. Number of suits pending on the 1st inst. 444.

‡ In the original draft of these observations, I had introduced in detail the various modifications which suggested themselves, as tending to partially obviate the objections I entertained to the plan submitted by Mr. Bayley; but unable to regard the foundation upon which it would seem the settled purpose of Government to erect any that may be adopted as other than unsound and delusive, I confess I was little satisfied with my intended offering, which with reference, too, to what I have since seen recorded by my colleagues, I have withdrawn as superfluous.

addition of expense beyond what must attend any effective establishment. Above all, I would divest the collectors of any powers of interference in judicial matters. They should be what their title implies, and that only. The plan now prevailing was tried before, and failed; and that it will again fail the short trial now already made fully convinces me. Under the former system, the junior servants became gradually qualified for the discharge of duties which rose in importance according to their standing and experience. As it is, there is no school for them, and they must assume charge of whatever they may be destined to, without even the rudiments of what they will not only be expected to perform well themselves, but to have initiated their younger brethren to a due performance of.

17. In the absence of a better field for exercise (if the present system be continued), the surishta might be made an introduction to the practice of judicial functions. They might preside there under the title of registers, superintend the examination of witnesses in both civil and criminal trials, learn much of the detail of office by the preparation of cases pending for submission to the court, and where such superintendence might be deemed advantageous, be deputed to execute decrees and orders at a distance from the sudder station: but these are but sorry avocations after all.

18. It is generally understood and believed that another plan has been prepared by a public functionary, and is now in course of submission for the consideration of the Supreme Government. This is said to contain a proposal that the Government should hold a full control over, and its members direct the administration of civil justice, the Sudder Adawlut being subordinate and incapacitated from passing any judgment that shall not be open to revision and reversal by them; in other words, that in judicial matters, which may be said in the present instance to involve every thing that can affect the people, the ruling power shall be one of absolute despotism. Any thing more irreconcilable with the acknowledged principles of common equity could not well have been devised, and I can only hope that the suggestion will meet with the rejection it deserves, without the interference of any other agent than its own demerit. As, however, it will doubtless be submitted under the cloak of some specious argument and show of expediency, it may be proper to observe that the same evil did once exist before,* but it was regarded as so mischievous, that it was crushed and abandoned, as all supposed (till this revival undeceived them), for ever.

19. In 1805, Marquis Wellesley "put the keystone to the fabric of policy and justice,"† by an act which declared that "to ensure to the people the permanent enjoyment of just laws duly administered, the separation of the judicial from the executive authority, in all their respective branches and gradations, should be carried into full and complete execution, both in form and practice;" and the judges of the Sudder Adawlut be thenceforth "civil covenanted servants of the Company, not being members of the supreme council." This is at the present hour, and this, more particularly with advertence to the changes which have been and are about to be made in the constitution of the other judicial tribunals of the country; it is devoutly to be hoped it may be permitted to continue.

20. In the plan alluded to, it is not proposed that any member of the Government should sit as a judge in the Sudder Adawlut. The Government, without such outward form, are to have the power of finally determining the judgment in all cases; but as it were folly to suppose they could find time to revise a twentieth part of the business disposed of by the court, the intention must be that particular cases only should come under revision; those of course in which they themselves are a party, or by decisions in which their interests may be affected.

21. With reference to this and various other projects that have latterly, from time to time, sought adoption, I beg to quote a few observations from Sir Walter Scott's Life of Napoleon Buonaparte, and with these I respectfully conclude the subject. "The system now promulgated" (says Sir Walter, speaking of one of the many systems formed and abandoned during during the French Revolution) “ had the blemish attached to it of being totally new, and unsanctioned by the experience either of that or any other country ; it was a mere experiment, the result of which could not be known until it had been put in exercise, and which, for many years at least, must be necessarily less the object of respect than of criticism. Wise legislators, when lapse of time, alteration of manners, or increased liberality of sentiment require corresponding alterations in established institutions, are careful, as far as possible, to preserve the ancient form and character of those laws into which they are endeavouring to infuse principles and a spirit accommodated to the altered exigencies and temper of the age. There is an enthusiasm in patriotism as well as in religion. We value institutions, not only because they are ours, but because they have been those of our fathers ; and if a new constitution were to be presented to us, although perhaps theoretically showing more symmetry than that by which the nation had been long governed, it would be as difficult to transfer to it the allegiance of the people, as it would be to substitute the worship of a Madonna, the work of modern art, for the devotion paid by the natives of Saragossa to their ancient palladium, ‘ Our Lady of the Pillar.’ And again, it is with laws as with mechanics, ingenuity is not always combined with utility. Some one observed to the late celebrated Mr. Watt, that it was wonderful for what a number of useless inventions, illustrated by the most ingenious and apparently satisfactory models, patents were yearly issued ; he replied, that he had often looked at them with interest, and had found several, the idea of which had occurred to himself in the course of his early studies : ‘ but,’ said he, with his natural masculine sagacity, ‘ it is one thing to make an ingenious model, and another to contrive an engine which shall work its task. Most of these toys, when they are applied to practical purposes, are found deficient in some point of strength or correctness of mechanism, which destroys all chance of their ever becoming long or generally useful.’ Some such imperfection seems to have attended the works of those speculative legislators, who at that period framed the ephemeral enactments of their code. However well they looked upon paper, and however reasonable they sounded to the ear, no one ever thought of them as laws which required veneration and obedience. Did a rule preclude a desired measure, to break it down or leap over it was the unhesitating practice ; another was always devised applicable to circumstances, and before it the theory of the system was uniformly made to give way.”

* Though not by any means to the extent now proposed to establish it.

† Harington's Analysis.

December 16th, 1829.

(Signed)

R. H. RATTRAY.

(3.)—COPY of a LETTER from the Secretary to the Governor-general, to the Deputy Secretary of the Bengal Government, dated 26th January 1831.

Sir,

(3.) Letter to the Deputy Secretary
of the Bengal
Government,
26th Jan 1831.

I AM directed by the Right Honourable the Governor-general to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 10th instant, with the Report of the Finance Committee, and the Minutes of the honourable the Vice President and Mr. Blunt, on the question of substituting individual agency for that of collective Boards.

2. Those papers are herewith returned, and I am at the same time directed to forward to you, for the consideration of the honourable the Vice President in Council, the accompanying copy of a Minute recorded by the Governor-general on the same subject, and to suggest that that Minute, together with the whole of the documents relating to it, be transmitted to the Honourable the Court of Directors, by the earliest convenient opportunity.

3. The Letter and Minutes of the Finance Committee which were received with your letter to the address of Mr. Secretary Prinsep, under date the 23d November last, are also herewith returned for the same purpose ; and I now proceed to communicate, for the consideration of the honourable the Vice President in Council, the sentiments of his Lordship on the several points adverted to in these documents. It will be convenient to follow the the order of Mr. Mackenzie's suggestions, that gentleman having entered more into detail than his colleagues.

4. The first twelve paragraphs of Mr. Mackenzie's Minute are occupied in arguing against the impolicy of any arbitrary separation of the Judicial and Revenue departments. His Lordship is disposed to concur generally in the reasoning which has been employed in the discussion of this question; but it has been mixed up with the higher and more important consideration of the interference which should be exercised by the executive Government in the judicial administration of the country, though there does not apparently exist any necessary connexion between the subjects.

5. The Governor-general finds it difficult to reconcile to himself a concurrence in the view which Mr. Mackenzie has taken of this subject. In the judgment of his Lordship, the preamble to Regulation II. 1801, which declares "that it is essentially necessary to the impartial, prompt, and efficient administration of justice, and to the permanent security of the persons and properties of the native inhabitants of these provinces, that the Governor-general in Council, exercising the supreme and legislative executive authority of the state, should administer the judicial functions of the Government by means of courts of justice distinct from the legislative and executive authority of the state," contains a self-evident and unalterable truth.

6. His Lordship is indeed inclined to think, that the evils which Mr. Mackenzie has so forcibly described as flowing from the absence of control over the chief judicial authorities have no existence but in the theory which he has adopted. In the selection of honourable, intelligent, and experienced individuals to occupy the benches of the supreme court, the Government will always have sufficient security against any abuse of the important trusts which are delegated to those authorities.

7. Practically speaking, his Lordship would ask what embarrassment has arisen or what mischiefs have resulted from the existing system? and, to apply the same sound test of practice, what degree of interference could the executive Government possibly exercise, consistently with a prompt and efficient award of justice, or without abandoning the continued claims to its attention of the other more paramount, because more pressing affairs of sovereignty?

8. That the ruling power should occasionally interfere in its legislative capacity to declare the law where it has been misinterpreted by the functionaries whom it delegates, or to enact new Regulations where such may be deemed expedient, is doubtless just and proper. Such a degree of interference has accordingly been exercised on various occasions by the Government; and while the power of so interfering is retained, and brought into active operation—while the means of punishing sloth, incapacity, or wilful error, by removal from office, rests with the Government—while individuals are selected for the highest judicial office, in whom qualities the opposite of these may fairly be expected to be found—men with whom there can exist no conceivable temptation to deviate from the path of rectitude, but on the contrary every motive to an energetic pursuit of it—his Lordship is slow to believe that a more jealous and inquisitorial superintendence of the proceedings of the judicial authorities is requisite, either to the interests of the Government or to the welfare of the people.

9. The Governor-general, indeed, does not distinctly comprehend the nature of the interference which Mr. Mackenzie would recommend. He seems to deprecate intermeddling with individual cases; and for purposes of general control, the powers which the Government reserves to itself appear to be abundantly ample.

10. But though his Lordship is forcibly impressed with a conviction of the inexpediency, nay, the impossibility of efficient interference by the executive with the proceedings of the judicial authorities, he is disposed to concur in the reasoning which has been urged in favour of withdrawing the superintendence of the revenue and judicial authorities in those provinces where the public demand is yet unadjusted.

11. Unity

(3.) Letter to the Deputy Secretary
of the Bengal
Government.
26th Jan. 1831.

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 4.
continued.

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

410 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

11. Unity of purpose is there essentially necessary: almost every fiscal question that arises is connected with judicial investigation. In such a state of things, it is particularly desirable that men's minds should not be harassed by conflicting decisions; and that the Government, in framing rules for the future administration of these remote dependencies, should have the benefit of that efficient aid, and that accurate knowledge of details, of which the acquisition is facilitated by a concentration of the powers and duties of both departments.

12. The Governor-general approves also the proposition of uniting the powers of magistrates and collectors in those provinces, whenever it may be practicable to do so with reference to the state of business, and he will instruct the Sudder Board to take measures for ascertaining in what districts the union can immediately be effected, supposing an efficient deputy to be appointed in each case. The determination with respect to each district must of course depend in some measure on the means which may be presented of employing the officers who may be displaced by the union. In some instances it will doubtless be found that the place of a collector or magistrate is temporarily filled by a junior officer, who may be at once conveniently appointed to be deputy in both departments.

13. Mr. Mackenzie admits that the judges of the several districts should be kept distinct, but he seems to be decidedly of opinion that they and the collectors should be placed under a common superior, and that they should be trained by service in the revenue line. In the first suggestion, the Governor-general is disposed to concur, as far as regards the unsettled provinces; and the second is, in his judgment, universally expedient.

14. His Lordship fully concurs, also, as to the propriety of uniting the office of tehsildar with that of thannadar, in those districts where it may be resolved to unite the offices of magistrate and collector; there seems no reason why the union of the subordinate functionaries should not immediately take place, leaving the arrangement for equalizing the salaries of those officers, and augmenting those of the serishtadars (for which a plan has been submitted in the Report of the Finance Committee, to be adverted to presently), to be carried into effect as vacancies may arise and funds may accumulate.

15. In many instances the present thannadars may be entitled to consideration, and it may be proper that they should not be altogether excluded from employment. It is possible that some of them may be fit to execute the office of tehsildar, as well as, or better than the present incumbents, or at all events that some provision may be made for them. It has occurred to his Lordship, that in other cases the deserving men among them may be retained in office as subordinates to the tehsildars, on their present salary, their existing allowances not forming any part of the fund which the committee have calculated upon for raising the salaries of the collectors' serishtadars. These however are questions of detail, which must be considered individually; and this and the 12th and 14th foregoing paragraphs will be sent to the Sudder Board, in order that in those districts where they may recommend the immediate union of the revenue and magisterial duties, they may also suggest, in communication with the local authorities, what minor arrangements may be necessary for carrying into effect the union of the offices of tehsildar and thannadar.

16. The question as to the best means of improving the condition of the thannadars in the lower provinces, adverted to in the 12th paragraph of Mr. Mackenzie's Minute, his Lordship directs me to recommend to the earnest consideration of the honourable the Vice President in Council.

17. In the 13th paragraph of Mr. Mackenzie's Minute various subjects are touched upon. His observations relative to the existing system of police are very general, but his Lordship is quite satisfied of the soundness of his views as to the effect upon the people of our interference in minute matters; offences not involving any violent breach of the peace or other serious consequences ought certainly to be left unnoticed, if as there is too much reason to apprehend is frequently the case, the process resorted to for their suppression is productive productive of much more injury to the people than the offences themselves. This principle should, in the opinion of his Lordship, be always kept in view, lest our impatience of one evil should beget others of more grievous consequences to the people.

18. The definition which Mr. Mackenzie has proposed of the relative duties to be performed by the magistrates, collectors, sub-collectors, their deputies and assistants, appears, so far as it goes, to be unobjectionable, and it would seem proper that those officers should be exempted as much as possible from duties of a judicial description.

19. As to the impolicy of employing irresponsible individuals on a miserable pittance his Lordship fully concurs, and he approves Mr. Mackenzie's reasoning in favour of increasing the salaries of the head native officers of the collectors' establishments. As to the injustice of excluding the natives of the country from all offices of trust and emolument, there cannot, he should hope, at the present day, be but one opinion.

20. The subject of the 13th paragraph will be adverted to in noticing the report to which Mr. Mackenzie alludes.

21. The Governor-general entirely approves the scheme delineated in paragraphs 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18, for the immediate control of the magistrates and collectors by commissioners of revenue and police, as well as for the powers to be exercised by those officers, and the sphere of their control. The question as to the extent of judicial authority which should be exercised by those officers and their subordinates is admitted, however, to be one of some difficulty. The 18th paragraph of the Minute will be transmitted to the Sudder Board, who will be requested to submit their sentiments on the question, and to define as accurately as possible all the cases in which, generally or specially, the collectors should exercise judicial authority, having in view at once the just demands of the state, and the fair expectations of the people; the punctual realization of the revenue, and the prompt adjustment of disputes connected with the land from which it is realized.

22. His Lordship is not aware, either that there would be any objection to adopting Mr. Mackenzie's proposition, that copies of all decrees regarding lands in the unsettled districts should be sent to the commissioner, who should be authorized to certify to the sudder court for revision any decision that may appear to him to involve erroneous or mischievous principles. His proposition as to the occasional employment of the commissioners in the capacity of criminal judges need not be here discussed.

23. From the 19th to the 30th paragraphs of his Minute, Mr. Mackenzie treats of some parts of the plan which he would introduce for the due administration of civil and criminal justice. The chief reform is the more extended employment of native agency. He argues at great length on the illiberality and folly of excluding the natives from the judicial offices, and in the generality of his sentiments his Lordship cordially concurs. He maintains, that a fair remuneration will always purchase probity; and that, in other qualifications, the natives cannot be considered as inferior to the European judge.

24. A native can be well paid too, he urges, at much less cost than an European judge. He assumes 500 rupees per mensem to a native in India to be as good as £2,400 per annum to an European; and that at an outlay of 3,000 rupees as much business can be done as now costs 30,000.

25. He would assign to the native judges graduated salaries, not exceeding 500 rupees nor falling short of 100 rupees per mensem; and he would abolish altogether the mode of payment by fees. He would give them criminal powers in certain cases; and he would restrict the European principally to the duty of control, though he would not wholly deprive him of original jurisdiction; and he would give to some native judges the power of trying appeals from an inferior native court. To all these propositions the Governor-general sees no objection.

26. The European civil judge should, in the opinion of Mr. Mackenzie, be also criminal judge; and in that capacity have all the powers of the existing commissioners of circuit. They should have a higher salary than the collectors and magistrates, and should have passed

(S.) Letter to the Deputy Secretary
of the Bengal
Government,
26th Jan. 1831.

passed through those grades. One, he thinks, would generally suffice for a population exceeding a million, though he thinks that an assistant judge should be retained in each division, to repair to any district where arrears might have occurred. He regrets the abolition of the registerships, which measure, however, he admits to be indispensable; and for the extent of the several jurisdictions he refers to a schedule appended to the Minute.

27. So far for the inferior judicial agency. From the 31st to the 41st paragraphs the higher judicial authorities are treated of. Mr. Mackenzie proposes to abolish the courts of appeal, and to admit of an appeal direct to the Sudder Adawlut from the zillah judges in the Lower Provinces, and to the three sudder judges (who should also be sudder commissioners) in the Western Provinces. The same to apply mutatis mutandis to the Nizamut Adawlut. His Lordship approves the principle of this arrangement, with the modification of it which will follow; but he decidedly objects to the proposition of requiring from the sudder court the transmission to Government of their orders before they are issued, and the other similar proposed means of control; and he totally dissents, as already observed, from the reasoning employed to prove the mischief of the present independent authority which is exercised by that court.

28. Mr. Mackenzie argues at considerable length, from the 42d to the 52d paragraphs of his Minute, on the great advantage of individual over collective controlling authorities. His Lordship has so fully stated his sentiments in the Minute which accompanies, and in the one alluded to in it, that it is needless to expatiate further in this place; and he merely deems it necessary to observe, that though he concurs in approving of the plan of sudder commissioners and sudder judges for the Western Provinces, and thinks that they may be advantageously employed in controlling separate tracts of country, yet he is of opinion that they should be incorporated as a Board at the same place, with the view of affording to the Government the benefit of their joint experience on all general questions of importance; and this principle, he thinks, should pervade the constitution of all supreme controlling authorities.

29. The 53d to the 60th paragraphs contain Mr. Mackenzie's notion of the establishments which should be entertained for judicial and fiscal purposes, of which it may be useful to furnish in this place an abstract.

30. He proposes that the country shall be parcelled out into circles and divisions. For the Western Provinces he proposes three divisions, each consisting of two circles; the two first circles to consist of all the districts comprised in Delhi, Agra, and the North Doab; the two next, those in Central Doab and Rohilkund; and the two last, those in Allahabad, Bundelcund, and Benares. Each circle to have a superintendent of revenue and police, and each division a sudder judge and commissioner, being one and the same individual,* together with a certain number of judges, magistrates and collectors, joint magistrates and sub-collectors, deputies and native judges, varying in number as the districts comprised in each circle are more or less numerous, or more or less populous or extensive.

31. For the Central and Lower Provinces, he proposes four divisions; the first to comprise the Central Provinces, the second the districts comprised in the former Moorshedabad court of circuit, the third those in the Calcutta court of circuit and Cuttack, the fourth those in the Dacca court of circuit. Each division to have a sudder judge; the two first to have each one commissioner of revenue and police, and the two last divisions each to have two commissioners of revenue and police; and, as in the Western Provinces, each division to have a certain number of subordinate judicial and fiscal functionaries, varying according to the same principle. As superintendent of the whole revenue affairs of the Central and Lower Provinces, one head commissioner of revenue and police, and one ditto for salt and opium and miscellaneous revenue. The district judges to hold the sessions, and to be styled civil and and criminal judges; while the collectors and magistrates are to be divested of judicial powers (except in a few cases to be specified), and their duties to be confined to matters of police and revenue.

* In the Letter, however, from the Committee, dated the 13th of December last, there is a material modification of this arrangement; in the 14th paragraph of which they propose one head commissioner of revenue for the Upper, and one for the Lower Provinces, without adverting to judicial duties or those of police. It will be seen from his Lordship's Minute that he considers a Board of Revenue for the Western Provinces to be preferable to a single commissioner.

32. As minor police arrangements, the maintenance and establishment of village institutions are recommended; and the gradual introduction of trial by jury is also suggested, as a measure calculated to raise the moral condition of the people.

33. In the 66th and down to the 70th paragraph of his Minute, Mr. Mackenzie draws a very melancholy, and it is to be feared too faithful a picture of the state of things produced by the operation of our Regulations; and he attributes almost all the existing evils to our exclusion of respectable natives from offices in which they would be useful to us, and to our forcing upon the people artificial rules which are quite unadapted to their condition; but his remarks are too general to admit of individual comment.

34. In a financial point of view, the arrangements recommended, after defraying the charges consequent upon the employment of additional native agency, is contemplated to yield a net gain of nearly eleven lacs of rupees per annum.

35. Mr. Mackenzie proposes that the Madras Civil Service, as far as regards the European part of it, should be remodelled nearly on the same principle. He proposes to have the whole of the districts under that Presidency made into three divisions, each division to have a sudder commissioner of revenue, who is also to be sudder judge; also two commissioners of revenue and police to each division; and the number of judges and subordinate fiscal and judicial officers to be employed he estimates at eighty-four, and the saving of expense upwards of two lacs.

36. The same system is proposed for Bombay, with two instead of three sudder judges and sudder commissioners of revenue; one of the members of council being available for the performance of a portion of the sudder duty. It is proposed also to confide the judicial, fiscal, and magisterial duties of Candeish to a single individual. With the native judicial system in force at Madras and Bombay Mr. Mackenzie does not propose any interference.

37. He is of opinion that the European Civil Service at the three Presidencies might conveniently be diminished by one hundred and forty-two, by which a saving of more than fourteen lacs would be effected; and he recommends that the attention of the home authorities should be drawn to the subject.

38. Mr. Mackenzie concludes his valuable Minute by giving a comparative statement of the revenue and population of the three Presidencies, from which he draws the inference that no partiality has been shown to Bengal in the proportion of establishment assigned for the administration of this Presidency.

39. Mr. Hill, in the Minutes recorded by him, concurs entirely in the general principles advocated by Mr. Mackenzie, except with respect to the advantage possessed by individual controlling authorities. He advocates the interference of Government in the judicial business of the country, and he greatly approves the more extended employment of native agency. He inclines to the opinion that the courts of appeal and circuit at Madras might be abolished, but expresses himself averse to sweeping innovations, and thinks that every thing necessary is in the course of gradual accomplishment. Mr. Bax has not recorded any separate opinion as to the relative advantages of collective and individual controlling authorities, but it appears from the committee's letter, dated the 13th of December last, that he entirely concurs in the view which Mr. Mackenzie has taken of this subject. In the scheme proposed by Mr. Mackenzie for the judicial and revenue administration of Bombay Mr. Bax does not appear to concur; and he has deemed it sufficient to refer for an explanation of his views regarding this question to his Minute of the 16th of June 1829, and to the regular Reports of the committee.

40. It is a curious coincidence, his Lordship observes, that the Madras Government should have abolished the courts of appeal and circuit in the interim, and have appointed in their stead individual controlling judges.

(3.) Letter to the Deputy Secretary
of the Bengal
Government.
26th Jan. 1831.

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 4.
continued.

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

414 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

41. Should the Vice-President in Council not be aware of any objection, his Lordship would consider it proper to allow the Governments of Madras and Bombay to see the scheme delineated for their Presidencies, that the authorities there may judge of its applicability.

42. Although the Governor-general has felt no hesitation in recording his individual concurrence in the generality of the measures for reforming the judicial and revenue administration of the country proposed by Mr. Mackenzie, yet so recently after a change of system has been introduced, his Lordship would be unwilling that another experiment should be tried without previous reference to the home authorities. This reservation is intended to apply to the suggestions for remodelling the constitution of the superior controlling authorities, not to the proposed union of the offices of collector and magistrate, and of the functionaries subordinate to them (preparatory inquiries with a view to which purposes will be immediately set on foot, as indicated in the 12th, 14th, and 15th paragraphs of this letter), nor to the more extended employment of native agency; which measure his Lordship considers to have been resolved upon, and to give effect to which the promulgation of the forthcoming enactment on the subject is alone necessary.

43. To the success of the former of these measures, viz. the union of the offices of collector and magistrate, it will of course be necessary that efficient deputies should be appointed; and with a view at once to excite emulation, and to secure the continuance of able services in that capacity, his Lordship is of opinion that, instead of having one uniform salary of one thousand rupees per mensem annexed to the office, it would be preferable to establish a graduated scale, varying from one to two thousand rupees per mensem, the increase being assigned with reference to seniority and merit. On this branch of the subject his Lordship has no further observation to offer.

44. As stated in my letter to your address of this date, his Lordship is of opinion that the local or temporary remedies which are applied in partial cases for the relief of the commissioners of revenue may serve as experiments, the result of which will be useful for future guidance. It was therein further stated as his Lordship's opinion, that whenever the circuit duties press too severely on a commissioner, and when there is no objection to the measure on the score of personal fitness or want of leisure, the judge of the zillah be appointed to hold monthly gaol deliveries for his district; an arrangement which, if otherwise unobjectionable, his Lordship directed me to observe, could not fail of promoting the convenience of all parties concerned in the several commitments.

45. Entertaining these sentiments, his Lordship directs me to suggest that the Letter and Minutes to which this communication refers be transmitted for the consideration and orders of the Honourable Court of Directors, with the request of this Government that they will be pleased to determine whether any and what modification of the existing system should be introduced.

46. That his Lordship's sentiments on the question may not be misunderstood, he desires me to state distinctly that he considers the existing system to have failed of effect; the result of the proceedings of the revenue and judicial authorities, especially with regard to settlements under Regulation VII. 1822, and to the conduct of the circuit duties, both under the old and the new system, being very unsatisfactory. That some measures calculated to relieve the commissioners from the circuit duties, and to afford them more leisure for attending to their revenue functions, appear to be indispensable. That the reforms proposed by Mr. Mackenzie seem well adapted to these purposes, and unobjectionable in other respects, supposing, as there is reason to anticipate from the more extended employment of native agency, the zillah and city judges will be enabled to perform all the criminal judicial duties of the district, including those hitherto performed by the commissioners of circuit. That the union of the offices of collector and magistrate, and of their subordinates, is also highly expedient, supposing likewise, as there is reason to anticipate from the appointment of efficient deputies, that those officers will have leisure to transact the business of the united offices. That the union of the controlling revenue and judicial authorities

(3.) Letter to the Deputy Secretary
of the Bengal
Government,
26th Jan. 1831.

authorities in the unsettled provinces is expedient and proper, for the reasons already stated; but in preference to Mr. Mackenzie's recommendation for individual controlling authorities, his Lordship, for the reasons stated in his Minute, would, as concerns the highest offices under Government, desire to see established collective courts and Beards, the individual members of which might (if this should be thought requisite to attach responsibility and ensure exertion) have separate tracts of country assigned to their superintendence.

47. I am directed to take this occasion of acknowledging the receipt of your letter dated the 7th ultimo, with its enclosed Report of the Finance Committee.

48. In connexion with their report under date the 25th of October last, for remodelling the fiscal and judicial establishment of the three Presidencies, the Finance Committee have, in the communication now acknowledged, submitted their sentiments as to the means by which the salaries of the head native officers in the revenue line may be raised without additional expense to Government. The saving by which the object is to be effected is to be obtained from the abolition of registers' establishments. The union of the offices of magistrate and collector, which will supersede the necessity of retaining a portion of both establishments, and the equalization of tehsildars' allowances. They recommend, however, that these alterations be introduced gradually as funds accrue. The Vice-President in Council, in forwarding that communication, recommends the union of the establishments of police and collection (involving of course the union of the offices of collector and magistrate) in the Western Provinces.

49. As already stated, measures will be immediately taken for carrying into effect the union suggested; but his Lordship observes, that it can only be done gradually. As the means of defraying the expense consequent upon raising the salaries of sheristadars attached to the several collectors' offices appear to be highly judicious, a copy of their Report will be furnished to the Sudder Board on deputation, with instructions to require Reports from the several collectors subject to their authority, as to how far it would be expedient and practicable to equalize the allowances of the several tehsildars, on the principle suggested by the Finance Committee: and when the offices of the collectors and magistrates shall have been united, it will be time enough to determine what portion of the establishment alluded to in the 2d paragraph of the committee's letter can be dispensed with.

50. In the Lower Provinces, where those offices are already in many districts united, the inquiry can immediately be instituted; and his Lordship recommends that it, as well as measures for discharging the registers' establishments, adverted to in the same paragraph, may be set on foot accordingly.

51. The Benares and Bareilly court of appeal will immediately be required to report relatively to the registers' establishments, where these offices do not exist in the Western Provinces, and the Sudder Board will be requested to ascertain and report what diminution can be effected in the charge for the establishments of the collectors of customs, where those offices have been united with those of collector of land revenue.

52. The proper officers should be required to report all reductions effected, whether by discharge of existing establishments or by equalization of the salaries of the tehsildars, in order that the civil auditor may have the means of reporting to Government in what district funds exist for raising the salaries of the sheristadars, in the mode proposed by the Finance Committee.

53. Finally, his Lordship is of opinion that a considerable portion of the reforms recommended by Mr. Mackenzie, as not involving any violent change of system, may be introduced without the necessity of awaiting the sanction of the Court of Directors; and whatever may be the ultimate determination of that high authority as to the merits of the plan which has been delineated, his Lordship trusts that they will concur with this Government in awarding to its author, and to his colleagues in the committee, all the credit which can be due to eminent talents, ardent zeal, and indefatigable industry.

IV. 416 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.
APPENDIX,
No. 4.
continued.

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

54. The original enclosures of your letter, dated the 7th ultimo, are also herewith returned.

I am, &c.

Camp at Seetapore Lucknow,
26th January 1831.

(Signed) W. H. MACNAGHTEN,
Sec. to the Governor-general.

(4.)—MINUTE of the GOVERNOR-GENERAL, dated 24th January 1831.

(4.) Minute of the Governor-general,
24th Jan. 1831.

HAVING already, in my Minute on the remodelling of the Military Board at this Presidency, given my opinion on the relative advantage of individual and collective agency, I need not here say much more upon the subject.

Where the duties are principally executive, like those belonging to commissioners of revenue and circuit, much benefit is obviously to be derived from the despatch, vigour, and unity of purpose which a single hand can best achieve. But on the other hand, when council deliberation, the careful revision of a great system with its details, are required—when, moreover, functions are to be delegated partaking partly of a judicial character—when investigating charges of default against a large body of revenue servants, and partly of a legislative character—when suggesting the Regulations by which the rights in the soil are to be determined, it strikes me that there cannot be a doubt of the superiority of a collective body. In all my experience of public business, both in and out of Parliament, I have never seen an occasion where discussion did not produce great improvement in the original measure. In this country, where the revenue system is of such vast importance to the community at large, it seems to me that Government can never hope to arrive at a complete knowledge of its management except by that free interchange and honest collision of opinion that can only grow out of a joint superintendence. The Board of Revenue is to the Supreme Government what the latter is to the home authorities. I beg to ask, if it were not for the able and honourable individuals who sit in council in independence of the Governors of the different Presidencies, what security would there be even for a true and fair record of the administration, much less that the public affairs were conducted with efficiency and honour, and in the true spirit of the orders and intentions of so very distant an authority?

The Finance Committee have recommended that there shall be two commissioners of revenue, one for the Upper and one for the Lower Provinces. It is not stated whether they are to act separately or together; but as the principle of individual agency is maintained by the majority, I conclude that they are to act separately.

My opinion upon this subject is very much in conformity to that of Mr. Blunt; I quite agree with him that a Board of Revenue is indispensable for the regulation of the settlements in the Upper Provinces. I think with him that two members would be sufficient; and I am further of opinion that this Board should hereafter, under any circumstances, be stationed at Allahabad.

If an arrangement shall hereafter be made for dividing the administration of the Upper and Lower Provinces, then I agree with Mr. Blunt that the secretary in the revenue department may conduct the whole correspondence with the commissioners in the Lower Provinces; but if no such separation should take place, the details would too much overload the Government, and the appointment of a single commissioner would become necessary.

To the recommendation of the Finance Committee, for the substitution of a single commissioner for the Board of Salt and Opium, and for the transfer of the duties now exercised by the same Board, under the designation of Marine Board, to the Military Board, and of all the executive duties of the marine department to the master attendant, I see no objection.

I agree

I agree with Mr. Blunt, and the senior member of the committee, Mr. Hill, in the expediency of maintaining the Revenue Board at Madras; but the reducing the number to two members would, in my opinion, promote economy, without in any degree impairing its efficiency.

I do not recommend the immediate adoption of any of these measures, as they regard establishments which have long had the sanction of the Honourable Court; and as the whole frame of the Indian Government is about to be brought under public review, it may be more convenient to leave the decision of these minor details to follow any general arrangement which the Legislature in its wisdom may think proper to adopt.

Camp Oude,
24th January 1831.

(Signed) W. C. BENTINCK.

(4.) Minute of the Governor-general,
24th Jan. 1831.

(5.)—MINUTE of Mr. BLUNT, dated 24th March 1831.

IN a Minute recorded by the Honourable Mr. Bayley, under date the 5th of November 1829, that gentleman suggested a plan for improving the administration of civil justice within the provinces immediately subject to this Presidency.

(5.) Minute of
Mr. Blunt,
24th March 1831.

2. Mr. Bayley's plan having been referred by Government to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut for their consideration, the judges of that court submitted their opinions thereon in separate Minutes, accompanied by a letter from the register dated the 16th of April last.

3. Although, as might be expected in discussing a subject of such paramount importance, much difference of opinion will be found in those Minutes in regard to the measures best calculated to effect the desired improvement, yet the court were unanimous in their opinion as to the expediency of the extended employment of native agency in the administration of civil justice.

4. The majority of the sudder court, however, disapproved of so much of the plan as is founded on the union of the judicial and revenue powers, and they object to the abolition of the provincial courts of appeal, or to the formation of a second Sudder Adawlut in the Western Provinces.

5. On a consideration of the opinions and suggestions contained in those papers, certain resolutions were passed by Government, under date the 12th of October last, in conformity with which the secretary in the Judicial department was directed to prepare the draft of a Regulation to give effect to the modifications prescribed of the existing rules for the employment of natives in the administration of civil justice. But in deference to the objections urged by the Sudder Adawlut to the abolition of the provincial courts of appeal, and to the erection of a second sudder court in the Western Provinces, those measures were suspended.

6. It was at the same time resolved, that the provisions of the Regulation for the extended employment of natives should be gradually introduced into the several zillahs and cities by an order of the Governor-general in Council; and wherever so extended, the office of register and the native establishments attached thereto should be abolished.

7. The draft of a Regulation was accordingly laid before Government on the 12th of October last, a copy of which, with a copy of the resolutions above referred to, were forwarded for the consideration and opinion of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, as to the sufficiency of its provisions to meet the objects contemplated by Government.

8. The court was requested also, in reference to the proposed abolition of the office of register, to report their sentiments on the general question, as to the best mode of giving employment to assistants in the Judicial branch of the service, in the event of that measure being adopted; and their particular attention was directed to some other points adverted to in the resolution.

9. Conformably

9. Conformably with these instructions, the court of Sudder Adawlut, with exception of one of the judges (Mr. Ross), submitted, on the 18th ultimo, a draft of proposed amendments to the Regulation, but reserve to a future period the report of their sentiments on the other points referred for their consideration.

10. The communication from the court was accompanied by a Minute of Mr. Ross, explaining the grounds of his objections to the proposed enactment.

11. I shall not at present enter upon a consideration of the several modifications of the provisions of that enactment proposed by the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut—that may be done hereafter if necessary—at present I would wish to state my objections to the principle of the Regulation.

12. All must I think agree in the main point, namely, that it is expedient and necessary to employ the agency of respectable and well qualified natives more extensively in the civil administration of the country, provided always that they are so employed under European superintendence.

13. If the proposed Regulation went only to effect this change in the existing system of Judicial administration, I would give it my cordial concurrence, and recommend that, with some few modifications, it be carried into effect as early as circumstances may admit.

14. But the provisions of the Regulation appear to me to involve a departure from that principle of European superintendence, which I conceive to be indispensably necessary to the success of the change of system contemplated; and it appears to me to vest in natives powers with which they ought not, in my opinion, to be intrusted.

15. My objections to the Regulation are principally as follows:

1st. That it involves the abolition of the office of register, which for the purposes of superintendence, as well as for the relief of the zillah or city judge, and on other grounds hereafter noticed, I consider it indispensably necessary to maintain.

2d. That it vests the native judges with power to hear and determine appeals, a power which I am of opinion should be exercised only by European functionaries.

3d. That it leaves all suits under a certain amount (Rs 5,000), cognizable by native judges, whether the parties concerned be Europeans or natives.

16. I need scarcely dwell upon the obvious objections that exist, to erect native judges over European British subjects, or to vest them with any jurisdiction, civil or criminal, in which an European British subject may be partly concerned.

17. It seems of great importance also, until further experience shall manifest the necessity and shall justify the measure of constituting the native tribunals courts of appellate as well as original jurisdiction, to limit their powers to the cognizance of original suits.

18. Mr. Bayley has, I think, justly remarked, that much of the success which has attended our progress hitherto in the amelioration of the native institutions (courts of justice) is to be ascribed to the slowness and caution which have marked the several steps of our advance; and he considers that the character and popularity of the scheme he has suggested would be hazarded by an innovation which should suddenly elevate the native judges to the exercise of the full extent of jurisdiction heretofore possessed by the European functionaries alone.

19. This sudden elevation, however, and independence of European control, will necessarily attend the measure of vesting the natives with appellate jurisdiction. It will be wholly impracticable for the European judge (especially when the office of civil and criminal judge shall be united) to exercise an efficient superintendence over the native judicial tribunals; the parties appealing will be deprived of that assurance of justice which arises from their confidence in European integrity, for the numerous appeals with which the file of the zillah and city judge will be overloaded will preclude all hopes of an early hearing and decision by the judge, when he shall also have the duties of the criminal sessions to discharge.

20. A system of training also is necessary in the Judicial department, in order to acquire the qualifications necessary to fill the office of judge, which it does not appear to me that any other office than that of a register affords, and the abolition of which office would deprive the junior servants of the only means they now have of acquiring the experience and knowledge necessary to fit them for the higher judicial situations of the service.

21. It appears to me that it would be a mere waste of time and labour, attended also with a heavy and unnecessary expense, to substitute for the employment of a register the duties "of preparing cases for the decision of the judge, of examining forms or reports, or in performing other ministerial duties," which (as remarked by Mr. Ross) would be better performed, and at much less expense, by the ordinary ministerial officers of the courts; although I do not agree in the opinion expressed by that gentleman, in a Minute dated the 31st of January last, that they would be more usefully employed as advocates in suits between individuals (even if such pleadings were not to be conducted before native judges), or as prosecutors on the part of Government in criminal cases, though no doubt in particular cases of importance and difficulty, especially in cases of embezzlement of public money, their services have been and may hereafter occasionally be employed with much advantage in conducting prosecutions; but I am not aware of any mode in which they could be employed, with equal advantage to themselves or benefit to the public service, as in the discharge of the duties of the office of a register.

22. In the 23d paragraph of Mr. Mackenzie's Minute on the Judicial and Revenue administration, dated the 1st of October last, he observes, "If it were possible I would confine the native judges to original suits, making all cases appealable to the European judge;" and in another part of that Minute he regrets the necessity for the abolition of the office of register.

23. That necessity appears to arise out of the resolution to create a fund for increasing the allowances paid to the head officers employed in the revenue department, and this object it is proposed to effect by the abolition of the office of register; but if the rule which prescribes that any increase of disbursement shall be covered by a proportionate retrenchment renders the abolition of the office of register necessary to the proposed increase of allowances, I should think it preferable that the latter measure be suspended until means can be provided from other sources; for the evils which will result from the measure in that branch of the administration, which it is the object of the Regulation to improve, will in my opinion far outweigh the benefits to the revenue department from the proposed augmentation of salaries.

24. But it will not in reality be attended with the saving which it appears to promise, for in the new system advocated by Mr. Mackenzie, in the Minute above referred to, and which I shall have occasion to notice more fully in a subsequent part of this Minute, he has recommended the appointment of two assistant judges in each of the several divisions into which he proposes to partition the Western and Lower provinces, for the occasional aid of the district judges where their services may be most required, and to provide against that accumulation of the business of the zillah and city courts which it seems to be expected will arise from the abolition of the register's courts, and the necessity for which appointments would be obviated by the continuance of that office.

25. The court of Sudder Dewanny, in the observations subjoined to their letter of the 18th ultimo, have also expressed an opinion as follows:—

"The majority of the court* are of opinion that all appeals from native officers should be heard and tried by an European officer, as the only mode of maintaining efficient check over the proceedings of the former; † they suggest, therefore, that the necessary alteration be made in the Regulation accordingly."

26. I

W. Lyster, A. Ross, C. T. Sealy, and M. H. Turnbull.

* Extract from a Minute of Mr. Ross:—"It should not be forgotten that the proportion of the suits instituted under Rs. 5,000 is at least $\frac{1}{10}$ ths of the whole number instituted; and that to diminish the security for the right decision

26. I would therefore propose that the Regulation be modified on the following principle:—

- 1st. That the register's courts be maintained.
- 2d. That all appeals from the decision of moonsiffs be heard and determined in those courts, or in the court of the zillah or city judge.
- 3d. That a special appeal lie to the zillah or city judge from the decisions of the register.
- 4th. That appeals from the decisions of the sudder ameens, or principal sudder ameens, be heard in the first instance by the zillah or city judge.
- 5th. That a special appeal from such decisions lie to the provincial court.

27. The register might also be empowered to try and determine summary suits for rent, of which it is proposed to relieve the zillah or city judges, by transferring the cognizance of such suits to the collectors; but there is already in most districts a heavy arrear of such suits depending before the collector undetermined. The services of the register would also be available, as at present, in aid of the magistrate; and he would, on occasions of emergency, be both prepared and qualified to be intrusted with the temporary charge of the office of judge or magistrate, to officiate in which the want of a qualified person on the spot might be productive of much inconvenience; they would also be employed under the judge in various miscellaneous duties, all tending both to the public utility and to their future qualification for the higher judicial offices.

28. Having stated what appears to me objectionable in the change of judicial administration, for which the Regulation provides, it seems to be a fit occasion to offer my sentiments in regard to the further changes in the existing system of judicial and revenue administration in these provinces, recommended by the late Financial Committee in their Report of the 25th of October last, and especially with reference to those suggested in Mr. Mackenzie's Minute dated the 1st of that month.

29. The sentiments of the Governor-general on the various suggestions contained in that Minute, and in regard to Mr. Mackenzie's general scheme of judicial and revenue administration, are conveyed in Mr. Macnaghten's letter, dated the 26th of January last; and his Lordship has expressed his concurrence in the generality of the measures of reform proposed; but it is added, that after a change of system has been so recently introduced, his Lordship is unwilling that another experiment should be tried without previous reference to the home authorities.

30. The reservation however, it is observed in Mr. Macnaghten's letter, "is intended to apply to the suggestions for modelling the constitution of the superior controlling authorities, not to the proposed union of the offices of collector and magistrate, and of the functionaries subordinate to them (preparatory inquiries with a view to which purpose, will be immediately set on foot, as indicated in the 12th, 14th, and 15th paragraphs of this letter), nor to the more extended employment of native agency, which measure his Lordship considered to have been resolved upon, and to give effect to which the promulgation of the forthcoming enactment on the subject is alone necessary."

"It is further stated, that his Lordship considers the existing system to have failed of effect. The result of the proceedings of the judicial and revenue authorities, especially with regard to settlements under Regulation VII. 1822, and to the conduct of the current duties, both under the old and new system, being very unsatisfactory, that some measures cal-tion of the very great majority, in order to ensure to the few what, if really an advantage, is but a very small one, and not be just. It should also be kept in mind that the native tribunals (the consequence of having been left entirely free from checks) are generally believed to be venal, and therefore no plan of reform extending their jurisdiction can be expected to give satisfaction to the people, unless it secure not only the right of appealing to an European judge, but also the certainty of the appeal being speedily decided. This consideration also seems to forbid the extension of the employment of native sudder ameens, to try appeals from the moonsiffs, as proposed by Mr. Taylor, and the union of appellate and primary jurisdiction in the same tribunal objectionable on other grounds.

lated to relieve the commissioners from circuit duties, and to afford them more leisure for attending to their revenue functions, appear to be indispensable."

31. These being the sentiments of the Governor-general, and the necessity of a change of system for the attainment of the objects with view to which Regulation I. 1829 was enacted being sufficiently manifest, it appears unnecessary to wait the result of the reference that has recently been made to the Sudder Adawlut and Sudder Revenue Board on that subject. The failure may, I think, be chiefly ascribed to the union of the functions of circuit judge and revenue commissioner; not that such union is necessarily incompatible with the efficient discharge of both duties, provided the service admitted of a selection of individuals to fill those offices with reference only to their personal qualifications, and without regard to seniority. Many instances may be adduced in which judicial or revenue powers, in the management of particular tracts of country, have been very beneficially combined, and indeed are almost indispensable to an efficient administration; but these are exceptions to the general rule; and though every individual should possess the requisite qualifications, still we must be careful not to impose labours which no degree of zeal, assiduity, or ability, can adequately fulfil.

32. It is, I think, chiefly to this cause, and in some instances perhaps to a want of knowledge and experience in the revenue department, that so little appears to have been done by those officers in reference to the settlements in progress in the Western provinces. The periodical Returns of the circuit duties have materially interfered with the prompt and regular discharge of those of the Revenue department; and it is clear that, whether from want of leisure or of experience, the administration of criminal justice has not been expedited or improved under the present system, while the revenue business of the commissioner's office has often fallen heavily in arrear.

33. The increased delay which in many instances has attended the gaol deliveries, and the necessity which has existed in almost every division, from the pressure of business, to relieve the commissioner of a part of the circuit duties, is also a serious evil; moreover, it is not only attended with a heavy additional charge in deputation allowance, and in maintaining extra native umlah, but occasions inconvenience to other departments of the service, and seriously interrupts the business of the civil courts, when the officiating commissioner is taken from a zillah or provincial court.

34. Neither has the police of the country benefited by the change of system, or the more efficient control which it was expected the commissioners of revenue and circuit would be enabled to exercise in that department. The circuit reports show grounds to believe that, whatever may be the cause, the state of the police has rather deteriorated during the last two years. The district of Cawnpore is represented to be in a state of great disorder, and in some districts of the Lower Provinces the crime of dacoitee has of late increased. In the district of Hooghly, the magistrate, in explaining the cause of the increased prevalence of gang-robbery, has urged the necessity of augmenting the severity of punishment for that offence, and has recommended that every offender convicted of gang-robbery shall suffer death.

35. I trust we shall never find it necessary to have recourse to increased severity of punishment for the prevention of this crime. I am satisfied that the sanguinary remedy proposed is unnecessary. I rejoice to see the measure discountenanced by the Nizamut Adawlut; and I quite concur in the opinion expressed by that court, that a discretionary power of mitigating the punishment now prescribed by the Regulations may be vested in the judges of circuit. I question indeed, not only the humanity, but the policy of meeting an increase of crime by increased severity of punishment; measures of a milder character have hitherto been found perfectly effectual; and I must here express my deep regret that the exigencies of the State should have imposed on the Government the necessity of abolishing the office of superintendent of police, especially in the Lower Provinces, where the crime of dacoitee is ever liable to break out on any relaxation of control, or inefficient superintendence of the local police authority. There can be no doubt that an officer on the spot, duly duly qualified, and having sufficient leisure, is better able to control the police than one at a distance; but the revenue commissioners who succeed to those offices, generally according to seniority, must necessarily often be wanting in the requisite experience and qualifications for maintaining an efficient control in that department, and where this is the case, a rapid increase of crime will probably be the consequence.

36. The person vested with the controlling authority in the police department should be selected with reference to his fitness and qualifications for that important trust; he should have extensive experience in that department; should possess an accurate knowledge of the country; he should maintain a communication with the local magistrates in every district; he should be vested with a control over the whole of the subordinate police establishments; he should possess more than an ordinary share of energy, vigilance, and judgment; his time and attention should be wholly and uninterruptedly devoted to that branch of the administration; and being placed at the head of the department, the chief responsibility for the state of the police within the limits of his control should attach to him, instead of being transferred with every change that may occur in the office of revenue commissioner, and which must render it difficult to fix the responsibility for any deterioration in the police.

37. It will be admitted that, at the period of the late change of system, the state of the police through the provinces had attained a degree of efficiency which at no period antecedent to the establishment of the office of superintendent of police had ever been approached. I need only refer to the periodical reports and statements of crimes submitted to Government from that office since the year 1810, in proof of the benefits which resulted from its establishment. If (as observed by Mr. Bayley) those benefits have been obtained by the sacrifice of civil justice, it is because we have not earlier availed ourselves of the assistance to be derived from native agency; but I have watched the progress of that reform in the police, and the means by which it has been effected, since the office of superintendent was first established; and although it is mainly to be ascribed to the increased exertions and vigilance of the local magistrates and their subordinate police officers, yet this effect has been produced by means of the influence and control exercised by the superintendent of police, or to the measures adopted in that office; and in some cases of local disorders, to the personal exertions of the superintendent himself.

38. Whether the charge of the police shall be hereafter separate from or united with the office of collector, I am persuaded that it will be found necessary to take the control of that department out of the hands of the commissioners of revenue; and if, as I shall hereafter show, the expense of the office of a superintendent of police may be provided for by an arrangement which will cover the increased disbursement, I should strongly recommend the re-establishment of that office.

39. I now proceed to offer my sentiments on the scheme of civil administration suggested by the late Finance Committee, or rather on the propositions contained in Mr. Mackenzie's Minute dated the 1st of October 1830, and I shall at the same time have occasion to advert to the Minutes on the same subject recorded by the honourable Mr. Bayley, under date the 5th November 1829, and by the judges of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, forwarded with the letter of their register, dated the 16th of April last.

40. It is necessary to premise that I consider it impracticable to devise any scheme of civil administration which shall be equally well adapted to provinces under fluctuating settlements and to those permanently settled, especially provinces differing so widely in the character of the people and their village institutions as those west of Benares differ from the Lower Provinces.

41. Mr. Bayley, in the Minute above referred to, has observed as follows:

"It must be conceded, I imagine, by those who think most favourably of Lord Cornwallis's plan for the administration of civil justice, that the machinery was, from the very first, inadequate to accomplish more than a small proportion of the work it was expected to perform."

(5.) Minute of
Mr. Blunt,
24th March 1831.

42. I must express my dissent from this opinion. At the period at which Lord Cornwallis's code was framed, the means it provided for the administration of civil justice were, I think, adequate; it was naturally to be expected that, as the country advanced in its population, wealth, and commerce, the business of the civil courts would increase. There was nothing, however, in the judicial system then established incompatible with the employment of native agency under European superintendence, in the administration of civil justice. Unfortunately (as it appears to me), instead of having recourse to that measure to the extent required, various expedients were resorted to in order to meet the increase of civil business by means of European tribunals alone, and, contrary to the principle upon which Lord Cornwallis's system was founded, judicial and revenue functions were for these purposes united in collectors; but these expedients having failed, Lord Cornwallis's system was condemned and abandoned, after having stood the test of forty years' duration.

43. We have seen to what efficiency the state of the police has been brought under that system, and a more extended employment of native agency in the trial of civil suits might have afforded relief to any extent required by the civil tribunals. It would have left the judges of circuit at liberty to devote their time, if necessary, exclusively to the duties of that department, and would have been attended with the further advantage of admitting of the selection of persons for the duties of the circuit with reference only to their qualifications.

44. Although, therefore, I am not aware of the existence of any defects in the judicial institutions of Lord Cornwallis which might not have been susceptible of remedy, yet that system was by no means adapted for extension to provinces of which the settlement of the land revenues remains to be formed; and I concur in the opinion expressed by Mr. Mackenzie in his Minute, that in unsettled districts the union of judicial with revenue powers is essential to the just determination of the rights of the great body of the people, which remain to be ascertained, as to the protection of those rights and of the interests of Government. It is also justly remarked by Mr. Mackenzie, that the separation of the judicial and revenue authorities, under the Regulations of 1793, did not take place until the perpetual settlement had been concluded; the same principle (Mr. Mackenzie observed) being followed in Benares; and I quite agree with Mr. Mackenzie in the opinion he has expressed in his Minute, of which an extract is inserted in the margin.* In districts of which a settlement shall have been concluded, the establishment of a good police, and the administration of civil and criminal justice are the objects of chief importance; but the union of judicial with revenue powers appears indispensable to the just determination of questions that must arise in the progress of a settlement connected with claims to proprietary rights, or to matters of rent and revenue.

45. With this explanation of the sentiments I entertain in regard to the judicial and revenue system established by the Marquis Cornwallis, and to the powers with which it is necessary revenue officers should be intrusted in forming the settlement of the land revenues of a newly acquired country, I proceed to offer such observations as have been suggested by a consideration of the plan of civil administration delineated in Mr. Mackenzie's Minute of the 1st of October last. I acknowledge, however, that I entertain a predilection in favour of systems and institutions which are sanctioned by experience, in preference to any schemes of administration that are new, experimental, or uncertain in their result; and which may ere long involve the necessity of a further change in the form of Government; all such changes having a tendency to create feelings of dissatisfaction and distrust in the minds of those whose benefit is the only object contemplated.

46. In this light, I cannot but regard the proposition with which Mr. Mackenzie sets out, for declaring Government the supreme judicial authority, and for empowering it to interfere

* The terms used by Lord Cornwallis show his belief (well or ill founded is apart from the present question) that the rights of the great body of the people had been ascertained and recorded, and that he relied upon the courts for maintaining what was so recorded, under the changes incident to the ordinary occurrences and transactions of private life, and as an instrument to meet the exigencies of an unsettled country.

APPENDIX,

No. 4.

continued.

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

interfere in its exclusive capacity in the judicial administration of the country, on general principles. I should consider the interference of the ruling power in the administration of justice to be decidedly objectionable, even if (constituted as the Supreme Government of India now is) the exercise of such interference were practicable; and for the reasons stated in paragraphs 4 to 9 of Mr. Macnaghten's letter dated the 26th of January last, communicating the sentiments of the Governor-general on Mr. Mackenzie's Minute, I consider the proposed modification of the constitution and powers of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut to be unnecessary and inexpedient. But I concur in opinion with Mr. Mackenzie, that in all matters or questions connected with land revenue, the supreme authority and control should be vested in the Government.

47. Another important change of system, under which the judicial administration of the country has hitherto been conducted, is advocated in the first twelve paragraphs of Mr. Mackenzie's Minute, in the proposed union of judicial and revenue functions throughout the country; the main principle of Lord Cornwallis's code, as before observed, being that of keeping those authorities distinct.

48. Generally, in the Lower and permanently settled provinces, I should consider it advisable to uphold that principle, upon the grounds declared in the preamble to Regulation II. of 1793. In the administration of criminal justice, the union of the powers and functions of revenue commissioner and judge of circuit has been tried and failed; and I have already stated my opinion in regard to the probable consequences of the measure of vesting the revenue commissioners with the control of the police.

49. As regards the administration of civil justice, I can discover no necessity for the union, or any adequate advantage to be derived from it, provided we have recourse to the extended employment of native agency.

50. Except, also, as a measure of economy in the provinces permanently settled, I am not aware that any advantages will attend the proposed union of the offices of revenue collector and magistrate, though in our Western or unsettled districts substantial reasons for that arrangement may exist there; the establishment of tehsildars under the authority of the collector renders it unnecessary to maintain the separate office of police darogah, the duties of which may be better discharged by an officer possessing in his revenue capacity an authority and influence over the village communities, by means of which we can better command the co-operation and support which is essential to an efficient police, and the practical benefits of which system I have lately had an opportunity of observing in the Madras territories.

51. But in the permanently settled provinces, there are no revenue officers under the authority of the collector whose services could be so available. We must there continue to administer the police by means of establishments entertained solely for that purpose, and who derive no authority from their connexion with the people; who having also no other means of support than the small salary of their office, are exposed to greater temptations to dishonesty, and require to be more vigilantly controlled than those who enjoy liberal allowances, more enlarged powers, and greater consideration and respect, advantages of which few would risk the forfeiture by any abuse of the trust reposed in them; neither would tehsildars in districts permanently settled (if such offices existed) possess the same influence over the village communities as in districts under temporary settlements; in Bengal they would be merely the receivers of a fixed revenue, requiring little intercourse with the people; whereas the powers and functions of these officers in countries unsettled afford them abundant opportunities of conciliating the confidence and attachment of all with whom they necessarily have intercourse, and who are in a manner under their authority.

52. Further, in the Western provinces, the constitution of the village communities is essentially different from those of Bengal; and under the direction and control of a tehsildar, much of the business which in the Lower Provinces is necessarily brought into the magistrate's court might there be left for adjustment to the village community. There also crimes of enormity, but especially that of gang-robbery, have never prevailed to the extent extent, that, has at times disturbed the Lower Provinces, and the duties of the magistrates generally are less arduous.

53. The union also of the subordinate police and revenue authorities seems necessarily to imply a like union of functions in the superior officer.

54. The plan, therefore, appears to me well adapted to the circumstances of the Western Provinces, so far, at least, as the administration of the police is concerned; but whether it be reconcileable with the expectation of increased progress in the revision and formation of the settlements, requiring the local superintendence of the collector, or with the prompt investigation into proprietary claims preferred under the provisions of Regulation I. 1821 and Regulation I. 1829, are questions deserving consideration. The inconvenience which I should anticipate in this respect, from the proposed union of authorities, can only, I conceive, be obviated in the manner suggested by Mr. Mackenzie, namely, by affording the collectors the aid of sub-collectors or assistant magistrates, with a salary of from one to two thousand rupees per month, regulated on a graduated scale, the increase to be fixed with reference to their standing in the service and merit; yet, even under this arrangement, I should apprehend that the progress of the settlements will be impeded by the demands on the time and attention of the collector to which he will be subject in his capacity of magistrate.

55. But even in those provinces, the principle of uniting in the superior the powers which are combined in the subordinate officers cannot be uniformly adopted: the question, what authority is to be put over the magistrates and collectors in those provinces, to which Mr. Mackenzie has adverted in the fifteenth paragraph of his Minute, is one of some difficulty. The separation of the functions of revenue commissioner and circuit judge seems to be indispensable, though under certain restrictions in matters of civil jurisdiction, relating to rent and revenue, it seems to be admitted that judicial and revenue powers may, during the progress of the settlement of the country, be conveniently and unobjectionably conjoined.

56. Both in the Western and Lower provinces, therefore, there appears to me to be only one alternative, namely, either to constitute the zillah or city judge a judge of criminal jurisdiction, as suggested by Mr. Mackenzie, or to appoint separate judges of circuit to be employed exclusively in that duty.

57. The only advantage of the latter arrangement over the former is, that the individuals appointed to the situation of circuit judges might be selected with reference to their past employments, and to their qualifications and fitness for that special duty and for the general superintendence of the police, and under such an arrangement, the office of superintendent of police might with less inconvenience be dispensed with: on the other hand, less expense would be incurred by uniting the offices of civil and criminal judge; the goal deliveries, which might be held monthly, would be expedited; people falsely accused would be more speedily discharged, while the conviction and punishment of the guilty would follow more immediately on the offence; moreover, the prosecutors and witnesses in trial before the judge of circuit would be relieved from the inconvenience and interruption to the occupations and the cultivation of their lands which is often occasioned by the necessity of a double attendance, and sometimes a long detention in the criminal courts, and a considerable saving in the expense now incurred on account of their diet allowance would be effected.

58. But in either case, whether the business of the criminal sessions be discharged by the zillah or city judge or by a judge of circuit specially appointed for that duty, it would of course be necessary that he should exercise over the local magistrates and their subordinate police establishments the powers now vested by the Regulations in the commissioners of circuit: though, in regard to the tehsildars, it would be highly requisite that every consideration should be observed towards them; and that in the discharge of their functions of police officers they should be subject to as little annoyance as possible, either by their attendance on the court being unnecessarily required, or otherwise.

59. On the whole, if sufficient aid be afforded to the civil judge, by the appointment of native judges, and by maintaining the office of register, considerations of economy will perhaps

APPENDIX,

No. 4.

continued.

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

perhaps be best consulted, by uniting the offices of civil and criminal judge within the Western and Lower Provinces; and I do not apprehend that the same difficulty would be experienced in selecting fit instruments for the discharge of the duties of the united offices of civil and criminal judge, as has been experienced in regard to the offices of commissioners of revenue and circuit.

60. It will be seen from the foregoing observations, that I do not consider the same reasons to exist for the union of the offices of the collectors and magistrates in the Lower Provinces as in districts yet unsettled; and although in permanently settled districts the duties of a collector are light and unimportant compared with those of the revenue officers in the Western Provinces, and are attended with little labour or responsibility, yet those of the police department are far more arduous, and require a degree of activity, energy, and vigilance which I fear cannot reasonably be expected generally from a class of officers who have hitherto exercised only revenue functions requiring little if any exertion. I should certainly prefer to see the office of magistrate in each district of the Lower Provinces filled by a person selected for that trust, and who should have no other duty to perform, keeping the revenue and judicial authorities distinct; but if such arrangement shall involve a disbursement exceeding that at which our judicial establishments are now fixed, or to which it is necessary that they be reduced, the offices must of course be united, though, in that event, it will be still more necessary to maintain the office of register, to afford the magistrate such assistance as he will undoubtedly require; and in some districts, where the business of the foudjarry court may be more than ordinarily heavy, it will be further necessary, as in the Western Provinces, to appoint assistant magistrates. In some districts of the Lower Provinces the plan of uniting the offices of collector and magistrate has already been experimentally introduced; but sufficient time has not elapsed to admit of a judgment being formed as to its practical operation. In the district of Jessore, however, I understand that there are at present one thousand nine hundred cases depending in the criminal court before the collector and magistrate; and about six hundred persons on bail, or in custody under examination on various charges, besides innumerable summary revenue suits depending before the collector.

61. This leads to the consideration of the question of the expediency of vesting natives with criminal as well as of civil jurisdiction.

62. On the principle of extending gradually the powers to be vested in those officers, I would for the present, as far as concerns the administration of criminal justice, merely employ them in preparing cases for the decision of the magistrate, or for commitment for trial by the criminal judge; that is to say, in cases referred to them for the purpose by the magistrate, they should examine the prosecutor, and take the depositions of the witnesses and the defence of the accused, in the manner and form prescribed by the Regulations; and after completing the proceedings, they might be required to record their opinion as to whether there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused for trial; or, if the offence shall be punishable by the magistrate, whether it be proved or otherwise, submitting their proceedings, with such opinion, for the final orders of the magistrate, without whose revision of the proceedings and sanction, no punishment should be inflicted or prisoner committed to gaol; and all such proceedings should be conducted at the sudder station only.

63. In the order of Mr. Mackenzie's Minute, the next point for consideration is the means of improving the condition of the thannadars of the Lower Provinces, to which the particular consideration of the Vice-president in Council is recommended by the Governor-general in paragraph 16 of Mr. Macnaghten's letter of 26th of January last.

64. This is a subject of much difficulty, and which has often been under the consideration of Government. That it is desirable to improve the character, by raising the condition of those officers, admits of no question; though I am not quite certain (as maintained by Mr. Mackenzie) that a fair remuneration will always purchase probity. The difficulty, however, consists in devising means for this purpose, without incurring a heavy increase of disbursement on account of our police establishments. Mr. Mackenzie acknowledges the inability to suggest a remedy, nor does any at present occur to me: the subject may, however, be hereafter taken into consideration; in the mean time I would suggest that the Nizamut Adawlut be requested to ascertain the sentiments of the local magistrates and commissioners of circuit in the Lower Provinces on that subject, and that they submit the same, with their own opinion, for the consideration of Government. It is to be remarked, however, that it has been by means of those officers that our police has been brought to its present efficient state; and so long as they are vigilantly controlled, and at the same time treated with due consideration and forbearance, I should hope they may be restrained from misconduct, and encouraged to discharge their duties with continued zeal and fidelity.

65. I cannot agree in opinion with Mr. Mackenzie, that if the case* of the people be the main object of preventing crime, we have failed essentially, however successful we have been in checking the more violent offences; and I am compelled wholly to dissent from the opinion expressed in the 13th paragraph of his Minute, in reference to the character of our village police establishments.

66. The state of the village police must be separately considered with reference to the Western and Lower Provinces. Those establishments cannot any where be justly characterized as a "domineering and tyrannical class of officers, of whom the least offensive are those who merely occasion a needless expense." In the Western Provinces every attention has been given to maintain the efficiency of these establishments, and in almost every village lands are set apart for their support, and have been secured to them in every settlement that has been formed; the office being there hereditary, though of course the incumbent is liable to be dismissed for neglect or misconduct in the discharge of his police duties.

67. In the Lower Provinces, the village police officer being nominated and maintained by the zemidars or by the inhabitants of the village, he holds his office only so long as he gives satisfaction to those for whose protection he is employed; he may connive at thefts or depredations elsewhere, but not in his own village; he has no power of committing exactions, and I believe it is very rare that complaints of oppression or misconduct are preferred against a village police officer by any inhabitant of his own village.

68. It is no doubt desirable that our police officers should abstain from unnecessary interference in petty disputes. In the Western provinces, where more public spirit is evinced, the heads of villages may no doubt be induced to afford their assistance in the adjustment of such matters, and much aid to the police may be derived from their co-operation and support. But in the Lower Provinces the case is different; there the village constitution and the apathy of the native character does not admit of the same resort. Regulation VII. 1811 was passed in order to divest the police darogahs of the power of interfering in petty and vexatious complaints, which had been found to be a source of great abuse; and further rules were passed under Regulation III. 1812, with a view to check the prevalence of frivolous or unfounded complaints, or the practice of summoning an unnecessary number of witnesses in support of such charges; and which was a practice frequently resorted to solely for the purpose of taking unresisted possession of disputed crops during the absence of the parties summoned. The Honourable Court of Directors, however, did not entirely approve the provisions of the Regulation which restricted police officers from taking cognizance of petty complaints, unless referred to them by the magistrates; and I am not aware that any further provisions on the subject are now necessary. The restriction has unquestionably been a great blessing to the country, though it has always been a ground of complaint and regret by the police darogahs; it having not only put a stop to the innumerable petty and vexatious complaints with which the courts were overwhelmed, and of which I have known three thousand depending in one district, but having also effectually closed a door to the most grievous exactions and oppressions, from the practice of which it was ascertained that, in some districts (particularly in the Dacca division), the monthly receipts of the police darogahs averaged more than 800 rupees throughout the year, while their fixed monthly salary from Government was Rs. 25; and

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 4.
continued.

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

428 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

it has been attended with the further most important benefit, of compelling the police officers to give their chief attention to the prevention of heinous crimes or the apprehension of offenders, a part of their duty which, being attended with less profit than trouble was before wholly neglected.

69. The question as to the nature and extent of the judicial authority to be exercised by the sub-collectors, collectors, and revenue commissioners in the Western Provinces, is one also of some difficulty. It seems quite necessary that, during the progress of the settlements of the land revenue, for the purpose of determining all questions involving claims to proprietary rights, and all matters of rent or revenue, in which the interests of individuals or of Government are concerned, the revenue officers should be vested with judicial powers. It appears from the 21st paragraph of Mr. Macnaghten's letter, that a reference has been made by order of the Governor-general to the Sudder Board on deputation for a report of their sentiments on this question. I am not aware of any objection to Mr. Mackenzie's proposition, that copies of decrees regarding lands in the unsettled districts should be sent to the commissioners, who should be authorized to certify to the sudder court for revision any decision that may appear to them to involve erroneous or mischievous principles; but whatever judicial powers it may be deemed necessary to vest in the revenue officers, I agree with Mr. Mackenzie in opinion that they should not be continued beyond the period for which such necessity may exist; and all judicial powers which may be given to magistrates, collectors, commissioners, or boards should be regarded as temporary only, and should cease when the rights of the agricultural class and of Government shall have been ascertained and recorded.

70. I have already stated in a Minute, dated the 6th January last, on the subject of the comparative advantages of individual agency and of collective boards, that I am of opinion the establishment of a controlling Revenue Board in the Western provinces is necessary to regulate and superintend the progress of the settlements, and to determine all questions of difficulty or importance that may arise in the progress of that work, as well as to exercise a general control over the revenue officers of those provinces; the confirmation of settlements and final decision in all matters of importance in which the interests of Government are concerned being reserved to the Governor-general in Council; and I am of opinion that the Board should be established at Allahabad. But on this subject a Minute has been recorded by the Right Honourable the Governor-general, under date the 24th of January last, in which his Lordship having expressed an opinion favourable to the adoption of that measure, it seems only necessary to refer to his Lordship's Minute on the subject.

71. I would not, however, be understood to recommend the abolition of the controlling Revenue Board at the Presidency, for that measure would, I conceive, involve the necessity of again separating the offices of judicial and revenue secretary which have so recently been united, and might also require the appointment of one or more deputies in that office.

72. I have already expressed my opinion in regard to the necessity of establishing a head Revenue Board in the Western Provinces, vested with the general superintendence and control of the revenue administration, and likewise of all miscellaneous branches of revenue, such as the customs, salt, abkaree, opium, and stamps, exercising likewise, during the progress of the settlement of the land revenue, such judicial powers as may be deemed necessary to the speedy and just determination of all claims to proprietary right, the ascertainment of the relative rights of all classes of the agricultural community, determination of rates of rent and amount of the Government demand, and generally for the decision of all questions of importance that may arise connected with those settlements; such special powers being discontinued when the settlements shall have been completed.

73. As the local revenue commissioners in those provinces will be no longer employed as circuit judges, and as, for the reasons I have stated in a former part of this Minute, it will not,

Now, I think, be expedient to vest them with the superintendence of the police; as moreover it is proposed to unite the offices of collector and magistrate, whereby I am of opinion, even with the aid of deputy collectors and assistant magistrates, the business of the settlements will be greatly impeded; lastly, as the settlement of the land revenue is of paramount importance, I should strongly recommend that, with some modifications, the plan suggested by Mr. Ross in his Minute dated 16th of April last be adopted, namely, that as higher qualifications and greater experience are required for the formation of settlements than for the mere collection of the land revenue, that duty should be performed by the local revenue commissioners, or by well-qualified natives under their immediate superintendence and control, the commissioners themselves receiving their instructions from the Western Sudder Board, and being aided when required (so far as their magisterial and police duties may admit) by the collectors and subordinate revenue officers; the settlement of land revenues, and the investigation and decision of the numerous suits or claims preferred under Regulation I. 1821 (of which there is now a heavy accumulation), constituting the principal duties of the commissioners; and those officers continuing vested, as at present, with a general control over the collectors and their subordinate revenue officers in all matters of revenue, through not of police, no alteration being made in the local limits of their respective divisions as now established; and in each district of which, under this arrangement, the revenue settlements might proceed simultaneously.

74. It would not, I conceive, be difficult to select for the office of commissioner a sufficient number of experienced and efficient revenue officers having no other duties to perform, under whose superintendence and individual responsibility it may be reasonably expected that more progress would be made in one year in the business of the settlements than has yet been effected since the enactment of Regulation VII. 1822. It should be the special duty of the commissioner to investigate the grounds of all claims to remissions of revenue or abatements of jumma which of late years have been preferred to a great extent, and the necessity for which has generally been very imperfectly ascertained; and though the evils of over-assessment are particularly apparent in the province of Bundelcund (some parts of which are said to be nearly depopulated from that cause), we have not at present the means of determining, on any satisfactory grounds, to what extent it may be necessary to grant remissions of balances or abatements in the demand of the ensuing year, the local officers not having sufficient leisure to institute the inquiries necessary for that purpose, without neglecting other important duties.

75. The above arrangement would be attained with this further advantage, that it would leave the collectors sufficient time to attend to their duties of magistrates, and they would be relieved from the necessity of being frequently absent from the sudder stations on account of revenue duties, which would seriously interfere with the discharge of those of the magistrate's office. The heavy expense, also, which would attend the appointment of sub-collectors and assistant magistrates on a monthly salary of 1,000 to 2,000 rupees (which is a part of the plan proposed by Mr. Mackenzie), with the further charge on account of their native establishments, would in a great measure be avoided.

76. In the Lower and permanently settled provinces, the revenue commissioners being relieved from the duties of the circuit, and having only those of the Revenue department to perform, their local jurisdictions might be extended, and the number of commissioners considerably reduced. In lieu of the eight divisions noted in the margin,* I would propose to appoint four commissioners for the divisions of Dacca, Patna, Moorshedabad, and Calcutta, who should ordinarily be stationed at those cities, and exercise all the powers of the late Board of Revenue, subject to the controlling Revenue Board at the Presidency; having of course a suitable establishment attached to their respective offices, adequate to the additional extent of their revenue superintendence.

77. The abolition, under the above arrangement, of four of the present Revenue divisions would be required on the following grounds:—Divisions 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, and 20.

would effect a considerable saving, and would provide ample funds to cover the expense of re-establishing the office of superintendent of police in the Lower Provinces: a measure which, under any arrangement, I should earnestly recommend; it would also add to the means of increasing the salaries of the native officers, without abolishing the registers' courts for that purpose.

78. In regard to the higher judicial tribunals, to which paragraphs 31 to 41 of Mr. Mackenzie's Minute have reference, both that gentleman and Mr. Bayley, in his Minute already referred to, has recommended the abolition of the provincial courts of appeal; and it is proposed to dispense with any intermediate controlling authority between the zillah courts and the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut.

79. The expediency of this measure has been so fully discussed in the Minutes of the judges of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, which accompanied their register's letter, dated the 16th April last, that I have little to add beyond the expression of my entire concurrence in the opinions on that subject entertained by the court. A measure for which I cannot discover any sufficient reason, the abolition of the provincial courts, will, I conceive, paralyse the whole scheme of judicial administration now proposed to be established; and even though a second court of Sudder Adawlut were to be erected for the Western Provinces, I should consider it quite impossible that the business of the four provincial courts in the Lower Provinces, particularly with the additional native courts now to be established, can be adequately performed by the Sudder Adawlut at the Presidency. Moreover, in extending, as is now proposed, the judicial powers to be intrusted to natives, it seems necessary to maintain every means of control, not only over those tribunals, but also over the zillah court, from whose decisions or orders, if unjust or erroneous, all hope of redress would be precluded; if it could only be obtained on a hearing of the case by the highest tribunal, the miscellaneous business of which court (if the lower courts of appeal were abolished) would alone engage all the time of the judges. The objections which are urged by Mr. Mackenzie to a continuance of the provincial courts would be obviated by a careful selection of the judges of those courts; and as those officers will not hereafter have any circuit duties to perform they ought to be enabled to dispose of all appeals from the lower courts without delay: for which purpose it is probable that two efficient judges in each court would ordinarily suffice. The judges should hold their sittings singly; a concurring opinion of a single judge being sufficient to affirm a decision or order of the zillah court, and two concurring opinions being necessary to alter or reverse such decisions: and in the event of a difference of opinion in the provincial court, the case should be referred for decision by a single judge of the Sudder Adawlut.

80. With a view, also, to enable the zillah judges duly to superintend the native tribunals, and to hear and determine, without delay, all appeals from the sudder ameens, or from the decisions of the moonsiffs which they may deem it proper to retain upon their own files, instead of transferring them to the register for trial; and likewise in order that they may be enabled to discharge the duties of criminal judge, and to superintend the police of their respective districts, it will probably be necessary to vest the provincial courts with original jurisdiction in all suits exceeding the sum of 5,000 rupees in value or amount, the zillah courts being merely courts of appellate and of criminal jurisdiction.

81. Concurring, therefore, in opinion with the Sudder Adawlut, as to the necessity of maintaining those courts, I cannot attach equal weight to the arguments by which the judges of that court have opposed the measure of creating a second Sudder Adawlut for the Western Provinces. The court, it appears, consider the distance by which they are separated from our Western Provinces to be of little importance. They deem the personal attendance of the parties in suits to be unnecessary and useless. They are of opinion that the publicity of the acts and proceedings of a court established at the seat of Government is calculated to secure the confidence of the natives, to whom no decision by a court of ultimate resort established in the interior would, they think, be so satisfactory. They argue that one superior tribunal is necessary to preserve uniformity in the interpretation of the law, and that they consider that the measure will be attended with an unnecessary expense, as the appointment of one additional judge to the sudder court will suffice for the business of that court.

82. It is not only with reference to the extent of the civil business of the Sudder Adawlut, but to that of the criminal side of the court, that the establishment of a Sudder Adawlut in the Western Provinces appears necessary; for if, as observed by Mr. Bayley, the recent measures by which individual commissioners of circuit have been substituted for collective commissioners of circuit, require a more close and active superintendence over those officers than can be exercised by the Nizamut Adawlut at the Presidency, still more will such supervision and control be necessary when the number of individuals exercising the powers of criminal judge shall be multiplied by the union of that office with that of the zillah judge, as a careful selection of persons duly qualified for that important trust will be more difficult in proportion as the number of individuals to be employed is augmented.

83. In regard to the civil business, it is stated by one of the judges of the Sudder Dewanny, that the proportion of appeals preferred from the Western Provinces compared with the number of suits determined is greater than in the Lower Provinces, consequently that the inhabitants of those provinces experience no more difficulty in appealing causes to the sudder than is experienced by those in the Lower Provinces; but there can be no doubt that the causes of civil controversy will be found to exist to an equal extent in the Western as in the Lower Provinces, and I cannot but suppose that it would be satisfactory to the parties concerned therein to have the option of attending in person the court in which their claims are investigated and determined. Some of the objections urged by the court to the establishment of a Sudder Adawlut in the Western Provinces would have equal force, whatever might be the extent of our provinces; the court proposing to meet the increase of business incident to extended dominion by an additional number of judges at the Presidency. I cannot, however, but consider the court of Sudder Adawlut already too far removed from our Western Provinces to secure to their inhabitants an efficient administration of civil or criminal justice. If only one court of ultimate resort is maintained for the Western and Lower Provinces, it ought to be more centrally situated; but the present extent of local jurisdiction of the court appears to me such as to render the establishment of a Sudder Adawlut of civil and criminal jurisdiction at Allahabad indispensably necessary for the exercise of a due control over the local judicial functionaries, and for the happiness and welfare of the inhabitants of those remote territories. The measure, I observe, is upon these grounds advocated by one of the judges of the sudder, and the arguments contained in Mr. Bayley's Minute in favour of that measure appear to me conclusive.

84. The modification, however, of the powers and constitution of those courts, which are suggested in the 32d and subsequent paragraphs of Mr. Mackenzie's Minute, appear to be liable to serious objection. Mr. Mackenzie proposes that the judges of the courts of Sudder Adawlut, both in the Western Provinces and at the Presidency, should be also sudder revenue commissioners. Now, although during the progress of the settlement of any newly acquired territories, it may be expedient and necessary temporarily to empower the revenue authorities to determine certain cases relating to lands, and their liability to assessment, I would not so far depart from the principles on which the judicial and revenue code of 1793 is founded as to unite the controlling authorities in those departments. The judicial tribunals and the revenue authorities of the country, when settled, should, I think, invariably be kept distinct. I see no advantage in the union proposed, but much that is objectionable in principle and inconvenient in practice. In the Western Provinces the Sudder Revenue Board should not only have a controlling authority in all matters connected with the land revenue, but should also exercise a like authority in the miscellaneous branches of revenue of salt, opium, akbarry, stamps, and customs, which at present cannot be duly executed by the Board of customs, salt and opium, at the Presidency, and which could not I think be properly vested in a court of civil and criminal judicature.

85. The

(5.) Minute of
Mr. Blunt,
24th March 1831.

85. The scheme proposed by Mr. Mackenzie in paragraphs 58 to 60 of his Minute for the partition of the Western and Lower Provinces into divisions and circles, and the judicial and fiscal establishments which he therein proposes to entertain, being wholly incompatible with the arrangements I have suggested, need not here be discussed; his suggestions, however, therein contained for the improvement of the village police, I conclude has reference principally to the Western Provinces, where no doubt the services of the heads of villages and co-operation of the village community may be made highly conducive to the establishment of an efficient police; but in the cities and principal towns of the Lower Provinces permanently settled, the system of police established under the provisions of Regulation XXII. 1816, and Regulation XX. 1817, seems to require no amendment, and cannot be disturbed without mischief. In proof of benefits to the police which have resulted from the organization of a body of subordinate police officers, adequately and regularly paid in the manner provided for by the former Regulation, it will be sufficient to compare the reports of the state of the police in the cities of Dacca, Patna, Moorshedabad, and Benares previously to that enactment and those of the present day. I would leave it to the option of the inhabitants of the principal towns and villages to entertain chokeedars for their protection, on the principle of the establishments entertained in the cities; but it seems desirable that the extension of the system should be encouraged by the local magistrates; the co-operation of the landholders or heads of villages in support of the police is already enjoined by the existing Regulations, and I am not aware of any further measures that can be adopted calculated to improve the state of the village police.

86. In regard to the introduction of trial by jury, which is recommended by Mr. Mackenzie, my opinions are entirely opposed to the adoption of that measure. The suspension of the Regulation passed at Madras for the gradual introduction of that form of trial in the provinces subject to that Presidency, has been approved by the Honourable Court of Directors, until experience shall have been had of the result of the experiment which has been made of that mode of trial in the supreme courts at the three Presidencies.

87. In a Minute dated the 14th September last, the governor of Madras (than whom no man is better qualified, by his experience and knowledge of the native character, to form a just opinion on the question) has thus expressed himself:—"My opinions have undergone no change, as far as regards the inexpediency of employing native juries to find verdicts in the courts of European judges; I continue to think that the assembling of a great many heads of families from different parts of an extensive province, at the station of the court, where they must come from such distance, attended by a part of their family, and where they would be long absent from their homes and their business, their family and their religious ceremonies (a very important part of the life of a Hindoo), would be felt as a grievous hardship by the natives themselves, and that their contending and corrupt opinions would embarrass rather than assist the European judge in his proceedings."

88. Mr. Lushington considers that there must be a great change before the feelings and the institutions of a free country can be expected to arise and flourish amongst the people of India; and "when we remember" (he observes) "that trial by jury, conducted as that noble institution is in our own country by freemen enlightened by education and christianity, is scarcely yet known amongst the nations of the continent of Europe as an instrument of public justice, it is no unkind reflection upon the people here to say, that they are not yet fitted for it in the provinces." Of this truth there cannot be a stronger demonstration than the well-known fact, that, out of a population of Madras of 500,000 souls, only seventy nine Hindoos have been declared qualified to sit as jurors."

89. At this Presidency, and within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the supreme court the inhabitants have for many years had the benefit of institutions founded for the advancement of their education, and for the extension of knowledge in European science, literature and jurisprudence; there, too, a large body of highly respectable and intelligent natives, independent in their circumstances, are congregated, who are familiarized with the practice of European courts, and enlightened by their intercourse with European society; and it is therefore probable that at this Presidency a much wider field of selection would be afforded of persons qualified to sit as jurors than at Madras; but I am not aware that, in respect to the characters and qualifications of the inhabitants generally, in the interior of our province, for the discharge of that office, a greater choice of qualified persons will be found amidst the population under this Presidency than in that of the Madras territories; and I should deprecate the extension of the system to our mofussil courts, founded upon any results of an experiment made in the supreme court at the Presidency, under means and circumstances far more favourable to its success than can (at least for many years to come) exist in the mofussil.

90. A principal advantage which is promised by the arrangement now contemplated, of constituting the zillah judge a judge of criminal jurisdiction, and providing for a monthly sessions of gaol delivery at each station, is that of relieving the inhabitants generally of these provinces from the grievous hardship of a frequent or long attendance on our criminal courts, and the injury to their affairs and distress to their families occasioned thereby; a very considerable saving of expense to Government in the item of diet allowance, hitherto granted to such persons during their attendance on the courts, is also anticipated by that arrangement; but both these objects will be defeated, if at each monthly gaol delivery it shall be necessary to require the attendance at the sudder station of a body of the most respectable inhabitants of the district, for the purpose of selecting jurors.

91. Moreover, however well qualified, impartial, or honest such persons might be, I much doubt whether, in many cases, they would possess the firmness, or would be disposed to encounter the peril they would incur in giving a conscientious verdict according to the evidence before them on the trial. It is a well-known fact, that at the period the crime of decoitree, of the most aggravated character, was most prevalent in the province of Bengal, it was with great difficulty that persons robbed were induced to prosecute, or witnesses to give evidence, from the threatened or apprehended vengeance of the accused if acquitted, or of their adherents and associates if convicted. Would not such fears, it may be asked, equally operate in the timid minds of native jurors of the provinces in trials for decoitree, from the apprehension that on their return home to their villages, removed from the immediate protection of the court or of the police establishments of Government, their lives or property might be exposed to danger from the dictates of revenge? would they not consider the risk of such a consequence an evil far outweighing any compensation that could be made, or inducements that would be afforded to them, to undertake the duty of jurors? would not these fears, and a natural desire to consult their own ease and safety, prompt a verdict of acquittal in all cases in which the character of the accused was known to be desperate, or in which any of the gang should remain unapprehended? or what better hope would there be of a fearless and honest verdict against a zemindar or considerable land proprietor, or other person possessing influence and power in the district, who might be charged with any serious affray or other act of violence or oppression, from a jury who must be often composed chiefly of the tenants or dependants of such persons? where, indeed in any case, shall we look amidst the native population of our provinces for that love of justice, and that independence of character, without which the trial by jury would be the greatest evil that could be inflicted on the country?

92. For these reasons alone, I should deeply lament to see any change of the nature proposed in the administration of criminal justice; but if the object of the proposed change is (as stated in the preamble to the Madras Regulation X. of 1827) "to facilitate the tracing facts from evidence," I am not of opinion that the trial by jury is so well calculated for the purpose as that which at present exists; for where will any individual of a jury be found possessed of that experience, skill, intelligence, and judgment, which is possessed by the law officers who preside in our criminal courts, and who are certainly in general far better qualified to form a correct estimate of the value of native testimony, and to elicit the facts of the case, than any persons of the class of whom the juries would ordinarily be composed? to say nothing of the objections that might be urged to native juries, on the grounds of the general disregard to the investigation of an oath in the middle and lower classes of the natives of India, the temptations to corruption arising from their poverty, their wants, and their

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 4.
continued.
Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

434 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

cupidity; or the various motives or considerations of self-interest by which a verdict of a jury, composed of many individuals, is more liable to be influenced than that of a single person selected from the higher and better educated class of natives, both on account of his qualifications and respectability of character, and who holds a profitable and responsible office under Government, upon which his subsistence depends, and of which he would be liable to be divested were he guilty of corruption or misconduct.

93. If it be an object of the proposed change to shorten the proceedings in criminal trials, by dispensing with the record of much which is at present required to be reduced into writing in several languages, this may possibly be a reason for the change in the criminal courts of the Madras territories, which does not apply to the courts in the provinces under this Presidency. In the former, the proceedings of the criminal courts which are held in the native languages are, I believe, translated and recorded in the English language, and much delay is thereby occasioned; but such is not the practice in these provinces; the examinations or defence of the parties and depositions of the witnesses are taken and recorded in the language in which they are most conversant. This could not, I presume, be dispensed with, whatever may be the form of trial established, and I do not therefore perceive in what manner the trials would be shortened by substituting juries on criminal trials for our present law officers, through in certain civil suits, especially those relating to disputed boundaries, matters of account or of caste, native arbitration may be resorted to with great advantage.

94. If we could raise the character of the people, it is not, I conceive, by imposing upon them irksome duties, or by compelling them against their inclinations to serve on juries and thereby render our system of administration unpopular, but by encouraging education with a view to qualify them for employment in situations of trust and emolument under Government.

95. I shall, however, dwell no longer on this subject, observing merely that the several judges of the Nizamut Adawlut at the Presidency (with only one exception) have strongly objected to the proposed measure, on grounds which are recorded in their respective Minutes, transmitted to Government with their register's letter, dated the 20th of November 1829; and even the judge, by whom opinions are entertained in favour of the measure (Mr. Ross), recommends that it be limited to cases in which the prosecutor or the prisoner might have the means of offering to the mooftee or the native judge a temptation which it might not be deemed safe to rely on his regard for character, and fear of loss of office, being sufficient to induce him to resist.

96. From the 60th to 70th paragraphs of Mr. Mackenzie's Minute, that gentleman has drawn certainly a very melancholy picture of the state of the provinces under this Presidency; but I apprehend he does not mean to include the Lower or permanently settled provinces in that description, as it appears to me totally inapplicable to the state of the country, and the feelings and condition of the inhabitants in that portion of our territories. I think, too, his pencil has portrayed in too vivid colours the miseries of the Western population under our past administration, in advocating the changes he has proposed. Mr. Mackenzie observes, "If not hated by the people, we are at least without the slightest hold on their affections, from Benares upwards; the fact appears to be generally admitted, and within those limits lies almost all the military part of our population." He appears to ascribe this unpopularity to the defects of our past system of administration, which he considers unadapted to their condition; he deplures the evils of hasty legislation; he would not, he says, attempt suddenly to introduce what we desire to establish every where, or in many places at once. "If in a hundred years (he observes) the object be attained, there will be abundant glory for our country."

97. If the country, however, is in reality in the condition described by Mr. Mackenzie, and those evils have been occasioned by the causes to which he has ascribed them, it is to be hoped that it will not need so long a period to effect the desired reform.

98. I do not, however, ascribe the discontent said to prevail in our Western Provinces or the miseries which the people are said to suffer, to any defects in the system of civil administration established in those provinces; that feeling is I think to be ascribed to two causes: namely, the extensive sales of land, and the evils resulting from short settlements. The former cause of discontent and of injury has long since been put a stop to; and every endeavour has since been made to remedy the evils which were caused by the extensive transfer of landed property, and by that sweeping annihilation of the rights and existence of the whole body of village proprietors, which resulted from the extensive sales of land for recovery of arrears of revenue which took place during the early years of our possession of those provinces; an evil which was aggravated by the system which then prevailed, of fixing the amount of the public demand without any previous ascertainment of the resources of the country to be assessed, but merely on the dols or estimates of irresponsible and speculating foreigners, to whom, on the recusance of the ancient and hereditary landholders, extensive tracts were farmed out at an excessive assessment, in supersession of the rights of the former, and to the injury, oppression, and discontent of the whole agricultural community. I do not consider a permanent settlement to be expedient, until rights shall have been better ascertained and recorded, or until the cultivation of the country shall be sufficiently advanced to render that measure unobjectionable as regards the interests of the State; but I have reason to know that much importance was at one period attached by the higher and most influential classes in the Western Provinces to that measure, and that a very general feeling of disappointment was occasioned by the orders from home interdicting its adoption. That feeling has long since, however, subsided, and the expectation of a permanent settlement is no longer entertained. Nevertheless, I am of opinion that the present system of short settlements has been a source of harassment and discontent to all classes, and has tended to retard the improvement of the country. We need only look to the wretched state of the province of Bundelcund, to discover sufficient cause of misery and discontent in the effects there visible of fluctuating and excessive assessments. Most of the districts of the Western Provinces have however attained a sufficient state of improvement to admit of settlements being farmed for an extended term of years; and I should wish to see a settlement concluded for a period of twenty or twenty-five years, on the principles of Regulation VII. 1822, in every estate of which the proportion of waste and uncultivated land shall not exceed one-fourth of the whole of the rukba or lands comprised in the estate.

99. I am not of opinion that our judicial system established in the Western Provinces has been unadapted to the people, or opposed to their habits or feelings, otherwise than as it tends in the administration of justice to place all persons on an equality, and to level all distinctions of rank, the master with the servant, the landlord with the cultivator. This is undoubtedly opposed to the former customs of the country, and was, on the first introduction of our Regulations, a source of much dissatisfaction to the higher classes of the natives in our Western Provinces; but if it be a defect, I apprehend it is not one which it is the object of Mr. Mackenzie's plan to correct, nor do I perceive in what manner the plan of administration he has suggested is better calculated to conciliate attachment to our Government, or to remove those feelings of disaffection which he considers to prevail.

100. It may not be here out of place to introduce the following extract from a Report of the late commissioner of Bareilly (the Honourable W. Melville), written at the close of the last circuit of gaoi delivery in that division, under date the 17th of October last, and although (as before observed) I do not consider the measure of a permanent settlement at present called for as expedient, still I think the observations contained in that Report are justly deserving of attention.

"I cannot conclude, however, without expressing a conviction that the great object to be held in view in regard to the millions inhabiting these widely spread provinces, that to which all subordinate measures and arrangements should have reference, that to which all temporary expedients and petty facilities should give way, that regarding which all expectations of unattainable perfection should be abandoned, and in which an approximation to the truth should be deemed sufficient, is undoubtedly the formation of a permanent settlement settlement of the land revenue ; without it there can be no security, and therefore no happiness, either for the proprietors or the people."

101. I have thought it necessary to make the foregoing observations, as some parts of Mr. Mackenzie's Minute appear to me calculated to convey impressions regarding the state of our provinces, and the practical operation of the existing laws and system of Judicial and Revenue administration, which I think are erroneous, and because it does not appear to me by any means certain that the happiness and general good of the people would be promoted, or the administration of the country improved, by the system he has proposed to substitute, and which at best must be considered only experimental.

102. Dissenting, therefore, as I do from the opinions entertained by Mr. Mackenzie, both as to the extent of the existing evils, and the necessity of such a total subversion of that system of administration by which the country has hitherto been governed as proposed in his Minute, I shall conclude these remarks by a brief outline of the modifications of the existing system which appear to me calculated to obviate the chief causes of its failure, and to improve the Revenue and Judicial administration of the country.

103. In the Western Provinces, I would propose the following judicial and fiscal establishments.

1st. A Court of Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut, consisting of three judges, with a register and assistants, to be established at Allahabad, with a jurisdiction including from the first to the ninth divisions of Regulation I. 1829.

2d. A Sudder Board of Revenue, to consist of two members, a secretary and assistants, to be fixed at the same station, and having a co-extensive jurisdiction with that of the Sudder Adawlut, exercising a general control over every branch of the revenue affairs of those provinces.

3d. A Commissioner of Revenue in each division, exercising the revenue powers at present vested in those officers, but especially employed in superintending and directing the settlements of land revenue.

4th. A Zillah or City Civil and Criminal Judge in each district or city, to hold a monthly sessions of gaol delivery, and vested with a control over the police.

5th. A Register to the Civil Court, being also assistant to the magistrate.

6th. The subordinate tribunals of sudder ameens and moonsiffs.

7th. A Collector of Land Revenue, being also the magistrate of his district.

8th. Sub-collectors and Joint Magistrates where necessary.

9th Tehsildars and subordinate Officers of Revenue and Police, the office of Police Thanadars being discontinued.

104. If the office of superintendent of police shall not be re-established in the Western Provinces (and I consider it to be less necessary there than in the Lower Provinces), the criminal judge of the zillah should prepare and forward to the Western Nizamut Adawlut, for transmission to Government, the half-yearly statements of crimes and police reports hitherto furnished by the superintendents of police.

105. In the Lower Provinces, I would propose the following establishments :

1st. A Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut, to consist of three judges, a register, and assistants.

2d. A Sudder Revenue Board, to consist of two members, a secretary, and assistants.

3d. Four Revenue Commissioners at the cities of Dacca, Patna, Moorshedabad, and Calcutta, exercising the revenue powers now vested in those officers.

4th. A Superintendent of Police.

5th. Zillah or City Criminal Judges, with the same powers and duties as in the Western Provinces, except that they shall not be required to furnish the periodical police police reports and statements of crimes required from the judges of the criminal courts in the Western Provinces.

6th. A register to the Civil Court and assistant to the magistrate.

7th. The subordinate tribunals of sudder ameen and moonsiffs.

8th. A collector of Land Revenue, being also a magistrate of his district, but where, from the state of the police or of the business of the Revenue department, it shall appear necessary, the office of magistrate to be either temporarily or permanently separated from that of collector, or an assistant magistrate appointed, and the magistrates to furnish the superintendent of police with the periodical statements and reports required by that officer for submission to Government.

9th. Police darogahs, and other subordinate police establishments.

106. The union of the offices of collector and magistrate in the Lower Provinces is proposed solely on the grounds of economy, otherwise I should consider it very desirable to keep those offices distinct, for the reasons I have already stated. I think the duty of the magistrates is in most districts more arduous in the Lower than in the Western Provinces, and will often require the undivided attention of the magistrate. That union should not be continued in any district the police of which may fall into disorder, or in which a heavy arrear of business may accumulate in the magistrate's court, as is understood to be at present the case in Jessore.

107. In a financial point of view, the arrangements above suggested will be attended with all the advantages which are expected to result from the scheme of administration which has been suggested by Mr. Mackenzie; it involves a less violent change of system, and so far as the circumstances of the country, and the exigencies of the State will admit, is consistent with the institutions and conformable to the principles by which the government of this country has hitherto been successfully administered, and under which (at least in the permanently-settled provinces) the inhabitants have long enjoyed security in their persons and property, and the Government has secured their gratitude, confidence, and attachment.

24th March 1831.

(Signed) W. BLUNT.

(6.)—MINUTE of Sir C. T. METCALFE, dated 11th April 1831.

THE Letter from Mr. Macnaghten, the secretary to the Governor-general, of the 26th January, conveys his Lordship's sentiments on the contents of the Minute of the 1st October 1830, recorded by Mr. Mackenzie on the proceedings of the Finance Committee.

In offering my opinions on the same subjects, I shall follow the order pursued in Mr. Macnaghten's letter.

On the question of the union or separation of the judicial and revenue branches of the public service, I entertain notions entirely in favour of union. Were I myself to venture on a proposal to new modify our civil administration, I should recommend, as the arrangement in my mind best suited to the character of our native subjects, and the best calculated to promote their happiness, the division of the country into small districts, in each of which an European officer should be superintendent, uniting all authorities in his own person, and having under him native officers for the administration of the district in all branches. Several of these districts to be formed into a division, under the control of a superior officer or commissioner, exercising united authority in all branches, and the commissioners to be subordinate to one general superintending authority at the Presidency. I do not think it necessary to enter into details of argument, because neither do I expect that my proposal could be adopted, nor do I propose to treat a change. I am not an advocate for speculative

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 4.
continued.

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

438 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

speculative changes, but only for such the expediency of which is manifest and undeniable; and I entirely concur in the reluctance expressed by the Right Honourable the Governor-general to the trial of another experiment without previous reference to the home authorities. In avowing, therefore, my opinion in favour of the union of authorities, I do so in order to explain the main principle, to which all my observations on details will be subordinate, and on which I can express my general concurrence in Mr. Mackenzie's Minute, so far as it goes towards that object, without meaning to pledge myself to a concurrence in all its sentiments.

I concur with Mr. Mackenzie and Mr. Hill in advocating the propriety of maintaining the supreme judicial control in the hands of the Government, and I lament that it was ever abandoned. It was a part, and I am inclined to think a good part, of Lord Cornwallis's system of administration. Lord Cornwallis desired that the rights of the State, when in collision with those of individuals, should undergo a judicial investigation, but never intended to make the interests of the state and the public revenue dependent on the arbitrary decision of subordinate servants, having neither experience nor laws for their guidance. The natives of India are accustomed to look up to their rulers as the supreme power to which they can appeal for justice; and our Government, in depriving itself of that character, committed I fear a great error, calculated to lower it in the estimation of its subjects. The utter helplessness of the government which cannot redress the grossest injuries to individuals, if they have been judicially committed, seems to me likely to excite any feeling but that of respect or attachment, while the state struggling in vain for justice before tribunals composed of its servants, deciding according to their own whims and fancies, can only be an object of ridicule. There would be more justification for the abandonment of its control, if there were well-defined laws for the guidance of the judges; but in most countries, originally the highest judicial functions belonged to the highest powers in the State, and the farther a country is removed from perfection in its laws the more expedient the possession of this power seems to be. Where, then, there are no well-defined laws, and the judge often makes the law instead of administering it;—where, moreover, the common law of the country is so little known, or so little attended to, that our judicial tribunals for the most part do not discriminate between actual property in the land and an assignment of Government revenue, two things quite distinct and generally known to be so, except to the functionaries at whose feet the rights, power, and interests of the State have been laid prostrate—in such a state of things, the abandonment by the Government of its right of control over the judicial tribunals, and of its power of protecting the State against injustice, appears to me to have been most unfortunate. I beg leave to add that, while I regret the act, I reverence the spirit which dictated the Regulation of 1801, although thereby the judicial control before maintained by the Government was abandoned, and the revenue of the state for the future made dependent on the pleasure of its servants, and that, in describing the effect of that Regulation, I am far from meaning any disrespect to the many honourable and upright public functionaries who have devoted their talents and labours to judicial duties. I am sensible that the opinions which I entertain on this point are contrary to those that are generally received, and are therefore likely to be misapprehended and impugned. I perceive that I have the misfortune to differ from both the Governor-general and Mr. Blunt on it generally. Mr. Blunt however, I am happy to observe, admits the propriety of reserving power to the Government in cases in which the public revenue is concerned; a sentiment in which, after the preceding observations, I need hardly say that I entirely concur.

The Governor-general is disposed to sanction the union of the superintendence of the revenue and judicial authorities in those provinces where the public demand is yet unadjusted, in which I entirely concur, on the general principle already stated.

His Lordship likewise approves of uniting the powers of magistrates and collectors in those provinces whenever it may be practicable to do so, with reference to the state of business. In this also I concur, and wherever the union is impeded by excess of business, the object object might, I conceive, be best effected by multiplying the number and diminishing the size of districts, rather than by increasing the number of independent officers in each district.

The Governor-general further deems it universally expedient, that the judges should be trained by service in the revenue line, of which there cannot, I conceive, be any doubt.

The union of the offices of tehsildar and thannadar I am happy to see is also approved by his Lordship, as well as the control of magistrates and collectors by commissioners of revenue and police.

The abolition of the existing courts of appeal in the Western Provinces, and the substitution of a Sudder Adawlut, composed of judges who are also to be superior revenue commissioners, seem also to have his Lordship's approbation, and I should be disposed to concur in those arrangements.

The preference which I entertain for individual instead of collective authorities has been before expressed, and need not be repeated in any detail. That would not prevent my concurrence in such arrangements as may seem expedient under a system of administration, in which collective courts and boards are to be maintained.

The addition to the office of civil judge of the duties of the courts of circuit is an arrangement in which I should entirely concur.

The maintenance of village institutions is, in my opinion, an object of the highest importance; and the gradual introduction of trial by jury is, I conceive, worthy of experiment.

That part of Mr. Mackenzie's Minute which reckons on a saving of eleven lacs of rupees per annum from the execution of his scheme, is scarcely I think to be relied on; such prognostications are generally deceitful; and it is impossible to ascertain the expense of any scheme until it has been at work for a considerable time. We find ourselves continually called on to increase our establishments, under every scheme of administration that has been adopted.

The Governor-general proposes, that the union of the offices of collector and magistrate, and of the functionaries subordinate to them—the transfer of the circuit duties from the commissioners to the district and city judges, where necessary for the relief of the former and practicable as to the latter—and the more extended employment of native agency, be adopted without previous reference to the Honourable the Court of Directors, and that the other changes of the existing system proposed in the Letter and Minutes of the Finance Committee be submitted for the consideration and orders of the Honourable Court; in all which I concur.

I now proceed to express my sentiments on the several propositions contained in Mr. Blunt's Minute of the 24th March, following the order in which they occur.

I entirely concur with Mr. Blunt in thinking it necessary that the native judges should not be independent of the control of European superintending authorities, and that therefore the power of hearing and determining appeals ought to be exercised only by European functionaries—I mean the power of final decision. To an intermediate hearing by native judges of appeals from the decisions of inferior native judges I should not object, provided that their judgments were not final, and that the right of appeal to an European judge were maintained.

Although I should not object to the conferring on native judges the power of taking cognizance of all suits in which natives alone are parties below, or even above 5,000 rupees, I nevertheless concur with Mr. Blunt in objecting to the erection of native judges with either civil or criminal jurisdiction over European British subjects, and I would add, or that class calling themselves East-Indians.

This would be less objectionable if the situations of judges in the inferior courts were equally open to Europeans, or natives, or any other class, because then all having equal privileges would be more readily amalgamated in mutual submission, deference, and confidence; but to establish native judges in those courts exclusively, and to place all other classes of

British

(6.) Minute of
Sir C. T. Metcalfe,
11th April 1831.

British subjects, European or East-Indian, under their jurisdiction, would be, I conceive, not only extremely galling to those classes, but the reverse of the natural order of things.

The placing of the administration of justice in the first instance exclusively in the hands of native judges, also seems to me to be inconsistent with the extension to Europeans of the right of settling and holding property anywhere in our dominions, which I consider to be in progress, and to be alike unavoidable and desirable. It is not to be supposed that British subjects, or any other class of Europeans or East-Indian Christians, will willingly submit to the exclusive domination of native judges; and as European settlers multiply, it will assuredly be necessary to supply other courts for jurisdiction over their affairs. I should therefore recommend that British and other European residents, as well as East-Indian Christians of European descent, should either be entirely exempt from the jurisdiction of the native judges, or should have the privilege of transferring suits in which they may be concerned from the court of the native to that of the European judge, unless they prefer submission to the jurisdiction of the native, which might always be at their option, and being optional would be more palatable.

I am also of opinion, that native judges ought not to have jurisdiction over matters in which the public revenue or the rights of the State are concerned.

With these exceptions, I trust that the extended employment of native judges for the affairs of native subjects will be beneficial.

I do not quite agree with Mr. Blunt in thinking it necessary to retain the office of register for the purpose of superintending the native judges. The control over the native judges, and the trial of appeals from their decisions, would, I conceive, be preferably exercised by the European judge on account of his greater experience. The register must often be a young man, more fit to be taught by the native judges than to control them.

But the office of register would probably be very useful in affording relief and aid to the European judge, and under whatever designation the office may be held, it will probably be found necessary to give the judge some assistance for the discharge of some of the duties now performed by the register. I do not, however, contend for the retention of the office of register: its abolition has been admitted as a part of the plan for the extended employment of native judges, and I am not satisfied that its continuance is indispensable.

Appeals from the decisions of moonsiffs might, I conceive, be heard in the first instance by the principal sudder ameen, subject in all cases to a further appeal to the zillah or city judge; but if the principle of having only one appeal be preferable, then by the European judge only.

Appeals from the decisions of sudder ameens and principal sudder ameens, by the zillah or city judge, with a special appeal to the higher court, whether provincial or sudder.

Mr. Blunt strongly advocates the revival of the office of superintendent of police. It does not strike me that this office is a necessary one. I should think that the local commissioners ought to superintend the police more efficiently than an officer exercising a vastly extensive general control. The institution of a separate superintendent of police would place the collectors and magistrates under two superiors, whose orders would be issued without reference to each other, and would necessarily distract the attention and obedience of the subordinate. This would be quite contrary to the system of unity of authority which I advocate; I am not aware that the state of the police has obviously deteriorated since the abolition of the office of superintendent: and if the commissioners of revenue and circuit be relieved from the duties of the circuit, and become commissioners of revenue and police only, they will have more time to devote to the latter department.

If it is to be admitted as undeniable, that the commissioners of revenue and circuit have not rendered the service expected of them, and that consequently the scheme under which they were appointed is so far a failure, I am disposed to ascribe the failure, in a great degree, to the pressing nature of the duties of the circuit, requiring almost exclusive devotion; and and when relieved from those, the commissioners of revenue and police ought, I conceive, to be able to perform their duties efficiently, and the Government will have a right to require it of them.

Should any office, either that of a commissioner or any other, be really overloaded with business which cannot be effectually disposed of by one individual, the proper remedy, I think, would be to diminish the extent of the jurisdiction of that office and bring it within manageable bounds; but not to depart from the principle, be it of union or otherwise, on which the office was founded.

If the principle of union be good, it is no objection to it that an office may be overloaded with business: the number of united offices, in that case, must of course be increased. I, who advocate the union of authority on the ground that it promotes good government, cannot do otherwise than object to disunion, urged on the ground of one person's being insufficient to perform all the duties of a consolidated office. I should say, if that be really the case, relieve him from what he cannot perform, either by giving him assistance in a sufficient number of subordinate functionaries, or by reducing the range of his office within a space over which he can exercise efficient superintendence without extraordinary assistance: those who prefer a division of authority on principle, and judge that the purposes of civil administration are better accomplished by having a separate officer to superintend each department of public business, must of course differ from my opinion.

The Governor-general and Mr. Blunt are both in favour of the union of the offices of civil judge and criminal judge, and I entirely concur in that proposal.

Mr. Blunt approves the union of the offices of collector and magistrate in the Western Provinces, but not in the Lower. The Governor-general appears to recommend it generally; I am of the same opinion with his Lordship, provided always that more business be not laid on one officer than he can accomplish, and that the efficiency which the Government has an undoubted right to expect be exacted from every officer employed.

I do not advocate the union of offices, either solely or principally, on the ground of economy; for although I am of opinion that an union of offices is better calculated to promote economy than their separation, I am not so sanguine as to expect economy in any arrangement that may be adopted. The speculations of the Finance Committee on this point are in my opinion delusive. There is an invariable tendency to increase of expense in our establishments, which seems to be a fatality that cannot be resisted.

I concur with Mr. Blunt in the limitations which he proposed to annex to the employment of native judges in the administration of criminal justice—(62d paragraph of Mr. Blunt's Minute).

I also agree in the sentiments which he expressed (64th paragraph) on the subject of the condition of the thannadars in the Lower Provinces.

It has been proposed to confer civil judicial powers on revenue officers during the progress of the settlement of the land revenue in the Western Provinces, for the purpose of determining all questions involving claims to proprietary rights, and all matters of rent or revenue in which the interest of individuals or of Government are concerned: Mr. Blunt considers this to be quite necessary. I also am of opinion that it is very desirable, as the revenue officers are the most competent, from knowledge and greater facility of acquiring information, to determine such questions: but supposing that all functions are not in principle united in our superintending officers, and that the judicial branch of our administration remains distinct, I agree with Mr. Blunt in the opinion that all individual powers given to magistrates, collectors, commissioners, and Boards ought to be regarded as temporary only, and to cease when the rights of the agricultural classes and of Government shall have been ascertained and recorded.

Both the Governor-General and Mr. Blunt advocate the establishment of a Revenue Board in the Western Provinces. I remain of opinion, that if local superintendence beyond that of the Revenue Commissioners be necessary, it will be more efficiently exercised

(6.) Minute of
Sir C. T. Metcalfe,
11th April 1831.

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 4.
continued.

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

442 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

cised by individuals than by a Board. For the particular purpose of directing and controlling the settlement of the land revenue, special commissioners might, I conceive, be employed with advantage. But I cannot say that I desire the permanent continuance of a Revenue Board in the Western Provinces. If any Board is necessary, one appears to me to be enough. I have before stated that I do not think a Board so efficient as an individual; but it is unnecessary to urge that opinion, as the question is decided otherwise.

Mr. Blunt proposes great changes in the duties and number of local commissioners, founded on his proposal to relieve them from the superintendence of the police as well as of the circuit. I am not prepared to concur in that proposal, nor in the consequent changes. If the commissioners cease to have the superintendence of the police, the magistrates and the collectors ought to remain separate officers, or otherwise the collector and magistrate would be subordinate in his different capacities to different authorities; an arrangement which appears to me to be very undesirable. I greatly prefer the union of authorities, as well in the superior as in the subordinate officer.

On the question of the abolition of the provincial courts I have not thoroughly made up my mind, but am at present disposed to agree with Mr. Blunt and the judges of the Sudder Adawlut, that they ought to be retained in the Lower Provinces, under the system which separates the judicial from the other branches of the administration, at least until it be shown that they can be dispensed with, as eventually I hope they may be. In the Upper Provinces, I should be disposed to abolish the provincial courts, and establish a Sudder Adawlut instead, which should exercise such of the functions now performed by the provincial courts as it might be proper to transfer to a Sudder Adawlut, in preference to the district and city judges. I concur generally in the reasoning of Mr. Bayley and Mr. Blunt, in support of the proposition for having a Sudder Adawlut in the Western Provinces.

On the principle of union which I advocate, I should not object to the judges of the Sudder Adawlut in the Western Provinces being also chief commissioners of revenue; I should indeed support it, as I would every proposition for union of authority. All who are in favour of separation in the several branches of administration must of course be opposed to such an arrangement.

Mr. Blunt declares himself opposed to the introduction of trial by jury into our courts; I should be glad to see the experiment tried. I do not think that it would be desirable at once to give juries of natives the power of final decision in civil and criminal cases, which belong to juries in an English court of law; but it might, I conceive, be useful, if respectable natives were brought to attend our courts with an official character resembling that of a juror, and to give an opinion on the merits of each case, subject to the confirmation or rejection of the judge, until it might be found advisable to advance further and give them greater power. The object which I should principally have in view in recommending the introduction of this institution would be the attraction of greater attachment and inclination towards our Government on the part of our native subjects, by inducing them to take a part as free men in our administration. If the practice would not have that effect, I should scarcely think it worth trial on any other account.

The disaffection at present existing, and noticed both by Mr. Blunt and Mr. Mackenzie, I believe to be universal; but I do not ascribe it to misgovernment, or to any other cause than natural antipathy against foreign conquerors. I do not anticipate much effect in counteracting that feeling from any changes in our administration that we may adopt, or from any thing but time. We are nevertheless bound to do all in our power towards it.

With respect to a permanent settlement, I am an advocate for it wherever it can be effected without a manifest sacrifice of the revenue of the State. Whenever lands are in such an advanced state of cultivation that little more than the present revenue is to be expected from periodical assessments, I see no objection to a permanent settlement with the the real owners of those lands, but think it desirable, as they would then have encouragement to improve their lands for their own exclusive benefit. But where lands are waste, or in a backward state of cultivation, their improvement and advancement may be encouraged by the terms of our periodical settlements until they yield an adequate revenue, and reach that state in which a permanent settlement would be unobjectionable. With respect to periodical settlements, I should be glad to see them made for long periods.

I now advert to the concluding propositions of Mr. Blunt's Minute of the 24th March; on several of which I have already expressed my sentiments in the foregoing remarks. In signifying my assent or dissent on each proposition in the succession in which they are brought together, I beg to be understood as being invariably the advocate of union of powers and individual agency; and whenever I assent to a separation of functions, or the collective instrumentality of several, as doing so merely because they are features of the existing system.

Mr. Blunt proposes for the Western Provinces :—

1st. A Court of Sudder Adawlut. This was also proposed by Mr. Bayley. To this I should assent; conceiving, however, that the abolition or absorption of the provincial courts may be coupled with its establishment.

2d. A Board of Revenue. To this I should be disposed to assent on the footing sanctioned by the opinion of the Governor-general; the judges of the proposed Sudder Adawlut being also chief commissioners of revenue.

3d. A Commissioner of Revenue in each division. There is one at present, but he is also commissioner of police and circuit. The circuit duties being otherwise provided for, I should recommend this officer's being continued as commissioner of revenue and police.

4th. A Civil and Criminal Judge in each district and city, to hold a monthly sessions of goal delivery. In other words, the duties of the circuit commissioner to be transferred to the district and city judges. So far I entirely concur; but the police I should prefer leaving in the hands of the magistrates, under the control of the commissioners; and the latter would furnish the half-yearly reports heretofore transmitted by the superintendent of police, and proposed by Mr. Blunt to be transferred to the criminal judges.

5th. A register to the Civil Court; being also assistant to the magistrate, I do not think it necessary to retain precisely the office of registrar, but both the judge and the magistrate will probably derive benefit from assistants. If however they be different officers, each ought to have a separate assistant; the same assistant cannot, in my opinion, satisfactorily aid two superiors.

6th. Subordinate tribunals of Sudder Ameens and moonsiffs. Agreed.

7th. A collector of Land Revenue, being also the magistrate of his district. Agreed.

8th. Sub-collectors and joint magistrates where necessary. To this I see no objection for temporary purposes; but if the duties of a district should be permanently more than the collector and magistrate with his assistants can perform, I should prefer additional collectors and magistrates. Where there may be deputies, they ought, I conceive, to act in subordination to the collectors and magistrates in both departments, and not as at present with independent powers.

9th. Tehsildars and subordinate officers of Revenue and Police; the office of police thannadar being abolished. I agree.

In the Lower Provinces Mr. Blunt proposes :—

1st. A Sudder Adawlut. This exists at present; and the only difference proposed is a reduction of the number of judges, calculated, I presume, to be feasible in consequence of a diminution of business after the establishment of a similar court in the Western Provinces. I concur.

2d. A Revenue Board, to consist of two members. There is one, at present containing

(6.) Minute of
Sir C. T. Metcalf,
11th April 1831.

IV.

444 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

APPENDIX,
No. 4.
continued.

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

taining three. I concur in the change, and should still more like its being converted into a single commissioner, who might be superintendent of revenue and police in the Lower Provinces.

3d. Four Revenue Commissioners. I should, in preference, adhere to commissioners of revenue and police, in number as many as requisite.

4th. A Superintendent of Police. I prefer commissioners of police in each division, under a chief commissioner or superintendent of revenue and police for the Lower Provinces, instead of a Board of Revenue.

5th. District and City Judges, with civil and criminal jurisdiction and powers, as in the Western Provinces. I concur.

6th. A register to the Civil Court and assistant to the magistrate. My sentiments are the same as those before expressed on the same proposition with regard to the Western Provinces.

7th. Subordinate tribunals of Sudder Ameens and moonsiffs. I concur.

8th. A collector of Land Revenue, to be also magistrate in each district. When necessary, a separate magistrate or assistant magistrate to be provided. I concur. But when additional aid may be permanently required, I would make the new officer collector as well as magistrate of his portion of the district, keeping the powers united in both portions.

9th. Police darogahs and other subordinate police establishment. I concur. Although in the eighth proposition Mr. Blunt proposes the union of the offices of collector and magistrate, he complains in his Minute of the 24th March, and again in that of the 7th April, that he objects to this arrangement in the Lower Provinces. He has admitted it among his propositions solely on the ground of economy. I advocate it on the ground of union of authority, as conducive to efficiency of administration; and all objections to it, founded on excess of business in any instance, I should meet by suggesting the division of the district into portions, with an officer exercising the united functions in each portion; and so with regard to every office in which the union of powers might be objected to on the ground of its causing more business than could be thoroughly executed. To those who dislike the union, and prefer the separation of powers on principle, as right and beneficial in itself, this suggestion would of course be no answer.

The sentiments which I have expressed on Mr. Blunt's propositions are not intended to supersede or affect any concurrence in the opinion entertained by the Right Honourable the Governor-general against the adoption of great changes, generally, without previous reference to the home authorities. To those which his Lordship is disposed to sanction, I have already expressed my assent.

April 11th 1831.

(Signed)

C. T. METCALFE.

(7.)—EXTRACT of a MINUTE by SIR JOHN MALCOLM, Governor of Bombay, dated the 10th November 1830.

Code of Regulations.

107. THE first subject connected with the judicial administration of this Presidency which came under my notice was a proposition of the Sudder Adawlut at Surat, to make a considerable alteration in the code of laws which had been established in 1827, and pointing out inconveniences which in their opinion had resulted from some of its provisions and regulations. Satisfied as I was that the new code of Bombay was a great improvement upon the system of our provincial judicature in India, that it was concise, clear, and singularly free of technicalities, I could neither upon this occasion nor upon any other (and question questions often arose) consent to any modifications or change of its enactments that were not proved to be absolutely necessary; I deemed it also unwise to encumber the code with any forms that could be dispensed with, much less with those minute distinctions and shades of crimes and punishments, necessary perhaps for a society in a more artificial and advanced state, but certainly not for one in the state of that for which we had to legislate. I further thought that enlarging the volume of our laws, and rendering them more difficult to be understood by those for whose benefit they were intended, was in itself an evil. I considered, therefore, the measure proposed as altogether inexpedient. These were the feelings and principles on which my Minute of the 25th March 1828 was written, and I state them in this place to prevent the necessity of recurring again to a subject which came before the Board on many subsequent occasions.

(7.) Minute of
Sir John Malcolm,
10th Nov. 1830.

108. The subject of removing the court of Sudder Adawlut from Surat to Bombay was brought before the Board; many reasons stated in the Minutes recorded at the period the question was discussed, made me adverse to deprive our Northern provinces of an appellant court, and when the Adawlut was established at Bombay, a court of circuit was left at Surat. This was not approved by the Court of Directors, but before their orders were received, a very extensive modification of the judicial system, which gave the power of session judge to those of Guzerat as well as the Deccan, had rendered the court of circuit to the northward unnecessary, part of its duties being executed by the session judge and part by a visiting commissioner.

Removal of the
Sudder Adawlut
from Surat to Bombay.

109. In a Minute forwarded on the contents of a letter from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut to the acting judicial secretary, I recorded my opinion on a proposition by the session judge of the zillah of Ahmednuggur, for dividing Candeish and Ahmednuggur into separate zillahs, and on various important subjects connected with the administration of the zillah of Ahmednuggur.

110. A Ramoosee chief named Omiah, after having with his followers for a considerable period disturbed the tranquillity of the country in the collectorate of Poonah, and evaded every attempt to apprehend him, had submitted himself to the authority of Government, and furnished information and evidence which led to the conviction before the session judge of one of the principal public servants under the collector of Poonah (Dhundio Punt), on charges of corruption and treason. I availed myself of the opportunity furnished by a letter from the acting collector of Poonah, proposing plans for the employment of Omiah, to record at considerable length the grounds on which I deemed it expedient to overlook the past offences of this individual, and endeavoured to secure his service in aid of the police. The conduct of Dhundio Punt's friends, by whom the justice of his sentence was impugned, obliged me repeatedly to place upon record Minutes connected with this subject, the perusal of which will show in how great a degree the public peace has been hazarded by the persevering efforts of these persons.

Proceedings in the case of Omiah.

111. Nujuf Ali Khan, a prince of Persia, of the tribe of Zund (to whom, when compelled to seek refuge at Bombay, from the apprehended designs against him of the reigning King of Persia, an honourable reception had been given by Mr. Duncan), having at this period, when travelling through our territories, put to death one man and wounded another in an affray with some peons of the farmer of land customs, a question arose as to the necessity and policy of subjecting him to be tried for murder in our zillah courts; on which some of my colleagues differed from me in opinion, deeming the case to be of a nature involving considerations of the highest importance, in the decision of which it was desirable a full council should meet; and Mr. Sparrow being unable to attend in consequence of ill health, the chief secretary, Mr. Newnham, was, by virtue of the power vested in me by act of Parliament, called to take a seat in council, for the consideration of this subject only. I had previously circulated a Minute* in which I reviewed the nature of the evidence against this prince, and stated at large my reasons for

Case of Nujuf
Ali Khan.

* Vide Minute, 25th April 1829.

IV.

446 APPENDIX to REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

APPENDIX.

No. 4.

continued.

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

Reductions and modifications in the Civil Administration.

for considering he should not be brought to trial for the crime alleged to have been committed by him; and Mr. Newnham's opinions coinciding with mine on this subject, Nujuf Ali Khan was confined as a state prisoner in the Fort of Tannah, until orders regarding his disposal should be received from the Supreme Government. The measures adopted with regard to this person were afterwards approved of by the Governor-general in Council, and the prince was subsequently sent to Bassorah.

112. The urgent necessity for immediate reduction in the expenses of the Civil Administration of this Government induced me to lay before the Board a scheme of administration in the Judicial and Territorial departments,* which was subsequently, as far as an observance of the principle of not injuring incumbents would admit, carried into execution.

113. Although the proposition was brought forward principally on the grounds of economy, it possessed an advantage which I had long desired to introduce, that of admitting a more extensive employment of natives, and the limitation of the duties of civil servants, in a greater degree than heretofore, to the supervision and control of inferior agents. It provided also a liberal remuneration for high duties by means of consolidation of offices, and the abolition of some inferior appointments.

114. One of the arrangements proposed in this plan was to bring the Southern Mahratta country under regulation, leaving, however, the offices of political agent, principal collector, judge and session judge, under one person, and giving the assistant judge at Darwar the powers of an assistant at a detached station elsewhere: my reasons for proposing this arrangement are fully described in a separate Minute.

115. The grounds upon which the latter arrangement was made have been more than once questioned, but it is a subject on which I am most earnest, as I have stated on record that no change should be made until the opinion of the Court of Directors is known.

116. There is no country subject to Bombay of which the charge is more arduous, or that is better managed, both in its revenue and judicial branches of administration, than the Southern Mahratta territories, and I ascribe this in a great degree to power being much concentrated in the principal collector and political agent. The Southern Mahratta country is in its administration considerably the most economical of any province under the Presidency, and any change would, in my opinion, increase expense without any adequate benefit; on the contrary, I think it would weaken local authority, augment duties, and be injurious to the public interests.

117. A twelvemonth nearly has elapsed since almost all original civil suits were made over to natives, and there have neither been any complaints nor charges of delinquency to throw a stain upon the equity or purity of their proceedings. I am quite satisfied that, if they are liberally paid, and have proper incentives to action in the prospect of honourable rewards, there cannot be the slightest doubt of the complete success of this measure. It is recognized by the higher classes as a boon, and while their pride is gratified by the confidence Government reposes in them, that confidence must aid in producing the virtue and integrity which it anticipates. The lower orders, who are saved by an efficient appellate jurisdiction from fear of injury, must deem it a great relief to have their causes tried near their homes, and without those delays which, added to a journey that occupied weeks, and was sometimes impracticable at an inclement season, were felt and complained of as a great hardship.† The inconvenience was not limited to the parties concerned in suits, but to all the evidences, whose complaints were frequent and just, that they

* Vide Minute, 11th December 1829.

† Several complaints were made by the inhabitants of Bhownagar and Gogo to Government, on the hardship of their attendance at Ahmedabad as witnesses during the rains; the complaints were referred to the judge, whose opinion was, that they must attend.

they were taken from their occupations, and exposed to great fatigue and hazard of health, when compelled to attend on a summons, at a distance often exceeding one hundred miles during the monsoon.

118. The nomination of special judicial commissioners to Guzerat and the Deccan, who receive on their circuit all complaints connected with the administration of justice, must prove an efficient check against abuse, and the Regulations guard against the operation of influence, by providing that, if the local native commissioner has any personal interest in the case, or connexion with the parties, he cannot try it, but must refer it to the English judge, who hears the case himself, or gives it to an assistant.

119. I have before brought the incorrectness of the translation of the Regulations to the notice of Government; and it appears, under the change which has occurred, most urgent that these should be early revised and corrected: they form the only rule by which the native local commissioners can be guided; if there are so many omissions and inaccuracies as I am assured there are, frequent mistakes must occur. Mr. Boradaile is, I believe, engaged in this work; but the other occupations of this public officer can give him personally little leisure, and he should have every aid afforded to him to facilitate him in his labours.

120. In closing my remarks on the judicial administration of the provinces of this Presidency, I cannot refrain from stating my opinion, that it is as purely and efficiently administered as any code can be. I quite coincide with Mr. Anderson, an able judge of the Sudder Adawlut, who, in commenting upon the address of the natives of Bombay to Sir John Grant, observes, "Infallibility can never be obtained; erroneous judgments with us, as with others, will occasionally be formed; but this I do say; that no system that we are acquainted with offers more checks to guard that justice in the end is done, and that wrong is not suffered."

121. The great objects to be sought in every system of judicature are publicity, and that the law by which they are protected and punished should be understood and appreciated by those for whose benefit they are intended. This requires a code to be adapted to the habits, information and knowledge of those for whom it is framed. If we legislate in advance of the community, all will be doubt and confusion.

122. It was in attention to these facts that the bulky Regulations of — were revised, and the short and excellent code of 1827 substituted. It has been translated into the vernacular languages of our provinces; and the proceedings of our courts, from being conducted in the native language, are understood by all who attend them. I have elsewhere expressed an opinion, that in parts of our dominions inhabited or infested by predatory tribes, this system even must be locally modified, in order to effect the great object of all law, the maintenance of the public peace, and the security of life and property. I feel assured, however, that the present system will, in our more settled provinces, be very early sufficiently understood to make it the best that could have been introduced; but we must never forget that we shall owe its success to its simplicity, it being singularly clear of technicalities, and being adapted, as far as the English Government will admit, to the condition and habits of the natives of India. It is so framed as to admit these into a full share of every branch of the administration of the country.

123. From the information I collected, and particularly from a list of trials given me by Mr. Dunlop, session judge at Poona, in which he had, as far as the Bombay Regulations admitted, used native juries, I am perfectly satisfied that in criminal cases this system will be found to further the ends of justice very materially, while it greatly elevates the most respectable inhabitants of the country. The extent to which we have given natives jurisdiction in civil suits has been already noticed, and there is no measure from which more advantage, financial and political, may be anticipated. But all these fair hopes depend in a great degree upon our code being unaltered, and not ever enlarged, except when positive necessity demands; and still more upon the superiors being a class of men to whom, from personal knowledge and established local character, the natives look up, as they do at present,

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 4.
continued.

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

448 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

sent, with respect and affection. They confide implicitly in the justice of their superiors, though they may often believe they are deceived. They also view them as persons who are, from education, long residence in India, and habit, tolerant of their prejudices, and considerate of their usages and religion. They see in them the heads of a system of judicature which, though some of its forms may be at variance with their customs and impressions, is every day becoming more intelligible to them, and has been carefully framed in conformity with their feelings and conditions. This system, as established at this Presidency, has fully met expectation. It may have occurred on some occasions that forms have been neglected, but I am not aware that it has ever been alleged even that it has not proved sufficient to meet every end of justice.

124. That it is susceptible of improvement may be said of every similar institution in the universe; but such improvement can alone be safely made when a necessity arises which absolutely requires it. Any theoretical change will be dangerous, and most of all, one that introduces more conformity with British law, or the employment, in any way associated with the administration of justice in the provinces (beyond cognizance of criminal acts of Europeans), of English judges or English lawyers.

125. I shall not dwell upon the recent events at the Presidency; they are elsewhere fully stated. In my Minute on the subject of the addresses presented to Sir John Grant by the natives of Bombay, I have recorded my opinion of the character* of the inhabitants of this town, and its being completely distinct from that of the population of all the other parts of our territory and provinces. The calumnious and groundless assumptions in the address regarding the desire of the inhabitants of the provinces for the extension of the jurisdiction of the supreme court have been fully exposed; and the address received by me from the natives of the Deccan and Guzerat, which declare their contentment with the actual system and their dread of change, speak, I am assured, the whole sentiments of the whole native population of this Presidency, beyond the precinct of the island of Bombay, within which long usages, their commercial concerns, their knowledge of the English language, their intercourse with Europeans and with Europe, make it as expedient they should be subject to British laws as it would be inexpedient to extend that law beyond its present limits.

126. Much has been written on the subject of an amended system of jurisprudence for India. Those whose local experience has been greatest, have seen the true path of improvement in conceding to the feelings and habits of the natives, and it is upon this principle that such successful changes have been made in the administration of justice at this Presidency; others desire to introduce British law beyond its present limits, and at a moment when the ablest men in England are labouring to revise and reform the law in that country, they would inflict it upon one on which it must, from the language in which it is written, and its multiplied forms and provisions, be unintelligible for at least a century, and where its introduction could prove beneficial to none but those members of the legal profession to whom it opened wide the door of high and profitable employment.

127. It appears by a late communication from the Supreme Government that discussions have taken place between his Lordship in Council and His Majesty's judges of Calcutta, regarding the improvement of the present system, with the object of forming one that will blend blend more than they now are the powers of the supreme court and those of Government. Having seen no particulars of the proposition made, or the reasons by which they are supported, it would be premature to offer any opinion; but as far as the Presidency of Bombay is concerned, I can anticipate no good that could result from such amalgamation that would not be far outweighed by the evils. Collisions might no doubt be avoided, and courts of British law might be disarmed of many feelings that were unfriendly to the local authorities, if English judges and lawyers were admitted to a share in the Judicial branch of administration in the provinces; but their education and their whole turn of mind would be at variance with many parts of the established system, and the changes they would seek must be with a leaning to the extension of the forms and principles of the law they best understood.

* Treating of the character and condition of the inhabitants of Bombay, in a recent letter to Lord William Bentinck I observed: "The character of its inhabitants is essentially different from that of the natives of our provinces. These of the latter, often remaining a few years in Bombay, adopt many of the usages and all the sentiments of the old residents. Government, within the circle of the island, has neither the power of employing them, nor of granting them any particular notice or protection. Their concerns are generally commercial; their disputes regarding them or their property, which consists of houses and lands, are settled by his Majesty's court of justice, which became (as far as any authority over them is recognized) the object of their exclusive attention and respect: circumstances considered, it cannot be otherwise; and it is no doubt desirable that in the principal seaport of the Western India, which is the residence and resort of so many British subjects; his Majesty's court should command that respect and consideration necessary to its functions; but when the effects produced by the exercise of these are injurious to the good administration of external countries, under a totally different form of rule, the subject demands our most serious consideration."

128. They would be slow to admit the value of many of the institutions of the natives, or the inflexibility of their usages; they would judge of the character of the inhabitants of distant provinces by those of the Presidency where they dwelt. All this is natural: men cannot resign, as circumstances require, feelings and opinions imbibed in youth and cherished to age; after a certain period of life, neither languages or knowledge of a novel character are easily attained, and much less when the laborious pursuit of a profession, like that of law, affords not one moment of leisure; notwithstanding these facts, however, the knowledge such persons attained, and the opinions they gave, would have more weight in England with numbers than those of the most experienced public servants in India. They would be more suited to all who were not minutely acquainted with the details of Indian Government and the character of its subjects; but beyond all these results, I must think that the introduction of such persons into the higher branches of the administration would progressively depress and deteriorate the civil service. The reasons which induce me to entertain this opinion are numerous, and to my mind conclusive. I shall state them if ever called upon to examine this subject; in the mean time I can only repeat, that the actual system of jurisprudence established in the provinces of this Presidency works well, that the only changes required in it are to modify, in certain instances, those parts of our code which are borrowed from British law, and are alike offensive and unintelligible to rude and proud classes of men, and that the only measure wanting to allay the alarm, and secure the confidence and content of our subjects in the interior, is to draw a clear and distinct line of separation between the court of Adawlut and that of His Majesty's judges at Bombay. If this is done, and measures are taken effectually to protect the civil Government against attacks calculated to weaken its character and authority, nothing further can be required to secure to the inhabitants of this part of India a provincial judicature, which, in whatever light it may be viewed by English judges or English lawyers, familiarized to another system, has in my opinion no defects that would not be greatly aggravated by any change that would approximate it nearer to British law, or made any serious alteration in the present form of its administration.

129. Much attention has been paid by this Government, before my arrival, to the improvement of the gaols and prison discipline in the capitals of the provinces of this Presidency; some of these were constructed from former buildings, adapted by judicial alterations for the purpose to which they were applied, while several were constructed new on the most approved plans, two (those of Poonah and Rutnagherry) being panopticon; much pains have been taken to render these prisons healthy, and to give work to all who are confined in them; the success which has attended these latter arrangements has been very great. Employment on the road has been almost wholly discontinued; it was found comparatively unprofitable, and diminished the effect of punishment by the liberty of intercourse it gave to prisoners with their friends; besides, it required strong guards to watch them. In-door labour has been greatly increased, and several gaols fully pay their expenses by their manufactures, which, through able and scientific supervision, are frequently superior in quality to any in the market. Independent of such results, prisoners of all classes are compelled to learn useful trades, and must in many instances be reclaimed from idle and vicious life to habits of industry, from their daily instruction and employment.

IV.

APPENDIX,
No. 4.
continued.

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

450: APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

130. I lately proposed, and my colleagues fully concurred in the expediency of the measure, of fixing a large dépôt gaol in the fort of Tanuah, which, from its security, its vicinity to Bombay, and having water-carriage from its gates, is singularly calculated for this purpose. There would be a ready sale for all its produce; and the experience we have of what has been effected at this station with a small number of prisoners, warrants a conclusion, that this dépôt gaol, when complete, and when all its manufactures, particularly its ropewalk,* are established, will produce a revenue instead of being an expense to Government. The calculations upon which this conclusion is made are founded on facts and experience, and cannot therefore be erroneous. The amount laid out in the construction of this gaol, however, was estimated to exceed one lac of rupees; and it was deemed necessary therefore, under the recent order of the court,† to have the sanction of the Court of Directors before the expenditure was incurred; but this will, I trust, be early granted; for besides economical results, it will relieve the gaols of Guzerat, the Deccan, and Southern Concan from prisoners of the most dangerous character, and whose influence in the country where they are now confined, makes it necessary to employ many more of our regular army as gaol guard than can be spared for such duties. The removal of such criminals to the dépôt would make the most salutary impression, as it would be regarded by predatory men, who have ceased to dread a few years' confinement near their native districts and amid their relations, as a species of transportation; and interrupting their intercourse with their connexions for a period of years, it would impair, if it did not destroy, those ties by which such bands of freebooters are united, and become formidable to the peace of the country.

201. The magisterial duties are combined with the territorial, and there are good reasons for their continuing to be so; for under the actual form of the administration, the collector can alone possess full information of the state of the districts subject to his authority, and of the character and condition of their inhabitants. I have, since I came to Bombay, recorded several Minutes on the subject of the police. Many improvements have been made out and are now in progress, in this most essential branch of civil administration. My sentiments upon the police of the Southern Mahratta country are given in my Minute upon the Judicial and Revenue administration of that province, and I have recently recorded my opinion upon what has been effected, and what remains to be done in Guzerat. The restoration of the efficiency of the native police in the Southern Concan has been attended with the happiest result, and the Northern Concan is likely to derive much benefit from the means which are now in progress to effect the same object.

202. The hilly and woody parts of the Provinces of Candeish and the Deccan, inhabited by Bheels and Ramoosées, are and will continue liable to frequent disturbances, as also the same tracts on the eastern part of Guzerat, which are infested by Coblies and other predatory tribes. The establishment of a good police is most difficult, and it has been rendered more so by the extension of our laws in their minutest forms and processes to districts and communities, to whose condition, character, and habits they are not adapted, and whom they often furnish with increased means of evading the punishment of their crimes. This subject has been noticed by me in repeated Minutes. I shall in this place sum up in a general manner what I have recommended, and propose as the best means of establishing a good police through the provinces, subject to this Presidency.

203. The village system should be strictly maintained, or restored where it has decayed; and above all, the patell ought to be well supported, and rendered responsible within his circle. This, in all settled countries where it is practicable, will be found the very foundation

* The experience of two years' trial in the Indian navy has fully established the excellence of the coir rope, when manufactured with the science and care of that furnished by Mr. Renny at Bancoot. The use of this rope is gradually superseding that from England in all running gear and in some instances standing rigging. The saving to Government is very great.

† These orders are, not to expend any amount exceeding Rs. 10,000 without previous sanction, unless on urgent necessity.

dation of all good police, and many sacrifices should be made before it is abandoned, for it is familiar to the people and efficient to the object. Where the inhabitants of a rugged and mountainous part of a country are hereditary plunderers (and this is the case in many parts of the Bombay territories), as great a proportion of them as is required should be employed in preserving the peace, for it is only by giving parts of such predatory communities a stake in the general welfare that we can ever hope to make them real converts to the cause of good order. This system, with liberal encouragement to all who are disposed to cultivate or to change a rude and hazardous course of life for one of honest and peaceful occupation, would gradually reform this class; and that desirable end can be effected by no other means, for success in severe measures, though it may obtain tranquillity for a period, only aggravates, by the distress it causes, and the spirit of revenge it excites, the motives of this race of men to continue in their habits of warfare and plunder.

204. There is one maxim beyond all others that appears to me of importance in the establishment of a good provincial police, which is, the employment of the natives of districts in this duty to the exclusion of strangers. I have treated this part of the subject in many of my Minutes, but particularly in that on the Revenue and Judicial administrations of Guzerat. Much practical experience in this point (I observe in that Minute) enables me to pronounce that, unless we go to great expense and watch every hamlet, the peace of such countries can only be preserved by their own inhabitants. To subdue or to suppress rebellion we must send regular troops, but for police duties we should ever look to the natives of the soil.

The common argument of giving service to robbers and thieves encouraging others, have no weight with me. It is by providing for them honest occupations that they can alone be reformed, and the lead they have taken in predatory courses, when such were prevalent throughout the country, proves that they possess an influence and superiority of character which is calculated to render them, in the hands of those who have talent to use them, the most valuable of all instruments to effect the reform, or repress the excesses, of others. But the fact is, few collectors can spare that time and attention, even when they have sufficient knowledge and energy of character, to institute and manage a good local police; and many of the principal native officers they employ will always be adverse to the establishment of any influence in the districts except their own; and if they practice any abuses, they will particularly dislike the employment of persons who, from being natives of the district and having many relations and connexions in it, must possess the fullest information of their proceedings.

205. I was pleased, however, to find among the most respectable native revenue servants that I consulted, several whose sentiments were very decided upon this subject. Nurroba, super-zamavisdar of Koorund, gave me a sensible paper on the police, in which he states the great aid which might be derived from employing the Melhwassie chiefs and natives of the pergunnahs in that branch.

206. "A considerable body of police horse is employed in the Ahmedabad and Kaira collectorates, which are divided into pagas or small parties commanded by jemadars. I saw and heard sufficient of this establishment to satisfy me it was far from efficient. The men were chiefly borgeers, mounted on horses not belonging to themselves; and from some inquiries I made, I must think the horses are the property of natives in the public service, or of their connexions or dependents: whether this was the case or not, the horse-men, like the foot, were generally inhabitants of towns, and unconnected with the districts in which they were employed. This might be a recommendation to an efficient military body of men, but for maintaining an internal police of such countries as I have described, it would be far preferable that in districts which were the residence of Melhwassie chiefs, and possessed by coolies, such as the chawuh and the sabur khantu, the horse employed in them should be natives of the districts."

207. To give practical effect to these views, which have been formed after a long experience of the feelings and habits of similar tribes in Central India, I would propose that the principal collector at Ahmedabad be directed to fill up vacancies in this portion of his police

(7.) Minute of
Sir John Malcolm,
10th Nov. 1830.

IV.

APPENDIX,

No. 4.

continued.

Papers respecting
Alterations of
System
in the Judicial
Department.

452 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

police by men of the class to which I have alluded, if past offences are not deemed a bar to such employment, and these men are invited by pardon and forbearance to reform. I have little doubt that, satisfied as they are now of the strength of our rule, we should early benefit from their services. This measure may be gradually introduced, and the situation of jemadars, when opportunities offer, be given to thakoors (chiefs), or their relations, many of whom are enterprising characters and excellent horsemen. Were this system carefully pursued, and encouragement and support given to the Melhwassies to enter the service, success would, in my opinion, be certain. They should at first be employed in circles within a moderate distance of their native villages.

208. "The change in our police system appeared to me, from local observation, peculiarly required in protecting the peace of the frontier pergunnahs of Berventy, Morassa, Nerefore, and Balaninore, to the north-east of Veerungona and Shotten, on the western frontier of Guzerat.

209. "The chief impediment to such a plan would be found in occasional deviation from the strict letter of the Regulations, but these would be treated with indulgence, and knowledge would soon correct them. The district police would in many cases be under detached assistants, who would soon find the great advantage in having it formed of the adherents and connexions of the Melhwassie chiefs; but where it could be done, the charge of the peace of the districts should be committed to the chiefs themselves."

210. "The thakoor of Gorassum, formerly a most troublesome Melhwassie chief,* has now an extensive range of country under his charge, and every inquiry leads me to believe a far better police was maintained in it than any of the neighbouring districts. There can be no doubt that when natives are qualified by personal influence and character, and when they are animated and supported by the regard and confidence of their superiors, they can much better direct and superintend the police of their native country than any European officer; this applies to every part of our territories. In no city is our civil government better established than at Surat, yet every person who knows the facts is satisfied that Ardaser Bahadur,† who has been recently honoured and rewarded by Government, conducts the duties of the police with an influence and knowledge, and consequently with an efficiency, far beyond what could be expected from the most active and zealous European agency."

211. The police of the provinces, situated like those I have described, will never be complete until there is some modification in its administration.

212. The collector's powers as a magistrate have been recently increased, as well as those of his first assistant, and of the kamavisdars, as native managers of districts; but much remains to be done ere we can effect the object in such communities as are subject to our rule. The end of all systems of justice is the decrease, if not the suppression, of crime; at present, the task of seizing the most notorious criminals is easy compared to that of proving their guilt according to the forms and principles of our courts of justice; there is seldom that full evidence they require, and the consequence is, the annual discharge of well-known plunderers to recommence their career of guilt, and to take ample vengeance on those whom they suspect of having aided in their apprehension. If our laws are not modified to meet this great evil, it can alone be mitigated by a change in the executive branch of the police in those provinces that are inhabited by, or subject to the inroad of predatory tribes.

213. The duties of a collector are too heavy to admit of his giving the police of such countries that personal attention which they require, and the changes on promotion and other causes prevent the assistants giving efficient aid to him in a branch which particularly demands constant residence in disturbed and often unhealthy districts, jungles, &c.; add to this

* I made this chief a present at a crowded durbar, and took occasion to express to him personally the great satisfaction his conduct and the police had given Government.

† I had great satisfaction in conferring personally, and with every ceremony that could gratify his pride, a grant of land from Government on this distinguished native, who was at the same time honoured with the title of Bahadur and a gold medal.

this what I have stated, that the Regulations, which are found no serious bar to the establishment of a good police in our well cultivated and tranquil provinces, present obstacles that are almost insurmountable to its establishment amid mountains and jungles inhabited by races of rude and uncivilized men. We need not be surprised, until some change is made, either at the number of crimes, or that hardly one year should pass without our being compelled to employ part of our regular army in suppressing bodies irresistible by the civil power.

214. I have elsewhere stated my sentiments on the subject of an improved system of magistracy,* but limiting myself to the actual condition of this Presidency, I can only state that had I remained at Bombay, it was my intention to have proposed that magisterial power to a limited extent should be given to military officers, acting under the collectors and magistrates in command of revenue corps or detachment of regular troops, and stationed in districts that are inhabited or disturbed by predatory classes; a measure from which I am satisfied the greatest benefits to the public peace would result.

* Vide Political History of India.

For a reference to further PAPERS connected with these discussions,
See the LIST of APPENDIX, No. IV.

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.

454

APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments
of the Three
Presidencies.

APPENDIX, No. 5.

STATEMENTS showing the EXTENT and OPERATIONS of the JUDICIAL ESTABLISHMENTS of the Three PRESIDENCIES.

1.—STATEMENT showing the various TRIBUNALS established in the Provinces of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay, for the ADMINISTRATION of JUSTICE, under the REGULATIONS as they stood in the Year 1813, and in the Year 1829, after the Appointment of COMMISSIONERS of REVENUE and CIRCUIT; together with a SUMMARY of the JURISDICTION exercised by the different Classes of TRIBUNALS.

BENGAL, 1813.

Courts.	Salary per Annum.	Remarks.
Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut :	Rupees.
Chief Judge	55,000
Puisne Judge	55,000
Ditto	55,000
Acting ditto	55,000
Acting ditto	12,000	This is in addition to his salary of 35,000 rupees per annum as Third Judge of the Provincial Court for Calcutta.
Six Provincial Courts.
Calcutta :
First Judge	45,000
Second Judge	40,000
Third Judge	35,000
Patna :
First Judge	45,000
Second Judge	40,000
Third Judge	35,000
Dacca :
First Judge	45,000
Second Judge	40,000
Third Judge	35,000
Moorshedabad :
First Judge	50,000
Second Judge	40,000
Third Judge	35,000
Barcilly :
First Judge	50,000
Second Judge	45,000
Third Judge	40,000
Benares :
First Judge	45,000
Second Judge	40,000
Third Judge	35,000

IV.—JUDICIAL.

455

IV. APPENDIX, No. 5. continued.

(1.) Statement of Tribunals
established in Bengal, Madras,
and Bombay, for
the Administration
of Justice.

Zillah and City Courts.	Salary per Annum.	Zillah and City Courts.	Salary per Annum.
	Rupees.		Rupees.
Benares City :		Purneah :
Judge and Magistrate ..	32,300	Judge and Magistrate ..	28,000
Assistant ditto	12,000	Assistant ditto	12,000
Register	6,000	Register	6,000
Dacca City :		Rajeshahye :
Judge and Magistrate ..	30,000	Judge and Magistrate ..	30,000
Register	6,000	Assistant Judge	12,000
Moorshedabad City and Zillah :		Register	6,000
Judge and Magistrate ..	30,000	Rungpore :
Assistant Judge	12,000	Judge and Magistrate ..	26,000
Register	6,000	Register	6,000
Patna City :		Sylhet :
Judge and Magistrate ..	30,000	Judge and Magistrate ..	24,000
Assistant	12,000	Register	6,000
Register	6,000	Tipperah :
Backergunge Zillah :		Judge and Magistrate ..	28,000
Judge and Magistrate ..	24,000	Register	6,000
Register	6,000	Twenty-four Pergunnahs :
Beerbhoom :		Judge and Magistrate ..	30,000
Judge and Magistrate ..	28,000	Assistant Judge	12,000
Register	6,000	Behar :
Burdwan :		Judge and Magistrate ..	30,000
Judge and Magistrate ..	30,000	Register	6,000
Assistant ditto	12,000	Bhaugulpore :
Register	6,000	Judge and Magistrate ..	25,000
Chittagong :		Register	6,000
Judge and Magistrate ..	24,000	Ramghur :
Register	6,000	Judge and Magistrate ..	24,000
Dacca Jelalpoore :		Register	6,000
Judge and Magistrate ..	27,000	Sarun :
Register	6,000	Judge and Magistrate ..	30,000
Dinapore :		Register	6,000
Judge and Magistrate ..	30,000	Shahabad :
Register	6,000	Judge and Magistrate ..	28,000
Hooghly Zillah Court :		Register	6,000
Judge and Magistrate ..	30,000	Tirhoot :
Register	6,000	Judge and Magistrate ..	28,000
Jessore :		Assistant Judge	12,000
Judge and Magistrate ..	26,000	Register	6,000
Assistant ditto	12,000	Midnapore :
Register	6,000	Judge and Magistrate ..	29,000
Jungle Mehals :		Register	6,000
Judge and Magistrate ..	28,000	Juanpore :
Register	6,000	Judge and Magistrate ..	28,000
Mymensing :		Register	6,000
Judge and Magistrate ..	26,000	Mirzapore :
Register	6,000	Judge and Magistrate ..	30,000
Nuddea :		Register	6,000
Judge and Magistrate ..	30,000	Allahabad :
Assistant ditto	12,000	Judge and Magistrate ..	32,000
Register	6,000	Register	6,000

iv. 3 M 2

(continued..)

IV.
APPENDIX.
No. 5.
continued.

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments
of the Three
Presidencies.

456 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

Zillah and City Courts.	Salary per Annum.	Zillah and City Courts.	Salary per Annum.
	Rupees.		Rupees.
Bareilly :		Agra :
Judge and Magistrate	32,000	Judge and Magistrate	32,000
Register	6,000	Register	6,000
Cawnpore :		Allyghur :
Judge and Magistrate	32,000	Judge and Magistrate	33,440
Register	6,000	Register	6,260
Etawah :		Bundlecund :
Judge and Magistrate	32,000	Judge and Magistrate	32,000
Register	6,000	Register	6,000
Furruckabad :		Cuttack :
Judge and Magistrate	32,000	Judge and Magistrate	28,000
Register	6,000	Register	6,000
Goruckpore :		Meerut :
Judge and Magistrate	32,000	Judge and Magistrate	33,440
Assistant ditto	12,000	Register	6,260
Register	6,000
Noradabad :		Seharunpore :
Judge and Magistrate	32,000	Magistrate	18,000
Register	6,000

In 1812-13 there were 95 Sudder Ameens, 89 of whom, as law officers, received a fixed salary of rupees 720 to 1,200 per annum. The remaining six received a fix salary of rupees 840 per annum. Both classes received fees in the same manner as the Moonsiffs.

The number of Moonsiffs was not restricted; they received no fixed salary, but were entitled to a fee of one anna per rupee on the amount in money or value of personal property the subject of the suit.

BENGAL, 1829.

Courts.	Salary per Annum.	Remarks.
Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut :	Sicca Rupees.
Chief Judge	63,000	5,000 extra allowance.
Puisne ditto	55,000
Ditto	55,000
Ditto	55,000
Ditto	55,000
Six Provincial Courts :
Calcutta :
First Judge	34,447.8	This was the salary fixed in 1829
Second ditto	48,000	for future Judges of the Pro-
Third ditto	35,000	vincial Courts; but individual allowances were not immediately reduced to that standard.

(continued.)

IV.—JUDICIAL.

457

IV.
APPENDIX.
No. 5.
continued.(1.) Statement of Tribunals
established in Bengal, Madras,
and Bombay, for
the Administration
of Justice.

Courts.	Salary per Annum.	Remarks.
Dacca :	Sicca Rupees.
First Judge	40,000
Second ditto	35,000
Moorshedabad :
First Judge	45,000
Second ditto	35,000
Patna :
First Judge	45,000
Second ditto	35,000
Benares :
First Judge	45,000
Second ditto	35,021. 5
Third ditto	35,021. 5
Bareilly :
First Judge	48,226. 8
Second ditto	43,959. 6

COMMISSIONERS OF REVENUE AND CIRCUIT.

Division.	Salaries.	Remarks.
	Rupees.
Meerut	42,000	The salary of Commissioners of Revenue and Circuit for all future appointments was fixed at Sonaut rupees 42,000 per annum, or Sicca rupees 40,189.
Agra	40,189
Furruckabad	40,189
Moradabad	40,189
Bareilly	40,189	Including rupees 250 per month personal allowance.
Humeerpore	40,189
Allahabad	40,189
Benares	42,868
Goruckpore	40,189	The office was held by the agent on the N. E. frontier.
Sarun	50,000
Patna	40,189
Bhagulpore	42,000
Bhaulea	40,189
Moorshedabad	45,000
Dacca	42,000
Chittagong	43,959. 6
Assam	—
Allipore	42,870. 10
Cuttack	45,318. 12
Bardwan	40,189

(continued.)

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

458 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments
of the Three
Presidencies.

Zillah and City Courts.	Area.	Population in 1822.	Salaries.	Remarks.
L. P.	Square Miles.		Rupees.
Dacca City	1,870	512,385
Judge and Magistrate	28,000
Register	8,400
Moorshedabad	1,870	762,690
Judge and Magistrate	28,000
Register	7,200
Patna City	667	255,795
Judge and Magistrate	28,000
Register	8,400
Backergunge	2,780	686,640
Judge and Magistrate	24,000
Register	8,400
Beerbhoom	3,870	1,267,065
Judge and Magistrate	28,000
Register	8,400
Burdwan	2,000	1,187,580
Judge	28,000
Magistrate	19,200
First Register	10,200
Chittagong	2,980	700,800
Judge	28,000
Magistrate	19,200
Register	7,200
Dacca Jelalpoore	2,585	588,375
Judge and Magistrate	27,000
Dinagapore	5,920	2,341,420
Judge and Magistrate	28,000
Register and Joint Magistrate at Malda	12,000
Hooghley	2,260	1,239,150
Judge and Magistrate	28,000
Register	8,400
Jessore	5,180	1,183,590
Judge	24,000
Register	7,200
Jungle Mehals	6,990	1,304,740
Judge	28,000
Magistrate	19,000
Register	7,000	Moiety chargeable to the Revenue De- partment.
Mymensing	6,998	1,454,670
Judge and Magistrate	26,000
Register and Joint Magistrate at Sherepore	12,000

(continued..)

IV.—JUDICIAL.

459

IV. APPENDIX, No. 5. continued.

(1.) Statement of Tribunals
established in Bengal, Madras,
and Bombay, for
the Administration
of Justice.

Zillah and City Courts.	Area.	Population in 1822.	Salaries.	Remarks.
	Square Miles.		Rupees.
Nuddea	3,105	1,187,160
Judge	28,000
Magistrate	19,200
Register	7,200
Purnea	7,460	1,362,165
Judge	28,000
Magistrate	19,200
Register	7,200
Rajeshye	3,950	4,087,155
Judge and Magistrate	28,000
Register and Joint Magistrate at Buggora	12,000
Rungpore	7,856	1,340,350
Judge and Magistrate	28,706
Register	7,200
Sylhet	3,532	1,083,720
Judge	24,000
Collector and Magistrate	28,706
Tipperah	6,830	1,372,260
Judge and Magistrate	28,000
Register and Joint Magistrate at Macolly	12,000
Register	7,200
Suburbs of Calcutta	1,105	360,360
Dewanny Judge and Magistrate and Superintendent of Allipore gaol	28,000
Register	9,600
Twenty-four Pergunnahs	3,610	599,595
Judge and Magistrate	24,000
Joint Magistrate at Bhaugundee	6,000
Additional Register	9,600
Echar	5,235	1,340,610
Magistrate	24,000
Register	7,200
Bhaugulpore	7,270	797,790
Judge and Magistrate	28,000
First Register	12,000
Second ditto	7,200
Ramghur	22,430	2,252,985
Magistrate	36,000
Assistant ditto	12,000
Sarun	5,760	1,464,075
Judge and Magistrate	28,000
Register	8,400

.. Rupees 1,000 per month charged to the Revenue Department.

(continued..)

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 3.
continued.

460 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments
of the Three
Presidencies.

Zillah and City Courts.	Area.	Population in 1822.	Salaries.	Remarks.
	Square Miles.		Rupees.
Shahabad	4,650	908,850
Judge and Magistrate	28,000
Register	7,200
Tirhoot	7,732	1,697,700
Judge	28,000
Magistrate	19,200
Register	8,400
Midnapore	8,260	1,914,060
Judge and Magistrate	28,000
Register and Joint Magistrate at Nugwan	12,000
Cuttack, C. D.
Judge and Magistrate	28,000
Register	7,200
Cuttack, S. D.	9,040	1,984,620
Magistrate	36,000	.. Rupees 2,000 per month are charge- able to the Reve- nue Department.
Cuttack, N. D.
Joint Magistrate	12,000
W. P.		Population in 1826.
Benares City	350
Judge	28,706
Magistrate	18,372
Register	6,889
Ghazeepore	2,850
Judge and Magistrate	28,706
Register and Assistant	8,400
Juanpore	1,820
Judge and Magistrate		28,706
Register and Joint Magistrate at Azimghur		11,482
Second ditto (vacant)		8,400
Mirzapore	3,650
Judge and Magistrate		28,706
Register		6,889
Allahabad	2,650
Judge		28,706
Register		8,400
Ditto		6,889
Bareilly	6,900
Judge and Magistrate		28,706
Register and Joint Magistrate at Juanpore		11,482
Second Register		8,400

(continued..)

IV.—JUDICIAL.

461

IV. APPENDIX, No. 5. continued.

(1.) Statement of Tribunals
established in Bengal, Madras,
and Bombay, for
the Administration
of Justice.

Zillah and City Courts.					Area.	Population in 1826.	Salaries.	Remarks.
					Square Miles.		Rupees.
Cawnpore	2,650
Judge	28,706
Magistrate	18,372
Register	8,400
Etawah	3,450
Judge and Magistrate	30,000
Joint Magistrate at Etawah	19,200	Rs. 1,066. 10. 8. per month charge- able to the Reve- nue Department.
Ditto at Bilah	25,200	Rs. 1,400 per month chargeable to the Revenue De- partment.
Furruckabad	1,850
Judge and Magistrate	28,706
Register and Assistant	8,038
Goruckpore	9,520
Judge	28,706
Magistrate	24,113
Register	8,400
Moradabad	5,800	The total amount of the Popula- tion for the Western Provinces is estimated by Mr. Ewer, in his Police Re- port for 1826, at 32,206,806
Judge and Magistrate		28,706
Collector and Joint Magistrate		12,056
N. D. Moradabad		8,038
Additional Register
Agra	3,500
Judge and Magistrate		30,000
Register		6,889
Allyghur	3,400
Judge and Magistrate		24,113
Register		8,038
Bundelcund, S. D.	4,680
Judge and Magistrate			30,000
Register		8,400
Bundelcund, N. D.
Judge and Magistrate			30,000
Register		8,400
Meerut	2,250
Judge and Magistrate	30,000
Register and Joint Magistrate at
Bolundshahur	18,872
Additional Register	8,038
Seharunpore	3,800
Judge and Magistrate	28,706
Joint Magistrate at Mozuffumug- gur	6,889
Register	6,889

iv. 3 N

Sudder Ameens.

To each zillah court is attached a molovee and pundit. The molovee receives 1,200 rupees per annum; the pundit 720 rupees. By virtue of their offices they are sudder ameens, and in that capacity receive a further sum of 1,200 rupees per annum. When the sudder ameen is not a molovee or pundit to the court, his salary is about 1,680 rupees per annum. There appear to be 162 sudder ameens, allowing of an allotment of three in the limits of each of twenty-two of the zillah and city courts, and of four in each of the twenty-four others.

Moonsiffs.

There are 849 thannahs. By Regulation XXIII. of 1814, the judges of the several zillahs and cities are empowered, subject to the approval of the provincial court, to nominate an establishment of moonsiffs, whose local jurisdictions shall correspond exactly with those of the thannahs: where circumstances may render it expedient, two or more police jurisdictions may be included within that of one moonsiff. Moonsiffs are compensated for their trouble in the trial of such suits as may be referred to them by the full value of the stamp paper on which the plaint may have been written, which, if the sum claimed does not exceed sixteen rupees, is one rupee; if above sixteen, and not exceeding thirty-two, is two rupees; if above thirty-two, and not exceeding sixty-four, is four rupees; if above sixty-four, and not exceeding 150, is eight rupees.

The moonsiffs are so stationed as to be generally accessible within the extreme distance of ten miles.

SUMMARY of the JURISDICTION of the different TRIBUNALS in 1829.

The Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut

Is authorized to take cognizance of all matters relating to the administration of Criminal Justice and Police:

Is empowered to grant remission or mitigation of punishment in all cases where they may deem the futwah of the law officers unduly severe.

No sentence of death, transportation, or perpetual imprisonment, is to be carried into execution without a previous revision of the trial by this court.

All cases in which the judges may differ from their law officers are referred for the orders of the sudder court.

They may call for and revise the proceedings of any of the courts, and may suspend from office the judges of the provincial and zillah courts.

In civil cases they may direct suits for property exceeding the value of £5,000 to be tried originally before them, but their jurisdiction is chiefly appellate.

Their decision is final in all cases, unless the decree appealed against is for a larger value than £5,000 in which case an appeal lies to the King in Council.

They may admit second or special appeals from the inferior courts, in any case where the judgment may appear to be inconsistent with any established judicial precedent, or with any Regulation in force, or with the Hindu or Mahomedan law, or with any other law or usage which may be applicable to the case, or where the judgment may involve some point of general interest not before decided by the courts.

Their construction of the Regulations is final.

The six Provincial Courts of Appeal.

Suits exceeding 5,000 rupees in value are tried in these courts, unless the plaintiff shall prefer bringing his case before the zillah judge, which he may do if the value does not exceed 10,000 rupees.

Their decisions are final in appeals from the zillah courts, unless a special appeal shall be allowed on any of the grounds above noticed.

These courts have now no criminal jurisdiction.

Commissioners

Commissioners of Revenue and Circuit.

The direction and control of the magistrates and police, and of all the revenue officers, is vested in them.

They hold the sessions of gaol delivery at the different stations of the zillah and city magistrates, which are directed to be held at least twice in each year.

Zillah and City Judges and Magistrates.

As magistrates they have the immediate charge of the police, and are empowered to take cognizance of all offences not of an aggravated character, including affrays, thefts, and burglaries; and to punish, as the rules prescribe, to the extent of two years' imprisonment, and corporal punishment not exceeding thirty rattans, and fine.

Persons charged with more heinous offences are by them committed for trial by the commissioner of circuit.

They are required to visit the gaols at least once every week, and to redress all well-founded complaints of ill-treatment.

They are empowered to try original suits to the value of 10,000 rupees.

They decide on appeals from their registers (when the latter are not specially empowered, in which case the appeal lies to the provincial court), and from the sudder ameens and moonsiffs, but they may refer appeals from moonsiffs to the sudder ameens.

Registers and Joint Magistrates.

When so specially empowered, registers exercise most of the functions of the magistracy in some specified portion of a district.

They may be authorized to decide causes exceeding 500 rupees in value.

Registers.

Judges may refer for their decision suits not exceeding 500 rupees in value.

Separate Magistrates.

Where these officers exist, the magisterial duties are transferred to them from the zillah judges.

Sudder Ameens.

Magistrates may refer to them for trial all complaints of abusive language, calumny, inconsiderable assaults or affrays, or the like, and charges of petty thefts.

In the first class of cases, the ameens may sentence the persons convicted to fifteen days' imprisonment, with fine not exceeding fifty rupees, commutable for fifteen days' more imprisonment.

In cases of petty theft, the punishment may extend to thirty rattans, and a month's imprisonment.

Suits to the value of 1,000 rupees may be referred to them for trial.

Appeals from the decisions of moonsiffs may also be referred to them.

Moonsiffs.

May receive and try suits not exceeding in value 150 rupees.

Sudder ameens and moonsiffs are prohibited from taking cognizance of any suit in which a British subject, European, foreigner, or American, may be a party.

Note.—In Bengal the collectors of revenue are empowered to hear, investigate, and determine by summary process such suits, claims, and demands of rent or arrears between landholders, farmers of land, and their under-tenants, &c. as may be referred to them; but such decisions may be contested by a regular suit in any of the courts.

In some instances the collectors and their assistants are vested with magisterial authority; but this is an exception to the general rule.

(1.) Statement of Tribunals
established in Bengal, Madras,
and Bombay, for
the Administration
of Justice.

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments
of the Three
Presidencies.

464 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

MADRAS, 1813.

Courts.	Salaries.	Remarks.	Zillah Courts.	Salaries.	Remarks.
Sudder and Foujdarry	Pagodas.		Vizagapatam :	Pagodas.
Adawlut :			Judge and Magis-
Chief Judge ..	No salary	Was a member Council.	trate	8,000
	put down.		Register	1,800
Senior Puisne			Ganjam :
Judge	14,000		Judge and Magis-
Junior ditto ditto	14,000		trate	8,000
			Register	1,800
Provincial :			Madura :
Northern Division :			Judge and Magis-
First Judge	12,000		trate	8,000
Second ditto	11,000		Assistant Judge ..	4,800
Third ditto	10,000		Register	1,800
Centre Division :			Salem :
First Judge	12,000		Judge and Magis-
Second ditto	11,000		trate	8,000
Third ditto	10,000		Register	1,800
Southern Division :			Dharapooram :
First Judge	12,000		Judge and Magis-
Second ditto	11,000		trate	8,000
Third ditto	10,000		Register	1,800
Western Division :			Chittoor :
First Judge	12,000		Judge and Magis-
Second ditto	11,000		trate	8,000
Third ditto	10,000		Register	1,800
ZILLAH COURTS.			Canara :
Chingleput :			Judge and Magis-
Judge and Magis-			trate	8,000
trate	8,000		Register	1,800
Register	1,800		Verdachelum :
Masulipatam :			Judge and Magis-
Judge and Magis-			trate	8,000
trate	8,000		Register	1,800
Register	1,800		Tinnevelly :
Rajahmundry :			Judge and Magis-
Judge and Magis-			trate	8,000
trate	8,000		Register	1,800
Register	1,800		Combaconum :
Nellore :			Judge and Magis-
Judge and Magis-			trate	8,000
trate	8,000		Assistant Judge ..	4,800
Register	1,800		Register	1,800
			Trichinopoly :
			Judge and Magistrate	8,000
			Register	1,800

IV.—JUDICIAL.

165

IV. APPENDIX, No. 5 continued.

(1.) Statement of Tribunals
established in Bengal, Madras,
and Bombay, for
the Administration
of Justice.

Zillah Courts.	Salaries.	Remarks.	Zillah Courts.	Salaries.	Remarks.
Malabar, North:	Pagodas.		Cuddapah:	Pagodas.
Judge and Magistrate	8,000		Judge and Magistrate	8,000
Register	1,800		Register	1,800
Malabar, South:			Seringapatam:
Judge and Magistrate	8,000		Judge and Magistrate	4,800
Register	1,800		Register	1,800
Cochin:			39 Sudder Ameens		Paid by Fees.
Judge and Magistrate	4,800				Salary as Law officers:
					Pag. 540, or Rs. 1,890,
					Mahomedan.
					Pag. 480, or Rs. 1,680,
					Hindu.
Bellary:			Moonsiffs		No fixed number.
Judge and Magistrate	8,000				Paid by Fees.
Register	1,800

MADRAS, 1828-29.

Courts.	Area.	Population.	Salaries.	Remarks.
Sudder and Foujdarry Adawlut:			Rupces.
First Judge	49,000
Second ditto	49,000
Third ditto	49,000
Provincial Courts:
Northern Division:
Acting First Judge	42,000
Acting Second ditto	38,000
Acting Third ditto	35,000
Centre Division:
First Judge	42,000
Second ditto	38,000
Third ditto	35,000
Southern Division:
First Judge	42,000
Second ditto	38,000
Third ditto	35,000
Western Division:
First Judge	42,000
Second ditto	38,000
Third ditto	35,000

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments
of the Three
Presidencies.

466 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

ZILLAH COURTS.	Area.	Population.	Salaries.	Remarks.
			Rupees.
Chicacole	21,700	1,104,585	28,000
Judge and Criminal Judge	6,300
Register
*Masulipatam	11,050	1,268,157	28,000
Judge and Criminal Judge	6,300
Register (vacant)
Nellore	7,930	439,467	28,000
Judge and Criminal Judge	6,300
Register
Guntoor	4,960	454,754	28,000
Judge and Criminal Judge	6,300
Register
Bellary	11,290	927,857	28,000
Judge and Criminal Judge	6,300
Register
*Cuddapah	12,970	1,094,460	28,000
Judge and Criminal Judge	6,300
Register
Chingleput	818,149	28,000
Judge and Criminal Judge	6,300
Register
Combaconum	7,000	1,382,646	28,000
Judge and Criminal Judge	6,300
Register
*Madura	16,400	1,353,153	28,000
Judge and Criminal Judge	6,300
Register
*Salem	16,480	1,714,184	28,000
Judge and Criminal Judge	6,300
Register
*Canara	7,720	657,594	28,000
Judge and Criminal Judge	16,800
Assistant Judge	6,300
Register
Chettoor	892,292	28,000
Judge and Criminal Judge	6,300
Register
*Malabar	6,060	907,575	28,000
Judge and Criminal Judge	6,300
Register

* In each of the districts so marked there is an Auxiliary Court, with nearly all the powers of a Zillah Court, that in fact there are two courts in each of them.

AUXILIARY COURTS.	Area.	Population.	Salaries.	Remarks.
			Rupees.
Masulipatam:
Assistant Judge, Joint Criminal Judge	16,800
Cumbum (Cuddapah):
Assistant Judge, Joint Criminal Judge	16,800
Tinnevelly:
Assistant Judge, Joint Criminal Judge	16,800
Salem:
Assistant Judge, Joint Criminal Judge	16,800
Canara:
Assistant Judge, Joint Criminal Judge	16,800
Malabar:
Assistant Judge, Joint Criminal Judge	16,800
Colligole:
Native Judge	6,000
18 Collectors and Magistrates	39,450
13 Sub-Collectors, or Assistants to Magistrates	14,000
166 Tehsildars, from	840 a' 2,100
30 Sudder Ameens	Paid by Fees	Salary as Law Officers: Rs. 2,540 Mahomedan. Rs. 1,680 Hindu. With Fees of one anna per rupee on suits instituted before them, as in the case of the Sudder Ameens.
95 Moonsiffs	840

(1.) Statement of Tribunals established in Bengal, Madras, and Bombay, for the Administration of Justice.

SUMMARY of the JURISDICTION of the different TRIBUNALS.

Before the year 1816 the Madras judicial arrangements were modelled on those of Bengal, and in the higher branches the system has not been materially changed.

The Sudder Dewanny and Foujdarry Adawlut.

The chief civil and criminal court, with the same jurisdiction as the Sudder Court at Calcutta; but suits of any amount may be appealed to the King in Council.

The Four Provincial Courts,

May try such original suits as are referred to them by the Sudder Court, but, as in Bengal, their jurisdiction is chiefly appellate.

The circuit duties are performed twice a year by judges of these courts.

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments
of the Three
Presidencies.

Sillah Judges (called Judges and Criminal Judges),

May try original suits to any amount, and hear appeals from the inferior jurisdictions, as in Bengal. Assistant judges are limited to the trial of suits not exceeding 5,000 rupees.

Criminally, these two classes of officers may try offences not attended with loss of life or other aggravating circumstances, and may punish by imprisonment, not exceeding two years, thirty stripes, or fine of 200 rupees.

Sudder Ameen,

May decide suits to the value of seven hundred and fifty rupees.

District Moonsiffs,

Decide suits to the value of 500 rupees. They may also decide by punchayet any suits which both parties may agree to have so settled.

Collectors and Sub-Collectors,

Are vested with the magistracy and charge of the police.

As magistrates, they take cognizance of charges of abusive language, calumny, considerable assaults or affrays, or the like; and may punish to the extent of fifteen days imprisonment, or fine of fifty rupees. They may also punish petty thefts with a month's imprisonment or thirty stripes.

Tehsildars, as Heads of District Police,

Are empowered to take cognizance of similar petty cases, and to impose a fine of one rupee, twenty-four hours' imprisonment, or six hours in the stocks.

In cases of thefts not exceeding five rupees value, they may fine to the extent of three rupees, with six strokes of the rattan; but in these cases they are required to make an immediate report to the magistrate.

Potails, as Heads of Villages,

Are vested with a still minor authority in such cases, and empowered to punish by twelve hours' imprisonment, or six hours in the stocks.

Potails are also authorized to decide without appeal, such suits to the value of ten rupees as may be brought before them.

They are also empowered with a punchayet to decide any cases which both parties may be desirous of having so settled.

There are supposed to be about thirty-two thousand potails, but very few of them act at all.

Some further changes are understood to be in progress, or in contemplation,* viz.

The substitution for the four provincial courts of appeal and circuit, of seven division judges of appeal and circuit, with an assistant to each.

The jurisdiction of the sudder ameens to be raised from 750 to 3,000 rupees.

These officers to be vested with powers of committal and punishment, as exercised by the criminal judges; but their sentences to be previously sanctioned by the judge.

The jurisdiction of the district moonsiffs to be raised from 500 to 1,000 rupees.

BOMBAY,

* Letter from Madras Government, 2d November 1830.

IV.—JUDICIAL.

469

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

BOMBAY, 1812-13.

(1.) Statement of Tribunals
established in Bengal, Madras,
and Bombay, for
the Administration
of Justice.

Courts.	Area.	Population.	Salaries.	Remarks.
Sudder Adawlut:			Rupees.
Court of Circuit and Appeal:
First Judge	32,000
Second ditto	25,000
Third ditto	20,000
Salsette:
Judge	20,000
Surat:
Judge and Magistrate	28,000
Assistant to Magistrate	4,800
Broach:
Judge and Magistrate	20,000
Assistant to ditto	1,800
Kaira:
Judge and Magistrate	20,000
Assistant to ditto	1,800
Four Sudder Amcens	Salary as Law Offi- cers: Rs. 600 lowest and 900 highest.
1828-29.
Sudder Dewanny and Sudder
Foujdarry Adawlut:
Chief Judge	no allowance	A Member of Council.
Puisne ditto	40,000
Ditto ditto	36,000
Ditto ditto	35,000
Provincial Court of Appeal and
Circuit in Guzerat:
Chief Judge	30,000	} Since abolished.
Second ditto	30,000
Southern Concan	6,770	640,857
Judge and Criminal Judge	24,000
Register and Senior Assistant
to ditto	5,600
Northern Concan	387,264
Judge and Criminal Judge	24,000	The Southern and Northern Concan have been since united into one district.
Register and First Assistant
to ditto	5,600
Surat	1,350	454,431
Judge and Criminal Judge	28,000
Register and Assistant to ditto	6,000
Broach	1,600	229,527
Senior Assistant Judge and Criminal Judge	7,200
Junior ditto ditto	3,600

IV. 3 O

(continued..)

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments
of the Three
Presidencies.

470 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

Courts.	Area.	Population.	Salaries.	Remarks.
			Rupees.
East Zillah N. of the Myhee, viz.
Ahmedabad and (late) Kaira ..	6,450	1,012,808
Judge and Criminal Judge	28,000
Register and Senior Assistant to ditto	5,400
Poona	487,717
Judge and Criminal Judge	33,600
Register	7,200
Sholapore (part of Poonah):
Senior Assistant Judge	12,600
Ahmednuggur	650,000
Judge and Criminal Judge	33,600
First Assistant ditto	9,000
Candeish	12,430	417,976
Acting Senior Assistant Criminal Judge	12,600
10 Principal Collectors and Ma- gistrates	24,000
1 Sub-Collector and Magistrate	16,800
10 Assistant Collectors	12,000
79 Koomashdars or Camavisdars	600 lowest a' 3,600 highest	Same as Teshildars at Madras.
4 Sudder Ameens	Paid by fees. Those of this number of Sudder Ameens who are native law officers, receive a salary of 1,200 rupees per annum.
79 Moonsiffs and District Com- missioners	Paid by Fees.

The average receipts of the Sudder Ameens, Moonsiffs, and District Commissioners vary very much, being in the first half of 1827, 191 rupees a month each; and in the first half of 1828, 322 each.

It is understood to be in contemplation to grant them fixed salaries instead of fees.

THE Bombay judicial arrangements did not, till recently, differ in any material degree from those of Madras.

The modifications which have been recently introduced into those arrangements may be concisely stated to consist, as regards the administration of civil justice, in assigning to the native commissioners the cognizance, with certain exceptions, of all original suits, providing, as the case may be, a regular gradation of appeal to the judge, his assistant, or the Court of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, to which one judge has been added, exclusive of a member of council, whose functions as chief judge are limited to his officiating as such, when a competent court cannot otherwise be had.

The court of circuit and appeal at Surat has been abolished.

In

In the branch of criminal jurisprudence, the magistrates, who are also collectors of revenue, and their assistants, are authorized to adjudge sentences of fine and ordinary imprisonment, with hard labour for one year, but sentences beyond three months, passed by the assistants, are referrible to the magistrate for confirmation, and all other sentences may be revised by him.

District police officers are empowered to punish petty offences by fine, not exceeding fifteen rupees, and confinement, not exceeding twenty days.

The system of Session Judges, embracing the former functions and jurisdiction of a criminal judge and court of circuit, has been extended to all the territories under the Government.

Two judges of the sudder court, under the denomination of Visiting Commissioners of Circuit, are directed to make an annual circuit of inspection, one to Guzerat and the Concan, the other to the Deccan and the Southern Mahratta country, with all the powers to revise and correct the proceedings of the judicial officers which were formerly exercised by the court of circuit.

At Bombay the Criminal law is administered under the provisions of a written code, so that the Mahomedan law is not even nominally administered there.

This plan is intended to be followed at Madras.

The Bombay Regulations also recognize the employment of assessors or jurymen in civil and criminal cases, in the following modes :*

“ In the trial of suits, it shall be competent to every court in which an European authority presides, to avail itself of the assistance of respectable natives, in either of the three following ways :

“ First.—By referring the suit, or any point or points of the same, to a punchait of such persons, who will carry on their inquiries apart from the court, and report to it the result. The reference to the punchait, and its answer, shall be in writing, and shall be filed in the suit.

“ Clause Second.—By constituting two or more such persons assessors or members of the court, with a view to the advantages derivable from their observations, particularly at the examination of witnesses, the opinion of each assessor shall be given separately, and discussed ; and if any of the assessors, or the authority presiding in the court, shall desire it, the opinions of the assessors shall be recorded in writing in the suit.

“ Clause Third.—By employing them more nearly as a jury, they will then attend during the trial of the suit, will suggest, as it proceeds, such points of inquiry as occur to them, the court, if no objection exists, using every endeavour to procure the required information, and, after consultation, will deliver in their opinion.

“ Clause Fourth.—It is to be clearly understood, that under all the modes of procedure described in the three preceding clauses, the decision is vested exclusively in the authority presiding in the court.

The foregoing rules are extended to criminal trials by clause 5, Section xxxviii. Regulation XIII. 1827.

Darwar, or the Southern Mahratta country, with a population of 684,193, is not administered by a separate judicial establishment, but by the principal collector and his assistants, aided by a register. The administration is conducted under the provisions of the General Regulations, and subjected to the superintendence of the visiting judge of the sudder court.

(1.) Statement of Tribunals
established in Bengal, Madras,
and Bombay, for
the Administration
of Justice.

* Regulation IV. of 1827.

STATEMENTS exhibiting the Operations of the different TRIBUNALS at the THREE PRESIDENCIES, in the disposal of CIVIL and CRIMINAL CASES.

(2.)—BENGAL CIVIL STATEMENTS.

LIST.

	Page.
I.—STATEMENT of the number of Civil Suits depending at the beginning and end of the year 1813, and instituted and decided or adjusted during that year, before the Judges and other officers of the Zillah and City Courts in the Lower Provinces	474
II.—A similar STATEMENT as to the Western Provinces	476
III.—GENERAL SUMMARY of the number of Civil Suits depending at the beginning and end of 1813, and instituted and decided or adjusted during that year, in the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut and the Provincial and Zillah Courts	478
IV.—ABSTRACT of the total number of regular Civil Suits (including Appeals), depending at the beginning and end of 1828, and disposed of during that year, in each of the Zillah and City Courts, the Provincial Courts, and the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut	480
V.—STATEMENT of the number of regular Suits depending at the beginning and end of 1828, and disposed of during that year, before the Judges and other officers of the Zillah and City Courts in the Lower Provinces	484
VI.—A similar STATEMENT as to the Western Provinces	486
VII.—STATEMENT of Appeals, regular and special, depending and disposed of before the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut in 1828, with the amount of the property in question	486
VIII.—STATEMENT showing the total value or amount of the regular Suits (original and in appeal) depending in the several Civil Courts on the 1st January 1829	488
IX.—STATEMENT of the number of regular Suits depending on the 1st January 1828 and 1st January 1829, and disposed of in 1828, in the several classes of Courts in the Western and Lower Provinces	491
X.—STATEMENT of the number of regular Suits (original and in appeal) depending, admitted and disposed of, in the several Provincial Courts in each year since they have consisted of four Judges, viz. from 1815 to 1828 inclusive	492
XI.—COMPARATIVE STATEMENT of the number of regular Suits depending in the several Courts on the 1st of January 1815 and the 1st January 1829	495

IV.—JUDICIAL.

473

IV.
APPENDIX.
No. 5.
continued.

XII.—STATEMENT showing the time which would elapse before the decision of the regular Suits depending on the 1st of January 1829, if calculated according to the number disposed of in the several Courts during the year 1828	Page. 495
XIII.—A similar STATEMENT, calculated according to the average number of Decisions during the five years, 1824 to 1828, both inclusive	496
XIV.—STATEMENT of the number of summary Suits depending at the beginning and end of 1828, and disposed of during that year, in the several Provincial and District Courts	498
XV.—STATEMENT of summary Suits under reference to the Collectors for Adjudication, and disposed of by them in 1828	502
XVI.—TABLE showing the number of Suits instituted, decided and depending in the several classes of Courts, and the average delay in each, in 1810, 1815, 1820, and 1825 ..	504

(2.) Bengal Civil
Statements.

474 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

I. CIVIL SUITS depending at the Beginning and End of the Year 1813, and instituted, decided, and adjusted

BEFORE THE ...	JUDGES and ASSISTANT JUDGES.					REGISTRARS.					HEAD NATIVE
NAMES of ZILLAHS.	Depending on 1st January 1813.	Decreed or Dismissed.	Adjusted.	TOTAL of the two preceding Columns.	Remaining 1st January 1814.	Depending 1st January 1813.	Decreed or Dismissed.	Adjusted.	TOTAL of two last Columns.	Depending 1st January 1814.	Depending 1st January 1813.	Decreed or Dismissed.
CALCUTTA DIVISION.
Burdwan	1,380	412	30	442	{ J. 1,342 A. 297 }	421	429	63	492	312	2,420	2,788
Cuttack	44	80	7	87	{ J. 74 A. 749 }	21	24	14	38	...	78	181
Hooghly	636	68	15	83	{ J. 684 A. 110 }	557	160	70	230	721	1,111	669
Jessore { J. A. }	328 151	{ 371 }	8	379	{ J. 684 A. 110 }	262	117	20	137	272	784	373
Jungle Mehals	214	255	7	262	209	151	217	21	238	130	220	376
Midnapore { J. A. }	567 89	{ 399 }	70	469	454	102	95	12	107	162	113	191
Nuddea (Judge and Assistant)	1,072	71	8	79	464	556	314	55	369	361	968	1,312
Twenty-four Pergunnahs { J. A. }	660 703	{ 377 }	21	401	{ J. 1,060 A. 501 }	335	183	35	218	375	1,372	441
	5,844	2,033	169	2,202	5,944	2,405	1,539	290	1,829	2,333	7,066	6,334
DACCA DIVISION.
Backergunge.....	274	151	3	154	303	232	70	...	70	329	92	78
Chittagong	651	251	32	283	1,605	589	650	128	778	180	616	508
Dacca City.....	316	66	17	83	407	188	156	40	196	138	614	442
Dacca Jelalpoore	318	142	5	147	246	108	118	19	137	79	466	234
Momensing	532	147	6	153	591	206	112	12	124	174	386	232
Sylhet	289	118	1	119	267	99	164	...	164	206	75	117
Tipperah	147	127	2	129	160	116	122	12	134	149	147	301
	2,530	1,002	66	1,068	3,579	1,538	1,392	211	1,603	1,255	2,396	1,912
MOORSHEDABAD DIVISION.
Beerbhoom	401	37	14	51	305	413	78	33	111	385	901	865
Bhangulpore	225	107	9	116	294	98	142	8	150	43	573	593
Dinagapore	551	215	17	232	511	148	151	15	166	99	1,328	2,255
Moorshedabad City { J. A. }	381 283	{ 263 }	13	276	572	253	213	57	270	198	...	380
Purneah	1,124	178	26	204	1,263	457	228	43	271	362	2,725	2,104
Rajeshahye { J. A. }	49 346	{ 264 }	39	303	{ J. 191 A. 140 }	274	65	35	100	368	1,030	1,232
Rungpore	95	212	73	285	186	72	175	53	228	91	290	496
	3,458	1,276	191	1,467	3,462	1,715	1,052	244	1,296	1,546	6,847	7,925
PATNA DIVISION.
Behar.....	496	203	21	224	634	314	139	34	173	381	463	304
Patna City.....	752	316	73	389	{ J. 82 A. 445 }	201	217	43	260	195	238	169
Ramghur	110	85	4	89	138	113	146	12	158	155
Sarun { Judge Collector..... Assistant J. 66 }	330 333 66	{ 289 }	23	312	352	125	99	19	118	133	110	226
Shahabad	68	148	...	148	73	156	197	...	197	103	190	272
Tirhoot { J. A. }	824 710	{ 285 }	26	311	{ J. 1,066 A. 499 }	141	121	22	143	180	325	575
	3,689	1,326	147	1,473	3,289	1,050	919	130	1,049	1,147	1,326	1,546
	15,521	5,637	573	6,210	16,274	6,708	4,902	875	5,777	6,281	17,635	17,717

during that Year, in the ZILLAH and CITY COURTS of the LOWER PROVINCES, under the Presidency of Bengal.

[With respect to the Number of Suits Instituted, see the Note on the corresponding Table for the Western Provinces.]

COMMISSIONERS.			MOFUSSIL NATIVE COMMISSIONERS.					TOTAL.
Adjusted.	TOTAL of the two last Columns.	Depending 1st January 1814.	Depending 1st January 1813.	Decreed or Dismissed.	Adjusted.	TOTAL of the two last Columns.	Depending 1st January 1814.	Depending 1st January 1813.	Instituted during the Year.	Decreed or Dismissed.	Adjusted.	TOTAL of the two last Columns.	Depending on 1st January 1814.
87	2,875	1,997	2,609	3,421	1,353	4,774	2,300	6,830	8,001	7,050	1,533	8,583	6,248
7	191	97	1,549	4,439	99	4,538	2,126	1,692	5,459	4,727	127	4,854	2,297
178	847	1,295	2,317	2,018	763	2,781	2,507	4,621	4,592	2,915	1,026	3,941	5,272
69	442	882	3,016	4,651	615	5,266	3,152	4,511	6,783	5,512	712	6,224	5,100
7	383	244	887	1,452	160	1,612	717	1,472	2,323	2,300	195	2,495	1,300
88	279	106	6,344	5,631	4,865	10,496	6,412	7,215	11,270	6,316	5,035	11,351	7,134
410	1,722	933	8,154	8,646	3,118	11,764	5,930	10,750	10,872	10,313	3,591	13,934	7,688
53	494	1,751	7,984	8,626	1,669	10,295	3,446	10,054	13,487	9,627	1,781	11,408	12,131
899	7,233	7,305	31,860	38,884	12,642	51,526	31,590	47,175	62,787	48,790	14,000	62,790	47,172
...	78	93	37	37	635	429	299	3	302	762
34	542	704	1,115	373	3	376	1,094	2,974	2,588	1,782	197	1,979	3,583
69	511	499	1,095	1,221	300	1,521	803	2,213	1,945	1,885	426	2,311	1,847
38	272	498	2,456	2,806	625	3,431	2,322	3,348	3,784	3,300	687	3,987	3,145
15	247	360	3,501	2,531	1,021	3,552	4,027	4,625	4,603	3,022	1,054	4,076	5,152
1	118	127	1,303	4,042	1,293	5,335	1,451	1,766	6,021	4,441	1,295	5,736	2,051
60	361	188	1,321	2,101	1,862	3,963	1,547	1,731	4,900	2,651	1,936	4,587	2,044
217	2,129	2,469	10,828	13,074	5,104	18,178	11,281	17,292	24,270	17,380	5,598	22,978	18,584
72	937	764	1,235	1,607	35	1,642	1,232	2,950	2,477	2,587	154	2,741	2,686
70	663	665	2,746	4,107	324	4,431	3,132	3,642	5,852	4,949	411	5,360	4,134
25	2,280	1,070	7,019	7,381	2,671	10,052	2,220	9,046	7,584	10,002	2,728	12,730	3,900
64	444	748	1,512	1,751	128	1,879	1,328	2,432	3,283	2,607	262	2,869	2,846
552	2,656	2,542	12,585	12,254	4,480	16,734	10,795	16,891	17,936	14,764	5,101	19,865	14,962
145	1,377	1,151	5,872	5,247	1,908	7,155	6,772	7,571	9,986	6,808	2,127	8,935	8,622
88	584	214	2,348	8,843	2,928	11,771	1,747	2,805	12,301	9,726	3,142	12,868	2,238
1,016	8,941	7,154	33,317	41,190	12,474	53,664	27,226	45,337	59,419	51,143	13,925	65,368	39,388
196	500	523	815	809	218	1,027	1,045	2,088	2,419	1,455	469	1,924	2,553
17	186	245	321	210	7	217	277	1,512	784	912	140	1,052	1,244
...	1,327	2,427	304	2,731	1,630	1,550	3,351	2,658	320	2,978	1,923
57	283	187	531	88	4	92	441	1,495	423	702	103	805	1,113
...	272	255	134	214	...	214	192	548	906	831	...	831	623
121	696	313	2,950	3,637	548	4,185	3,511	4,950	5,954	4,618	717	5,335	5,569
391	1,937	1,523	6,078	7,385	1,081	8,466	7,096	12,143	13,837	11,176	1,749	12,925	13,055
2,523	20,240	18,451	82,083	100,533	31,301	131,834	77,193	121,947	160,313	128,789	35,272	164,061	118,199

II.—CIVIL SUITS depending at the Beginning and End of 1813, and instituted, decided, and adjusted

BEFORE THE ...	JUDGES and ASSISTANT JUDGES.					REGISTRARS.					HEAD NATIVE
	Dependent 1st January 1813.	Decreed or Dismissed.	Adjusted.	TOTAL of the two pre- ceding Co- lums.	Dependent 1st January 1814.	Dependent 1st January 1813.	Decreed or Dismissed.	Adjusted.	TOTAL of the two pre- ceding Co- lums.	Dependent 1st January 1814.	Dependent 1st January 1813.	Decreed or Dismissed.
BAREILLY DIVISION.
Agrah	13	31	6	37	21	100	82	34	116	47	80	153
Allyghur	198	64	20	84	220	154	144	21	165	75	537	762
Bareilly	184	81	...	81	227	175	190	...	190	144	158	540
Cawnpore	274	91	22	113	310	185	194	11	205	189
Etawah	101	48	4	52	66	103	41	14	55	121
Furruckabad	101	136	33	169	145	129	159	25	184	47
Moradabad	167	96	7	103	185	103	130	10	140	93	306	284
Scharunpore	111	74	50	124	113	169	65	66	131	243	209	278
	1,249	621	142	763	1,287	1,118	1,005	181	1,186	959	1,290	2,017
BENARES DIVISION.
Allahabad	261	50	9	59	282	178	107	27	134	118
Bundelcund	281	99	10	109	84	136	54	5	59	280	441	222
Benares City	954	208	39	247	{ J. 675 A. 115 }	243	118	16	134	266	324	323
Goruckpore	782	595	18	613	{ J. 250 A. 152 }	267	121	1	122	201	147	70
Juanpore { Judge ... Assistant	{ 171 249 }	163	18	181	422	147	148	9	157	111	335	219
Mirzapore	456	235	23	258	362	161	158	24	182	162	113	191
TOTAL BENARES D.	3,154	1,350	117	1,467	2,342	1,137	706	82	788	1,138	1,360	1,025
TOTAL of the WESTERN PROVINCES	4,403	1,971	259	2,230	3,629	2,255	1,711	263	1,974	2,097	2,650	3,042
TOTAL of the LOWER PROVINCES (vide Statement, No. 1.)	15,521	5,637	573	6,210	16,274	6,708	4,902	875	5,777	6,281	17,635	17,717
TOTAL of all the PROVINCES	19,924	7,608	832	8,440	19,903	8,963	6,613	1,138	7,751	8,378	20,285	20,759

during that Year, in the ZILLAH and CITY COURTS of the WESTERN PROVINCES under the Presidency of Bengal.

[The Number of Suits instituted during the Year is not stated in the Returns. The Numbers in the Column headed "Instituted during the Year," have been obtained by adding together the numbers in Columns 5 and 6 of the Totals, and subtracting from the Amount the Numbers in Column 1.]

COMMISSIONERS.			MOFUSSIL NATIVE COMMISSIONERS.					TOTAL.
Adjusted.	TOTAL of the two preceding Columns.	Depending 1st January 1814.	Depending 1st January 1814.	Decreed or Dismissed.	Adjusted.	TOTAL of the two preceding Columns.	Depending 1st January 1814.	Depending 1st January 1813.	" Instituted during the Year.	Decreed or Dismissed.	Adjusted.	TOTAL of the two last Columns.	Depending 1st January 1814.
130	283	92	193	403	266	170	436	160
145	907	583	315	322	51	576	255	1,201	1,661	1,492	240	1,732	1,133
...	540	363	517	1,028	811	...	811	734
...	449	471	197	668	502	908	1,079	756	230	986	1,001
...	491	274	363	637	330	695	566	363	381	744	517
...	438	392	182	571	392	668	843	687	240	927	584
88	372	326	382	890	245	1,135	458	958	1,854	1,400	350	1,750	1,062
672	950	500	489	1,572	417	788	1,205	856
1,035	3,052	1,864	2,075	2,549	1,041	3,590	1,937	5,732	8,906	6,192	2,399	8,591	6,017
...	1,463	2,430	412	2,842	1,277	1,902	2,810	2,587	448	3,035	1,677
148	370	527	858	571	375	163	538	891
28	351	548	1,313	1,942	281	2,223	1,512	2,839	3,232	2,591	364	2,955	3,116
3	73	180	1,149	2,207	103	2,310	1,368	2,345	2,924	2,993	125	3,118	2,151
44	263	412	720	1,965	282	2,247	991	1,622	3,162	2,495	353	2,848	1,936
88	279	106	6,344	5,631	4,865	10,496	6,412	7,074	11,283	6,215	5,000	11,215	7,142
311	1,336	1,073	10,989	14,175	5,943	20,118	11,560	16,640	23,982	17,256	6,453	23,709	16,913
1,346	4,388	3,737	13,164	16,724	6,984	23,708	13,497	22,372	32,888	23,448	8,852	32,300	22,960
2,523	20,240	18,451	82,083	100,533	31,301	131,834	77,193	121,947	160,313	128,789	35,272	164,061	118,199
3,869	24,628	22,188	95,247	117,257	37,285	155,642	90,690	144,319	193,201	152,237	44,124	196,361	141,159

III.—GENERAL SUMMARY of the NUMBER of CIVIL SUITS depending at the SUDDER DEWANNY ADAWLUT and the PROVINCIAL and

LOWER PROVINCES.						Depending 1st January 1813.	" Instituted during the Year."
Calcutta Division :
Provincial Court	917	224
Zillah and City Courts	47,175	62,787
						48,092	63,011
Dacca Division :
Provincial Court	999	279
Zillah and City Courts	17,292	24,270
						18,291	24,549
Moorshedabad Division :
Provincial Court	282	87
Zillah and City Courts	45,337	59,419
						45,619	59,506
Patna Division :
Provincial Court	900	375
Zillah and City Courts	12,143	13,837
						13,043	14,212
TOTAL of the						3,098	965
LOWER PROVINCES { PROVINCIAL COURTS ..						121,947	160,313
{ ZILLAH and CITY COURTS ..						125,045	161,278
WESTERN PROVINCES.
Bareilly Division :
Provincial Court	122	64
Zillah and City Courts	5,732	8,906
						5,854	8,970
Benares Division :
Provincial Court	426	144
Zillah and City Courts	16,640	23,982
						17,066	24,126
TOTAL of the						548	208
WESTERN PROVINCES { PROVINCIAL COURTS ..						22,372	32,888
{ ZILLAH and CITY COURTS ..						22,920	33,096
FOR ALL						309	81
THE PROVINCES { SUDDER DEWANNY ADALUT ..						3,646	1,173
{ PROVINCIAL COURTS ..						144,319	193,201
{ ZILLAH and CITY COURTS ..						148,274	194,455

IV.—JUDICIAL.

479

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

Beginning and End of 1813, and instituted, decided, and adjusted during that Year in the ZILLAH COURTS, under the Presidency of Bengal.

(2.) Bengal Civil
Statements.

Decreed or Dismissed.	Adjusted.	TOTAL disposed of.	Depending 1st January 1814.
170 48,790	14 14,000	184 62,790	957 47,172
48,960	14,014	62,974	48,129
233 17,380	22 5,598	255 22,978	1,023 18,584
17,613	5,620	23,233	19,607
56 51,443	5 13,925	61 65,368	308 39,388
51,499	13,930	65,429	39,696
342 11,176	33 1,749	375 12,925	900 13,055
11,518	1,782	13,300	13,955
801 128,789	74 35,272	875 164,061	3,188 118,199
129,590	35,346	164,936	121,387
85 6,192	6 2,399	91 8,591	95 6,047
6,277	2,405	8,682	6,142
147 17,256	15 6,453	162 23,709	408 16,913
17,403	6,468	23,871	17,321
232 23,448	21 8,852	253 32,300	503 22,960
23,680	8,873	32,553	23,463
72 1,033 152,237	— 95 44,124	72 1,128 196,361	318 3,691 141,159
153,342	44,219	197,561	145,168

Note.—The number of Suits instituted is not given in the Returns, and has therefore been supplied conjecturally, by a comparison between the number depending at the beginning of the year, and the numbers decided or adjusted and depending at the close of the year.

The proportions in which the business of the zillah courts was distributed between the judges, assistant judges, registrars, and native commissioners, will appear from the detailed statements, Nos. 1 and 2.

The Returns do not distinguish between Appeals and original Suits.

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.
Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments of
the Three
Presidencies.

480

APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

IV.—ABSTRACT of the Total Number of regular CIVIL SUITS and APPEALS depending, and decided or adjusted, in each of the ZILLAH or CITY COURTS, the PROVINCIAL COURTS, and the SUDDER DEWANNY ADALUT, in the Year 1828.

1.	2.	3.	4.	5.	6.	7.	8.	9.	10.	11.	12.
	Depending 1st January 1828.	Admitted or re-admitted during the Year.	Transferred from one Officer to another.	Amount of Column 2 & 3, deducting Column 4.	Transferred to other Jurisdictions.	Adjusted or withdrawn.	Dismissed on Default.	Decided on Trial.	Depending 1st January 1829.	Extent of the Districts, in Square Miles.	POPULATION in 1822.
CALCUTTA DIVISION.
Burdwan	7,847	11,295	2,649	16,493	111	1,750	1,445	5,745	7,442	2,000	1,187,580
Cuttack	1,412	2,650	856	3,206	352	483	349	896	1,126	9,040	1,984,620
Hooghly	3,876	10,030	3,285	10,621	306	1,976	1,031	3,535	3,773	2,260	1,339,150
Jessore	5,184	9,779	2,649	12,314	297	1,903	1,045	2,783	6,286	5,180	1,183,590
Jungle Mehals	7,438	7,592	2,444	12,586	1,095	966	391	2,921	7,214	6,990	1,304,740
Midnapore	4,571	4,879	763	8,687	5	1,515	549	2,077	4,541	8,260	1,914,060
Nuddeah	3,914	8,227	1,591	10,550	15	2,772	525	3,509	3,729	3,105	1,187,160
Suburbs of Calcutta.....	1,938	2,906	823	4,021	135	415	233	1,482	1,756	1,105	360,360
Twenty-four Pargunnahs.....	4,358	7,392	1,303	10,447	24	2,679	413	2,873	4,458	3,610	599,595
Cuttack Commissioner.....	33	20	...	53	...	2	6	18	27
Provincial Court ...	40,571	64,770	16,363	88,978	2,340	14,401	5,987	25,839	40,852
	1,113	318	...	1,431	39	50	24	219	1,099
TOTAL	41,684	65,088	...	90,409	2,379	14,511	6,011	26,058	41,451
DACCA DIVISION.
Buckergunge.....	927	1,316	368	1,875	7	190	227	600	851	2,780	686,640
Chattisgong	8,331	15,145	3,599	19,877	2,823	1,796	908	6,293	8,057	2,980	700,800
Dacca City	1,477	2,352	618	3,211	80	787	13	700	1,631	1,870	512,385
Dacca Telalpoore	2,355	3,597	1,315	4,637	21	724	284	1,169	2,439	2,585	588,375
Mymensing	5,612	10,402	1,911	15,104	936	2,597	1,074	3,827	6,670	6,998	1,454,670
Sylhet	7,477	8,740	1,383	14,834	...	1,829	880	5,278	6,867	3,532	1,083,720
Tippurah	2,905	6,187	1,485	7,607	297	2,030	9	1,771	3,500	6,830	1,372,360
Provincial Court ...	30,084	47,740	10,679	67,145	4,164	9,953	3,375	19,638	30,015
	221	159	...	380	...	14	...	80	286

IV.—JUDICIAL.

481

IV.
APPENDIX.
No. 5.
continued.

(2) Bengal Civil
Statements.

MOORSHEDABAD DIVISION.
Beerbhoom	2,986	4,840	1,143	6,683	4	1,084	251	2,103	3,241	3,870	1,267,065
Bhaugulpore	1,628	3,285	863	4,050	11	195	130	2,458	1,256	7,270	797,790
Dinagapore	4,777	10,654	2,035	13,396	604	2,249	518	4,518	5,507	5,020	2,341,420
Moorshedabad City	2,738	5,001	1,037	6,752	153	884	357	2,617	2,741	1,870	762,690
Purneah	4,056	10,007	1,840	12,313	1	3,246	89	4,823	4,154	7,460	1,362,165
Rajeshahye	2,775	5,419	1,046	7,148	306	1,601	230	2,266	2,745	3,950	4,087,155
Rangpore	3,956	10,621	2,348	12,229	528	2,423	173	6,367	2,738	7,856	1,340,350
Ditto, Commissioner	368	618	127	859	2	142	65	368	282
Provincial Court	23,334	50,535	10,439	63,430	1,609	11,824	1,813	25,520	22,664
TOTAL	335	182	...	517	1	16	24	136	340
	23,669	50,717	10,439	63,947	1,610	11,840	1,837	25,656	23,004
PATNA DIVISION.
Behar	2,470	3,413	1,221	4,662	191	258	159	1,405	2,589	5,235	1,340,610
Patna City	1,364	2,674	1,193	2,845	490	202	53	731	1,369	667	255,705
Goruckpore	4,277	4,852	1,145	7,984	87	6-7	145	2,089	5,036	9,520	...
Ranghur	1,152	2,451	298	3,305	11	633	80	1,444	1,137	22,430	2,252,983
Sarun	1,201	2,620	746	3,075	...	197	11	1,429	1,438	5,760	1,404,075
Shahabad	1,795	3,138	926	4,007	351	315	81	853	2,407	4,650	908,850
Tirhoot	5,176	7,209	1,964	10,421	20	1,214	305	3,314	5,508	7,732	1,697,700
Provincial Court	17,435	26,357	7,493	36,299	1,150	3,446	894	11,325	19,484
	586	229	...	815	...	27	30	154	604
TOTAL	18,021	26,586	7,493	37,114	1,150	3,473	924	11,479	20,088

(continued..)

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.
Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments of
the Three
Presidencies.

482

APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

IV.—ABSTRACT of the Total Number of regular CIVIL SUITS and APPEALS depending, and decided or adjusted, in each of the ZILLAH or CITY COURTS, the PROVINCIAL COURTS, and the SUDDER DEWANNY ADALUT, in the Year 1893—continued.

1.	2.	3.	4.	5.	6.	7.	8.	9.	10.	11.	12.
	Depending or re-admitted 1st January 1893.	Admitted during the Year.	Transferred from one Officer to another.	Amount of Columns 2 & 3, deducting Column 4.	Transferred to other Jurisdictions.	Adjusted or withdrawn.	Dismissed on Default.	Decided on Trial.	Depending 1st January 1892.	Extent of the Districts, in Square Miles.	POPULATION in 1892.
BAREILLY DIVISION.
Agrah	455	2,706	522	2,639	1	751	52	1,380	445	3,500	Shahjhanpore
Allyghur	2,026	5,379	606	6,799	81	1,144	44	2,991	2,529	3,400
Bareilly	1,817	4,368	953	5,232	160	1,006	134	2,101	1,831	{ 6,900 1,420
Cawnpore	1,658	4,189	1,960	3,887	12	393	115	1,459	1,908	2,650
Etawah	723	1,667	288	2,102	47	615	200	770	470	3,450
Furruckabad	1,506	2,536	845	3,197	24	511	101	1,280	1,281	1,850
Moradabad	890	4,925	1,263	4,552	102	1,182	114	1,708	1,446	5,800
Meerut	1,052	4,382	751	4,683	1	1,396	57	2,001	1,228	2,250
Scharunpore	355	2,798	1,078	2,075	...	709	25	905	436	3,800
Provincial Court.....	10,482	32,950	8,266	35,166	428	7,707	842	14,595	11,584
TOTAL	502	212	...	714	1	15	4	117	577
BENARES DIVISION.
Allahabad	2,455	2,821	889	4,387	45	388	212	1,904	1,838	2,650	[The Population Returns do not state the Population of the different Zillahs in the Western Provinces.] Azimgur.
Bundelcund, Southern Division	569	1,040	...	1,609	6	139	60	703	701	4,680
Ditto, Northern ditto	647	1,316	216	1,747	46	216	111	736	638
Benares City	1,986	4,422	1,167	5,211	138	352	152	3,014	1,585	350
Ghazepore	2,009	4,203	981	5,231	200	416	107	2,332	2,176	2,850
Futtehpore	1,243	993	126	2,110	3	190	93	633	1,191	1,780
Junpore	2,308	3,507	962	4,653	17	181	17	1,877	2,561	1,820
Mirzapore	1,079	1,984	535	2,528	110	187	245	1,102	884	2,240
Provincial Court	12,296	20,086	4,876	27,506	565	2,069	997	12,301	11,574	3,650
TOTAL	1,064	309	...	1,373	...	21	43	236	1,073
	13,360	20,395	4,876	28,879	565	2,090	1,040	12,537	12,647

IV. JUDICIAL.

483

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

(2.) Bengal Civil Statements.

SUMMARY.

Lower Provinces	2,288	189,402	44,974	255,852	9,263	39,784	12,069	84	607	2,329	112,515	153,802	37,593,265
Provincial Courts	111,434	189,402	44,974	255,852	9,263	39,784	12,069	84	607	2,329	112,515	153,802	37,593,265
Zillah and City ditto, and Cadastral Commissioner ...	113,712	190,290	44,974	258,995	9,303	39,893	12,153	82,929	114,844	2,399	112,515	153,802	37,593,265
TOTAL	113,712	190,290	44,974	258,995	9,303	39,893	12,153	82,929	114,844	2,399	112,515	153,802	37,593,265
WESTERN PROVINCES :
Provincial Courts	1,566	521	...	2,087	1	36	47	333	1,650	23,158	66,510	32,206,806
Zillah and City ditto	22,778	53,036	13,142	62,672	993	9,776	1,830	26,896	23,158	23,158	23,158	23,158
TOTAL	24,344	53,557	13,142	64,759	994	9,812	1,877	27,249	24,808	24,808	24,808	24,808
TOTAL :
Provincial Courts	3,852	1,309	...	5,230	41	145	131	960	3,979	135,673	140,144	140,144
Zillah and City ditto	134,202	242,438	58,116	318,524	10,256	49,560	13,899	109,218	135,673	135,673	135,673	135,673
Sudder Dewanny Adawlut ...	469	171	...	640	...	4	4	140	492	492	492	492
TOTAL	138,523	243,918	58,116	324,394	10,297	49,709	14,034	110,318	140,144	140,144	140,144	140,144

APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

V.—REGULAR CIVIL SUITS depending at the Beginning and End of 1828, and admitted or re-admitted, Lower Provinces, un

BEFORE THE JUDGES.										BEFORE THE REGISTRARS.
										Transferred
Depending 1st January 1828.	Instituted or re-admitted during the Year.	Decided on the Merits.	Dismissed on Default.	Adjusted by Razenamah.	To Registers.	To Sudder Amcees.	To other Jurisdictions.	Total disposed of.	Remaining 1st January 1828.	Depending 1st January 1828.	Admitted or re-admitted during the Year.	Decided on the Merits.	Dismissed on Default.	Adjusted or withdrawn.	To Sudder Amcees.	To other Jurisdictions.	Total disposed of.
CALCUTTA DIVISION :
Burdwan	1,149	3,216	340	108	28	260	2,389	—	3,125	1,240	1,484	266	168	162	25	—	366
Cuttack	207	1,057	117	20	30	213	643	—	1,023	241	104	213	65	29	—	83	206
Hooghly	160	3,529	226	41	26	423	2,862	3	3,581	108	407	423	278	98	21	14	411
Jessore	793	3,061	72	1	8	479	2,170	33	2,763	1,001	—	479	59	21	22	5	107
Jungle Mehals ..	1,623	2,931	158	77	16	242	2,201	247	2,941	1,616	576	242	—	—	—	583	583
Midnapore	537	981	45	10	11	43	720	—	829	689	113	45	5	3	3	1	12
Nuddeah	499	1,763	156	55	40	406	1,185	2	1,844	349	128	406	148	65	69	23	283
Suburbs of Calcutta ..	323	1,102	162	11	25	92	731	101	1,122	393	179	164	62	34	14	4	133
24 Pergunnahs ..	711	1,453	112	58	10	112	1,191	5	1,488	681	413	112	43	40	14	—	101
	5,903	19,041	1,388	381	194	2,270	14,092	391	18,716	6,228	3,404	2,350	828	452	198	725	2,202
Cuttack Commissioner	33	20	18	6	2	—	—	—	26	27
DACCA DIVISION :
Backergunge	341	478	128	28	—	10	358	—	524	295	2	10	2	—	1	—	3
Chittagong	2,610	5,021	319	13	45	602	2,997	1,514	5,490	2,141	423	603	85	4	20	300	409
Dacca City	345	839	192	—	55	106	493	—	836	348	77	107	—	—	—	76	76
Dacca Jelaipore ..	899	1,134	101	39	19	147	1,268	—	1,471	612	179	47	—	—	—	18	18
Mymensing	912	2,429	91	135	42	894	1,927	—	2,179	1,162	789	884	91	51	31	553	706
Sylhet	1,365	1,394	212	15	11	324	978	—	1,540	1,219	—	324	70	51	5	16	142
Tipperah	330	1,737	107	1	117	389	1,096	—	1,710	357	39	384	67	—	26	227	320
	6,802	13,082	1,140	228	289	2,362	8,217	1,514	13,750	6,134	1,523	2,364	315	106	63	18	1,179
MOORSHEDABAD DIVISION :
Beerbhoom	449	1,316	79	34	14	149	583	2	1,261	504	127	150	49	—	—	1	99
Bhaugulpore	278	957	171	16	5	162	701	—	1,055	180	222	162	215	—	—	11	255
Dinajepore	295	2,366	110	15	19	104	1,931	197	2,376	285	111	104	15	—	—	151	35
Moorsheadabad City ..	520	1,245	161	19	37	39	998	1	1,255	510	112	39	—	—	—	—	—
Purneah	653	2,108	250	25	27	—	1,840	—	2,143	623	—	—	—	—	—	142	294
Rajshahye	416	1,110	—	1	—	256	790	—	1,047	479	100	256	107	16	29	265	359
Rungpore	322	2,645	486	25	39	142	2,206	—	2,898	69	217	142	77	4	13	—	11
Ditto Commissioner ..	16	156	10	2	4	10	117	2	145	27	17	10	9	—	2	—	—
	2,954	11,903	1,267	137	145	862	9,566	203	12,180	2,677	896	863	472	65	97	570	1,204
PATNA DIVISION :
Behar	1,514	1,139	117	20	21	13	1,208	—	1,379	1,274	69	13	33	8	5	—	46
Patna City	710	1,252	153	26	68	509	684	111	1,511	411	205	509	64	—	14	278	350
Goruckpore	1,765	1,666	216	16	18	4	1,141	—	1,395	1,976	344	4	5	6	10	6	82
Ramghur	145	432	102	—	3	91	207	—	493	174	93	91	60	—	—	—	155
Sarun	378	913	69	3	20	140	606	—	838	453	147	140	115	—	40	—	316
Shahabad	430	1,201	91	18	21	107	819	14	1,070	561	555	107	—	—	—	6	251
Tirhoot	922	2,315	166	4	10	320	1,644	5	2,149	1,088	1,275	320	161	39	45	—	—
	5,864	8,158	914	87	161	1,184	6,309	130	8,785	5,937	2,688	1,184	438	53	114	617	1,222

* The Numbers marked thus (*) are cases depending before the Collector of Tipperah.

IV.—JUDICIAL.

485 disposed of, during that Year; before the Judges and other Officers of the several ZILLAH and CITY COURTS in the he Presidency of Bengal.

BEFORE THE SUDDER AMERNS.										BEFORE THE MOONSIFFS.
Depending 1st January 1829.	Admitted or re-admitted during the Year.	Decided on the Merits.	Dismissed on Default.	Adjusted or withdrawn.	Transferred		Total disposed of.	Remaining 1st January 1829.		Depending 1st January 1829.	Admitted or re-admitted during the Year.	Decided on the Merits.	Dismissed on Default.	Adjusted or withdrawn.	Transferred		Total disposed of.	Remaining 1st January 1829.
					To Registers.	To other Jurisdictions.									To Registers.	To Sudder Amerns.	To other Jurisdictions.
1,548	2,472	1,029	765	209	—	23	2,626	2,394	2,666	5,341	3,608	410	1,488	—	—	77	5,583	2,424
285	643	235	87	79	—	265	666	262	816	737	479	213	345	—	—	4	1,041	512
1,778	2,862	1,253	567	518	—	256	2,594	2,046	1,531	3,216	1,778	325	1,411	—	—	33	3,547	1,200
1,233	2,170	864	575	295	—	220	1,954	2,448	2,249	4,069	1,788	448	1,578	—	—	39	3,853	2,465
3,328	2,201	1,580	210	151	—	251	2,192	3,337	1,911	2,215	1,183	104	799	—	—	14	2,100	2,026
706	720	346	273	112	—	2	733	693	3,215	3,133	1,681	263	1,389	—	—	2	3,335	3,013
986	1,185	574	173	410	—	12	1,169	1,002	4,933	2,631	2,631	232	2,253	—	—	—	5,116	2,127
779	768	602	156	37	—	9	804	743	657	872	656	32	339	—	—	2	1,029	500
862	1,191	759	200	59	—	13	1,031	1,022	2,372	4,631	1,959	115	2,596	—	—	2	4,672	2,331
3,504	14,212	7,842	3,006	1,870	—	1,051	13,769	13,947	17,727	29,147	15,763	2,142	12,198	—	—	173	30,276	16,598
234	358	217	109	17	—	2	345	247	350	470	253	90	172	—	—	5	520	300
3,019	2,997	2,034	446	427	—	954	3,861	2,155	2,279	6,524	3,855	445	1,304	—	—	55	5,059	3,141
386	511	278	4	232	1	4	519	378	669	895	240	9	500	—	18	—	767	797
529	1,268	695	201	130	—	3	1,029	768	748	1,098	373	47	575	—	—	—	995	851
1,278	1,027	647	369	78	—	347	1,441	864	3,633	6,063	2,998	519	2,466	—	—	36	6,019	3,677
659	973	688	141	26	51	—	906	1,026	5,153	6,049	4,308	653	1,787	14	—	—	6,762	4,440
686	1,096	584	1	459	—	65	1,109	673	1,836	2,965	1,013	7	1,428	—	—	—	2,448	2,353
7,091	8,230	5,148	1,871	1,369	52	1,375	9,210	6,111	14,668	24,064	13,040	1,770	8,232	14	18	96	23,170	15,562
840	993	580	129	277	—	1	987	846	1,570	2,381	1,305	72	760	1	10	—	2,238	1,713
542	701	706	79	37	—	10	891	352	586	1,465	1,397	6	142	—	—	1	1,456	595
884	1,931	771	148	163	—	209	1,289	1,426	3,487	6,253	3,622	257	2,058	—	—	187	6,124	3,616
991	1,143	543	277	191	—	1	1,012	1,122	1,165	2,574	1,913	61	656	—	—	—	2,630	1,109
858	1,764	1,371	3	553	—	—	1,927	695	2,540	6,225	3,202	61	2,666	—	—	—	5,929	2,836
433	790	342	138	90	—	156	726	497	1,826	3,263	1,817	75	1,482	—	—	8	3,382	1,797
678	2,206	1,776	73	250	—	263	2,361	523	2,739	5,628	4,029	71	2,121	—	—	—	6,221	2,146
73	72	77	15	14	—	—	106	39	99	66	84	10	20	—	—	—	114	51†
5,299	9,600	6,224	860	1,675	—	640	9,299	5,500	14,185	28,169	17,557	651	10,007	1	10	196	28,422	13,882
311	1,208	520	75	72	—	191	858	661	576	1,053	795	56	160	—	—	—	1,911	618
372	684	421	23	106	—	101	651	495	77	129	93	4	14	—	—	—	111	195
1,091	1,141	614	37	45	—	76	772	1,460	1,077	2,101	1,264	92	664	—	—	—	1,910	1,268
169	207	152	27	55	—	5	239	157	725	1,721	1,130	47	565	—	—	—	1,742	704
256	606	497	—	3	—	500	362	106	420	961	748	8	134	—	—	—	890	491
399	819	201	52	103	—	10	368	852	411	1,011	561	11	191	—	—	11	774	648
1,357	1,644	1,092	232	233	—	6	1,603	1,438	1,622	2,930	1,895	90	926	—	—	3	2,914	1,638
3,975	6,309	3,497	446	617	—	389	4,949	5,335	4,908	2,006	6,476	308	2,554	—	—	14	9,352	5,562

† Sudder Moonsiffs.

‡ Moonsiffs.

VI.—REGULAR CIVIL SUITS depending and decided, or adjusted, before the Judges and other Officers of the

	BEFORE THE JUDGES.										BEFORE THE REGISTERS.
	Depending 1st January 1828.	Admitted or re-admitted during the Year.	Decided on the Merits.	Dismissed on Default.	Adjusted or withdrawn.	Transferred				Total disposed of.	Remaining 1st January 1829.	Depending 1st January 1828.	Admitted or re-admitted during the Year.	Decided on the Merits.	Dismissed for Default.	Adjusted or withdrawn.	Transferred				Total disposed of.	Remaining 1st January 1829.
						To Registers.	To Sudder Ameens.	To other Jurisdictions.									To Sudder Ameens.	To other Jurisdictions.
BAREILLY DIVISION :
Agrah	90	642	104	9	13	66	466	—	658	74	25	66	38	—	11	—	—	—	49	42
Allyghur	225	871	168	2	34	158	446	—	808	289	151	160	—	—	—	—	80	80	231
Bareilly	535	1,127	143	10	23	134	819	1	1,130	532	279	139	91	2	29	—	82	204	214
Cawnpore	897	2,018	92	5	9	—	1,960	6	2,072	843	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Etawah	61	400	62	8	19	—	288	7	384	77	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Furruckabad	133	853	53	4	78	85	567	1	788	198	208	88	6	—	1	182	19	208	88
Moradabad	109	1,523	100	1	17	130	1,133	—	1,381	255	88	130	83	1	17	—	91	192	26
Meerut	187	843	97	2	31	176	450	—	756	274	187	176	109	3	61	125	—	298	65
Saharmpore	40	1,159	66	2	11	115	963	—	1,157	42	11	115	58	1	36	—	—	95	31
	2,277	9,441	885	43	235	864	7,092	15	9,134	2,584	949	874	385	7	155	307	272	1,126	697
BENARES DIVISION :
Allahabad	752	879	149	17	24	429	460	10	1,089	542	116	429	185	18	25	—	2	230	315
Bundeleund, South- ern Division	233	101	2	—	—	—	—	—	2	332	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Bundeleund, North- ern Division	106	340	21	1	7	—	216	23	268	178	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Benares City	951	1,378	539	5	43	246	921	44	1,798	531	164	246	172	21	22	—	21	236	174
Ghazeeepore	653	1,199	292	52	38	70	687	1	1,110	622	238	363	24	—	2	224	151	401	200
Futtehpore	487	202	17	—	—	—	126	3	147	542	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Juanpore	381	945	90	—	7	331	447	—	875	451	343	335	62	2	3	180	13	260	418
Mirzapore	493	770	110	26	24	110	425	63	788	475	71	115	108	17	19	—	9	153	33
	4,056	5,724	1,250	102	143	1,186	3,282	144	6,107	3,673	932	1,488	551	58	71	404	196	1,280	1,140

VII.—STATEMENT of APPEALS, REGULAR and SPECIAL, depending before the SUDDER DEWANNY ADALUT

ANNUAL ABSTRACT REPORT of APPEALS depending before the COURT of SUDDER DEWANNY ADALUT, on the 1st January 1828 and 1829, and of the Number admitted and disposed of during the Year 1828.

	Depending 1st January 1828.	Admitted in last Twelve Months.	Total.	Decreed on Trial.	Dismissed on Default.	Adjusted or withdrawn.	Total.	Depending on the 1st January 1829.	Increase.	Decrease.
Regular Appeals ..	249	121	370	58	3	2	63	307	58	—
Special Appeals ..	220	59	270	82	1	2	85	185	—	35
TOTAL	469	171	640	140	4	4	148	492	58	85

IV.—JUDICIAL.

487

ZILLAH and CITY COURTS in the WESTERN PROVINCES, under the Presidency of Bengal, in the Year 1828.

BEFORE THE SUDDER AMEENS.									BEFORE THE MOONSIFFS.
Depending 1st January 1828.	Admitted or re-admitted during the Year.	Decided on the Merits.	Dismissed for Default.	Adjusted or withdrawn.	Transferred		Total disposed of.	Remaining 1st January 1829.	Depending 1st January 1828.	Admitted or re-admitted during the Year.	Decided on the Merits.	Dismissed for Default.	Adjusted or withdrawn.	Transferred		Total disposed of.	Remaining 1st January 1829.
					To Registers.	To other Jurisdictions.								To Sudder Ameens.	To other Jurisdictions.
140	466	277	40	170	—	—	467	119	200	1,532	961	3	557	—	1	1,522	210
169	446	267	35	168	—	1	473	142	1,481	3,901	2,556	7	942	—	—	3,505	1,077
508	941	550	43	264	2	23	880	569	495	2,161	1,317	79	690	—	54	2,140	516
648	1,960	1,171	97	341	—	—	1,609	999	113	211	196	13	43	—	6	258	66
140	288	156	53	97	—	10	316	112	522	979	552	139	499	—	30	1,220	281
819	757	592	87	209	3	3	894	682	346	838	639	10	223	8	1	871	313
154	1,133	544	38	395	—	11	898	389	539	2,135	981	74	843	—	—	1,898	776
78	575	185	12	245	—	1	443	210	600	2,788	1,610	40	1,059	—	—	2,709	679
238	993	381	14	540	—	—	935	266	66	561	400	8	122	—	—	530	97
2,894	7,529	4,123	419	2,339	5	49	6,935	3,488	4,362	15,106	9,202	373	4,978	8	92	14,053	4,015
369	462	478	104	35	—	14	631	200	1,218	1,051	1,092	73	394	—	19	1,488	701
44	76	58	13	8	—	—	79	41	292	863	643	47	131	—	6	827	326
150	216	174	63	33	—	—	270	96	391	760	541	47	176	—	23	787	361
394	921	683	40	62	—	34	819	496	477	1,877	1,620	86	225	—	39	1,970	364
360	911	705	5	33	—	39	782	489	758	1,820	1,311	50	343	—	9	1,713	865
209	126	131	71	46	—	—	248	87	547	665	485	21	144	—	—	6,00	562
377	627	646	6	32	4	4	692	312	1,207	1,400	1,070	9	139	—	—	1,227	1,380
271	427	450	66	27	—	14	557	141	244	672	404	136	117	—	24	681	235
2,174	3,766	2,325	368	276	4	105	4,078	1,862	5,134	9,108	7,175	469	1,579	—	120	9,312	1,899

at the Beginning and End of 1828, and disposed of during that Year, and of the AMOUNT of PROPERTY in question.

SPECIFICATION of APPEALS, REGULAR and SPECIAL, depending before the COURT of SUDDER DEWANNY ADALUT, on the 1st January 1829.

Not exceeding Rupees	500	18	Amount value Sa. Rs.	3,694
Ditto —	1,600	92	Ditto —	53,247
Ditto —	5,000	81	Ditto —	2,25,127
Ditto —	10,000	130	Ditto —	7,25,396
Exceeding —	10,000	171	Ditto —	1,25,79,544
Total Sicca Rupees				1,35,87,908

IV.

APPENDIX,

No. 5.

continued.

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments of
the Three
Presidencies.

488 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

VIII.—STATEMENT, showing the TOTAL VALUE or AMOUNT, in Sica Rupees, of REGULAR SUITS, whether ORIGINAL or in APPEAL, depending in the several CIVIL COURTS, on the 1st January 1829.

		ORIGINAL SUITS.	APPEALS.	TOTAL.
CALCUTTA DIVISION	Sudder Dewanny Adawlut ..	—	—	1,35,87,008
	Calcutta Provincial Court ..	72,37,156	9,79,904	82,17,060
	Cuttack Commissioners ..	93,756	31,665	1,25,421
	Burdwan	3,67,811	1,31,452	4,99,263
	Cuttack	2,05,095	11,035	2,16,130
	Hooghly	3,61,211	30,720	3,91,931
	Jessore	5,43,374	35,553	5,78,927
	Jungle Mehals	4,91,750	85,167	5,76,917
	Midnapore	3,98,602	37,489	4,36,091
	Nuddeah	3,60,399	22,518	3,82,917
	Suburbs of Calcutta ..	3,02,547	10,098	3,12,645
	Twenty-four Pergunnahs ..	2,37,303	22,402	2,59,705
TOTAL ..		1,05,99,004	13,98,003	1,19,97,007
DACCA DIVISION	Dacca Provincial Court ..	8,85,828	2,32,534	11,18,362
	Backergunge	1,92,127	11,966	2,04,093
	Chittagong	3,15,720	1,02,850	4,18,570
	City Dacca	1,88,663	15,025	2,03,688
	Dacca Jelalpore	1,46,951	17,984	1,64,935
	Mymensingh	4,13,318	70,110	4,83,428
	Sylhet	1,92,571	37,949	2,30,520
	Tipperah	1,54,274	19,276	1,73,550
TOTAL ..		24,89,452	5,07,694	29,97,146
MOORSHEDABAD DIVISION ..	Moorshedabad Provincial Court	95,02,945	3,99,000	99,01,945
	Beerbhoom	2,15,030	35,246	2,50,276
	Bhaugulpore	2,22,711	13,027	2,35,738
	Dinagpore	2,36,501	46,854	2,83,355
	City Moorshedabad	5,23,945	24,733	5,48,678
	Purneah	2,79,298	16,220	2,95,518
	Rajeshahye	3,94,881	11,299	4,06,180
	Rungpore	1,33,960	7,421	1,41,381
	Rungpore Commissioner ..	69,671	1,723	71,394
TOTAL ..		1,15,78,942	5,55,523	1,21,34,465

(continued.)

VIII.—Statement showing the Total Value or Amount, in Sicca Rupees, of Regular Suits, whether Original or in Appeal, depending in the several Civil Courts, on the 1st January 1929—continued.

(2.) Bengal Civil
Statements.

					ORIGINAL SUITS.	APEALS.	TOTAL.
PATNA DIVISION	Patna Provincial Court ..				49,15,783	4,73,329	53,89,112
	Behar				8,70,956	75,643	9,46,599
	City Patna				4,97,710	34,671	5,32,381
	Goruckpore				6,09,979	2,10,068	8,20,047
	Ramghur				1,55,777	7,621	1,63,398
	Sarun				5,16,463	27,350	5,43,813
	Shahabad				5,49,541	21,500	5,71,041
	Tirhoot				11,37,252	1,70,088	13,07,340
TOTAL					92,53,461	10,20,270	1,02,73,731
BENARES DIVISION	Benares Provincial Court ..				4,18,03,050	10,94,047	4,28,97,097
	Allahabad				5,14,087	52,518	5,66,605
	Bundelcund, Southern Division				1,39,284	7,203	1,46,487
	Bundelcund, Northern Division				1,16,553	15,897	1,32,450
	City Benares				5,01,307	27,828	5,29,135
	Ghazee-pore				4,31,601	36,624	4,68,225
	Futtehpore				2,32,529	21,511	2,54,040
	Jounpore				4,35,259	31,424	4,66,683
	Mirzapore				3,53,816	29,405	3,83,221
	TOTAL					4,45,27,486	13,16,457
BAREILLY DIVISION	Bareilly Provincial Court ..				7,89,429	7,46,940	15,36,369
	Agrah				76,774	4,976	81,750
	Allighur				2,41,782	21,419	2,63,201
	Bareilly				3,15,472	28,246	3,43,718
	Cawnpore				5,15,590	97,315	6,12,905
	Etawah				91,050	3,422	94,472
	Furruckabad				1,91,475	9,815	2,01,290
	Moradabad				1,79,264	14,490	1,93,754
	Meerut				1,77,440	21,196	1,98,636
	Seharunpore				35,252	1,153	36,405
TOTAL					26,13,528	9,48,972	35,62,500

(continued.)

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments of
the Three
Presidencies.

490

APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

VIII.—Statement, showing the Total Value or Amount, in Sicca Rupees, of Regular Suits, whether Original or in Appeal, depending in the several Civil Courts, on the 1st January 1829—continued.

GENERAL ABSTRACT.

	TOTAL AMOUNT of SUDDER DEWANNY ADAWLUT, PROVINCIAL, ZILLAH and CITY COURTS.		ZILLAH and CITY COURTS, including SUDDER AMEENS and MOONSIFFS.			PROVINCIAL COURTS.
	ORIGINAL SUITS.	APPEALS.	TOTAL.	ORIGINAL SUITS.	APPEALS.	TOTAL.	ORIGINAL SUITS.	APPEALS.	TOTAL.
Sudder Dewanny Adawlut	—	—	1,35,87,008	—	—	—	—	—	—
Calcutta Division	1,05,99,004	13,98,003	1,19,97,007	33,61,848	4,18,099	37,79,947	72,37,156	9,79,904	82,17,060
Dacca ... ditto	24,89,452	5,07,694	29,97,146	16,03,624	2,75,160	18,78,784	8,85,828	2,32,534	11,18,362
Moorshedabad ditto	1,15,78,942	5,55,523	1,21,34,465	20,75,997	1,56,523	22,32,520	95,02,945	3,99,000	99,01,945
Patna ... ditto	92,53,461	10,20,270	1,02,73,731	43,37,678	5,46,941	48,84,619	49,15,783	4,73,329	53,89,112
Benares ... ditto	4,45,27,486	13,16,437	4,58,43,943	27,24,436	2,22,410	29,46,846	4,18,03,050	10,94,047	4,28,97,097
Bareilly ... ditto	26,13,528	9,48,972	35,62,500	18,24,999	2,02,032	20,26,131	7,89,429	7,46,940	15,36,369
GRAND TOTAL.....	8,10,61,873	57,46,919	10,03,95,800	1,59,27,682	18,21,165	1,77,48,847	6,51,34,191	39,25,754	6,90,59,945
Deduct Amount of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, } to adjust Amount of Grand Total			1,35,87,008
			8,68,08,792
N.B.—Total Amount of last General Abstract, fur- } nished up to 1st January 1828, being			9,98,71,997
Ditto 1st January 1829, being			10,03,95,800
			5,24,703

IV.—JUDICIAL.

491

IV. APPENDIX, No. 5.

(2.) Bengal Civil
Statements.

IX.—GENERAL ABSTRACT STATEMENT OF REGULAR SUITS, whether ORIGINAL or in APPEAL, depending on the 1st January 1828 and 1820 respectively, in the several Classes of Courts in the Western and Lower Provinces.

	DEPENDENT on the 1st January 1828.			DEPENDENT on the 1st January 1820.			TOTAL Decrease and Increase in the Year 1828.
	Western Provinces.	Lower Provinces.	TOTAL.	Western Provinces.	Lower Provinces.	TOTAL.	Decrease.	Increase.
Sudder Dewanny Adawlut.....	—	—	469	—	—	492	—	23
Provincial Courts	1,566	2,288	3,854	1,650	2,356	4,006	—	152
Zillah and City Judges	6,333	21,523	27,856	6,257	20,976	27,233	623	—
Ditto Registers	1,881	8,511	10,392	1,837	8,965	10,802	—	410
Ditto Sudder Ameens	5,068	29,968	35,036	5,350	30,944	36,294	—	1,258
Moonsiffs	9,496	51,389	60,885	9,714	51,603	61,317	—	432
TOTAL.....	24,344	113,679	138,492	24,808	114,844	140,144	623	2,275

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments of
the Three
Presidencies.

492 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

X.—STATEMENT of REGULAR CAUSES, ORIGINAL SUITS, and APPEALS depending, admitted, and disposed of in the several PROVINCIAL COURTS of the Western and Lower Provinces, in each Year, since the Courts have consisted of four Judges, viz. from 1815.

PROVINCIAL COURTS.	YEARS.	Depending at com- mencement of each Year.	Admitted in each Year.	Disposed of in each Year as specified.	Decided on Trial.	Dismissed on Default.	Adjusted or withdrawn.
CALCUTTA PROVINCIAL COURT	1815	970	183	209	166	15	28
	1816	944	221	218	183	3	32
	1817	958	144	253	175	22	36
	1818	849	189	395	307	23	20
	1819	643	169	208	176	11	21
	1820	604	185	222	186	16	20
	1821	566	292	230	173	24	33
	1822	628	283	186	126	26	34
	1823	725	217	130	111	9	18
	1824	804	261	73	55	5	13
	1825	992	317	237	187	20	30
	1826	1,072	361	270	184	10	31
	1827	1,163	254	307	231	28	48
	1828	1,113	318	293	219	24	50
	1829	1,099	—	—	—	—	—
DACCA PROVINCIAL COURT	1815	1,051	217	257	214	13	30
	1816	1,011	193	177	144	13	20
	1817	1,027	287	260	228	8	24
	1818	1,054	221	592	462	70	52
	1819	683	141	553	436	19	98
	1820	271	148	307	265	10	32
	1821	112	163	152	132	1	19
	1822	123	182	170	147	—	23
	1823	135	141	135	117	2	16
	1824	141	136	110	95	1	14
	1825	167	129	136	115	2	19
	1826	160	160	107	93	—	14
	1827	213	155	147	120	1	26
	1828	221	159	94	80	—	14
	1829	286	—	—	—	—	—
MOORSHEDABAD PROVINCIAL COURT ..	1815	340	84	127	71	35	21
	1816	297	89	131	95	24	12
	1817	254	114	256	213	31	12
	1818	112	199	170	131	22	12
	1819	141	175	146	118	17	11
	1820	170	182	147	115	20	12
	1821	205	125	145	112	17	16
	1822	185	137	136	106	20	10
	1823	186	125	136	109	20	7
	1824	175	103	125	101	12	12
	1825	153	174	86	67	11	8
	1826	241	169	71	49	16	6
	1827	339	186	190	153	29	8
	1828	335	182	176	136	24	16
	1829	340	—	—	—	—	—

(continued..)

X.—Statement of Regular Causes, Original Suits, and Appeals depending, admitted, and disposed of in the several Provincial Courts of the Western and Lower Provinces, in each Year, since the Courts have consisted of Four Judges, viz. from 1815.—continued.

(2.) Bengal Civil
Statements.

PROVINCIAL COURTS.	YEARS.	Depending at com- mencement of each Year.	Admitted in each Year.	Disposed of in each Year, as specified.	Decided on Trial.	Dismissed on Default.	Adjusted or withdrawn.
PATNA PROVINCIAL COURT	1815	783	170	220	189	7	22
	1816	718	250	229	207	—	21
	1817	739	165	267	233	11	23
	1818	637	222	306	269	22	15
	1819	553	215	240	214	6	20
	1820	528	205	174	140	13	21
	1821	559	178	186	143	7	26
	1822	551	202	334	284	29	20
	1823	419	206	171	147	4	20
	1824	454	280	221	190	18	13
	1825	513	342	196	150	5	32
	1826	659	249	223	166	33	24
	1827	683	251	348	261	60	27
	1828	586	229	211	154	30	27
	1829	604	—	—	—	—	—
BAREILLY PROVINCIAL COURT	1815	105	120	114	107	3	4
	1816	111	74	115	108	—	7
	1817	70	99	115	111	—	4
	1818	54	131	119	117	—	2
	1819	66	208	128	117	2	9
	1820	146	231	226	220	2	5
	1821	151	205	237	219	3	11
	1822	119	168	93	81	2	9
	1823	194	151	88	74	—	14
	1824	257	188	99	91	2	6
	1825	346	105	91	67	14	10
	1826	360	201	142	128	1	13
	1827	419	203	120	92	18	10
	1828	502	212	136	117	4	15
	1829	577	—	—	—	—	—
BENARES PROVINCIAL COURT	1815	570	235	181	156	10	15
	1816	624	253	344	203	—	41
	1817	533	328	254	220	20	14
	1818	607	325	315	295	12	8
	1819	617	333	220	192	10	18
	1820	730	312	212	182	6	24
	1821	830	341	199	174	8	17
	1822	972	267	166	127	22	17
	1823	1,094	272	364	301	35	28
	1824	1,002	501	297	239	33	25
	1825	1,206	262	478	350	28	24
	1826	990	320	241	186	28	27
	1827	1,069	286	291	238	27	26
	1828	1,064	309	300	236	43	21
	1829	1,073	—	—	—	—	—

IV.
APPENDIX.
No. 5.
continued.

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishment of
the Three
Presidencies.

494 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

X.—Statement of Regular Causes, Original Suits, and Appeals depending, admitted, and disposed of in the several Provincial Courts of the Western and Lower Provinces, in each year, since the Courts have consisted of Four Judges, viz. from 1815.—continued.

NOTE:

TRANSFERRED to other JURISDICTIONS.

CALCUTTA Provincial Court	..	in	..	}	1817	20
					1818	45
					1826	45
					1827	2
					1828	39
DACCA	ditto	..	in	..	1818	8
MOORSHEDABAD	ditto	..	in	..	1818	5
					1828	1
PATNA	ditto	..	in	..	1815	2
					1816	112
					1822	1
BAREILLY	ditto	..	in	..	1820	1
					1821	4
					1822	1
					1828	1
BENARES	ditto	..	in	..	1825	78

IV.—JUDICIAL.

495

IV.
APPENDIX.
No. 5.
continued.

XI.—STATEMENT of the Total Number of REGULAR SUITS and APPEALS depending before the several Courts, both in the Lower and Western Provinces, on the 1st of January 1815, compared with the Number depending on the 1st of January 1829.

(2.) Bengal Civil Statements.

	On the 1st of January 1815.	On the 1st of January 1829.	INCREASE.	DECREASE.
Sudder Dewanny Adawlut	415	492	77	—
Provincial Courts	3,830	4,006	176	—
Judges and Registers	30,924	38,035	7,111	—
Sudder Amceens and Moonsiffs	99,700	97,611	—	2,089
TOTAL	134,869	140,144	5,275	2,089

XII.—STATEMENT showing the PERIOD which would ELAPSE before the DECISION of REGULAR SUITS depending on the 1st January 1829, if calculated according to the Number disposed of in the several Courts during the Year 1828.

	Depending on the 1st January 1829.	Disposed of during the Year 1828.	Average Period which would elapse, be- fore the Decision of the Number of Suits depending in each Court, according to the foregoing Statement of the Number dis- posed of in the past Year.
Sudder Dewanny Adawlut	492	148	3 years and 4 months.
Provincial Courts	4,006	1,236	3 years and 3 months.
Zillah Judges	27,233	8,989	3 years.
Registers	10,802	4,427	2 years and 5 months.
Sudder Amceens	36,294	44,784	10 months.
Moonsiffs	61,317	114,360	6 months and 15 days.
TOTAL	140,144	173,944

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments of
the Three
Presidencies.

496 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

XIII.—STATEMENT intended to show the PERIOD WHICH WOULD ELAPSE before 1st January 1829, if calculated according to the Average

	Disposed of during the Year 1824.	Disposed of during the Year 1825.	Disposed of during the Year 1826.	Disposed of during the Year 1827.
Sudder Dewanny Adawlut	122	99	98	118
Provincial Courts	932	1,155	1,053	1,415
Judges	9,305	9,404	11,030	9,681
Registers	4,575	5,195	6,154	6,022
Sudder Amceens	44,880	44,330	45,041	45,986
Moonsiffs	105,119	106,321	113,285	113,100
TOTAL	164,933	166,504	176,661	176,342

the DECISION of the REGULAR SUITS depending in the CIVIL COURTS on the Number of Decisions passed during the last Five Years.

Disposed of during the Year 1829.	TOTAL disposed of during the Years 1824 to 1828.	Number disposed of in each Year on the Average of the Five Years.	Depending on the 1st January 1829.	Average Period which would elapse be- fore the Decision of Suits in each Court, according to the foregoing Statement of the Number disposed of in the past Five Years.
148	585	117	492	4 years and about 3 months.
1,236	5,791	1,158	4,006	3 years and about 6 months.
8,989	48,409	9,682	27,233	2 years and about 10 months.
4,427	26,373	5,275	10,802	2 years and about 1 month.
44,784	2,95,021	45,004	36,294	About 10 months.
114,860	552,205	110,441	61,317	About 7 months.
173,944	858,384	171,677	140,144

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

498 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

XIV.—AN ABSTRACT STATEMENT of SUMMARY SUITS DISPOSED OF during

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments of
the Three
Presidencies.

BAREILLY DIVISION:

Bareilly Provincial Court	41
Agrah	118	1	16	135
Alligurh	6	7	...	13
Bareilly	130	57	78	265
Cawnpore	508	1	28	537
Etawah	37	1	16	54
Farruckabad	57	57
Moorshedabad	97	1	3	101
Meerut	24	4	31	59
Scharunpore	6	3	14	23

TOTAL.....

BENARES DIVISION:

Benares Provincial Court	602
Allahabad	394	...	34	428
Bundelcund, Southern Division	55	6	25	86
Bundelcund, Northern Division	252	7	31	290
City Benares	162	...	119	281
Ghazee pore	1,617	144	245	2,006
Futtehpore	263	5	41	308
Jounpore	1,059	139	650	1,848
Mirzapore	111	4	16	131

TOTAL.....

CALCUTTA DIVISION:

Lower Provinces:

Calcutta Provincial Court	24
Cuttack Commissioner	1
Cuttack	16	2	33	51
Burdwan	1,139	2	301	1,442
Hooghly	285	7	3	295
Jessore	1,087	...	162	1,249
Jungle Mehals	900	58	233	1,246
Midnapore	1,209	13	1	1,223
Nuddeah	503	101	351	955
Suburbs of Calcutta	142	...	1	145
Twenty-four Pergunnahs	709	77	19	805

TOTAL.....

DACCA DIVISION:

Dacca Provincial Court	23
Backergunge	34	34
Chittagong	341	14	230	575
City Dacca	46	...	7	53
Dacca Jelalpore	515	3	55	573
Mymensingh	446	26	24	473
Sylhet	682	...	15	723
Tipperah	237	...	14	251

TOTAL.....

DEPENDING on the 1st January 1928.
Land Rent.	Dispossession.	Miscellaneous.	TOTAL.
...	41
118	1	16	135
6	7	...	13
130	57	78	265
508	1	28	537
37	1	16	54
57	57
97	1	3	101
24	4	31	59
6	3	14	23
983	75	186	1,285
...	602
394	...	34	428
55	6	25	86
252	7	31	290
162	...	119	281
1,617	144	245	2,006
263	5	41	308
1,059	139	650	1,848
111	4	16	131
3,913	305	1,161	5,080
...	24
...	1
16	2	33	51
1,139	2	301	1,442
285	7	3	295
1,087	...	162	1,249
900	58	233	1,246
1,209	13	1	1,223
503	101	351	955
142	...	1	145
709	77	19	805
5,990	260	1,099	7,274
...	23
34	34
341	14	230	575
46	...	7	53
515	3	55	573
446	26	24	473
682	...	15	723
237	...	14	251
2,301	43	335	2,702

the Year 1828, and DEPENDING on the 1st of January 1828 and 1829, respectively.

(2.) Bengal Civil
Statements.

Disposed of during the Year 1828.				DEPENDING on the 1st January 1829.
Land Rent.	Dispossession.	Miscellaneous.	TOTAL.	Land Rent.	Dispossession.	Miscellaneous.	TOTAL.
...	19	51
14	...	3	44	76	1	10	87
32	2	43	77	12	6	16	34
71	24	79	174	103	55	94	252
423	...	21	444	233	3	75	311
120	1	45	166	40	1	36	77
...	57	57
26	2	...	28	67	1	2	70
18	1	14	33	16	7	40	63
2	5	19	26	19	...	4	23
733	35	224	1,011	623	74	277	1,025
...	181	605
678	...	26	704	507	...	35	542
...	...	1	1	99	6	43	148
1	...	10	11	274	7	37	318
239	...	161	400	323	...	109	432
1,261	3	18	1,282	1,613	214	275	2,102
...	...	3	3	453	5	51	509
233	2	19	254	1,183	153	724	2,060
147	2	98	247	37	3	29	69
2,559	7	336	3,833	4,489	388	1,303	6,785
...	39	34
...	4	3
16	2	46	64	31	31
1,287	2	5,771	7,060	876	...	191	1,067
1,234	9	8	1,251	159	...	1	160
601	...	58	659	3,528	...	235	3,763
1,154	28	101	1,281	691	79	364	1,134
147	1	...	148	1,937	13	1	1,951
209	33	141	473	391	96	366	853
169	...	22	191	102	102
976	9	32	1,017	684	92	89	865
5,881	84	6,179	12,187	8,368	280	1,278	9,963
...	23	17
61	...	18	79	44	44
316	14	356	686	685	10	158	853
41	...	30	71	32	...	1	33
713	...	42	755	489	...	62	551
479	1	4	484	405	2	22	429
170	21	...	197	342	6	18	366
36	...	334	370	200	200
1,822	36	784	2,665	2,197	18	261	2,493

(continued..)

IV. 500 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

APPENDIX.
No. 5.
continued.

XIV.—Abstract Statement of Summary Suits disposed of during the Year 1828.

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments of
the Three
Presidencies.

DEPENDING on the 1st January 1828.
	Land Rent.	Dispossession.	Miscellaneous.	TOTAL.
MOORSHEDABAD DIVISION :
Moorshedabad Provincial Court	182	7
Beerbhoom	182	120	45	347
Bauglepore	174	6	10	190
Dinagepore	285	62	41	388
City Moorshedabad	320	59	...	379
Purneah	849	2	...	851
Rajeshahye	342	10	8	360
Rungpore	428	...	43	471
Rungpore Commissioner.....	72	12	49	133
TOTAL.....	2,652	271	196	3,126
PATNA DIVISION :
Patna Provincial Court	28
Behar	908	146	...	1,054
City Patna	182	4	...	186
Goruckpore	145	144	147	436
Ramghur	399	...	143	542
Sarun	77	2	85	164
Shahabad	15	25	83	123
Tirhoot.....	116	48	...	164
TOTAL.....	1,842	369	458	2,697

GENERAL ABSTRACT.

		DEPENDING on the 1st January 1828.
		Land Rent.	Dispossession.	Miscellaneous.	TOTAL.
DIVISIONS :
BAREILLY	983	75	186	1,285
BENARES	3,913	305	1,161	5,980
CALCUTTA, including Cuttack Commis- sioner	5,990	260	1,099	7,374
DACCA	2,301	43	855	2,702
MOORSHEDABAD	2,652	271	196	3,126
PATNA	1,842	369	458	2,697
GRAND TOTAL.....		17,681	1,323	3,433	23,164

Bareilly Provincial Court	41
Benares Provincial Court	601
Calcutta, including Cuttack Commissioner	25
Dacca Provincial Court.....	23
Moorshedabad Provincial Court	7
Patna Provincial Court	28
TOTAL		725

IV.—JUDICIAL.

501

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

and depending on the 1st of January 1828 and 1829, respectively—continued.

(2.) Bengal Civil
Statements.

DISPOSED OF during the Year 1828.				DEPENDING on the 1st January 1829.
Land Rent.	Dispossession.	Miscellaneous.	TOTAL.	Land Rent.	Dispossession.	Miscellaneous.	TOTAL.
...	19	3
190	45	10	245	261	93	26	380
142	1	2	145	153	6	10	169
317	20	566	903	329	51	60	440
438	47	...	485	138	55	...	193
775	2	...	777	1,026	1,026
165	...	5	170	253	10	4	267
580	...	44	624	32	...	29	61
143	13	80	236	95	2	14	111
2,750	128	707	3,604	2,287	217	143	2,650
...	29	14
105	61	...	166	1,213	88	...	1,301
35	...	875	910	230	4	...	234
...	91	97	188	204	159	158	521
377	...	100	477	360	...	129	489
46	2	101	149	108	8	139	255
...	66	900	966	186	86	39	311
776	...	9	785	296	49	...	345
1,339	220	2,082	3,670	2,597	394	465	3,470

... .. GENERAL ABSTRACT.

DISPOSED OF during the Year 1828.				DEPENDING on the 1st January 1829.
Land Rent.	Dispossession.	Miscellaneous.	TOTAL.	Land Rent.	Dispossession.	Miscellaneous.	TOTAL.
733	35	224	1,011	623	74	277	1,025
2,559	7	336	3,083	4,489	388	1,303	6,785
5,881	84	6,179	12,187	8,368	280	1,278	9,963
1,822	36	784	2,665	2,197	18	261	2,493
2,750	128	707	3,604	2,287	217	143	2,650
1,339	220	2,082	3,670	2,597	394	465	3,470
15,084	510	10,312	26,220	20,561	1,371	3,727	26,386
...	19	51
...	181	605
...	43	37
...	23	17
...	19	3
...	29	14
...	314	727

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.
Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments
of the Three
Presidencies.

502

APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

XV.—STATEMENT OF SUMMARY SUITS in the several CIVIL COURTS in the Western and Lower Provinces, on the 1st January 1829, and referred to the Collectors for Adjudication, and the Number DECIDED and DEFENDING.

	TOTAL under Reference during the Year.	Adjusted and Decided by the Collector during the last 12 Months.	Remaining under Reference to the Collectors on the 1st January 1829.
Agrah ..	60	109	65
Aligurh ..	10	49	10
Bareilly ..	3	4	8
Cawnpore ..	288	206	76
Etawah ..	33	69	—
Furruckabad ..	57	—	57
Moradabad ..	1	10	3
Meerut ..	15	16	7
Saharunpore ..	5	6	15
Allahabad ..	5	72	117
Bundlecund, Southern Division ..	26	65	27
Bundlecund, Northern ditto ..	132	94	107
City Benares ..	—	23	7
Ghazee-pore ..	26	43	78
Juanpore ..	2	13	12
Burdwan ..	690	2,070	274
Hooghly ..	66	1,202	87
Jessore ..	976	1,431	364
Jungle Mehals ..	10	171	98
Midnapore ..	12	276	36
Nuddeah ..	22	456	65

IV.—JUDICIAL.

503

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.
(2.) Bengal
Civil Statements.

Suburbs of Calcutta	106	284	68
Twenty-four Pergunnahs	68	163	95
Backergunge	23	75	28
Chittagong	220	701	339
City Dacca	3	93	15
Dacca Jelalpoore	7	11	—
Mymensingh	368	360	203
Sylhet	—	230	17
Tipperah	202	521	124
Beerbhoom	30	269	103
Bhaugulpore	1	3	6
Dinagore	—	9	4
City Moorsshedabad	—	501	143
Rajeshahiye	13	55	—
Behar	616	607	949
City Patna	144	245	11
Goruckpore	145	212	203
Ramghur	—	23	35
Sarun	59	88	49
Shahabad	15	374	186
Tirhoot	45	238	—
TOTAL	4,504	11,446	4,091

IV. 3 5 2

MIRZAPORE, FUTTEHPORE, CUTTACK, } No Cases referred to the Collectors.
PURNEAH and RUNGPORE

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments of
the Three
Presidencies.

504

APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

XVI.—TABLE, showing the NUMBER of SUITS INSTITUTED and DECIDED (within the Year) in the SUDDER ADAWLUT and PROVINCIAL COURTS, and in the COURTS of the ZILLAH JUDGES, REGISTERS, SUDDER AMEENS and MOONSIFFS, and the NUMBER DEPENDING at the End of the Year, with the average DELAY of Judicature in all the Courts, during the Years 1805, 1810, 1815, 1820, and 1825.

	SUDDER ADAWLUT.				PROVINCIAL COURT.				JUDGES' COURTS.
	Instituted.	Decided.	Depending.	Delay.	Instituted.	Decided.	Depending.	Delay.	Instituted.	Decided.	Depending.	Delay.
				Months.				Months.				Months.
1805 ..	58	31	79	30½	1,878	757	1,283	20½	14,943	11,119	15,291	26½
1810 ..	112	18	198	132½	1,779	804	2,909	44½	11,300	10,407	20,341	23½
1815 ..	189	40	467	140	608	594	3,705	75	6,254	3,146	16,898	64½
1820 ..	177	174	337	23	1,347	1,327	2,429	13	9,404	6,422	13,875	26
1825 ..	142	99	425	51	1,828	1,155	3,519	36½	12,256	9,404	24,693	31½
	REGISTERS.				SUDDER AMEENS.				MOONSIFFS.
	Instituted.	Decided.	Depending.	Delay.	Instituted.	Decided.	Depending.	Delay.	Instituted.	Decided.	Depending.	Delay.
				Months.				Months.				Months.
9,440	7,753	9,180	14½	7,160	6,395	7,423	14	226,384	234,126	87,624	4½	.. 1805
8,456	7,547	7,853	12½	13,447	11,750	9,798	10	167,110	166,566	92,502	6½	.. 1810
5,931	5,101	9,262	21½	20,182	13,769	28,594	24½	83,729	59,249	58,235	11½	.. 1815
8,633	8,259	11,745	17	46,471	43,226	30,489	8	92,865	103,167	44,579	5	.. 1820
7,051	5,195	11,698	27	48,830	44,330	36,101	9½	111,240	106,321	55,004	6	.. 1825

*

(3.)—BENGAL CRIMINAL STATEMENTS.

LIST.

	Page
I.—STATEMENT of Crimes ascertained to have been committed in the several Zillahs, the Number of Persons supposed to have been concerned, and the computed Amount of Property stolen and recovered, in the year 1813; also the Number of Persons concerned in those Crimes, who were apprehended and brought to Trial in the Western Provinces	506
II.—A similar STATEMENT, as to the Lower Provinces, for the year 1828, including the Number apprehended and brought to Trial; also the extent of the Zillahs in square miles, and their Population in 1822	508
III.—A similar STATEMENT, as to the Western Provinces, for 1828, except that neither the Number of Persons supposed to have been concerned, nor the Number apprehended and brought to Trial, is stated; the Extent of each Zillah is added, and the Amount of the Population of the Western Provinces	510
IV.—STATEMENT of the Number of Persons committed for Trial before the Courts of Circuit, and the Number convicted; also of the Number apprehended and punished by the Magistrates for minor Offences, in the several Zillahs of the Lower Provinces, in 1828: the Offences are specified in this Statement	512
V.—A similar STATEMENT as to the Western Provinces	514
VI.—STATEMENT of the Number of Foujdarry Cases referred, under Regulation III. 1821, to the Law Officers and Sudder Ameens of the several Zillahs in the Western Provinces, and decided by them, in 1827 and 1828	516
VII.—STATEMENT of the Number of Persons convicted before the Nizamut Adawlut (specifying their Crimes), and of the Sentences passed by that Court, in each year, from 1816 to 1827 inclusive	518
VIII.—ABSTRACT of the Returns of Persons sentenced to Punishment by the Court of Circuit, without reference to the Nizamut Adawlut, in each year, from 1816 to 1826 inclusive	520
IX.—ABSTRACT of Returns of Persons punished without reference, by the Zillah Magistrates and Joint Magistrates, and their Assistants, from 1824 to 1827 inclusive	522
X.—STATEMENT of the Number of Prisoners in each of the Zillah and City Gaols on the 31st of December 1828, and of the Causes of their Confinement; also a comparative STATEMENT of the Number of Prisoners within each Division on the 31st of December 1827 and the 31st of December 1828	524
XI.—STATEMENT of the Number of Prisoners, in the Lower Provinces, employed in private Labour, agreeably to the orders of the Nizamut Adawlut; showing the Amount gained by their Labour, and the Proportion paid to the Prisoners	528

I.—STATEMENT of CRIMES ascertained to have been COMMITTED in the several ZILLAHs under the Presidency of Bengal, in 1813; the Number of PERSONS SUPPOSED TO HAVE BEEN CONCERNED; the Number APPREHENDED AND COMMITTED FOR TRIAL in the WESTERN PROVINCES;* and the COMPUTED AMOUNT of PROPERTY STOLEN and RECOVERED.

	Crimes ascertained to have been committed.											Computed Number of Persons concerned.	Value of Property Stolen.	Value of Property Recovered.
	Dacoity :				Murder.	Homicide, not amounting to Murder.	Arson.	Highway Robbery.	Burglary.	Thefts, exceeding 10 Rupees, or attended with aggravating Circumstances.	Receiving Stolen Property.				Violent Affrays.
	With Murder.	With Torture or Wounding.	Simple, and River Dacoity.	TOTAL.
CALCUTTA DIVISION :
Burdwan	1	3	10	14	2	3	...	1	42	71	...	1	543	7,472	1,383
Jungle Mehals	1	1	2	6	2	...	7	86	102	1	...	247	4,087	1,886
Midnapore	7	18	25	11	4	108	18	5	1	910	8,695	231
Cuttack	15	7	15	11	...	5	418	2,132	921
Jessore	3	...	3	4	2	142	13	1	...	266	10,212	942
Nuddea	1	3	4	8	5	...	1	342	42	1	3	647	11,841	517
Hooghly	1	26	36	63	4	3	118	15	2	6	1,208	16,212	132
Chandernagore	1	1	1	13	8	26	4,344	13
Twenty-four Pergunnahs	11	29	40	17	9	229	44	2	56	2,096	7,884	1,291
TOTAL.....	2	52	98	152	68	22	...	22	1,095	370	12	72	6,361	72,879	6,616
PATNA DIVISION :
Ranghur	3	1	1	5	11	2	...	15	155	85	7	...	635	15,971	1,023
Behar	1	1	7	4	...	5	450	203	10	2	686	11,352	1,550
Tirhoot	1	3	4	5	4	...	2	803	119	1	1	2,074	23,216	365
Sarun	1	5	6	7	12	...	5	219	24	1	24	1,215	14,650	287
Shahabad	1	1	6	1	...	5	220	10	...	4	802	7,029	226
Patna City	1	2	3	1	2	...	1	274	64	2	4	633	13,690	1,565
TOTAL.....	4	4	12	20	37	25	...	33	2,121	505	21	35	6,045	85,908	5,016
MOORSHEDABAD DIVISION :
Bhangulpore	7	4	11	1	4	...	3	83	89	3	1	763	16,249	795
Purneah	5	13	21	39	13	1	...	1	826	31	3	1	2,026	29,528	1,179
Dinapore	3	11	36	50	1	177	22	...	4	1,166	8,406	868
Rungpore	9	13	23	45	8	5	...	3	180	16	4	3	1,916	10,387	563
Rajeshahye	3	14	20	37	5	4	...	6	185	41	1	3	889	15,373	3,249
Beerbhoom	1	1	3	5	6	5	4	8	78	14	1	...	120	5,968	706
Moorshedabad City	1	2	6	9	8	7	...	3	375	182	1	8	737	40,996	459
TOTAL.....	22	61	113	206	42	26	4	24	1,904	395	13	20	7,626	1,26,907	7,189
DACCA DIVISION :
Mymensing	1	19	43	63	9	1	40	4	...	4	2,235	11,918	396
Sylhet	3	1	4	...	2	1	...	88	2	199	3,833	969
Tipperah	1	17	18	...	5	64	21	2	...	358	6,225	847
Chittagong	2	3	5	3	2	11	6	130	5,316	216
Buckergunge	2	5	13	20	11	...	3	2	104	5	...	3	756	13,261	1,223
Dacca Jelalpoore	4	4	3	216	68	1	1	446	7,466	351
Dacca City	2	11	13	6	1	99	95	8	2	463	8,650	934
TOTAL.....	3	32	92	127	32	10	4	3	653	201	11	10	4,587	62,438	4,936
TOTAL of LOWER PROVINCES	31	149	315	505	179	83	8	82	5,773	1,471	57	137	24,619	348,132	24,387

* The Returns from the Lower Provinces do not state the Numbers apprehended and committed.

(continued..)

IV.—JUDICIAL.

507

I.—Statement of Crimes ascertained to have been committed in the several Zillahs under the Presidency of Bengal, in 1818; the Number of Persons supposed to have been concerned; the Number apprehended and committed for Trial in the Western Provinces; and the computed Amount of the Property Stolen and Recovered—continued.

	Crimes ascertained to have been committed.											Number of Persons			Value of Property
	Dacoity:				Murder.	Murder by Thugs.	Highway Robbery.	Burglary.	Thefts.	Receiving Stolen Goods.	Violent Affrays.	Computed to have been concerned.	Apprehended.	Committed for Trial.	Stolen.	Recovered.
	With Murder.	With Wounding.	Simple and River Dacoity.	TOTAL.
BAREILLY DIVISION.
Cawnpore.....	1	2	...	3	23	10	33	500	71	...	12	685	415	57	Rupcs. 27,079	Rupcs. 2,328
Furruckabad.....	...	1	...	1	13	1	11	180	772	...	18	2,113	1,064	126	30,160	9,090
Etawah.....	2	2	23	5	27	474	1,243	...	4	1,747	1,379	94	41,278	5,066
Agrah	1	2	1	4	25	...	81	171	20	727	171	100	15,470	2,726
Allyghur	12	4	92	498	1,951	...	2	4,401	1,716	143	29,531	5,788
Saharunpore, South } Division	10	22	1	33	18	...	162	489	684	...	8	1,962	591	31	unknown.
Ditto, North Division	9	...	23	205	454	...	2	469	207	41	22,852	1,423
Moradabad	13	25	20	58	32	...	77	397	986	2	29	2,739	487	60	53,574	12,662
Barcilly.....	6	14	13	33	32	...	39	365	1,925	...	29	3,337	927	91	39,405	2,116
TOTAL	33	66	35	134	187	20	555	3,239	8,716	2	104	18,180	6,987	746	2,59,353	41,111
BENARES DIVISION.
Bundelcund	2	3	...	5	16	19	59	175	287	...	38	1,642	737	153	21,820	804
Allahabad.....	...	5	2	7	8	10	18	135	686	3	8	1,305	537	144	27,116	864
Mirzapore.....	...	1	2	3	19	...	7	170	17	...	4	1,556	195	88	26,066	2,193
Juanpore	3	10	4	17	8	...	15	142	407	...	6	2,526	354	8	15,813	650
Goruckpore	1	4	4	9	25	...	13	56	204	...	12	26,253	848	36	14,954	1,424
Benares.....	1	1	6	...	9	272	203	791	506	119	92,317	11,535
Ghazee pore	1	7	...	8	10	...	15	148	444	3	18	2,370	1,077	96	14,636	1,874
TOTAL	7	31	13	51	92	29	138	1,098	2,248	6	86	36,443	4,254	644	2,12,726	19,347
TOTAL of WESTERN PROVINCES }	40	97	48	185	279	49	693	4,337	10,964	8	190	54,623	11,241	1,390	4,72,079	60,458

II.—STATEMENT of CRIMES ascertained, by the Police Officers or otherwise, to have been COMMITTED in the
HAVE BEEN CONCERNED, the Number APPREHENDED AND BROUGHT

ZILLAHS.	Dacoity :				Highway Robbery, Burglary, Cattle Stealing, and
					With Murder.				With Wounding.
	With Murder.	With Torture or Wounding.	Simple.	Total.	Highway Robbery.	Burglary.	Cattle-stealing.	Theft.	Highway Robbery.	Burglary.	Cattle-stealing.	Theft.
CALCUTTA DIVISION :
Burdwan	1	3	15	19	2	—	—	1	1	—	—	—
Jungle Melahs	—	—	5	6	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—
On the River	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Midnapore	—	7	11	18	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—
Cuttack	—	4	2	6	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	3
Jessore	—	3	2	5	—	—	—	—	—	5	—	—
Nuddeah	—	—	7	7	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
On the River	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Hooghly	4	1	—	5	1	1	—	—	1	—	—	—
On the River	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Twenty-four Pergunnahs	—	3	7	10	—	—	—	1	2	2	—	—
On the River	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Suburbs of Calcutta	—	—	3	3	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
	5	53	53	79	3	1	—	5	4	8	—	3
PATNA DIVISION :
Ramghur	2	1	5	8	—	—	—	1	1	—	—	—
Behar	—	3	—	3	2	—	—	3	—	—	—	—
Tirhoot	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Sarun	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	2	—	—	—
On the River	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Shahabad	1	—	—	1	1	—	—	—	6	1	—	6
On the River	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	1	—	—	—
Patna	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
	3	4	5	12	4	—	—	6	10	1	—	6
MOORSHEDABAD DIVISION :
Bhaugulpore	—	4	1	5	—	—	—	2	—	1	1	—
Purneah	2	6	—	8	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Dinagepore	1	1	8	10	4	—	—	1	—	2	—	—
On the River	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Rungpore	—	1	2	4	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—
On the River	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Rajeshahaye	1	8	11	23	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—
On the River	—	—	3	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Beerbhoom	2	3	5	10	—	—	—	2	—	—	—	1
Moorshedabad	—	2	—	2	1	—	—	—	—	1	—	—
	6	25	31	62	6	—	—	5	1	5	1	1
DACCA DIVISION :
Mymensing	1	—	5	6	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—
On the River	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Sylhet	—	1	2	4	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
On the River	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—
Tipperah	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
On the River	—	—	2	2	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Chittagong	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—
Backergunge	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
On the River	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Dacca Jelalpore	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—
Dacca	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
On the River	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
	2	1	11	14	—	—	—	—	—	4	—	—
TOTAL.....	16	51	100	167	13	1	—	16	15	18	1	10

IV.—JUDICIAL.

509

LOWER PROVINCES under the Presidency of Bengal, in the Year 1828, the Number of PERSONS SUPPOSED TO TO TRIAL, and the Amount of PROPERTY STOLEN and RECOVERED.

Thefts.				Murder.	Homicide not amounting to Murder.	Violent Affrays.				Computed Number of Persons		Computed Value of Property		Extent and Population of the Zillahs
Without Personal Violence, but the Value of the Property exceeding 50 Rupees.						Originating in Disputes regarding Boundaries, or the Possession of Lands, Crops, Wells, &c.		Originating in Causes distinct from those mentioned in the preceding Column.		Concerned.	Apprehended and brought to Trial.	Stolen.	Recovered.	Extent in Square Miles.	Population in 1822.
Highway Robbery.	Burglary.	Cattle-stealing.	Theft.			With Loss of Lives.	With Wounding.	With Loss of Lives.	With Wounding.
—	9	1	14	2	5	2	—	—	—	719	369	13,857	1,285	2,000	1,187,580
—	16	1	11	1	—	—	1	—	—	199	122	4,541	498	6,990	1,304,740
1	13	1	24	3	14	—	—	—	—	396	207	9,260	571	8,260	1,914,060
1	11	1	41	5	10	—	—	—	3	870	246	26,461	5,968	9,040	1,984,620
—	30	1	11	4	5	—	1	2	—	461	165	12,023	1,997	5,180	1,183,590
1	5	1	15	2	1	2	—	—	—	515	172	4,566	375	3,105	1,187,160
—	7	—	11	7	3	1	—	—	—	312	235	25,884	517	2,260	1,239,150
—	10	—	4	4	2	—	—	2	2	457	232	10,768	342	3,160	599,595
—	28	—	65	4	4	—	1	—	—	374	252	17,467	1,882	1,105	360,360
3	129	6	196	34	34	5	3	4	5	4,295	1,930	1,24,310	13,345
—	16	14	44	6	6	1	1	—	—	629	269	29,920	4,011	22,430	2,252,983
1	17	4	22	3	6	1	9	—	1	484	234	12,936	3,608	5,235	1,349,610
—	46	8	33	1	4	1	2	1	5	459	293	13,485	358	7,732	1,697,700
—	23	9	24	4	7	1	5	6	11	1,145	387	21,245	5,753	5,760	1,464,075
—	24	7	22	4	3	—	5	—	2	554	162	13,187	2,286	4,650	908,850
—	16	3	37	1	4	1	—	—	—	185	112	23,192	4,981	667	255,705
1	142	45	182	19	30	5	22	7	19	3,456	1,557	1,13,965	20,897
—	12	3	15	2	3	—	1	—	—	433	216	8,361	212	7,270	797,790
—	24	3	21	2	3	2	1	1	1	1,099	185	16,353	803	7,460	1,362,165
1	48	—	54	3	3	1	—	—	—	610	311	21,353	653	5,920	2,341,420
—	47	—	12	6	9	1	1	—	—	591	236	10,495	930	7,856	1,340,350
—	7	—	11	3	3	—	4	—	1	1,321	420	10,478	577	3,950	4,087,155
—	13	4	16	4	7	—	1	—	—	298	287	9,605	1,536	3,870	1,267,065
—	16	—	15	4	9	—	1	—	—	211	136	12,257	1,762	1,870	762,690
1	167	10	144	24	37	4	9	1	2	4,563	1,791	88,812	6,473
—	22	—	9	3	3	—	—	—	—	172	93	6,352	170	6,998	1,454,670
—	7	—	15	4	4	2	4	—	—	400	272	5,223	266	3,532	1,083,720
—	5	2	9	1	4	—	2	—	—	202	102	2,156	370	6,830	1,372,360
—	5	—	6	1	1	—	—	—	—	59	52	16,721	2,882	2,980	700,800
—	12	—	7	8	6	—	—	—	—	117	136	3,957	847	2,780	686,640
—	11	—	4	4	1	—	1	—	—	154	105	2,213	453	2,585	588,375
—	5	—	15	—	2	—	—	—	—	56	45	4,231	2,649	1,870	512,385
—	67	2	65	21	21	2	7	—	—	1,160	805	40,858	7,637
5	505	63	587	98	122	16	41	12	26	13,474	6,083	3,68,445	48,452

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

510 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

III.—STATEMENT of CRIMES ascertained, by the Police Officers or otherwise, to have been committed, and of the COMPUTED VALUE of the same.

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments
of the Three
Presidencies.

ZILLAHS.	Dacoity.				Highway Robbery, Burglary, Cattle-Stealing, and Thefts :			Murder by Thugs
	With Murder.	With Wounding or Torture.	Without Personal Violence.	TOTAL.	With Murder.	With Wounding.	Without Personal Violence, but the Value of the Property exceeding 50 Rupees.
BAREILLY DIVISION :
Cawnpore	—	—	1	1	4	6	45	2
Furruckabad	1	1	1	3	2	1	46	1
Sirpoorah	}	1	—	1	—	4	23	—
Mynpoory
Etawah	1	—	—	1	1	6	17	—
Belah	—	—	—	—	1	4	10	—
Agrah	—	—	—	—	1	5	67	—
Ally Ghur	—	—	—	—	1	1	29	1
Bolundshuhur	—	—	—	—	1	7	53	1
Meerut	—	—	—	—	2	9	40	—
Seharunpore	—	—	—	—	6	7	53	—
Moozuffunurgur	—	—	—	—	1	4	10	—
Moradabad	1	—	—	1	1	8	34	—
Ditto N. D.	2	2	6	10	1	29	25	—
Bareilly	—	—	—	—	3	5	78	—
Pillibheet	—	—	—	—	1	—	9	—
Shajehanpore	—	—	—	—	2	15	26	—
	5	4	8	17	28	121	565
BENARES DIVISION :
Bundlecund, S. D.	—	—	—	—	—	—	7	—
ditto N. D.	—	—	—	—	3	—	26	—
Allahabad	—	—	—	—	—	—	45	—
Futtehpore	—	—	—	—	1	—	31	—
Mirzapore	—	—	—	—	1	—	42	—
Juanpore	—	—	—	—	—	—	20	—
Goruckpore	—	—	—	—	1	1	18	—
Azimghur	—	—	—	—	—	—	21	—
Benares	—	—	—	—	4	1	28	—
Ghazeeppore	—	—	—	—	—	1	58	—
	—	—	—	—	10	3	296
TOTAL ..	5	4	8	17	38	124	861

IV.—JUDICIAL.

511

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
*continued.*COMMITTED in the WESTERN PROVINCES under the Presidency of Bengal, in the Year 1828, PROPERTY STOLEN and RECOVERED.

[The Returns do not state the Number of Persons concerned, nor the Number Apprehended and brought to Trial.]

(3.) Bengal
Criminal Statements.

Murder.	Homicide not amounting to Murder.	Child- Stealing.	Violent Affrays				Estimated Amount of Property		Extent of the Districts in Square Miles.*
			Attended with Loss of Lives.		With Beating.	TOTAL.	Stolen.	Recovered.
			Originating in Disputes regarding Boundaries or the Possession of Lands, Crops, Wells, &c.	Originating in Causes distinct from those mentioned in the preceding Column.
4	1	2	1	—	5	6	Rupees. 12,721	Rupees. 1,173	2,650
6	5	—	4	2	8	14	14,673	2,392	1,850
2	2	1	—	—	2	2	5,524	757	—
4	—	—	—	—	—	—	4,734	360	3,450
2	—	2	—	1	—	1	2,637	250	—
1	6	10	—	2	1	3	19,351	2,824	3,500
4	4	—	—	1	3	4	10,262	2,549	3,400
2	3	—	—	—	—	—	15,212	2,017	1,950
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	11,442	4,640	2,250
3	1	—	1	—	1	2	14,071	2,070	3,800
—	1	—	—	—	—	—	3,085	459	—
1	—	—	—	—	4	4	14,583	1,050	} 5,800
3	4	—	—	—	—	—	9,723	654
9	4	—	—	2	1	3	17,007	2,764	6,900
1	2	—	—	—	—	—	1,268	277	—
6	3	—	3	—	1	4	9,975	1,741	1,420
48	36	15	9	8	26	43	1,66,268	25,977	—
1	2	—	—	3	2	5	2,237	200	} 4,680
1	1	—	—	—	1	1	4,042	471
2	1	1	2	—	3	5	12,173	740	2,650
1	6	1	2	1	—	3	8,417	1,105	1,780
1	2	—	—	—	2	2	14,139	1,380	3,650
—	5	—	2	—	1	3	5,433	566	1,820
5	3	—	2	—	3	5	5,633	1,902	9,520
2	—	—	1	—	—	1	10,996	691	2,240
—	—	—	2	—	2	4	10,186	2,045	350
4	8	—	2	—	1	3	80,968	13,288	2,850
17	28	2	13	4	15	32	1,54,224	22,388	—
65	64	17	22	12	41	75	3,20,494	48,365	—

* There are no Returns of the Population of these Districts. The Population of the whole of the Western Provinces is stated to have been, in 1822, 32,206,806.

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments of
the Three
Presidencies.

512 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

IV.—STATEMENT of the NUMBER of PERSONS COMMITTED FOR TRIAL, and CONVICTED before the Assistants for Minor Offences, within the Lower

ZILLAHs.	COMMITTED for TRIAL, and CONVICTED, before the COURTS ...
	Dacoity.		Highway Robbery, Burglary, and serious Thefts.		Receiving Stolen Property.		Wilful Murder and Homicide.		Violent Affrays, with Murder and Wounding.		Perjury, Forgery, and Coining.
	Committed.	Convicted.	Committed.	Convicted.	Committed.	Convicted.	Committed.	Convicted.	Committed.	Convicted.	Committed.	Convicted.
CALCUTTA DIVISION :
Burdwan	69	...	4	...	6	5	17	2	25	...	14	4
Jungle Mehals	40	14	1	1	7	...	1	1
Midnapore	55	15	4	9	2
Cuttack	13	12	4	4	1	...	23	13	5	5
Jessore	9	...	7	6	19	4	25	8	8	2
Nuddeah	26	10	5	...	28	17	6	1
Hooghly	18	3	6	2	6	5	3	...
Twenty-four Pergunnahs ...	33	13	1	8	1	10	9	2	...
Suburbs of Calcutta	1	2	2	14	6	17	8	2	1
	264	67	17	11	16	11	102	31	111	47	40	13
PATNA DIVISION :
Ramghur	22	13	2	2	8	2	8	8	1	1
Behar	36	15	17	2	1	...	11	7	65	42	17	2
Tirhoot	21	17	72	56	2	2
Sarun	2	9	2	101	15	10	2
Shahabad	17	15	4	3
Patna	1	7	...	5	5
	58	28	39	19	1	...	60	31	251	126	30	7
MOORSHEDABAD DIVISION :
Bhangulpore	19	9	6	2	2	1	1
Purneah	14	7	7	...	1	...	5	4	15	15	2	1
Dinapore	38	10	20	1	1	...	12	3	24	12
Rungpore	11	5	1	1	2	...	38	2	2	...	11	11
Rajeshahye	54	28	14	7	19	9
Beerbhoom	29	8	2	1	10	...	7	1
Moorshedabad	8	...	13	1	2	1	11	3	9	6	1	...
	173	67	49	4	6	1	92	21	76	43	15	13
DACCA DIVISION :
Mymensing	6	2	2	36	2
Sylhet	28	27	7	6	13	4	35	33	3	5
Tipperah	2	...	7	3	10	7
Chittagong	10	8	1	...	2	1
Backergunge	4	4	21	5
Dacca Jelalpore	1	...	13	...	1	1
Dacca	3	3	7	3	1	...
	44	35	17	15	82	15	56	36	15	13
TOTAL.....	539	197	105	34	40	27	336	98	493	252	100	46

IV.—JUDICIAL.

518

COURTS OF CIRCUIT, and of the NUMBER APPREHENDED and PUNISHED by the Magistrates and their PROVINCES under the Presidency of Bengal, in the Year 1828.

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

(3.) Bengal
Criminal Statements.

... of CIRCUIT.				APPREHENDED and PUNISHED by the MAGISTRATES and their ASSISTANTS
Various other Offences.		TOTAL.		For Petty Burglaries, Cattle Stealing, Thefts, and Receiving Stolen Property.			For Petty Affrays and other Offences.			TOTAL.
Committed.	Convicted.	Committed.	Convicted.	Apprehended.	Punished by the Magistrate or Joint Magistrate.	Punished by the Assistant.	Apprehended.	Punished by the Magistrate or Joint Magistrate.	Punished by the Assistant.	Apprehended for Petty Offences.	Punished for Petty Offences.
26	7	161	13	396	223	...	956	296	15	1,352	534
32	1	85	22	992	338	4	1,515	298	3	2,507	643
...	...	64	17	332	208	6	1,288	428	35	1,620	677
17	17	63	55	916	388	...	2,185	715	28	3,101	1,161
26	4	94	24	604	207	29	5,284	135	48	5,888	419
1	1	66	29	349	111	17	1,023	428	64	1,372	620
5	...	38	10	451	230	...	2,001	749	11	2,452	990
2	...	56	23	491	157	...	1,276	433	3	1,767	593
1	1	37	18	623	143	55	1,428	123	184	2,051	505
110	31	664	211	5,154	2,005	111	16,956	3,635	391	22,110	6,142
6	1	47	27	1,808	776	197	1,053	137	86	2,861	1,196
24	12	171	80	1,124	419	15	1,943	468	5	3,067	907
14	9	409	84	550	167	74	1,383	241	422	1,933	904
14	6	136	25	472	137	19	825	134	129	1,297	419
19	5	40	23	310	126	18	1,321	573	93	1,641	815
5	4	18	9	572	165	43	1,558	432	323	2,130	963
82	37	521	248	4,836	1,790	366	8,083	1,990	1,058	12,919	5,204
11	4	39	16	532	352	17	2,053	1,372	85	2,583	1,826
15	...	59	27	1,718	449	...	266	55	...	1,984	504
17	4	112	30	1,293	458	...	1,994	339	...	3,287	797
28	14	93	33	692	268	...	1,191	425	...	1,883	693
...	...	87	42	671	127	...	1,597	335	...	2,268	462
...	...	48	10	750	325	36	526	172	76	1,276	609
17	5	61	16	1,781	241	3	3,935	1,645	81	5,716	1,970
88	27	499	174	7,437	2,220	56	11,562	4,343	242	18,999	6,861
7	6	51	14
9	9	95	84	432	75	13	2,536	747	107	2,968	942
28	9	47	19	676	356	48	3,396	1,154	144	4,072	1,702
29	18	42	27	235	52	12	1,780	294	17	1,615	375
5	4	30	13	722	458	...	1,690	569	...	2,412	1,027
6	2	21	3	372	74	...	2,257	1,744	...	2,629	1,818
5	...	16	6	432	197	...	2,033	971	21	2,465	1,189
89	48	302	166	2,869	1,212	73	13,292	5,479	289	16,161	7,053
369	143	1,986	799	20,296	7,227	606	49,893	15,447	1,980	70,189	25,260

V.—STATEMENT of the NUMBER of PERSONS COMMITTED for TRIAL and CONVICTED, before the Minor Offences, within the WESTERN PROVINCES.

	COMMITTED for TRIAL, CONVICTED, and REFERRED to the NIZAMUT ...
	Dacoity, with Murder.		Dacoity, without Murder.		Highway Robberies, Burglaries and Thefts, with Murder.		Highway Robberies, Burglaries and Thefts, without Murder.		Receiving Stolen Property.		Murder.		Murder by Thugs.		Homicide not amounting to Murder.		Kidnapping, and Selling of Children and Women.
	Committed.	Convicted.	Committed.	Convicted.	Committed.	Convicted.	Committed.	Convicted.	Committed.	Convicted.	Committed.	Convicted.	Committed.	Convicted.	Committed.	Convicted.	Committed.	Convicted.
Cawnpore	13	...	16	13	22	1	56	24	5	1	16	3	5	5	8	7
Furruckabad	3	6	1	25	12	2	...	35	13	6	3	4	4
Mynpoory	34	18	3	2	3	2	2
Etawah	10	26	12	3	...	34	2	3	1	3	...
Belah	27	17	23	1	...	8	6
Agrah	6	...	2	1	16	15	10	5	1	1
Allyghur	7	2	38	16	3	...	3	4	3	12	2
Bolundshuhur.....	14	10	18	6	5	1
Meerut	6	5	23	13	1	1	5
Scharunpore	2	2	1	...	36	28	1	...	7	2	3	1
Moozuffurnugur	1	1	10	3
Moradabad	3	...	53	28	2	...	12	5	4
Ditto, North Division ...	5	4	...	22	16	7	1	1
Bareilly	2	1	4	2	52	28	2	1	19	1	5	2	3	3
Pilibheet	13	...	2	...	5	2	2	1	2	1
Shahjehaupore	1	...	1	1	3	...	22	17	1	1	14	1	8	5	1	1
	27	...	50	17	61	13	459	259	25	7	208	38	46	22	42	26
BENARES DIVISION:
Bundelcund, South Division	5	1	10	5	3	...	7	1	33	2	2	2
Ditto ... North Division	2	...	23	14	1	1	16	5	4	4	1	2
Allahabad	1	1	14	6	1	...	44	23	9	2	15	4	1	1	7	6
Futtehpore	21	9	1	1	5	1	2	...	1	1	1	1
Mirzapore	2	2	30	21	3	3	3	16	12	14	9
Juanpore	2	1	14	12	1	...	10	3	2	1	...
Goruckpore	3	3	14	10	2	1	3	2
Azimghur	9	8	1	1	7	1
Benares	6	...	2	1	45	32	27	13	6	3	1	1
Ghazeepore.....	1	1	...	45	20	47	7	1	1
	5	4	22	7	13	4	255	159	43	22	116	21	2	...	62	24	28	22
	32	4	72	24	74	17	714	418	73	29	324	59	2	...	108	46	70	48

Prisoners died before trial.	Cawnpore	1	Moradabad, North Division	3	14
	Belah	1	Bareilly	1
	Agrah	1	Bundelcund, South Division	1
	Allyghur	1	Ditto ... North Division	1
	Scharunpore.....	1	Ghazeepore	1
	Moradabad	2

IV.—JUDICIAL.

515

COURTS of CIRCUIT, and of the NUMBER APPREHENDED and PUNISHED by the MAGISTRATES for under the Presidency of Bengal, in the Year 1828.

... ADWALUT by the COURTS of CIRCUIT.											APPREHENDED and PUNISHED by the MAGISTRATES.
Affrays, with Homicide.		Affrays, without Homicide.		Perjury, Forgery, and Coining.		Various other Offences.		TOTAL.		Referred to the Nizamut Adawlut.	For petty Burglaries, Cattle Stealing, Thefts, and receiving Stolen Property.		For petty Affrays, Assaults, and other Offences.		TOTAL, (Minor Offences.)
Committed.	Convicted.	Committed.	Convicted.	Committed.	Convicted.	Committed.	Convicted.	Committed.	Convicted.		Apprehended.	Punished.	Apprehended.	Punished.	Apprehended.	Punished.
39	15	2	1	6	4	188	74	...	517	178	1,188	609	2,005	787
37	4	12	12	2	...	31	19	168	68	3	950	264	1,379	337	2,329	601
7	3	5	1	4	3	58	29	1	536	173	122	38	658	211
...	1	...	46	24	126	39	1	580	243	279	124	859	307
...	15	...	74	23	1	403	149	37	12	440	161
24	22	3	...	5	4	67	48	4	1,005	479	1,901	1,181	2,906	1,660
17	11	7	6	1	...	13	9	105	49	3	1,289	698	302	207	1,591	905
...	3	3	5	3	45	23	4	927	253	587	307	1,514	560
6	1	...	42	19	2	1,570	533	776	76	2,346	609
...	...	21	8	3	1	14	10	88	52	1	493	191	1,359	319	1,852	510
...	1	1	28	5	40	10	...	593	193	361	121	954	314
23	6	18	15	7	2	24	3	146	59	20	800	288	788	495	1,588	783
23	19	3	1	4	1	69	38	18	302	111	83	16	385	127
50	38	19	8	16	9	172	93	8	803	312	262	34	1,065	346
...	11	5	36	8	2
5	5	2	1	6	2	64	34	13	636	264	399	198	1,035	462
231	123	77	49	33	11	229	101	1,488	666	81	11,404	4,329	10,123	4,074	21,527	8,493
37	21	9	4	3	...	5	2	114	38	23	473	170	412	115	885	285
21	17	6	1	9	3	83	47	4	412	164	242	161	654	325
21	9	1	1	11	5	10	7	135	70	8	474	292	64	28	538	320
27	6	9	...	15	...	7	2	89	21	8	176	80	875	178	1,051	258
18	...	19	18	3	...	9	6	117	71	1	409	161	1,170	176	1,579	337
36	18	13	11	4	91	37	41	342	124	515	172	857	296
37	9	1	1	4	4	64	30	4	418	270	1,099	491	1,517	761
17	5	80	21	7	2	122	37	22	475	156	1,286	306	1,761	462
12	12	34	25	9	4	12	4	154	95	72	528	271	1,180	619	1,708	890
113	34	21	18	7	4	236	84	14
339	131	193	89	41	9	81	38	1,205	530	197	3,707	1,688	6,843	2,246	10,550	3,934
570	254	270	138	74	20	310	139	2,693	1,196	278	15,111	6,017	16,966	6,320	32,077	12,337

Ordered to give security, though not convicted.

Furruckabad.....	1
Belah.....	7
Bolundshuhur	5
Scharunpore.....	1
Moradabad	2
Bareilly	1
Allahabad	5

22

VI.—STATEMENT of the NUMBER of FOUJDARRY CASES referred, under Regulation III. 1821 decided by them, in th

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments of
the Three
Presidencies.

ZILLAHs.	1827.
	ASSAULTS.		PETTY THEFTS.		TOTAL.
	Referred.	Decided.	Referred.	Decided.	Referred.	Decided.
BAREILLY DIVISION :
Cawnpore	202	190	119	117	321	307
Furruckabad	261	247	82	81	343	328
Sirpoorah	—	—	—	—	—	—
Mynpoory	51	49	234	217	285	266
Agra	383	197	454	233	837	430
Allyghur	97	91	130	130	227	221
Bolundshuhur	4	4	4	4	8	8
Mecrut	2	2	—	—	2	2
Seharunpore	191	175	7	7	198	182
Moradabad	171	165	159	159	330	324
Bareilly	48	38	38	37	86	75
Shahjehanpore	15	11	—	—	15	11
	1,425	1,169	1,227	985	2,652	2,154
BENARES DIVISION :
Bundlecund, S. D.	77	75	13	13	90	88
Ditto N. D.	69	45	28	27	97	72
Allahabad	69	69	63	63	132	132
Futtehpore	—	—	—	—	—	—
Mirzapore	88	84	—	—	88	84
Juanpore	53	47	5	5	58	52
Goruckpore	230	218	6	6	236	224
Azimghur	108	89	39	38	147	127
Benares	12	10	—	—	12	10
Ghazeepore	—	—	—	—	—	—
	706	637	154	152	860	789
TOTAL	2,131	1,806	1,381	1,137	3,512	2,943

IV.—JUDICIAL.

517

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

to the Law Officers and Sudder Ameeris of the several Zillahs in the WESTERN PROVINCES, and Years 1827 and 1828.

(3.) Bengal
Criminal Statements

1828.						ZILLAHS.
ASSAULTS.		PETTY THEFTS.		TOTAL.
Referred.	Decided.	Referred.	Decided.	Referred.	Decided.
—	—	Returns not received.		—	—	BAREILLY DIVISION Cawnpore. Furruckabad. Sirpoorah. Mynpoory. Agra. Allyghur. Bolundshuhur. Meerut. Scharunpore. Moradabad. Bareilly. Shahjehanpore.
229	200	72	71	301	271
—	—	—	—	—	—
31	30	195	192	226	222
285	235	226	198	511	433
115	104	111	111	226	215
23	23	162	162	185	185
—	—	—	—	—	—
269	243	8	8	277	251
346	322	130	130	476	452
66	55	14	12	80	67
41	34	2	2	43	36
1,405	1,246	920	886	2,325	2,132
48	34	12	12	60	46	BENARES DIVISION Bundlecund, S. D. Ditto N. D. Allahabad. Futtehpore. Mirzapore. Juanpore. Goruckpore. Azimghur. Benares. Ghazeepore.
114	111	19	19	133	130
56	54	2	2	58	56
129	102	32	28	161	130
12	12	3	3	15	15
32	21	1	1	33	22
30	26	—	—	30	26
108	103	37	36	145	139
131	97	—	—	131	97
1	1	2	2	3	3
661	561	108	103	769	664
2,066	1,807	1,028	989	3,094	2,796

VII.—STATEMENT of the NUMBER of PERSONS CONVICTED of CRIMES before the year 1816 :

	1816.			1817.			1818.			1819.			1820.
	Lower Provinces.	Western Provinces.	TOTAL.	Lower Provinces.	Western Provinces.	TOTAL.	Lower Provinces.	Western Provinces.	TOTAL.	Lower Provinces.	Western Provinces.	TOTAL.	Lower Provinces.	Western Provinces.	TOTAL.
CRIMES :
Murder, or offences with Murder	84	64	148	115	75	190	46	58	104	102	84	186	103	80	183
Manslaughter or Homicide ..	29	4	33	23	—	23	9	2	11	20	6	26	16	3	19
Dacoity, or Robbery by open violence ..	187	54	241	197	59	256	147	82	229	253	97	350	374	68	442
Burglary, Theft, and receiving stolen Property ..	85	25	110	49	41	90	66	26	92	75	25	100	55	15	110
Perjury	3	1	4	5	4	9	4	—	4	1	1	2	9	—	9
Other Crimes	47	34	81	61	23	84	61	15	76	38	32	70	31	36	67
	435	182	617	450	202	652	333	183	516	489	245	734	588	202	790
SENTENCES :
Death	54	38	92	61	55	116	25	31	56	43	52	95	25	29	54
Transportation or Imprisonment for Life	227	70	297	231	60	291	155	105	260	246	107	353	220	102	322
Imprisonment above seven, not above fourteen years ..	47	16	63	47	21	68	53	16	69	65	15	80	51	14	95
Ditto above one, not above seven years	55	34	89	64	22	86	59	20	79	100	55	155	263	49	312
Ditto not above one year ..	24	13	37	18	16	34	16	4	20	23	6	29	22	5	27
	407	171	578	421	174	595	308	176	484	477	235	712	581	199	780

IV.—JUDICIAL.

519

NIZAMUT ADAWLUT in Bengal, and of the SENTENCES passed by that Court, in each Year 1827 inclusive.

1821.			1822.			1823.			1824.			1825.			1826.			1827.
Lower Provinces.	Western Provinces.	TOTAL.	Lower Provinces.	Western Provinces.	TOTAL.	Lower Provinces.	Western Provinces.	TOTAL.	Lower Provinces.	Western Provinces.	TOTAL.	Lower Provinces.	Western Provinces.	TOTAL.	Lower Provinces.	Western Provinces.	TOTAL.	Lower Provinces.	Western Provinces.	TOTAL.
216	129	345	111	162	273	124	174	298	132	99	231	103	150	253	142	173	315	138	97	235
22	18	40	43	37	80	78	34	112	50	50	100	63	142	205	83	95	178	32	83	115
255	66	321	213	52	265	160	113	273	298	87	385	174	100	274	57	69	126	57	26	83
119	1	20	14	5	19	14	18	32	43	14	57	53	43	96	36	35	71	4	22	26
—	1	1	2	1	3	3	1	4	3	4	7	8	10	18	2	1	3	2	6	8
43	81	124	40	17	57	35	32	67	56	35	91	9	134	229	104	55	159	45	49	94
555	296	851	423	274	697	414	372	786	582	289	871	496	579	1075	424	428	852	278	283	561
21	36	57	43	29	52	46	39	85	31	22	53	26	42	68	26	41	67	24	32	56
188	90	278	103	64	167	57	68	125	95	61	156	51	78	129	76	100	176	101	53	154
82	29	111	117	74	191	112	96	208	215	87	302	194	138	332	64	74	138	64	28	92
220	113	333	147	84	231	101	132	233	162	101	263	169	191	360	147	182	329	78	141	219
4	4	8	7	9	16	10	12	22	46	10	56	22	32	54	14	13	27	8	17	25
515	272	787	397	260	657	326	347	673	549	281	830	462	481	943	327	410	737	275	271	546

VIII.—ABSTRACT OF RETURNS OF THE PERSONS SENTENCED TO PUNISHMENT, WITHOUT REFERENCE TO THE NIZAMUT ADWALUT, BY THE COURTS OF CIRCUIT UNDER THE PRESIDENCY OF Bengal, FROM 1816 TO 1826 INCLUSIVE.

OFFENCES:	1816.	1817.	1818.	1819.	1820.	1821.	1822.	1823.	1824.	1825.	1826.
1. Adultery	40	20	35	6	20	14	12	11	28	5	15
2. Affray	606	568	687	393	627	672	503	496	918	570	566
3. Arson	9	11	15	24	15	26	4	39	25	22	25
4. Assault	97	60	—	60	76	28	81	39	92	98	76
5. Burglary	655	1,081	1,117	435	394	348	346	323	526	436	600
6. Cattle-stealing	75	65	63	6	6	7	48	19	18	17	14
7. Child-stealing and Kid- napping	10	7	31	43	31	25	28	32	47	16	41
8. Coin, counterfeiting the current	1	—	1	2	11	4	—	9	10	1	7
9. Ditto, putting off, and uttering counterfeit	5	3	4	9	2	5	5	9	14	10	3
10. Embezzlement	41	57	52	20	18	19	19	40	49	23	26
11. Felony and Misdemeanour (not otherwise described)	117	110	149	45	42	59	54	33	102	68	39
12. Forgery and Uttering	6	10	11	15	28	12	17	19	35	30	30
13. Larceny	429	506	581	184	159	114	133	125	233	5	218
14. Manslaughter	64	88	106	66	61	85	102	196	123	153	97
15. Perjury	17	28	33	22	39	39	44	37	66	44	22
16. Rape	—	2	1	—	8	2	1	1	1	2	—
17. Robbery on the Person, on the Highway, and in other places	17	20	13	29	52	36	24	65	124	444	193
18. Shooting, Wounding, or Poisoning, with intent to kill	30	98	71	66	55	88	61	77	113	60	130
19. Sodomy	1	2	2	1	2	4	—	2	3	1	5
20. Stolen Goods, receiving	108	125	141	45	89	89	88	127	165	64	109
TOTAL	2,328	2,861	3,111	1,471	1,735	1,676	1,570	1,699	2,692	2,069	2,216

PUNISHMENTS:
Imprisonment,
Above 10, not exceeding 14 years ..	251	499	228	78	20	14	4	4	123	164	167
Above 7, not exceeding 10 ..	39	8	80	16	20	7	29	9	38	44	47
7 Years ..	472	585	578	152	94	113	92	190	356	256	236
6 Years ..	41	90	40	78	38	26	38	41	47	53	86
5 Years ..	107	238	148	112	192	216	175	361	823	469	519
4 Years ..	108	149	177	164	263	217	235	248	267	240	274
3 Years ..	354	382	554	220	363	422	303	340	379	265	301
2 Years, and above 1 year ..	281	311	464	275	325	360	365	234	246	241	249
1 Year, and above 6 months ..	341	340	484	182	186	172	207	126	224	193	202
6 Months, and under ..	280	220	344	192	232	123	116	129	155	137	122
Whipping, Fine, &c. without Imprisonment ..	54	38	14	—	1	6	6	15	22	7	13
Admonished and released, the Imprisonment already suffered being considered to be adequate to their offences ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	12	—	—
	2,328	2,860*	3,111	1,469†	1,734‡	1,676	1,570	1,697§	2,692	2,069	2,216
Of the above,
To Tusheer, or Public Exposure ..	14	15	15	17	22	17	19	32	57	30	29
— Hard Labour ..	1,612	2,327	1,371	926	1,045	1,154	1,062	1,416	2,285	1,788	1,405
— Banishment ..	242	472	224	74	19	24	9	16	95	178	139
— Fine ..	36	51	82	50	44	28	37	19	1	1	7
— Whipping ..	1,062	1,562	1,179	528	381	311	523	386	797	507	644

* The remaining convict proving insane, the usual provision was made for his safe custody.

† Two insane prisoners were not sentenced to any specific punishment, but provision was made for their safe custody.

‡ One notorious offender, convicted of training children as Deccits, was sentenced to indefinite imprisonment, unless he furnished security for his good conduct.

§ Two individuals, one blind and one insane, were not sentenced to any punishment, but provision was made for the safe custody of the latter.

IX.—ABSTRACT of the ANNUAL RETURNS of PRISONERS PUNISHED, without Reference,

	Division of CALCUTTA.				Division of D A C C A.				Division of MOORSHEDABAD.
	1824.	1825.	1826.	1827.	1824.	1825.	1826.	1827.	1824.	1825.	1826.	1827.
OFFENCES.
1. Arson.....	22	20	27	6
2. Affray.....	32	43	23	58	56	9
3. Assault and Battery.....	941	1,551	1,053	1,123	803	1,080	944	945	1,341	993	816	505
4. Bribery.....	26	112	30	20	32	55
5. Burglary.....	211	150	265	265	200	163	248	188	459	329	473	335
6. Cattle-stealing, and aiding } therein.....	243	173	165	275	240	167	220	174	414	470	250	234
7. Escape from Custody.....	15	10	16	5	54	20
8. False Complaint..... (Frauds. See No. 20.)	196	317	310	363	178	97
9. Larceny, or privity thereto. (See No. 18.)	1,232	1,512	682	504	1,021	864
10. Manslaughter.....	5	7	26	6
11. Neglect of Duty.....	2,113	1,725	570	638	1,569	1,095
12. Perjury.....	21	17	20	24	5	58
13. Plundering.....	164	123	128	92	115	78
14. Receiving Stolen Goods, } and harbouring Thieves. } (See No. 18.)	49	48	47	63	33	49
15. Resistance of Process.....	88	129	215	171	65	20
16. Riot.....	380	579	442	207	205	108
17. Snatching from the Person, } &c.....	131	95	87	62	382	161
18. Theft, and receiving Stolen } Goods.....	1,385	1,028	501	473	1,914	1,386
19. Vagrancy.....	14	19	26	29	52	7
20. Frauds, and other Offences } not otherwise enumerated }	3,636	2,390	669	816	1,704	1,469	1,045	1,082	2,895	3,070	712	462
	6,416	5,292	6,621	7,208*	3,448	3,352	5,075	4,652	7,023	6,248	6,051†	4,169‡
PUNISHMENTS.
Imprisonment for
Two years.....	125	157	184	218	202	156	255	245	366	396	304	288
One year, and under two years	187	119	155	224	119	141	151	110	252	192	211	200
Above six months, and under } one year.....	7	13	15	3	10	35	2	1	49	62	10	17
Six months and under.....	4,420	3,233	2,762	3,078	2,779	2,638	2,623	2,485	3,858	3,898	2,569	2,216
Of the above,
To Fine.....	294	718	2,453	2,262	84	275	2,354	2,087	1,461	395	1,871	1,131
Whipping.....	2,145	1,630	2,124	2,374	692	574	832	589	2,061	2,174	2,268	1,507
Hard Labour.....	1,141	893	1,067	1,532	684	764	1,246	1,559	1,586	1,559	1,926	1,972
Dismissal, or Suspension from } Office.....	188	224	358	304	80	52	140	123	120	128	546	136

* 7,409 in the Return.

† 6,048 in the Return.

‡ 4,279 in the Return.

IV.—JUDICIAL.

523

by the Zillah Magistrates and Joint Magistrates and their Assistants, from 1824 to 1827 inclusive.

Division of P A T N A.				Division of B E N A R E S.				Division of B A R E I L L Y.				T O T A L.
1824.	1825.	1826.	1827.	1824.	1825.	1826.	1827.	1824.	1825.	1826.	1827.	1824.	1825.	1826.	1827.
...	...	74	5	6	4	15	6	144	41
995	932	147 645	86 504	917	1,092	126 1,155	54 811	828	1,110	237 833	326 1,166	5,815	6,758	601 5,446	576 5,054
...	...	8	6	24	5	23	18	143	216
269	231	297	362	346	322	302	338	433	357	727	628	1,918	1,552	2,312	2,116
348	430	400	330	664	468	479	390	1,043	1,076	1,444	1,358	2,952	2,784	2,958	2,761
...	...	20	9	14	15	21	22	140	81
...	...	123	144	115	102	236	201	1,158	1,224
...	...	1,283	1,212	1,412	1,362	2,926	2,227	8,556	7,684
...	1	2	8	33	22
...	...	1,319	1,303	1,360	912	2,097	2,283	9,028	7,956
...	...	16	14	10	5	10	16	85	134
...	...	31	37	48	8	16	25	502	363
...	...	71	71	113	112	387	297	700	640
...	...	202	120	137	115	145	136	852	691
...	...	189	149	130	69	184	317	1,530	1,429
...	...	90	69	111	71	116	93	917	551
1,684	1,312	1,775	1,601	2,827	2,440	10,086	8,240
...	...	21	15	19	2	19	15	151	87
3,986	3,600	817	558	2,687	2,464	1,044	637	4,027	3,930	828	793	18,935	16,923	5,115	4,348
7,272	6,505	5,753	4,994	6,389	5,947	6,605	5,013	9,158	8,913	10,256	9,935	39,706	36,257	40,371	35,971
424	314	341	535	330	259	263	257	409	435	535	722	1,856	1,717	1,882	2,265
276	341	396	866	429	533	314	297	628	632	866	692	1,891	1,958	2,093	2,389
11	58	3	96	78	50	64	12	151	158	96	65	306	376	190	191
3,239	3,381	2,496	4,909	4,005	3,782	2,680	2,515	5,659	5,668	4,909	4,357	23,960	22,690	16,039	19,560
649	263	1,355	2,084	939	498	257	1,331	628	612	2,084	2,645	4,055	2,761	10,374	11,540
3,663	2,834	2,491	4,655	1,849	1,854	1,939	1,902	3,554	2,977	4,655	4,110	13,964	12,043	14,309	15,137
2,012	1,778	2,048	4,398	2,879	2,853	2,626	2,009	2,906	3,072	4,398	3,440	11,208	10,919	13,311	14,910
130	112	133	271	188	171	193	208	180	210	271	257	886	897	1,641	1,299

§ 6,605 in the Return.

¶ 6,390 in the Return.

¶ 1,111 in the Return. The Monthly Returns show that it should be 111.

APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

X.—COMPARATIVE STATEMENT of the NUMBER of PRISONERS in the ZILLAH and 31st of December 1827 and

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments
of the Three
Presidencies.

	1. Under Sentence of the Courts of Circuit or Nizamut Adawlut.		2. Required to find Security by Order of the Courts of Circuit or Nizamut Adawlut.		3. Sentenced by the Magistrates to Temporary Imprisonment.		4. Required by the Magistrates to find Security.		5. Under Examination before the Magistrates.
	1827.	1828.	1827.	1828.	1827.	1828.	1827.	1828.	1827.	1828.
Calcutta Division ..	1,167	1,234	52	76	1,517	1,445	272	296	260	257
Patna	1,636	1,764	38	51	1,660	1,671	238	295	239	237
Moorshedabad ..	1,454	1,500	9	3	1,656	1,760	369	716	497	401
Dacca	1,005	863	48	25	1,530	1,365	193	185	291	213
Lower Provinces ..	5,262	5,361	147	155	6,363	6,241	1,072	1,492	1,287	1,108
Bareilly Division ..	2,738	3,281	60	69	3,587	3,138	251	311	658	545
Benares	2,594	2,612	5	5	1,910	1,822	100	100	339	342
Western Provinces	5,332	5,893	65	74	5,497	4,960	351	421	997	887
TOTAL ..	10,594	11,254	212	229	11,860	11,201	1,423	1,913	2,284	1,995

IV.—JUDICIAL.

525

IV.
APPENDIX.
No. 5.
continued.

CITY GAOLS within each Division of the Provinces under the Presidency of Bengal, on the the 31st of December 1828.

(3.) Bengal
Criminal Statements.

6. Committed for Trial before the Courts of Circuit or under Reference to the Nizamut Adawlut.		Under Sentence, (Cols. 1 & 3.)		Detained for Want of Security. (Cols. 2 & 4.)		Under Examination or awaiting Trial, (Cols. 5 & 6.)		TOTAL.
1827.	1828.	1827.	1828.	1827.	1828.	1827.	1828.	1827.	1828.
280	260	2,684	2,679	324	372	540	517	3,548	3,568
330	209	3,296	3,435	276	346	569	446	4,141	4,227
463	254	3,110	3,260	378	719	960	655	4,448	4,634
127	152	2,535	2,228	241	210	418	365	3,194	2,803
1,200	875	11,625	11,602	1,219	1,647	2,487	1,983	15,331	15,232
761	502	6,325	6,419	311	380	1,419	1,047	8,055	7,846
439	488	4,504	4,434	105	115	778	830	5,387	5,379
1,200	990	10,829	10,853	416	495	2,197	1,877	13,442	13,225
2,400	1,865	22,454	22,455	1,635	2,142	4,684	3,860	28,773	28,457

526 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

X.—continued.—STATEMENT of the NUMBER of PRISONERS in the several ZILLAH and CITY GAOLS under the Presidency of Bengal, on the 31st December 1828, and of the Causes of their Confinement.

	1.	2.	3.	4.	5.	6.
	Under Sentence of the Court of Circuit or Nizamut Adawlut.	Required to find Security, by Order of Court of Circuit or Nizamut Adawlut.	Sentenced by the Magistrates to Temporary Imprisonment.	Required by the Magistrates to find Security.	Under Examination before the Magistrates.	Committed for Trial before the Court of Circuit, or under reference to the Nizamut Adawlut.	Total under Sentence. (Cols. 1 & 3.)	Total confined for Want of Security. (Cols. 2 & 4.)	Under Examination, or awaiting Trial. (Cols. 5 & 6.)	TOTAL.
CALCUTTA DIVISION :
Burdwan	189	20	229	18	23	89	418	38	112	568
Jungle Mehals	72	...	201	...	3	65	273	...	68	341
Midnapore	158	4	168	40	35	44	326	44	79	449
Cuttack	257	...	133	14	41	24	390	14	65	469
Jessore	249	1	109	47	19	6	358	48	25	431
Nuddeah	102	18	155	63	44	1	257	81	45	383
Hooghly	84	22	196	56	30	30	280	78	60	418
Twenty-four Pergunnahs ...	72	10	121	38	35	...	193	48	35	276
Suburbs of Calcutta	51	1	133	20	27	1	184	21	28	233
	1,234	76	1,445	296	257	260	2,679	372	517	3,568
PATNA DIVISION :
Ramghur	253	...	493	115	24	10	746	115	34	895
Behar	222	37	505	120	73	70	727	157	143	1,027
Tirhoot	354	11	194	31	8	29	548	42	37	627
Sarun	349	2	195	15	117	8	544	17	125	686
Shahabad	117	1	158	...	2	78	275	1	80	356
Patna	469	...	126	14	13	14	595	14	27	636
	1,764	51	1,671	295	237	209	3,435	346	446	4,227
MOORSHEEDABAD DIVISION :
Bhaugulpore	206	...	274	77	53	23	480	77	76	633
Purneah	97	...	142	26	22	18	239	26	40	305
Dinagepore	138	1	350	46	41	16	488	47	57	592
Rungpore	590	...	532	418	110	130	1,122	418	240	1,780
Rajeshahye	123	2	193	125	63	38	321	127	101	549
Beerbhoom	89	...	183	8	41	22	272	8	63	343
Moorshedabad	252	...	86	16	71	7	338	16	78	432
	1,500	3	1,760	716	401	254	3,260	719	655	4,634
DACCA DIVISION :
Mymensing	102	3	112	6	9	11	214	9	20	243
Sylhet	122	4	174	23	103	34	296	27	137	460
Tipperah	268	4	443	17	23	18	711	21	41	773
Chittagong	63	2	60	27	3	34	123	29	37	189
Backergunge	78	4	215	53	30	32	293	57	62	412
Dacca Jelalpoore	46	8	161	7	39	22	207	15	61	283
Dacca	184	...	200	52	6	1	384	52	7	443
	863	25	1,365	185	213	152	2,228	210	365	2,803

(continued..)

IV.—JUDICIAL.

527

X.—Statement of the Number of Prisoners in the several Zillah and City Gaols under the Presidency of Bengal on the 31st of December 1828, and of the Causes of their Confinement—continued.

	1. Under Sentence of the Court of Circuit or Nizamat Adawlut.	2. Required to find Security, by Order of Court of Circuit or Nizamat Adawlut.	3. Sentenced by the Magistrates to Temporary Imprisonment.	4. Required by the Magistrates to find Security.	5. Under Examination before the Magistrates.	6. Committed for Trial before the Court of Circuit, or under reference to the Nizamat Adawlut.	Under Sentence, (Cols. 1 & 3.)	Confined for Want of Security, (Cols. 2 & 4.)	Under Examination, or awaiting Trial, (Cols. 5 & 6.)	TOTAL.
BARILLY DIVISION :
Cawnpore	383	1	165	65	40	40	548	66	80	691
Furruckabad	563	7	222	31	123	119	785	41	242	1,068
Sirporah
Mynpoory	274	34	168	11	54	26	442	45	80	567
Etawah.....	79	23	13	12	79	23	25	127
Belah	41	18	15	16	41	18	31	90
Agra	331	3	363	18	41	20	694	21	61	776
Allyghur	327	8	336	31	3	45	663	39	48	750
Bolundshuhur.....	76	...	286	8	25	41	362	8	66	436
Meerut	190	...	203	25	42	31	393	25	73	491
Scharunpore	141	5	212	6	...	34	353	11	34	398
Moozuffunugur	75	1	100	12	26	22	175	13	48	236
Moradabad	405	5	331	10	14	52	736	15	66	817
Ditto, North Division ...	17	...	124	6	34	2	141	6	36	183
Barilly	405	5	278	25	43	24	683	30	67	780
Pillibheet.....	28	...	108	13	34	9	136	13	43	192
Shahjehanpore	66	...	122	6	38	9	188	6	47	241
	3,281	69	3,138	311	545	502	6,419	380	1,047	7,846
BENARES DIVISION :
Bundelcund, South Division	204	...	84	...	24	30	288	...	51	342
Ditto ... North Division	175	...	103	12	38	22	278	12	60	350
Allahabad	320	3	259	19	27	83	579	22	110	711
Futtelpore	221	...	52	...	139	18	273	...	157	430
Mirzapore	160	...	142	6	9	17	302	6	26	334
Juanpore	282	...	185	...	8	54	467	...	62	529
Goruckpore.....	382	...	296	37	44	83	678	37	127	842
Azimghur	157	...	134	...	20	9	291	...	29	320
Benares	324	1	196	36	1	36	520	37	37	594
Ghazeepore.....	387	1	371	...	32	136	758	1	168	927
	2,612	5	1,822	100	342	438	4,434	115	830	5,379
SUMMARY :
In the
LOWER PROVINCES	5,361	155	6,241	1,492	1,108	875	11,602	1,647	1,983	15,232
WESTERN ditto	5,893	74	4,960	421	887	990	10,853	495	1,877	13,225
TOTAL	11,254	229	11,201	1,913	1,995	1,865	22,455	2,142	3,860	28,457

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments of
the Three
Presidencies.

528 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

XI.—PRISONERS employed on PRIVATE LABOUR, agreeably to the Orders of the SUDDER NIZAMUT ADAWLUT.

ZILLAHs.	Pri- soners.	AMOUNT of GAIN.	AMOUNT paid to the PRISONERS.	NET AMOUNT of GAIN.	REMARKS.
Burdwan	158	82 2 0	14 8 3	67 9 9	Rope, cloths, &c.
Jungle Mehals ..	29	6 13 0	3 6 6	3 6 6	Thread, &c.
Nuddeah	489	55 14 6	—	55 14 6	Pounding bricks.
TOTAL	676	144 13 6	17 14 9	126 14 9
Tirhoot	6,986	194 3 5	97 1 9	97 1 8	{ Mondahs, chicks, piece goods, cloths.
Shahabad	24	32 0 0	—	32 0 0	Rope, mondahs, and cloth.
Patna	421	823 6 0	457 15 6	365 6 6	Cloths, morahs, and baskets.
TOTAL	7,431	1,049 9 5	555 1 3	494 8 2
Purneah	65	52 9 0	25 0 0	27 9 0	Twine.
Buggorah	43	44 5 6	—	44 5 6	Mondah.
Beerbhoom	266	808 13 6	—	808 13 6	Thread and cloth, &c.
Moorshedabad ..	317	—	239 3 9	—	{ 256 pieces of cloth, and carding and making thread
TOTAL	691	905 12 0	264 3 9	880 12 0
Dacca	1,587	254 15 0	—	254 15 0	Baskets.

(4.)—MADRAS CIVIL STATEMENTS.

LIST.

	Page
I.—STATEMENT of the Number of Original Suits and of Appeals depending at the beginning and end of 1815, and disposed of during that year, in each of the Zillah and subordinate Courts under the Presidency of Madras; also the Amount of Property in Litigation	530
II.—STATEMENT of Original Suits and Appeals depending at the beginning and end of 1815, and decided during that year, in the Sudder Adawlut and Provincial Courts ib.
III.—STATEMENT to the same effect as No. I. for the year 1828	532
IV.—STATEMENT to the same effect as No. II. for the year 1828	536
V.—STATEMENT of the Amount of Property in Litigation, in the Suits depending in the several Zillah Courts, on 1st January 1828 and 1st January 1829, and in the Suits disposed of during that year	537
VI.—STATEMENT of the Number of Appeals from the Decrees of Assistant Judges, Registrars, and Native Officers, depending at the beginning and end of 1828, and preferred and disposed of during that year, in each of the Zillah Courts	538
VII.—ABSTRACT STATEMENT of the Number of Appeals depending at the beginning and end of 1828, and disposed of during that year, in the Zillah Courts	542-3
VIII.—TABLE showing the Number of Suits instituted and decided in the years 1810, 1815, and 1820 and 1825, and depending at the end of each of those years, in the Sudder Adawlut, in the Provincial Courts, and in the Courts of the Zillah Judges, Registers, Sudder Ameens, and Moonsiffs, and the average Delay of Judicature in each class of Courts	ib.

APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

I.—NUMBER of ORIGINAL SUITS and APPEALS depending at the Beginning and End of the Year 1815, and the AMOUNT of PROPERTY in ORIGINAL SUITS.

Before the	Judges (or Assistant Judge).				Registrars.				Native Commissioners.				TOTAL.
	Depending on 1st January 1815.	Decreed or Dismissed.	Adjusted by Razeenamah.	Depending on 1st January 1816.	Depending on 1st January 1815.	Decreed or Dismissed.	Adjusted by Razeenamah.	Depending on 1st January 1816.	Depending on 1st January 1815.	Decreed or Dismissed.	Adjusted by Razeenamah.	Depending on 1st January 1816.	Depending on 1st January 1815.	Decreed or Dismissed.	Adjusted by Razeenamah.	Depending on 1st January 1816.
CENTRE DIVISION:
Bellary	28	45	—	12	64	155	—	36	392	6,426	623	447	484	6,626	623	495
Chingleput	38	130	27	47	32	101	50	37	293	297	173	258	303	528	250	342
Chittoor	85	44	16	86	294	233	95	166	1,538	997	1,070	838	1,917	1,324	1,181	1,090
Cuddapah	96	63	31	12	77	122	74	55	1,216	633	555	987	1,389	818	660	1,054
	247	282	74	157	467	661	219	294	3,439	8,353	2,421	2,530	4,153	9,296	2,714	2,981
NORTHERN DIVISION:
Masulipatam	24	49	16	32	52	56	44	97	96	951	837	153	172	1,056	897	282
Nellore	48	51	22	16	230	103	140	85	—	23	35	57	278	177	197	158
Guntur	13	4	7	24	35	43	35	25	477	424	431	334	525	471	473	383
Rajahmundry	208	89	54	189	268	115	46	288	767	466	668	1,121	1,243	670	768	1,598
Visagapatam	26	42	22	26	90	78	62	48	460	314	369	449	576	434	453	623
Ganjam	25	23	1	14	44	49	4	13	92	133	37	134	161	210	42	161
	344	263	122	301	719	444	331	556	1,892	2,311	2,377	2,248	2,955	3,018	2,830	3,105
SOUTHERN DIVISION:
Trichinopoly	32	62	8	32	90	68	8	61	118	285	97	112	240	415	113	205
Combaconum	57	44	4	106	223	97	19	79	531	633	555	591	894	870	599	644
Assistant Judge	83	96	21	68	108	63	33	81	956	831	825	945	1,105	912	866	1,074
Verdachellum	41	18	7	48	88	58	23	67	650	938	1,080	748	1,296	1,044	1,211	1,191
Salem	445	38	107	330	88	58	23	67	650	938	1,080	748	1,296	1,044	1,211	1,191
Assistant Judge	73	10	1	46	121	35	2	99	143	479	781	192	282	545	784	306
Darapooram	18	31	1	15	47	20	14	15	56	378	318	14	350	559	440	116
Madura	130	77	73	58	21	38	25	12	43	106	94	74	86	193	132	110
Assistant Judge	117	84	35	28	21	38	25	12	43	106	94	74	86	193	132	110
Tinnevely	22	49	13	24	21	38	25	12	43	106	94	74	86	193	132	110
	1,018	509	270	755	698	379	124	414	2,537	3,650	3,750	2,676	4,253	4,538	4,144	3,446
WESTERN DIVISION:
Canara	457	846	307	275	126	260	22	563	4,291	205	19	4,403	4,874	1,311	248	5,241
Cochin	26	54	10	12	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	26	54	10	12
Seringupatam	14	13	—	11	95	213	11	112	—	—	—	—	109	226	11	123
North Malabar	120	215	25	209	161	165	26	107	426	490	82	531	707	870	133	847
South Malabar	54	355	95	224	19	54	5	68	779	2,690	685	470	984	3,293	805	987
Assistant Judge	132	194	25	225	19	54	5	68	779	2,690	685	470	984	3,293	805	987
	803	1,677	462	956	401	692	64	850	5,496	3,385	786	5,404	6,700	5,754	1,312	7,210
	2,412	2,731	923	2,169	2,285	2,176	738	2,114	13,364	17,699	9,334	12,858	18,061	22,606	11,000	17,241

II.—STATEMENT of ORIGINAL SUITS and APPEALS depending at the Beginning and End of 1815, and decided during that Year, in the ORIGINAL SUITS.					APPEALS.

	Depending 1st January 1815.	Decreed or Dismissed.	Adjusted by Razeenamah.	TOTAL disposed of.	Depending 1st January 1816.	Depending 1st January 1815.	Decreed or Dismissed.	Adjusted by Razeenamah.	TOTAL disposed of.	Depending 1st January 1816.
Centre Division	19	14	1	15	12	81	59	2	61	59
Northern ditto	46	2	—	2	49	217	64	9	73	217
Southern ditto	11	5	1	6	13	112	59	—	59	112
Western ditto	9	8	—	8	17	61	46	—	46	61
Total Provincial Courts	85	29	2	31	91	471	228	11	240	449

APPEALS.												AMOUNT OF PROPERTY IN LITIGATION.
Before the Judge (or Assistant Judge).
From the Registrars.				From the Native Commissioners.				TOTAL.				In Suits depending on the 1st of January 1815.	In Suits decided during the Year.	In Suits depending on the 1st of January 1816.
Depending 1st January 1815.	Decreed or Dismissed.	Adjusted.	Depending 1st January 1816.	Depending 1st January 1815.	Decreed or Dismissed.	Adjusted.	Depending 1st January 1816.	Depending 1st January 1815.	Decreed or Dismissed.	Adjusted.	TOTAL.	Pagodas.	Pagodas.	Pagodas.
17	1	—	7	37	100	1	25	48	117	1	32	23,200	20,871	10,355
13	14	1	1	2	26	2	—	5	40	3	1	10,858	24,695	6,201
74	93	2	118	10	114	10	235	93	137	12	353	60,307	40,573	58,171
183	12	4	35	109	36	10	148	142	47	14	173	27,079	39,850	28,322
121	66	7	161	167	275	23	408	288	341	30	569	1,21,444	1,25,980	1,03,040
1810	22	2	11	19	66	4	41	29	88	6	52	15,395	89,150	18,391
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	11,552	5,400	7,491
1814	3	—	4	10	5	1	7	14	8	1	11	7,733	8,484	10,412
1812	8	30	32	120	5	—	118	142	13	30	150	87,624	26,040	1,10,700
1811	13	—	—	9	47	8	17	9	60	8	17	17,706	28,353	18,179
1810	5	1	20	28	14	—	25	38	19	1	45	9,921	4,756	7,590
1848	51	33	67	186	137	13	208	232	188	46	275	1,49,931	1,62,068	1,72,763
1813	7	—	11	109	35	10	98	122	42	10	109	23,440	16,750	13,780
14	11	—	13	84	53	3	81	167	134	4	145	57,411	17,426	34,730
3	3	—	3	66	62	1	48	109	71	16	100	29,420	8,920	28,022
1811	7	3	14	98	64	13	95	109	71	16	100	29,420	8,920	28,022
1812	7	2	23	350	23	12	230	455	161	75	356	74,781	25,879	66,024
1811	8	—	7	73	123	61	89	455	161	75	356	74,781	25,879	66,024
1810	2	—	8	28	17	1	33	34	19	1	40	11,495	7,451	11,831
1808	2	—	7	28	17	1	33	34	19	1	40	11,495	7,451	11,831
1811	8	1	1	3	8	5	10	26	19	8	15	33,262	45,948	4,716
1811	3	—	13	—	—	2	4	26	19	8	15	33,262	45,948	4,716
1811	6	—	1	2	4	—	—	3	10	—	1	5,763	10,594	5,848
1812	6	—	81	826	394	108	694	916	456	114	775	2,35,602	1,32,977	1,64,957
1812	—	—	19	136	3	6	164	138	3	6	183	1,95,045	14,263	91,437
1811	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	2,704	4,759	661
1813	—	—	13	—	—	—	—	3	—	—	13	8,609	3,433	8,528
1810</

Provincial Courts under the Presidency of Madras; and also of the APPEALS disposed of by the SUDDER ADAWLUT in the same Year.

AMOUNT OF PROPERTY IN LITIGATION.
In Original Suits depending 1st January 1916.	In Original Suits depending 1st January 1916.	In Original Suits depending 1st January 1916.
Pagoda. 1,74,000	Pagoda. 58,451	Pagoda. 1,28,918
1,10,000	4,39,558	1,23,421
31,000	69,774	181
73,535	1,13,618	58,000
77,880
5,25,415	5,25,415	5,04,691
	27,001	121,836

Fractions.

Amount in Sterling.

SUDDER ADAWLUT*.....

Decreed or Dismissed.	Adjusted.	TOTAL.
21	3	24

* The Returns of the business of the Sudder Adawlut do not contain columns of Suits instituted or depending.

IV.
APPENDIX.
No. 5.
continued.

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishment of
the Three
Presidencies.

532 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

III.—NUMBER of ORIGINAL SUITS depending at the Beginning and End of 1828, and of each Division under

BEFORE THE ...	JUDGES.							REGISTRARS.
	1. Depending 1st January 1828.	2. Instituted during the Year.	3. Decided on the Merits.	4. Dismissed for Default.	5. Adjusted by Amicable Settlement.	6. TOTAL of Cols. 1, 2, 3, 4, & 5.	7. Remaining 1st January 1829.	1. Depending 1st January 1828.	2. Referred during the Year.	3. Decided on the Merits.	4. Dismissed for Default.	5. Remanded.	6. TOTAL of Cols. 1, 2, 3, 4, & 5.	7. Depending 1st January 1829.
CENTRE DIVISION :
Bellary	5	479	41	15	11	67	22	52	72	51	34	14	99	...
Chingleput	29	347	12	5	2	19	27	33	11	2	20	6	28	16
Chittoor	28	353	29	...	4	33	13	24	33	5	...	8	13	30
Cuddapah	33	438	10	7	4	21	40
Ditto Auxiliary Court ...	13	67	37	33	12	82	31
TOTAL.....	108	1,684	129	60	33	222	132	110	116	58	54	28	140	46
NORTHERN DIVISION :
Masulipatam, at Rajahmundry	206	1,166	62	10	15	87	150	...	75	24	3	4	31	44
Masulipatam Auxiliary Court	123	127	...	6	13	19	55
Nellore	25	211	28	14	17	59	38	19	21	13	14	9	36	4
Guntoor	58	2	...	1	3	25
Chicacole	44	732	28	3	9	40	49	49	22	36	1	8	45	10
TOTAL.....	398	2,294	120	33	55	208	317	68	118	73	18	21	112	58
SOUTHERN DIVISION :
Combaconum	22	270	9	5	4	18	26	23	24	12	...	7	19	28
Salem	24	291	15	5	2	22	95	59	14	6	...	2	9	...
Ditto Auxiliary Court.....	75	259	55	17	1	73	31
Colligal (Native Judge)	17	116	70	1	28	99	34
Madura	20	199	9	5	11	25	28	14	...	2	1	...	3	...
Ditto Auxiliary Court	14	120	24	15	10	49	13
TOTAL.....	172	1,255	182	37	66	286	227	96	38	20	2	9	31	28
WESTERN DIVISION :
Canara	429	378	42	13	...	55	116	31	4	20
Ditto Auxiliary Court	24	135	37	2	4	43	15
Malabar.....	287	584	142	1	11	154	312
Ditto Auxiliary Court	42	214	31	1	11	43	25
TOTAL	782	1,311	252	17	26	295	468	31	4	20
GRAND TOTAL.....	1,460	6,544	683	158	170	1,011	1,144	305	276	151	74	58	283	154

IV.—JUDICIAL.

533

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

preferred and disposed of during that Year, in each of the Zillah and Subordinate Courts the Presidency of Madras.

(4.) Madras Civil
Statements.

SUDDER AMEENS.							DISTRICT MOONSIFFS.
1.	2.	3.	4.	5.	6.	7.	1.	2.	3.	4.	5.	6.	7.	8.
Depending 1st January 1882.	Referred during the Year.	Decided on the Merits.	Dismissed for Default.	Raceamnah.	TOTAL of Cols. 2, 3, 4, & 5.	Depending 1st January 1882.	Depending 1st January 1882.	Referred during the Year.	Referred.	Decided on the Merits.	Dismissed for Default.	Raceamnah.	TOTAL of Cols. 4, 5, & 6.	Depending 1st January 1882.
156	438	308	122	48	478	114	623	5,294	...	1,673	3,502	92	5,267	566
138	234	98	106	66	289	83	425	2,881	85	1,235	382	1,087	2,704	683
121	300	219	11	137	397	71	457	4,183	...	1,812	21	2,302	4,135	505
122	707	420	168	79	667	142	741	6,586	1	2,200	2,296	1,416	5,912	1,141
3	53	21	19	7	47	9	74	1,842	1	713	283	813	1,809	21
540	1,732	1,066	425	357	1,848	419	2,320	20,786	87	7,633	6,484	5,710	19,827	2,916
285	1,060	240	213	507	1,020	325	906	2,483	...	1,153	248	867	2,268	1,121
...	176	53	30	80	163	13	699	2,248	...	672	122	1,049	1,843	1,104
49	101	60	8	51	119	22	412	3,076	17	684	378	1,843	2,905	321
...	11	1	...	5	6	5	...	810	19	189	108	520	817	291
221	683	401	25	239	665	238	929	4,647	...	2,268	64	1,489	3,821	1,707
546	2,031	755	276	942	1,973	603	2,946	13,264	36	4,966	920	5,768	11,654	4,544
122	225	112	55	108	275	72	580	3,605	1	1,440	420	1,598	3,458	728
144	250	212	50	28	290	104	781	2,991	2	1,780	509	1,424	3,713	1,059
26	229	189	13	6	208	47	328	2,833	...	1,109	341	997	2,447	678
...	233	...	126	29	59	214	55
26	206	75	45	49	169	34	262	2,654	...	1,145	165	1,293	2,603	313
13	72	36	15	18	69	16	34	1,073	...	309	200	472	981	126
331	984	624	178	209	1,011	273	1,985	13,389	3	5,909	1,664	5,843	13,416	2,959
188	1,112	156	17	38	211	604	3,191	3,154	20	1,488	412	415	2,315	4,037
180	100	156	66	19	241	39	1,784	2,743	1	1,522	150	311	1,983	2,509
353	405	329	137	105	571	187	1,386	4,770	...	2,558	57	1,176	3,791	2,364
32	270	152	15	25	192	92	838	3,410	...	1,849	80	536	2,465	1,783
753	1,887	792	236	187	1,215	922	7,199	14,077	21	7,417	699	2,438	10,534	10,693
2,170	6,632	3,238	1,114	1,895	6,047	2,217	14,460	61,516	147	26,925	9,767	19,759	55,451	21,112

IV. 3 Y

(continued..)

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishment of
the three
Presidencies.

534

APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

III.—Number of Original Suits depending at the Beginning and End of 1828, and Courts of each Division under the

BEFORE THE ...	DISTRICT PUNCHAYETS.							VILLAGE MOONSIFFS.
	1. Depending 1st January 1828.	2. Referred.	3. Decided on Merits.	4. Dismissed for Defect.	5. Rescued.	6. TOTAL of Cols. 2, 4, 5 & 6.	7. Depending 1st January 1829.	1. Depending 1st January 1828.	2. Inferred.	3. Decided on Merits.	4. Dismissed for Defect.	5. Rescued.	6. TOTAL of Cols. 2, 4, 5 & 6.	7. Depending 1st January 1829.
CENTRE DIVISION :
Bellary	1	1	...	1	...	1	47	9	69	125	...
Chingleput	3	1	3	3	1	7	...	112	...	147	12	48	207	116
Chittoor	2	44	65	68	8	10	86	21
Cuddapah	2	1	3
Ditto Auxiliary Court
TOTAL	6	2	3	4	1	8	2	156	406	263	32	127	418	137
NORTHERN DIVISION :
Masulipatam, at Rajahmundry	180	24	17	7	...	24	180
Masulipatam Auxiliary Court	2	2	3	3
Nellore	1	3	...	1	1	2	2	121	83	40	12	21	78	...
Guntoor	176	77	81	58	166	141
Chicacole	4	1	1	3	33	5	3	...	3	8	22
TOTAL	7	3	...	1	2	3	7	337	288	137	50	82	269	256
SOUTHERN DIVISION :
Combaconum	1	6	...	1	5	6	1	185	338	266	80	50	494	119
Salem	3	2	...	2	...	2	3	...	75	45	9	18	72	...
Ditto Auxiliary Court	37	28	...	9	37	...
Colligal (Native Judge)	18	326	330	330	14
Madura	1	1	1	...	20	84	52	32	1	85	19
Ditto Auxiliary Court	155	773	294	390	116	800	128
TOTAL	4	9	1	3	5	9	4	378	1,633	1,015	511	202	1,728	280
WESTERN DIVISION :
Canara	3	2	...	2	1	939	627	282	320	18	620	474
Ditto Auxiliary Court	1,188	310	111	243	23	377	920
Malabar	1	1	1	255	321	217	33	86	366	290
Ditto Auxiliary Court	817	374	299	76	31	406	784
TOTAL	4	2	...	3	2	3,199	1,632	909	672	108	1,466	2,468
TOTAL	21	14	4	10	9	22	15	4,010	3,950	2,324	1,265	319	4,104	3,241

IV.—JUDICIAL.

535

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

preferred and disposed of during that Year, in each of the Zillah and Subordinate Presidency of Madras—continued.

(4.) Madras Civil
Statements.

VILLAGE PUNCHAYETS.							TOTAL.
Depending 1st January 1882.	Referred.	Dismissed on merits.	Dismissed for Default.	Rescinded.	TOTAL of Cols. 2, 4, & 5.	Depending 1st January 1882.	Depending 1st January 1882.	Instituted during the Year.	Decided on the Merits.	Dismissed for Default.	Adjusted by Rameswaram.	TOTAL disposed of.	Depending 1st January 1882.
...	838	5,773	2,073	3,674	165	5,912	702
...	1	1	1	...	628	3,354	1,398	524	1,251	3,173	809
...	742	4,747	2,212	44	2,499	4,755	734
1	2	1	1	2	943	7,089	2,699	2,477	1,509	6,685	1,348
...	90	1,913	772	338	832	1,942	61
1	3	2	2	2	3,241	22,876	9,154	7,057	6,256	22,467	3,654
5	5	1,582	3,673	1,496	481	1,453	3,430	1,825
...	...	1	3	...	827	2,375	725	156	1,142	2,023	1,179
1	3	2	...	2	3	...	619	3,370	826	427	1,944	3,197	387
...	1	1	1	1	...	1,044	270	139	584	993	403
...	1	1,280	5,384	2,736	93	1,749	4,578	2,039
6	5	4	...	2	7	6	4,308	15,846	6,053	1,296	6,872	14,221	5,891
...	933	4,213	1,839	561	1,780	4,180	974
...	1	1,011	3,357	2,060	576	1,475	4,111	1,261
...	429	3,129	1,381	371	1,013	2,765	756
...	35	675	526	30	87	643	103
...	...	1	342	2,937	1,284	248	1,354	2,886	394
7	12	6	2	5	14	5	223	1,966	670	622	621	1,913	288
7	15	7	2	6	14	5	2,973	16,277	7,760	2,408	6,330	16,498	3,776
6	3	3	2	...	5	4	4,787	4,159	1,971	766	471	3,208	5,256
3	5	...	5	...	3,179	3,188	1,826	466	357	2,549	3,483
...	2,382	5,675	3,246	228	1,329	4,803	3,154
...	1	1	1	...	1,729	3,998	2,382	172	603	3,107	2,684
9	4	4	7	...	11	4	11,977	17,020	9,375	1,632	2,760	13,767	14,577
23	27	17	9	8	17	17	22,499	72,019	32,342	12,395	22,218	66,957	27,898

536 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

IV.—STATEMENT of ORIGINAL SUITS and APPEALS depending at the Beginning and End of 1828, and decided during that Year, in the SUDDER ADAWLUT and PROVINCIAL COURTS, under the Presidency of Madras.

PROVINCIAL COURTS.	ORIGINAL SUITS.
	Depending 1st January 1828.	Instituted during the Year.	Decided on the Merits.	Dismissed for Default.	Adjusted by Razecnamah.	TOTAL disposed of.	Remaining 1st January 1829.
CENTRE DIVISION:
Regular	13	2	4	2	1	7	8
NORTHERN DIVISION:
Regular	32	20	6	—	4	16	39
SOUTHERN DIVISION:
Regular	11	6	6	1	—	7	38
WESTERN DIVISION:
Regular	7	1	1	2	—	3	9
TOTAL PROVINCIAL COURTS .. } Regular ..	63	29	17	5	5	27	94

PROVINCIAL COURTS.	APPEALS.
	Depending 1st January 1828.	Instituted during the Year.	Reversed.	Confirmed.	Dismissed for Default.	Razecnamahs.	Referred to the Zillah Judges.	TOTAL.	Depending 1st January 1829.
CENTRE DIVISION:
Regular	59	27	5	10	6	2	—	23	61
Special	—	11	8	7	—	—	—	15	—
NORTHERN DIVISION:
Regular	36	47	2	45	—	2	3	62	42
Special	—	—	2	—	—	—	—	2	—
SOUTHERN DIVISION:
Regular	32	14	2	5	1	1	—	9	10
Special	—	6	2	3	—	—	—	5	—
WESTERN DIVISION:
Regular	1	12	—	3	1	—	3	6	5
Special	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
TOTAL PROVINCIAL COURTS .. } Regular ..	—	100	9	63	8	5	6	90	—
} Special ..	—	17	12	10	—	—	—	22	—
	128	117	21	73	8	5	6	112	118

SUDDER ADAWLUT	APPEALS.
	Depending on 1st January 1828.	Decided or Dismissed during the Year.	Adjusted by Razecnamah.	Depending 1st January 1829.
	25	5	—	30

* It does not appear clear, whether this is the number decided during the whole year, or during the latter half of it. There is no return of the Appeals preferred during the year.

IV. JUDICIAL.

537

IV. APPENDIX, No. 5. continued.

(4.) Madras Civil
Statements.

V.—STATEMENT of the AMOUNT of PROPERTY in LITIGATION in the CIVIL SUITS, including APPEALS, depending on the 1st of January 1828 and 1st of January 1829, in each of the ZILLAH COURTS under the Presidency of Madras; and of the AMOUNT in LITIGATION in the ORIGINAL SUITS disposed of in each of those Courts during the Year 1828; also the TOTAL AMOUNT of the APPEALS disposed of in that Year.

	AMOUNT of Original Suits and Appeals depending 1st January 1828.	AMOUNT of Original Suits and Appeals depending 1st January 1829.	AMOUNT of Original Suits disposed of in 1828.
CENTRE DIVISION:
Bellary	Rup. A. P. 40,575 12 7	Rup. A. P. 29,437 6 4	Rup. A. P. 1,50,216 7 11
Chingleput	98,103 9 6	1,10,484 3 0	1,86,679 14 8
Chittoor	94,863 11 5	68,862 0 10	2,92,170 12 3
Cuddapah	45,699 0 6	58,273 7 9	1,28,509 7 0
Ditto Auxiliary Court ..	2,992 0 6	15,119 14 0	37,324 6 6
	2,82,234 2 6	2,82,176 15 11	7,94,901 0 4
NORTHERN DIVISION:
Masulipatam, at Rajahmundry ..	1,27,577 11 3	1,31,468 8 5	1,61,838 15 11
Masulipatam Auxiliary Court ..	76,754 6 3	1,02,448 3 10	1,11,081 9 9
Nellore	51,480 14 4	42,614 10 6	1,90,799 0 11
Guntur	—	3,57,604 8 1	40,035 2 7
Chitracole	1,75,786 1 0	1,73,374 7 3	2,99,040 1 3
	4,31,599 0 10	8,07,510 6 1	8,02,794 14 5
SOUTHERN DIVISION:
Combaconum	1,01,495 0 9	1,08,444 3 7	2,08,130 15 1
Salem	75,117 15 3	76,354 8 1	93,627 11 1
Ditto Auxiliary Court	24,481 13 5	38,577 12 10	76,663 5 4
Colligal (Native Judge)	1,672 15 0	11,341 14 0	15,595 4 5
Madura	60,356 5 8	52,505 7 9	1,84,997 1 5
Ditto Auxiliary Court	5,380 6 3	17,030 5 5	67,572 14 2
	2,68,504 8 4	3,04,254 3 8	6,47,587 3 14
WESTERN DIVISION:
Canara	5,05,225 6 4	4,67,792 14 3	2,72,440 6 6
Ditto Auxiliary Court	1,40,327 4 10	1,56,389 6 11	1,57,943 0 10
Malabar	2,73,031 6 6	3,06,009 15 6	2,59,144 12 7
Ditto Auxiliary Court	95,900 11 0	1,44,599 12 0	1,75,812 12 1
	10,14,484 12 8	10,74,792 0 8	8,65,321 0 0
TOTAL ..	19,96,822 8 4	24,68,733 10 4	31,10,604 2 1
AMOUNT of APPEALS in regular Suits disposed of in all the Courts in 1828			1,42,361 11 1
AMOUNT of ORIGINAL SUITS and APPEALS disposed of ..			32,52,965 13 2

VI.—STATEMENT of the NUMBER of APPEALS from the DECREES of ASSISTANT JUDGES, REGISTRARS and in each of the ZILLAH COURTS

VI.—STATEMENT OF THE NUMBER OF

BEFORE THE JUDGES.

		From the Registrars.							From the Sudder Ameen.							From the District Moonsiffs.
		Depending 1st January 1898.	Referred.	Decree Reversed.	Decree Confirmed.	Dismissed for Default.	Adjusted by Razamah.	TOTAL disposed of.	Depending 1st January 1899.	Depending 1st January 1898.	Referred.	Decree Reversed.	Decree Confirmed.	Dismissed for Default.	Razamah.	TOTAL.	Depending 1st January 1898.	Referred.	Decree Reversed.	Decree Confirmed.	Dismissed for Default.	Razamah.	TOTAL.	Depending 1st January 1899.
CENTRE DIVISION :
Bellary		1	7	3	5	—	—	8	—	3	18	6	13	—	—	19	10	30	30	19	—	1	40	—
Chingleput		17	7	1	—	—	—	1	23	20	56	3	6	—	—	23	12	61	1	6	—	1	9	14
Chittoor		1	2	1	—	—	—	1	2	15	75	6	16	—	—	23	13	76	1	10	—	2	5	7
Cuddapah		34	2	8	10	1	5	24	13	33	76	6	11	6	—	25	15	20	3	1	—	3	7	5
Do. .. Auxiliary Court ..		—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	5	3	1	1	—	5	1	7	—	—	—	—	—	—
		53	18	13	15	1	5	34	38	72	230	24	47	11	3	85	51	193	26	37	1	5	69	31
NORTHERN DIVISION :
Masulipatam, at Rajahmundry		5	5	—	1	—	—	1	8	39	34	8	10	—	4	22	49	59	7	—	—	1	16	89
Masulipatam Auxiliary Court		1	—	1	—	—	—	1	2	2	10	1	—	—	1	2	10	99	78	—	—	—	5	83
Nellore		1	13	6	3	—	—	11	3	1	26	4	6	—	—	1	11	7	9	74	1	1	30	12
Guntoor		—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Chicacole		47	21	9	13	—	1	23	45	83	96	6	8	1	6	21	137	90	84	—	1	2	3	27
		64	39	16	17	—	3	36	56	125	167	10	24	1	12	56	204	257	323	45	70	4	11	130	222
SOUTHERN DIVISION :
Combaconum		20	24	—	4	—	2	6	40	24	31	5	4	1	1	11	28	—	128	—	—	—	—	8
Salem		35	6	4	17	1	—	22	8	73	39	13	25	3	—	41	74	64	67	2	5	2	11	54
Ditto .. Auxiliary Court..		—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	9	24	7	7	—	—	14	19	27	14	4	15	2	22	6
Colligal (Native Judge).....		—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	1	1	—	—	—	—	8	—	—	—	—	—	—
Madura		2	5	—	5	—	—	5	—	10	12	8	13	—	—	21	7	17	70	9	2	2	29	8
Ditto .. Auxiliary Court..		—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	6	25	7	18	—	1	26	5	3	20	2	—	—	4	4
		47	34	4	26	1	2	33	48	122	133	41	68	4	2	115	133	111	307	17	39	6	7	69	83
WESTERN DIVISION :
Canara		80	13	12	5	2	—	19	68	210	46	7	9	9	—	25	328	103	134	—	—	4	—	10
Ditto .. Auxiliary Court..		—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	23	2	8	—	—	10	13	—	46	—	—	—	—	—
Malabar		31	2	—	—	—	—	—	—	199	76	—	1	—	2	3	184	3	240	—	—	—	—	—
Ditto .. Auxiliary Court..		—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	24	31	5	22	—	—	27	49	7	90	—	—	—	—	—
		111	15	12	7	2	1	22	98	363	176	14	40	9	2	65	474	113	513	—	—	4	3	13
		From Assistant or Native Judges.							From Collectors (in Summary Suits).							From Village Moonsiffs.
Chingleput		—	—	—	—	1	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Cuddapah		1	9	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Nellore		—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Madura		—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Salem, from Assistant Judge..		—	4	2	1	—	—	3	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Ditto .. Native ditto		—	2	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Canara		—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
		1	15	2	2	1	—	5	15	—	6	—	1	6	—	7	5	—	—	—	—	—	—	—

IV. JUDICIAL.

539

NATIVE OFFICERS, depending at the Beginning and End of 1828, and preferred and disposed of during that Year, under the Presidency of Madras.

under the Presidency of Madras.

BEFORE THE REGISTRARS.														BEFORE THE SUDDER AMEENS.
From the Sudder Ameens.							From the District Moonsiffs.							From the District Moonsiffs.
Depending 1st January 1828.	Referred.	Decree Reversed.	Decree Confirmed.	Dismissed for Default.	Adjusted by Razanmah.	TOTAL.	Depending 1st January 1828.	Referred.	Decree Reversed.	Decree Confirmed.	Dismissed for Default.	Razanmah.	TOTAL.	Depending 1st January 1829.	Depending 1st January 1828.	Referred.	Decree Reversed.	Decree Confirmed.	Dismissed for Default.	Razanmah.	TOTAL.	Depending 1st January 1829.
— 119 —	— 37 58 —	— 2 10 —	— 10 20 —	— — — —	— — 1 —	— 12 31 —	— 1 1 —	— — — —	— — — —	— 1 — —	— — — —	— — — —	— 2 1 —	— 3 — —	— 44 8 3	— 68 76 15	— 56 27 7	— 43 42 6	— 1 1 —	— 3 4 —	— 103 74 16	— 9 13 —
121	95	12	30	—	1	43	168	2	6	—	2	1	—	3	4	55	159	90	91	3	9	193	22
— — 6 —	2 9 — 30	— 7 2	1 2 6	— — —	— — —	1 12 8	1 3 13	— 4 9	9 11 —	— 4 —	2 4 3	— 7 —	— — 1	2 15 4	7 — —	— 6 1	1 2 40 21 149	— 2 26 5 45	1 12 6 58	— 6 —	— 1 — 9	1 45 11 112	— 1 10 38
6	41	9	9	3	—	21	17	13	20	4	9	7	1	21	7	7	213	78	77	6	10	171	49
2 10 — 6	17 6 — —	— 2 — —	2 4 — —	1 — — —	— 1 — —	3 7 — —	16 — — —	10 15 — 7	12 1 — —	2 1 — —	4 2 — —	— — — —	— 1 — —	6 4 — —	16 — — —	35 24 5 4 3	108 77 11 67 16	43 51 5 16 5	68 39 10 38 9	— 3 — 2 3	3 4 — 2 1	114 97 15 58 18	29 4 — 3 —
18	22	2	6	1	1	10	16	32	13	3	6	—	1	10	16	71	279	120	164	8	10	302	37
132 — —	10 — —	— — —	— — —	— — —	— — —	— — —	134 — —	— — —	— — —	— — —	— — —	— — —	— — —	— — —	— — —	17 29 117 3	393 40 238 99	41 23 82 35	65 36 131 24	1 — 11 1	6 1 8 4	113 60 232 74	131 18 123 25
132	10	23	45	4	2	74	134	47	39	7	17	8	2	34	27	166	719	181	266	13	19	479	297

540. APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

VII.—STATEMENT of the NUMBER of APPEALS depending at the Beginning and End of 1828, and preferred

From the Decrees of - -	EUROPEAN OFFICERS.
	Depending 1st January 1828.	Preferred during the Year.	Decrees reversed.	Ditto confirmed.	Dismissed for Default.	Razanamahs.	Total disposed of.	Depending 1st January 1829.
CENTRE DIVISION	54	27	13	15	2	5	35	48
NORTHERN DIVISION	54	39	16	17	—	3	36	56
SOUTHERN DIVISION	47	38	6	27	1	2	36	51
WESTERN DIVISION	111	15	12	7	2	1	22	100
	266	119	47	66	5	11	129	255

Note.—This Paper is an Abstract of the Results of the Statement No. VI. It will be observed, on a close discrepancies between them, the ultimate result of which is, an excess of 27 in the two last columns of the the voluminous Returns from which these Tables have been prepared.

VIII.—TABLE showing the NUMBER of SUITS instituted and decided (within the Year) in the SUDDER MOONSIFFS, and the Number depending at the End of the Year, with the average Delay

	SUDDER ADAWLUT.				PROVINCIAL COURTS.				JUDGES' COURTS.
	Instituted.	Decided.	Depending.	Delay.	Instituted.	Decided.	Depending.	Delay.	Instituted.	Decided.	Depending.	Delay.
1805 ..	—	—	—	—	No Statements have been received.				—	—	—	—
1810 ..	—	—	—	Months.	—	—	—	Months.	—	3,956	3,912	11½
1815 ..	—	24	—	—	225	271	540	24	5,113	5,014	4,362	10½
1820 ..	11	12	27	27	217	322	372	14	2,623	2,173	2,060	16½
1825 ..	9	13	14	12	130	109	262	28	827	1,259	1,367	13
1830 ..	—	—	—	—	No Statements have been received.				—	—	—	—

IV.—JUDICIAL.

541

and disposed of during that Year, in the ZILLAH COURTS of each DIVISION under the Presidency of Madras.

NATIVE OFFICERS.								TOTAL.
Depending 1st January 1828.	Preferred.	Decrees reversed.	Ditto confirmed.	Dismissed for Default.	Razanamahs.	TOTAL disposed of.	Depending 1st January 1829.	Depending 1st January 1828.	Preferred.	Decrees reversed.	Ditto confirmed.	Dismissed for Default.	Razanamahs.	TOTAL disposed of.	Depending 1st January 1829.
301	423	152	207	16	18	393	352	355	450	165	222	18	23	428	400
408	490	171	189	21	34	399	499	462	529	187	206	21	37	435	555
354	437	186	284	19	21	507	286	401	475	191	311	20	23	543	337
774	689	195	307	24	24	549	919	885	704	207	314	26	25	571	1,019
1,837	2,039	703	987	80	97	1,848	2,056	2,103	2,158	750	1,053	85	108	1,977	2,311

comparison of the two first with the two last columns of each division of the Table, that there are several division headed "Total," over the two first. These discrepancies have probably arisen in the process of copying ADAWLUT and PROVINCIAL COURTS, and in the COURTS of the ZILLAH JUDGES, SUDDER AMEENS and of Judicature in all the Courts, during the Years 1805, 1810, 1815, 1820, and 1825.

REGISTERS.				NATIVE COMMISSIONERS.
Instituted.	Decided.	Depending.	Delay.	Instituted.	Decided.	Depending.	Delay.	Instituted.	Decided.	Depending.	Delay.
—	—	—	—	No Statements have been received.				50,009	49,228	20,028	4½
—	3,242	4,039	Months. 14½	—	22,674	8,648	Months. 4½
2,743	2,914	2,114	8¾	30,643	30,687	12,858	5
1,559	1,452	861	7	SUDDER AMEENS.
2,257	1,814	1,293	8½	5,491	5,409	1,748	3½
—	—	—	—	7,581	7,160.	2,749	4¼	55,700	57,832	19,188	3¾
				No Statements have been received.				MOONSIFFS.

(5.)—MADRAS CRIMINAL STATEMENTS.

LIST.

	Page
I. STATEMENT of the Number of Trials in which, and of Prisoners on whom, Sentence was passed by the Foujdaree Adawlut in 1815, and the Nature of the Sentences	543
II. ABSTRACT of the Proceedings of the Criminal Courts and Police in the Year 1817; also, the Extent and Population (in 1822) of the Districts	544
III. A similar STATEMENT for 1828	546
IV. STATEMENT of the Operations of the Foujdaree Adawlut, from 1st January to 30th June 1829	548
V. STATEMENT of the Operations of the Courts of Circuit in the same Period; showing the Number of Acquittals, Punishments of different kinds, and References to the Foujdaree Adawlut, in each of the Four Divisions	550
VI. A similar STATEMENT, exhibiting the Acquittals, Punishments, &c. for each Crime or Misdemeanor	552
VII. STATEMENT of the Operations of the Criminal Courts in each of the Zillahs during the same Period	554
VIII. STATEMENT of the Operations of the Criminal Courts during the same Period, exhibiting the Acquittals, Punishments, &c. for each Crime and Misdemeanor,	556
IX. STATEMENT of the Proceedings of the Village Police, District Police and Magistracy, of each Zillah, 1st January to 30th June 1829, in Reference to Petty Offences	560
X. A similar STATEMENT, distinguishing the Offences, but not the Districts	561
XI. STATEMENT of the Proceedings of the District Police and Magistracy in each Zillah, in Reference to Crimes and Misdemeanors	562
XII. A similar STATEMENT, distinguishing the Offences, but not the Districts	564

I.—GENERAL ABSTRACT of CRIMINAL TRIALS on which SENTENCES were passed by the FOUJDARRY ADAWLUT, from 1st January to 31st December 1815.

DIVISIONS.	ZILLAHS.	NUMBER OF TRIALS.					NUMBER OF PRISONERS ON WHOM SENTENCE HAS BEEN PASSED.							TOTAL.
		1812. 1813. 1814. 1815.					TOTAL.	1812. 1813. 1814. 1815.					TOTALS.		Released.
		1812.	1813.	1814.	1815.	1812.		1813.	1814.	1815.	Death.	Trans- portation.				Imprisonment.
CENTRE DIVISION	Chittoor ..	1	—	—	11	12	27	—	—	—	14	1	2	2	34	41
	Bellary ..	—	—	1	11	12	—	—	1	14	6	—	—	—	7	15
	Cuddapah ..	5	—	14	6	25	19	—	32	8	1	15	4	29	59
	Chingleput ..	—	—	4	—	4	—	—	10	—	—	8	1	—	—	10
	Masulipatam ..	—	—	1	—	1	—	—	2	—	2	—	—	—	—	2
NORTHERN DIVISION	Nellore ..	—	—	2	1	3	—	—	13	4	—	—	—	17	17
	Guntur ..	—	—	—	1	1	—	—	—	2	—	—	—	2	2
	Rajahmundry ..	—	—	6	3	9	—	—	18	8	1	3	1	21	26
	Vizagapatam ..	—	—	2	4	6	—	—	29	4	—	—	20	4	33
	Ganjam ..	—	—	4	—	4	—	—	9	—	—	—	1	8	9
SOUTHERN DIVISION	Trichinopoly ..	—	—	3	—	3	—	—	3	—	—	—	—	2	3
	Combaconum ..	—	—	4	1	5	—	—	10	1	5	—	—	5	11
	Verdachellum ..	—	—	—	1	1	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	1	1
	Salem ..	—	—	14	8	22	—	—	53	17	2	15	1	51	70
	Darapooram ..	—	2	4	—	6	—	36	5	—	2	1	—	17	41
	Madura ..	—	—	4	1	5	—	—	13	1	2	1	2	8	14
	Tinnevely ..	—	1	4	—	5	—	1	5	—	1	—	—	3	6
WESTERN DIVISION	North Malabar ..	—	—	1	2	3	—	—	5	3	2	1	—	5	8
	South Malabar ..	—	—	14	3	17	—	—	39	9	13	12	2	16	48
	Canara ..	—	—	1	3	4	—	—	6	3	1	—	4	4	9
	Cochin ..	—	—	1	—	1	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	1	1
	Springapatam ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total ..		6	3	84	56	149	46	37	254	89	39	58	57	37	235	426

IV. 3 Z 2

IV.—JUDICIAL.

543

IV.
APPENDIX.
No. 5.
continued.
(5.) Madras
Criminal
Statements.

II.—ABSTRACT of the PROCEEDINGS of the several CRIMINAL COURTS

ZILLAHs.	EXTENT in Square Miles.	POPULATION in 1822.	MAGISTRATES.
			Offences committed.	Persons apprehended.	Acquitted.	Convicted.	Punishments :			Sent to the Criminal Judge.
							Fined.	Imprisoned.	Flogged.
CENTRE DIVISION :
Bellary	12,980	927,857	664	588	76	190	23	98	69	322
Chingleput	3,020	363,129	1,709	3,969	1,811	1,611	708	778	125	547
Chittoor	892,292	924	1,711	996	266	114	79	73	449
Chuddapah	12,970	1,094,460	1,356	3,032	1,908	603	332	171	100	521
			4,653	9,300	4,791	2,670	1,177	1,126	367	1,839
NORTHERN DIVISION :
Masulipatam	5,000	529,849	423	1,449	773	175	68	41	66	501
Guntoor	4,960	454,754		2,400	1,679	501	339	155	7	220
Nellore	7,930	439,467		1,288	900	106	71	22	13	282
Rajahmundry	6,050	738,308		857	521	300	163	134	3	36
Vizagapatam	15,300	772,570		258	52	21	2	5	14	185
Ganjam	6,400	332,015	2,666	6,252	3,925	1,103	643	357	103	1,224
SOUTHERN DIVISION :
Combaconum	7,000	1,382,645	493	1,729	1,345	303	135	114	54	81
Darapooram	372	723	67	236	29	43	164	420
Madura	16,400	1,353,153	339	1,678	1,006	546	239	244	63	126
Salem	8,200	1,075,985	676	1,403	599	652	370	147	135	152
Tinnevelly.....	5,700	564,957	288	1,223	642	135	36	64	35	446
Trichinopoly.....	347	1,330	937	144	87	46	11	249
Verdchellum	1,377	3,481	2,954	407	224	52	131	152
			3,892	11,567	7,550	2,423	1,120	710	593	1,626
WESTERN DIVISION :
Canara	7,720	657,594	656	1,355	407	279	46	101	132	669
Malabar, North	6,060	907,575	1,741	4,329	843	645	368	130	147	2,841
Malabar, South			156	267	118	57	15	39	3
Serlingapatam	31,612	3,553	5,951	1,368	981	429	270	282	3,602
			13,764	33,070	17,634	7,177	3,369	2,463	1,345	8,291

IV.—JUDICIAL.

545

... and POLICE, under the Presidency of Madras, in the Year 1817.

CRIMINAL JUDGES.						COURTS OF CIRCUIT.								FOUJDARRY ADALUT.
Acquitted.	Convicted.	Fined.	Imprisoned.	Flogged.	Committed for Trial before the Court of Circuit.	Acquitted.	Convicted.	Punishments :				Referred to the Foudjarry Adawlut.	Acquitted.	Convicted.	Punishments :
								Fined.	Imprisoned.	Flogged.	Banished.				Death.	Transportation.	Imprisonment.
138	46	2	26	18	136	77	63	...	58	5	...	31	5	16	7	4	5
301	130	68	55	7	20	12	4	...	4	11	3	3	1	2	...
242	94	8	86	...	199	35	83	...	70	13	...	32	6	22	1	5	16
244	65	5	50	10	127	64	78	...	78	26	11	12	2	2	8
925	335	83	227	35	482	188	228	...	210	18	...	103	25	53	11	13	29
523	15	...	12	3	133	48	64	...	63	1	...	27	6	11	...	9	2
42	65	7	52	6	98	48	28	...	28	4	13	6	1	...	5
133	45	13	19	13	149	81	52	...	52	6	17	3	3
39	12	4	5	3	35	4	10	...	10	1	...	1	1
110	49	36	3	10	105	33	11	...	11	3	2	1	1
847	186	60	91	35	520	214	165	...	164	1	...	41	38	22	5	9	8
141	69	12	31	26	71	14	72	...	65	7	...	3	1	16	4	12	...
133	134	11	112	11	69	21	36	1	27	8	...	13	...	13	3	10	...
104	37	1	18	18	111	48	56	...	56
147	82	8	45	29	79	7	83	...	36	47	...	7	5
169	76	10	64	...	81	25	49	...	19	30	...	2	...	2	1	...	1
229	137	81	43	13	31	21	14	...	14	1	...	1	1
135	38	12	22	4	34	10	18	...	17	1	7	7
1,058	573	135	335	101	476	146	328	1	234	93	...	26	6	39	16	22	1
336	178	12	125	41	234	51	109	...	101	...	8	23	10	9	8	...	1
508	294	159	88	47	182	72	85	...	49	36	...	49	9	42	4	1	37
1,306	318	55	153	110	91	67	102	3	64	35	...	22	11	17	14	1	2
11	73	11	60	2	5	9	2	2
2,161	863	237	426	200	512	199	298	3	214	73	8	94	30	68	26	2	40
4,991	1,957	515	1,079	371	1,990	747	1,019	4	822	185	8	264	99	182	48	46	78

546 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

III.—ABSTRACT of the PROCEEDINGS of the several CRIMINAL COURTS

POLICE OFFICERS AND
	Extent in Square Miles.	Population in 1822.	Number of Crimes of every Description committed.	Number of Persons supposed to have been concerned.	Number of Persons appre- hended by the Police.	Number of Cases disposed of.			Number of Persons acquitted.			Number of Persons convicted.
						By Police Officers.	By Magistrates.	TOTAL.	By Police Officers.	By Magistrates.	TOTAL.	By Police Officers.	By Magistrates.	TOTAL.
CENTRE DIVISION :
Bellary	12,980	927,857	934	2,249	939	350	68	418	102	153	255	198	28	226
Chingleput	3,020	393,129	394	1,335	1,250	304	32	336	792	48	840	173	41	214
Verdachellum	—	455,020	274	951	531	87	19	106	4	40	44	130	6	136
Chittoor	—	892,292	873	2,128	1,938	477	139	616	566	270	836	324	59	383
Chidlapah	12,970	1,094,466	1,583	3,592	1,389	870	156	1,026	108	336	444	260	54	314
Ditto Auxiliary Court }
TOTAL			4,058	10,255	6,047	2,088	414	2,502	1,572	847	2,419	1,085	188	1,273
NORTHERN DIVISION :
Masilupatam	5,000	529,849	271	1,871	494	147	31	178	28	64	92	248	26	274
Rapahnundry	6,050	738,308	484	1,322	429	117	32	149	133	28	161	65	38	103
Nellore	7,930	439,467	226	547	604	156	26	182	93	53	146	234	13	247
Guntoor	4,960	454,754	332	876	593	212	21	233	117	8	125	176	25	201
Visagapatam } Chicacole {	15,300	772,570	397	1,165	1,124	263	64	327	318	159	477	414	73	487
Ganjam	6,400	332,915	420	3,622	526	118	65	183	13	57	70	157	121	278
TOTAL	45,640	3,296,963	2,100	9,403	3,680	1,013	239	1,252	702	369	1,071	1,294	296	1,590
SOUTHERN DIVISION :
Combaconum	7,000	1,382,645	1,068	3,058	2,152	533	137	670	203	125	328	1,066	267	1,333
Trichinopoly	3,000	481,292	255	957	435	69	97	166	57	198	255	62	49	111
Salem	8,200	1,075,985	855	2,118	1,663	583	78	661	237	116	353	549	93	642
Coimbatore	8,380	638,199	983	1,463	981	499	49	548	87	20	107	366	43	409
Colligaul	[included in Salem.]		—	—	48	—	—	—	—	55	55	—	38	38
Madura	16,400	1,353,153	739	2,903	1,898	490	192	682	114	519	633	953	136	1,089
Tinnevely	5,700	594,957	488	3,510	1,869	497	35	442	1,227	72	1,299	154	18	172
TOTAL			4,389	14,909	9,046	2,581	588	3,167	1,925	1,105	3,030	3,170	644	3,814
WESTERN DIVISION :
Canara	7,720	657,594	1,633	3,320	2,720	681	609	1,290	264	965	1,229	752	429	1,181
Ditto Auxiliary Court }
Malabar	6,060	997,575	866	2,434	2,165	346	104	450	871	276	1,147	182	83	265
Ditto Auxiliary Court }
TOTAL			2,499	5,754	4,885	1,027	713	1,740	1,135	1,232	2,376	934	512	1,446
GRAND TOTAL
			13,046	40,321	23,658	6,709	1,954	8,657	5,334	3,552	8,886	6,483	1,840	8,123

Note.—The Returns for the year 1828, and for preceding years, do not specify the nature of the offences committed. There are

IV.—JUDICIAL.

547

and POLICE under the Presidency of Madras, in the Year 1828.

MAGISTRATES.					CRIMINAL JUDGES.					COURTS OF CIRCUIT.					FOUJDARRY ADALWAT.
Punishments inflicted.				Persons sent by the District Police Officers and the Magistrate to the Criminal Judge.	Persons received.	Acquitted.	Convicted.	Punishments inflicted.		Committed for Trial before the Court of Circuit.	Acquitted.	Convicted.	Punishments inflicted.		Referred to Foujdarry Adawlat.	Acquitted.	Convicted.	Punishments inflicted.
By the District Police Officers.	By the Magistrates.							Fined.	Imprisoned.				Flogged.	Fined.				Imprisoned.	Flogged.	Death.	Trans-shipment.	Imprisonment.	Flogging.
31	167	28	—	458	434	289	92	—	90	2	85	27	34	—	34	—	19	29	8	5	2	1	—
50	123	27	14	196	622	244	113	3	106	4	276	159	63	—	63	—	43	39	15	—	8	7	—
11	119	2	4	351	668	419	163	11	152	—	88	57	34	—	34	—	15	10	14	2	—	12	—
211	113	54	5	719	530	250	58	5	51	2	209	73	50	—	50	—	39	34	23	7	13	8	—
152	108	47	7	631	119	62	26	2	24	—	31	16	9	—	9	—	3	2	—	—	—	—	—
455	630	158	30	2,355	2,373	1,264	452	21	423	8	689	332	199	—	199	—	119	114	65	14	23	23	—
192	56	23	3	128	96	43	9	—	6	3	40	9	36	—	36	—	5	—	—	—	—	—	—
6	59	13	25	165	207	118	25	2	23	—	71	60	36	—	36	—	13	11	3	—	—	3	—
172	62	6	7	211	327	167	77	21	52	4	95	40	30	—	30	—	9	2	3	1	—	—	—
110	66	16	9	177	342	191	24	2	24	—	183	109	32	—	32	—	25	4	—	—	1	1	—
387	27	58	15	160	972	519	135	25	103	7	389	218	99	—	98	—	52	17	6	1	1	4	—
124	33	94	27	178	972	519	135	25	103	7	389	218	99	—	98	—	52	17	6	1	1	4	—
991	303	210	86	1,019	972	519	135	25	103	7	389	218	99	—	98	—	52	17	6	1	1	4	—
824	242	240	27	491	524	316	67	4	62	1	123	50	36	—	36	—	18	4	19	5	1	13	—
21	41	41	8	69	866	533	174	28	119	27	149	53	33	—	33	—	19	1	2	—	2	—	—
323	226	87	6	668	866	533	174	28	119	27	149	53	33	—	33	—	19	1	2	—	2	—	—
100	286	20	23	445	255	133	69	12	56	1	40	8	13	—	13	—	10	—	1	—	—	1	— —	—	38	—	32	60	11	19	4	15	—	30	24	6	—	6	—	2	—	—	—	—	—	—
706	247	125	11	176	393	152	57	5	50	2	85	66	37	—	37	—	9	7	3	—	—	1	2
59	95	12	6	385	295	178	22	9	13	—	86	79	3	—	3	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
2,033	1,137	563	81	2,266	2,303	1,323	408	62	315	31	513	280	128	—	128	—	53	12	25	5	1	16	—
626	126	345	84	302	148	75	46	3	43	—	27	26	33	—	33	—	3	7	3	—	1	2	—
13	169	57	26	753	177	126	44	14	30	—	70	61	20	—	20	—	4	13	8	5	2	1	—
639	295	402	110	1,055	579	287	123	14	106	3	140	45	36	—	36	—	21	13	4	1	—	3	—
—	—	—	—	206	206	95	52	4	48	—	63	32	19	—	19	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
4,118	2,365	1,333	307	6,695	6,758	3,689	1,260	143	1,068	49	1,891	994	525	—	525	—	257	177	111	26	31	54	—

very full Returns for the first half-year only of 1829, in which the offences are specified.

IV.—STATEMENT of the OPERATIONS of the FOUDAREE ADAWLUT

DESIGNATION of CRIMES and MISDEMEANOURS.	1.		2.		3.		4.		5.		6.			7.		8.
			Number of Trials not disposed of at the Date of the last Report.		Number of Trials received during this Half Year.		TOTAL of Columns 2 and 3.		Number of Trials disposed of by the Foudaree Adawlut within the Half Year.		Number of Persons Acquitted by the Foudaree Adawlut.			Number of Persons convicted and sentenced to Punishment by the Foudaree Adawlut.		Punishments inflicted by the Foudaree
	Number of Trials.	Number of Persons.	Number of Trials.	Number of Persons.	Number of Trials.	Number of Persons.	Number of Trials.	Number of Persons.	Number of Trials.	Number of Persons.	A.	B.	C.		D.	E.	F.	G.	H.	I.	K.	L.	M.	N.
											Released unconditionally.	Number of Persons entered in Column A, against whom the accusation appeared to be wilfully false and malicious.	Ordered to be released on Security.	Number of Persons convicted and sentenced to Punishment by the Foudaree Adawlut.	Death.	Flogged and Transported.	Transported without Flogging.	Flogged and Imprisoned for Life.	Imprisoned for Life without Flogging.	Flogged and Imprisoned for more than 14 Years.	Imprisoned for more than 14 Years without Flogging.	Flogged & Imprisoned for more than 7, and not more than 14 Years.	Imprisoned for more than 7, and not more than 14 Yrs. without Flogging.	Flogged and Imprisoned for 7 Years and under.
Murder	18	48	27	35	45	83*	28	58†	14	3	15	25	3	—	—	—	4	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	4
Culpable Homicide	—	—	1	5	1	5	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Robbery and Murder.....	5	16	3	15	8	31	7	30	25	18	2	3	2	—	2	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—
Gang Robbery	5	32	9	35	14	67	9	43	21	2	11	11	—	3	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	4	1	—	1
Robbery by a single Individual....	1	1	—	—	1	1	1	1	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Housebreaking by Day.....	—	—	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Ditto by Night	2	4	1	1	3	5	2	4	—	—	—	3	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Theft	2	2	4	11	6	13	5	9	8	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—
Receiving Stolen Goods	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Arson	1	1	1	1	2	2	1	1	1	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Sodomy	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Rape	2	5	—	—	2	5†	2	4	—	—	—	—	4	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	3
Adultery.....	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Procuring Abortion	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Forgery	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Perjury	1	2	—	—	1	2	1	2	—	—	—	—	2	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Subornation of Perjury or of For- gery	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Abuse (serious) of Authority by Police Officers.....	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Resistance to Legal Process.....	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Returning from Transportation ..	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Escaping from Custody.....	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Maiming and Wounding	1	1	2	3	3	4	1	1	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1
Revenue Laws (breaches of certain)	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Attempting to break Gaol	1	9	—	—	1	9	1	9	—	—	—	—	9	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
TOTAL....	39	121	49	107	88	228	59	163	70	24	31	58	5	4	4	—	2	—	—	—	4	2	—	9

* 5 Prisoners died.

† 1 Prisoner died.

‡ 4 Prisoners insane.

IV.—JUDICIAL.

549 from the 1st of January to the 30th June 1829.

dawlut.				9.		10.		11.		12. Punishments inflicted in the Cases entered in Column 9.												13.
O.	P.	Q.	R.	Number of Trials entered in Column 9, which were disposed of under Section II, Regulation I. of 1818.		Number of Trials entered in Column 9, wherein the Furwa of Acquittal was founded on Exceptions to the Competency of the Witnesses.		Number of Trials entered in Column 9, wherein the Furwa of Acquittal was founded on the Insufficiency of the Evidence given.		S.	T.	U.	V.	W.	X.	Y.	Z.	a.	b.	c.	d.	e.	f.	Number of Trials.	Number of Persons.
Imprisoned for 7 Years and under without Flogging.	Fined and Imprisoned.	Fined and Discharged.	Flogged and Discharged.	Number of Trials.	Number of Persons.	Number of Trials.	Number of Persons.	Number of Trials.	Number of Persons.	Death.	Flogged and Transported.	Transported without Flogging.	Flogged and Imprisoned for Life.	Imprisoned for Life without Flogging.	Flogged and Imprisoned for more than 14 Years.	Imprisoned for more than 14 Years without Flogging.	Flogged & Imprisoned for more than 7, and not more than 14 Years.	Imprisoned for more than 7, and not more than 14 Years, without Flogging.	Flogged and Imprisoned for 7 Years and under.	Imprisoned for 7 Years and under without Flogging.	Fined and Imprisoned.	Fined and Discharged.	Flogged and Discharged.
13				3	13			3	13			2												17	26

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

550

APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments of
the Three
Presidencies.

V.—STATEMENT of the OPERATIONS of the COURTS OF CIRCUIT from 1st January to of different Kinds, and REFERENCES to the FOUJDAREE ADAWLUT,

1.	2.	3.	4.			5.
			Number of Persons acquitted by the Court of Circuit.
			A.	B.	C.
	Number of Cases.	Number of Persons committed for Trial.	Released unconditionally.	Number of Persons entered in the Column A. against whom the Accusation appeared to be wilfully false and malicious.	Ordered to be released on Security.	Number of Persons convicted and sentenced to Punish- ment by the Court of Circuit.
Centre Division	98	*277	81	6	15	74
Northern Division	54	101	24	—	12	31
Southern Division	81	†273	104	15	35	92
Western Division	66	139	69	21	7	29
TOTAL	299	790	278	42	69	226

* 1 Died.

† 8 Prisoners returned to the Criminal Judge.

IV.—JUDICIAL.

551

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

30th June 1829; showing the NUMBER of ACQUITTALS, CONVICTIONS, PUNISHMENTS
IN EACH OF THE FOUR DIVISIONS.

(5.) Madras
Criminal
Statements.

6. Punishments inflicted by the Court of Circuit.							7. Number of Persons whose Trials were referred to the Foujdaree Adawlut.		8. Number of Trials entered in Column 7, wherein the Futwa was concurred in by the Court of Circuit, but the nature of the Offence made the Trial of necessity referrible.	9. Number of Trials entered in Column 7 referred, because the Court of Circuit did not approve of the Futwa.	10. Number of Trials postponed to the next Sessions.
D. Flogged and Imprisoned for a term exceeding 7 Years.	E. Flogged and Imprisoned for a term not exceeding 7 Years.	F. Imprisoned for 7 Years and upwards, without Flogging.	G. Imprisoned for 7 Years and under, without Flogging.	H. Fined and Imprisoned.	I. Flogged and Discharged.	K. Fined and Discharged.	Number of Trials.	Number of Persons.			Number of Trials.	Number of Persons.
13	16	6	39	—	—	—	25	78	9	16	7	28
—	—	21	10	—	—	—	5	13	3	2	6	21
4	7	12	68	1	—	—	9	23	4	5	6	11
3	4	4	18	—	—	—	16	26	13	3	6	8
20	27	43	135	1	—	—	55	140	29	26	25	68

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments of
the Three
Presidencies.

552

APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

VI.—STATEMENT of the OPERATIONS of the COURTS of CIRCUIT, from the 1st January to Kinds, and REFERENCES to the FOUJDAREE

1. DESIGNATION OF CRIMES and MISDEMEANORS.	2. Number of Cases of each Crime.	3. Number of Persons committed for Trial for each Offence.	4. Number of Persons acquitted by the Court of Circuit.			5. Number of Persons convicted and sentenced to Punishment by the Court of Circuit.
			A.	B.	C.
			Released uncondi- tionally.	Number of Persons en- tered in the Column A. who were sentenced to be released on security, or who appeared to be wilfully false and mal- icious.	Ordered to be re- leased on Security.
Murder	44	70	26	9	2	1
Culpable Homicide	7	12*	3	1	—	—
Robbery and Murder	8	18	1	—	—	—
Gang Robbery	100	317	98	18	34	77
Robbery by a single Individual	4	4	2	—	1	1
Housebreaking by Day	2	5	4	—	—	—
Ditto .. by Night	43	103	23	1	7	64
Theft	16	21	6	—	2	11
Receiving stolen Goods	8	42	17	—	3	13
Arson	8	12	7	6	—	3
Sodomy	—	—	—	—	—	—
Rape	3	3	2	1	—	1
Adultery	2	4	1	—	—	3
Procuring Abortion	2	6	5	—	—	1
Forgery	3	5	5	—	—	—
Perjury	5	10	8	—	—	2
Subornation of Perjury or of Forgery	—	—	—	—	—	—
Abuse (serious) of Authority by Police Officers	—	—	—	—	—	—
Resistance to legal Process	—	—	—	—	—	—
Returning from Transportation	—	—	—	—	—	—
Escaping from Custody	—	—	—	—	—	—
Maiming and Wounding	26	43	12	2	8	17
Revenue Laws (Breaches of certain)	1	4	4	4	—	—
Accidental Homicide	1	1	1	—	—	—
Violent Assault	7	87	47	—	12	28
Coin (Offences relating to)	2	3	—	—	—	3
Embezzlement	3	5	—	—	—	—
Cattle-stealing	1	4	4	—	—	—
Conspiracy	1	8†	—	—	—	—
Poisoning	1	1	1	—	—	—
Secret Delivery and Exposure of a Bastard } Child	1	2	1	—	—	1
GRAND TOTAL	299	790	278	42	69	226

* 1 Prisoner died.

† 8 Prisoners returned to the Criminal Judge.

IV.—JUDICIAL.

553

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

(5.) Madras Criminal Statements.

30th June 1829; shewing the NUMBER of ACQUITTALS, CONVICTIONS, PUNISHMENTS of different ADAWLUT, for EACH PARTICULAR OFFENCE.

[illegible]

Released	278
Ditto on Security	69
Convicted and punished	226
Referred	140
Postponed	68
	<hr/> 781
Died and returned	9
	<hr/> 790

554 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

VII.—STATEMENT of the OPERATIONS of the CRIMINAL COURTS in each of the ZILLAHS,

1.	2.		3.		4.		5.
	Number of Persons whose Cases were not disposed of by the Criminal Court at the close of the last Report.		Number brought before the Criminal Court, charged with Crimes and Misdemeanors committed before the said Period.		Number brought before the Criminal Court for Crimes and Misdemeanors committed within the said Period.		TOTAL of Columns 2, 3, and 4.
	Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.	Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.	Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.	Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.
Bellary	19	53	65	148	84	201
Canara	36	63	57	133	93	196
Ditto Auxiliary Court	35	65	61	125	96	190
Chingleput.....	4	37	18	62	44	99	66	198*
Chicacole	2	11	9	14	56	150	67	175
Chittoor.....	11	28	41	117	73	193	125	338
Combaconum.....	11	37	19	47	56	200	86	284
Cuddapah	11	33	89	315	92	277	192	625
Ditto Auxiliary Court	8	23	22	63	30	86
Guntoor.....	1	1	15	25	41	82	57	108
Madura	5	20	15	50	35	122	55	192
Ditto Auxiliary Court	3	12	32	106	35	118
Malabar	16	47	3	3	82	167	101	217
Ditto Auxiliary Court	12	24	18	30	53	98	83	152
Masulipatam and Rajahmundry	5	9	37	124	42	133
Ditto Auxiliary Court	4	17	1	2	8	20	13	39
Nellore	9	17	44	125	53	142†
Salem	11	20	172	522	145	479	328	1,021
Ditto Auxiliary Court	4	17	9	40	64	122	77	179‡
Collegal (Native Judge)	6	11	10	19	16	30
GRAND TOTAL ...	92	292	530	1,480	1,077	2,852	1,699	4,624

* Of these, one person died, and one was sent to Magistrate.

† Of these, six persons were sent to Guntoor.

‡ Of these, three persons died.

	Excess.	Deficiency.
Canara Auxiliary Court	65
Cuddapah	319
Malabar ...	43	...
Salem	11
Salem Auxiliary Court ...	2	...
	45	395
		45
Deficiency ...		350

555

6. Number of Persons acquitted by the Criminal Court in Cases determinable by it.				7. Number Convicted and Punished.	8. Punishments inflicted by the Criminal Court.					9. Released for want of Evidence, in Cases punishable by the Court of Circuit.	10. Committed for Trial before the Court of Circuit.		11. Number of Persons whose Cases were not disposed of by the Criminal Court at the close of the Report.
A. Released unconditionally.	B. Number of Persons en- teralined in the Ac- cused when the Ac- cused appeared to be wilfully false and malicious.	C. Released on Security.	D. Detained on demand of Security.		E. Imprisoned.	F. Fined.	G. Flogged.	H. Both Imprisoned and Fined.	I. Both Imprisoned and Flogged.		Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.	Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.
42	1	10	12	35	34	1	60	10	38	5	1
45	...	23	4	52	48	1	...	3	...	29	19	41	2	2
10	3	3	2	47	15	31	1	15	11	20	9	28
59	8	28	24	4	51	8	30	8	20
31	3	11	6	20	9	2	9	23	24	47	6	37
71	3	24	4	28	19	3	6	59	28	82	28	70
53	2	87	56	22	9	46	24	68	9	28
116	4	11	12	27	15	4	8	2	30	84	15	54
27	...	11	1	41	...	1	40	2	2	4
23	26	10	...	3	...	13	21	17	30	4	8
36	...	8	6	52	35	11	1	2	3	33	13	44	3	13
21	5	1	...	9	3	2	4	19	14	62	2	6
60	...	13	9	37	21	8	...	3	5	51	23	47	17	43
37	3	4	6	39	24	1	14	24	17	27	6	15
32	...	10	5	5	5	52	11	28	1	1
2	2	9	7	2	12	4	12	1	2
27	...	1	1	24	21	2	1	21	24	62
237	4	6	141	300	90	43	37	22	146	134	63	181	11	11
17	...	16	2	47	14	2	4	2	25	28	13	53	12	15
6	5	...	1	...	1	3	12	5	7
952	26	152	223	918	450	110	46	61	289	694	360	967	139	357

Released	952
Released on Security	152
Detained on Security	223
Convicted	918
Released in the cases punishable by the Court of Circuit	694
Committed	967
Under Examination	357
Died and Sent	11
										4,274
							Deficiency	350
										4,624

VIII.—STATEMENT of the OPERATIONS of the CRIMINAL COURTS, from 1st January to 30th June 1829, exhibiting th

1. DESIGNATION of CRIMES and MISDEMEANORS.	2. Number of Persons whose Cases were not disposed of by the Criminal Court, at the close of the last Report.		3. Number brought before the Criminal Court, charged with Crimes and Misdemeanors committed before the said period.		4. Number brought before the Criminal Court, for Crimes and Misdemeanors committed within the said period.		5. TOTAL of Columns 2, 3, and 4.		6. Number of Persons Acquitted by the Criminal Court, in Cases determinable by it.
	No. of Cases.	No. of Persons.	No. of Cases.	No. of Persons.	No. of Cases.	No. of Persons.	No. of Cases.	No. of Persons.	A. Released unconditionally.	B. Number of Persons entered in the Column A. against whom the Acquittal was proved to be wilfully false and malicious.	C. Released on Security.	D. Detained on demand of Security.
Murder	6	17	24	51	56	139	86	207	11	—	8	11
Culpable Homicide	2	6	9	17	14	60	25	83	9	—	5	—
Robbery and Murder	1	2	7	49	13	99	21	150	5	—	—	4
Gang Robbery	20	80	71	296	152	187	243	963	37	1	25	22
Robbery by a single Individual	2	2	6	5	34	29	42	36	4	—	3	1
Housebreaking by Day	—	1	8	15	11	14	19	30	11	—	1	5
Ditto .. by Night	5	22	76	177	158	377	239	576	118	—	17	37
Theft	24	65	104	313	275	553	463	931	235	14	31	56
Receiving Stolen Goods	5	27	39	172	80	243	124	442	171	2	22	12
Arson	3	8	7	17	28	42	38	67	—	—	9	4
Sodomy	—	—	1	1	2	2	3	3	2	—	—	—
Rape	—	—	6	20	8	10	14	30	1	—	2	—
Adultery	1	2	—	—	1	3	2	5	—	—	—	—
Procuring Abortion	1	1	2	7	6	13	9	21	2	—	—	2
Forgery	—	—	10	22	10	20	20	42	3	—	1	1
Perjury	—	—	6	19	12	22	18	41	—	—	—	—
Subornation of Perjury or of Forgery	—	—	3	3	2	2	5	5	—	—	—	1
Abuse (serious) of authority by Police Officers	1	1	4	8	3	9	8	18	9	—	—	—
Resistance to legal Process	1	3	2	4	3	7	6	14	9	—	—	—
Returning from Transportation	—	—	1	1	1	1	2	2	—	—	—	—
Escaping from Custody	2	7	8	8	3	3	13	18	2	—	—	—
Maiming and Wounding	15	43	25	67	84	257	124	307	122	6	19	—
Revenue Laws (breaches of certain)	—	—	10	30	27	42	37	72	37	—	—	1
Accidental Homicide	—	—	1	1	—	—	1	1	—	—	—	—
Bribery	—	—	1	1	3	7	4	8	7	—	—	—
Forcing another to dip his hand in boiling glue	—	—	—	—	1	5	1	5	5	—	—	—
Compelling to submit to the Trial by Ordeal	—	—	—	—	2	6	2	6	4	—	—	—
Not duly delivering Letters	—	—	—	—	1	1	1	1	1	—	—	—
Contempt of Court	—	—	—	—	1	1	1	1	—	—	—	—
Neglect of duty	—	—	1	2	4	4	5	6	4	—	1	—
Fraud	—	—	5	7	4	10	9	17	7	—	—	1
Administering Poison	—	—	4	5	—	—	4	5	—	—	—	—
Killing Cattle	—	—	3	10	2	9	5	19	11	—	—	—
Embezzlement	1	3	1	1	—	—	2	4	1	—	—	—
Affrays	3	2	18	103	50	226	70	331	98	3	3	56
Extortion	—	—	—	—	6	2	6	2	—	—	—	—
Abduction and Kidnapping Children	—	—	1	2	2	6	3	8	—	—	—	—
For destroying Trees	—	—	—	—	1	1	1	1	—	—	—	—
Coin (Offences relating to)	—	—	1	1	6	7	7	8	1	—	—	—
Abuse	—	—	—	—	1	1	1	1	1	—	—	—
Attempt to Rob	—	—	—	—	1	2	1	2	—	—	—	—
Attempt to Murder	—	—	1	2	2	2	3	4	—	—	1	—
Allowing a Prisoner to escape	—	—	1	3	—	—	1	3	3	—	—	—
Harbouring Thieves	—	—	—	—	1	1	1	1	—	—	—	—
Obtaining Money under false pretences	—	—	2	3	—	—	2	3	3	—	—	—
Forceibly obtaining documents	—	—	—	—	1	1	1	1	1	—	—	—
Forceibly taking away Property	—	—	—	—	1	1	1	1	1	—	—	—
Attempting to sell a Slave belonging to another	—	—	—	—	1	1	1	1	1	—	—	—
Robbery and Rape	—	—	—	—	4	1	4	—	—	—	—	—
Compounding Felony	—	—	7	—	13	—	—	20	11	—	—	—
Attempt at Theft	—	—	—	—	2	2	2	2	—	—	—	—
Sorcery	—	—	1	2	—	—	1	2	—	—	—	—
Aiding in various Crimes	—	—	—	28	—	5	—	33	4	—	4	—
GRAND TOTAL ..	92	292	530	1,480	1,077	2,852	1,699	4,624	952	26	152	22

557

7. Number convicted and punished.	8. Punishments inflicted by the Criminal Court.					9. Released for want of Evidence in Cases punishable by the Court of Circuit.	10.		11. Number of Persons whose Cases were not disposed of by the Criminal Court at the close of this Report.		DIFFERENCE from Column No. 8.
	E.	F.	G.	H.	I.		No. of Cases.	No. of Persons.	No. of Cases.	No. of Persons.	Excess.	Deficiency.
	Imprisoned.	Fined.	Flogged.	Both Imprisoned and Fined.	Both Imprisoned and Flogged.
—	—	—	—	—	—	72	46	96	6	16	7	—
9	9	—	—	—	—	35	5	16	1	1	—	8
—	—	—	—	—	—	63	15	68	1	4	—	6
21	16	3	—	—	—	261	113	375	23	133	{ 2 p. died, 6 p. sent to Guntoor. }	81
18	10	—	2	—	6	2	6	15	4	3	—	3
7	4	—	1	—	2	—	1	2	1	1	—	—
166	72	—	6	—	89	49	46	96	20	42	2 p. died.	49
370	155	32	33	1	185	37	34	77	28	49	—	76
73	41	25	4	—	4	37	12	34	9	18	1 p. sent to magte.	74
1	1	—	—	—	—	26	15	18	2	2	—	7
—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—
—	—	—	—	—	—	21	4	4	—	—	—	2
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	5	—	—	—	—
—	—	—	—	—	—	13	2	4	—	—	—	—
1	1	—	—	—	—	15	5	13	3	5	—	3
—	—	—	—	—	—	6	12	23	2	6	—	6
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	1	1	1	—	2
5	—	4	—	1	—	2	—	—	1	1	—	1
3	1	2	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	2	—	—
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	2	—	—	—	—
15	13	—	—	—	2	1	—	—	1	1	1	—
100	42	22	—	36	—	13	18	44	16	39	—	30
31	21	11	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	3
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	1	—	—	—	1
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	2	—	—
1	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
1	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
22	3	6	—	—	—	—	4	8	—	—	13	—
1	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	4	—
2	2	—	—	—	—	—	1	3	1	1	1	—
71	58	4	—	21	1	18	8	36	10	24	—	25
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	4	2	4	—	—	—
—	—	—	—	—	—	3	2	3	1	—	—	—
—	—	—	—	—	—	2	1	1	—	—	—	—
—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
—	—	—	—	—	—	4	—	—	—	—	—	9
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	1	—	—	—	—
—	—	—	—	—	—	2	—	—	—	—	—	—
—	—	—	—	—	—	6	—	15	—	4	—	—
918	450	110	46	61	289	694	360	967	139	357	36	386 36

Deficiency 350

Released	952
Ditto on Security ..	152
Detained on Security ..	223
Convicted	918
Released in Cases punishable by the Court of Circuit ..	694
Committed	967
Under Examination ..	357
Died and sent	11
	<hr/>
Deficiency	4,274
	350
	<hr/>
	4,624
	<hr/>
Imprisoned	450
Fined	110
Flogged	46
Imprisoned and Fined ..	61
Ditto and Flogged ..	289
	<hr/>
	956
Deduct Excess	38
	<hr/>
Total Convicted ..	918

Deficiency	350
------------------	-----

IX.—GENERAL STATEMENT of PETTY OFFENCES before the VILLAGE POLICE,

	VILLAGE POLICE.					DISTRICT
	1. Number of Persons brought before Heads of Village Police, for Offences punishable by them during the above Period.	2. Number acquitted or dismissed.	3. Number convicted and punished.	4. Confined in the Village Choultry.	5. Confined in the Stocks.	6. Number of Persons punishable by the District Police, whose Cases were not disposed of at the date of the last Report.	7. Number of Persons brought before the Heads of District Police for Offences punishable by them, with or without reference to the Magistrate, during the above Period.	8. TOTAL of Columns 5 & 6.	9. Number acquitted.	10. Number included in Column 8, against whom the accusation appeared to be wilfully false and malicious.	11. Number convicted and punished without reference to the Magistrate.	12. Number convicted and punished after reference to the Magistrate.
Bellary.....	22	...	22	13	4	1	550	551	45	...	496	7
Canara.....	57	6	51	18	33	35	2,561	2,596	1,233	50	865	86
Chingleput	2	...	2	...	2	87	956	1,043	586	...	421	2
Chittoor	4	...	4	4	...	26	2,377	2,403	1,229	321	788	8
Coimbatore	118	1,501	1,619	234	31	1,161	71
Cuddapah	1,271	1,271	371	32	816	82
Ganjam	12	2	10	9	1	84	2,370	2,054	1,982	284	678	63
Gunttoor	147	1,696	1,813	1,597	...	356	...
Madura	285	3,595	3,880	2,915	7	473	73
Malabar	143	111	32	14	18	285	2,783	3,011	1,323	68	1,453	178
Masulipatam	228	2,131	2,556	1,733	213	603	34
Nellore	172	169	3	3	...	105	5,113	5,286	4,662	237	445	1
Rajahmundry	168	2,920	3,283	2,680	...	397	31
Salem	74	9	65	56	9	293	2,280	2,298	1,584	...	685	8
Tinnevely	13	2,153	2,453	1,199	...	1,181	14
Trichinopoly	27	2	25	11	14	...	1,544	1,552	1,003	14	497	12*
Verdachellum	30	4	26	7	19	8	1,367	1,367	926	228	419	8
Vizagapatam	2,659	2,663	1,710	50	751	153
	1	...	1	...	1	9	2,706	2,752	2,356	559	386	10
Vizagapatam	7	6	1	1	...	46
GRAND TOTAL....	551	309	242	141	101	1,658	43,708	45,366	29,313	2,127	12,761	340

* Tinnevely, 1 excess.

Acquitted	29,313
Convicted	13,601
Under Examination	2,733
						45,647
Deduct	281 excess.
						45,366

IV.—JUDICIAL.

559

DISTRICT POLICE, and MAGISTRACY of each ZILLAH, from the 1st January to the 30th June 1829.

POLICE.				MAGISTRACY.
12. Punishments inflicted.				13.	14.	15.	16.	17.	18.	19.	20. Punishments inflicted.			21.	22.
A.	B.	C.	D.								E.	F.	G.
Fined.	Confined in the Choultry.	Confined in the Stocks.	Flogged.	Number of Persons under Examination at the close of this Report.	Number of Persons punishable by the Magistrate, for offences which were not reported at the close of the last Report.	Number of Persons brought before the Magistrate, for offences punishable by him during the above period.	TOTAL of Columns 14 & 15.	Number acquitted.	Number included in Column 17, against whom the Accusation appeared to be wholly false and malicious.	Number convicted and punished.	Fined.	Imprisoned.	Flogged.	Number of Persons under Examination at the close of this Report.	Number of Persons, out of the Convicted, whose names have been re-arrested.
362	69	...	72	3	1	40	41	22	9	19	7	12	107
653	61	82	55	412	2	630	682	421	25	243	106	93	44	18	1
339	26	5	53	31	...	193	193	117	...	81	58	7	16
611	142	2	44	373	9	331	340	154	28	121	95	24	2	64	1
826	160	23	223	153	2	454	456	136	17	289	147	134	8	31	...
684	48	10	156	2	...	31	31	12	...	13	7	1	5	9	...
507	141	12	81	231	...	505	505	277	21	77	51	20	6	151	32
206	51	49	30	...	7	209	306	212	23	94	51	40	273
421	75	15	35	369	...	36	36	8	...	28	24	2	2	...	3
1,035	492	14	180	52	21	615	636	441	56	192	101	88	3
564	13	19	41	166	1	260	261	119	4	100	73	20	7	14	...
365	38	12	31	179	9	212	221	143	6	46	21	16	9	32	26
191	56	14	77	265	...	224	224	163	1	55	36	17	2	6	...
522	100	28	43	21	...	71	71	38	...	33	22	8	3	...	32
918	117	25	135	59	10	117	127	286	...	141	110	14	17	...	64
418	22	1	67	41	...	129	129	63	11	66	55	...	11
400	12	...	15	11	...	288	288	203	58	68	49	12	7	17	...
696	85	13	110	54	...	1,002	1,002	824	2	177	135	38	4	1	...
196	156	28	16	280	55	164	219	139	12	80	32	42	6	166	...
9,914	1,374	352	1,460	2,733	120	5,959	6,079	3,811	276	1,923	1,183	588	152	509	591

† Vizagapatam, 280 excess. ‡ Chittoor, 1 deficiency. § Malabar, 1 deficiency. || Vizagapatam, 166 excess.

Acquitted	3,811
Convicted	1,923
Under Examination	509
						6,243
Excess	166
Deficiency	2	Excess	...	164
						6,079

X. ABSTRACT STATEMENT of PETTY OFFENCES before the VILLAGE POLICE, DISTRICT POLICE, and

DESIGNATION of PETTY OFFENCES.	VILLAGE POLICE.					DISTRICT
	1.	2.	3.	4.		5.	6.	7.	8.	9.	10.
	Number of Persons brought before Heads of Village Police for Offences punishable by them during the above Period.	Number acquitted or dismissed.	Number convicted and punished.	Confinement in the Village Choultry.	Confinement in the Stocks.	Number of Persons punishable by the District Police, whose Cases were not disposed of at the date of the last Report.	Number of Persons brought before Heads of District Police for Offences punishable by them, with or without reference to the Magistrate, during the above Period.	TOTAL of Columns 5 & 6.	Number acquitted.	Number included in Column 8, against whom the Accusation appeared to be wilfully false and malicious.	Number convicted and punished without reference to the Magistrate.
Petty Thefts	66	6	60	36	24	61	2,902	2,963	1,212	149	1,581
Petty Assaults, &c.	485	303	182	105	77	1,596	40,793	42,389	28,099	1,978	11,176
Frauds on the Customs when rented Illicit Collection of Customs by Native Officers.....
Illicit Collection of Customs by Natives not being Officers
Abuse of Authority by Police Officers
Using false Weights and Measures	1	1
False Complaint of Petty Offences.....	1	7	8	1
Spirit-sellers harbouring Thieves, bartering Spirits for Grain, &c.....	1	1	1
Illicit Sale of Spirits to European Soldiers	2	2	2
Possessing counterfeit Coin without good excuse	1	1	1
Receiving stolen Goods	1	1	1
Wantonly destroying Trees.....
Disobedience of Orders
Taking forcible possession
Pretending to Witchcraft.....
Fraudulently retaining pledged Property
Appropriating unclaimed Property
Taking Documents by Force
Revenue Laws (Breaches of certain)
GRAND TOTAL.....	551	309	242	141	101	1,650	43,708	45,366	29,313	2,127	12,761

Acquitted ... 309
 Convicted ... 242
 551

Acquitted ... 29,313
 Convicted ... 13,601
 Under Examination ... 2,733

Deduct ... 45,647
 281 Excess.
 45,366

IV.—JUDICIAL.

561

MAGISTRACY, from the 1st January to 30th June 1829; distinguishing the OFFENCES, but not the Districts.

POLICE.					MAGISTRACY.
11. Number convicted and punished after reference to the Magistrate.	12. Punishments inflicted.				13. Number of Persons under Examination at the close of this Report.	14. Number of Persons punishable by the Magistrate whose Cases were disposed of at the close of the last Report.	15. Number of Persons brought before the Magistrate for Offences punishable by him during the above Period.	16. TOTAL of Columns 14 & 15.	17. Number acquitted.	18. Number included in Column No. 17, against whom the Accusation appeared to be wilfully false and malicious.	19. Number convicted and punished.	20. Punishments inflicted.			21. Number of Persons under Examination at the close of this Report.	22. Number of petty Offences, of the Committers whereof no one has been discovered.
	A.	B.	C.	D.								E.	F.	G.
	Fined.	Confined in the Choultry.	Confined in the Stocks.	Flogged.								Fined.	Imprisoned.	Flogged.
118*	9	195	35	1,459	69†	12	750	762	406	50	350	23	178	149	6	260
714	9,894	1,678	317	1	2,664‡	103	4,797	4,900	3,296	191	1,269	936	330	3	360¶	333
...	16	16	7	1	9	9	137	...
...	14	14	7	...	7	7
...	2	2	2	...
...	52	52	25	9	27	26	1	...	4	...
1	1	56	56	13	...	43	25	18
7	6	1	2	160	162§	8	23	153	104	49
...	1	1	1	1
...	2	6	6	1	...	4	3	1	1
...	1	2	59	61	25	2	36	30	6
...	1	6	6	1	...	5	...	5
...	2	2	2	2
...	4	4	4	4
...	12	12	11	...	1	1
...	2	2	2
...	1	...	1	1
...	3	3	3
...	5	5	5
...	12	12	12	12
840	9,914	1,874	352	1,460	2,733	120	5,959	6,079	3,811	276	1,923	1,183	588	152	509	594

* 1 Excess.

† 16 Excess.
‡ 264 Excess.

280

§ 1 Deficiency.
|| 1 ditto.

Acquitted ... 3,811
Convicted ... 1,923
Under Examination ... 509

Deduct ... 6,243
164 Excess.
6,079

¶ 25 Excess.
 137 ditto.
4 ditto.

Deduct 2 Deficiency.

164 Excess.

XI.—GENERAL STATEMENT of CRIMES and MISDEMEANORS before the DISTRICT

DISTRICT
	1.	2.	3.	4.	5.		6.		7.		8.		9.
	Number of Cases ascertained to have occurred during the above Period.	Number of Persons supposed to have been concerned in the Cases in Column 1.	Number of Cases in Column 1 in which no one party concerned has yet been apprehended.	Number of Persons supposed to have been concerned in the Cases entered in Column 3.	Number brought before the District Police Officers for Crimes or Misdemeanors whose Cases were undischarged at the close of last Report.		Number brought before District Police Officers during the above Period for Crimes or Misdemeanors committed before its commencement.		Number brought before District Police Officers during the above Period for Crimes or Misdemeanors committed within it.		TOTAL of Columns 5, 6, & 7.		Number of Persons released by the District Police Officers.
					Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.	Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.	Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.	Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.
Bellary	256	995	154	729	2	9	6	15	102	266	110	290	85
Canara.....	253	653	122	335	6	12	10	*23	129	306	145	340	141
Chingleput	41	202	21	133	2	3	20	66	22	69	9
Chittoor	206	725	124	306	114	306	114	306	67
Combaconum	75	480	26	103	3	6	2	17	41	181	46	204	26
Coimbatore.....	345	780	204	407	1	1	140	372	141	373	74
Cuddapah	534	1,186	312	516	19	46	2	16	222	670	243	732	296
Ganjam	171	2,169	157	2,437	4	11	10	21	14	32	8
Guntoor	105	313	69	184	1	6	10	11	36	79	47	96	17
Madura	85	569	17	150	9	89	6	39	59	211	74	339	229
Malabar	222	677	47	92	18	60	9	24	196	536	223	620	308
Masulipatam	60	319	37	190	26	98	26	98	50
Nellore	84	280	26	46	2	6	7	17	58	212	67	235	91
Rajahmundry	241	802	198	657	2	4	2	3	40	133	44	140	44
Salem	163	611	40	278	4	22	36	129	111	297	151	448	145
Tinnevelly	157	1,159	60	365	14	57	69	322	83	379	235
Trichinopoly	90	474	65	403	11	28	11	28	6
Verdachellum	126	530	85	401	24	46	26	79	50	125	42
Vizagapatam	188	1,735	92	1,357	2	8	62	176	64	184	104
GRAND TOTAL.....	3,482	14,959	1,856	9,089	66	260	137	420	1,472	4,359	1,675	5,038	1,977

* Canara : 1 prisoner excess.

IV.—JUDICIAL.

563

POLICE and MAGISTRACY in each ZILLAH, from the 1st January to the 30th June 1829.

POLICE.										MAGISTRACY.
10. Number of Persons entered in Column 9 against whom the Accusation appeared to be wilfully false and malicious.	11. Number sent by the District Police Officers to the Criminal Judge.		12. Number not disposed of by the District Police Officers at the close of this Report.		13. Number brought before the Magistrate for Crimes or Misdemeanors, whose Cases were not disposed of at the close of the last Report.		14. Number brought before the Magistrate during the above Period for Crimes or Misdemeanors committed before his commencement.		15. Number brought before the Magistrate during the above Period for Crimes or Misdemeanors committed within it.		16. TOTAL of Columns 12, 14, & 15.		17. Number of Persons released by the Magistrate.	18. Number of Persons entered in Column 17 against whom the Accusation appeared to be wilfully false and malicious.	19. Number sent by the Magistrate to the Criminal Judge.		20. Number not yet disposed of by the Magistrate.		21. Number of Crimes and Misdemeanors, of the Committers whereof no one has been discovered.
...	Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.	Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.	Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.	Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.	Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.	Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.	Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.	Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.	...
...	79	203	2	2	2	19	7	41	15	62	24	125	66	...	7	17	6	42	154
4	92	187	3	12	7	41	10	110	47	151	92	11	17	41	4	13	122
...	16	49	1	11	2	5	7	22	9	27	20	...	3	7	21
...	97	239	43	113	48	113	63	23	25	50	124
...	40	152	5	26	3	7	1	9	9	47	13	63	5	3	12	31	1	24	26
36	105	299	2	1	2	1	2	204
9	146	394	10	42	4	7	20	50	24	57	30	12	13	27	312
...	13	24	3	5	2	2	10	28	15	35	9	...	3	13	6	13	157
...	46	79	2	5	2	5	2	5	69
101	30	103	4	7	2	11	11	53	24	82	37	146	118	14	7	28	17
49	132	271	14	41	1	1	5	12	20	110	35	123	73	...	11	36	3	14	47
19	14	48	3	11	2	3	7	17	12	31	10	...	3	8	5	13	37
...	45	131	2	13	1	5	10	42	11	47	29	...	3	9	2	9	26
...	26	95	1	1	2	5	3	12	5	17	6	...	2	11	198
...	109	293	4	10	1	1	3	11	12	36	16	48	23	...	11	25	40
...	28	138	3	6	7	54	11	32	18	86	76	...	6	10	68
3	8	22	1	12	1	6	1	1	12	34	14	41	22	11	3	12	2	7	65
7	38	81	1	2	8	48	15	22	23	70	54	...	5	13	1	3	85
53	27	80	7	155	4	35	8	16	32	153	44	204	160	32	10	44	45	3307	42
281	1,091	2,888	61	230	20	96	72	321	306	977	393	1,394	856	106	149	395	75	530	1,814

† Trichinopoly, 2 excess.

‡ Vizagapatam, 55 excess.

§ Vizagapatam, 387 excess.

XII.—ABSTRACT STATEMENT of CRIMES and MISDEMEANORS before the

DESIGNATION of CRIMES and MISDEMEANORS.	DISTRICT
	1.	2.	3.	4.	5.		6.		7.		8.		9.	10.
	Number of Cases ascertained to have occurred during the above period.	Number of Persons supposed to have been concerned in the Cases in Column 1.	Number of Cases in Column 1, in which no one Party concerned has yet been apprehended.	Number of Persons supposed to have been concerned in the Cases entered in Column 3.	Number of Cases brought before the District Police Officers for Crimes or Misdemeanors whose Cases were not disposed of at the close of last Report.	Number of Persons.	Number of Cases brought before District Police Officers, during the above period, for Crimes or Misdemeanors.	Number of Persons.	Number of Cases brought before District Police Officers, during the above period, for Crimes or Misdemeanors committed within it.	Number of Persons.	TOTAL of Columns 5, 6, and 7.	Number of Persons released by the District Police Officers.	Number of Persons entered in Column 9, against whom no case appeared to be wilfully false and malicious.
Murder	104	369	33	115	3	5	7	10	67	220	77	235	56	8
Culpable Homicide	24	82	1	30	2	2	1	4	14	29	17	35	10	—
Robbery and Murder	23	234	15	164	1	1	1	1	8	39	10	41	3	—
Gang Robbery	686	7,455	410	5,656	7	42	23	143	236	1,150	266	1,335	447	42
Robbery by a single Individual	168	157	105	100	1	1	—	—	50	45	51	46	4	1
Housebreaking by Day	27	49	17	24	1	1	1	2	10	25	12	28	11	—
Ditto .. by Night	1,051	2,647	796	1,671	18	48	16	67	256	771	290	886	404	19
Theft	849	2,384	384	1,033	17	103	55	121	406	918	478	1,141	547	128
Receiving Stolen Goods	100	274	6	9	5	15	21	48	82	233	108	296	82	3
Arson	123	318	49	161	1	3	3	7	73	153	77	163	98	18
Sodomy	13	28	—	—	—	—	—	—	13	28	13	28	22	16
Rape	16	26	—	—	—	—	—	—	8	14	8	14	2	—
Adultery	2	2	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	2	2	2	—	—
Procuring Abortion	19	42	—	—	—	—	—	—	18	41	18	41	16	—
Forgery	18	28	—	—	1	2	2	2	18	27	21	31	11	2
Perjury	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Subornation of Perjury or Forgery	2	7	—	—	—	—	1	5	1	6	2	11	9	—
Abuse (serious) of Authority by Police Officers	6	18	—	—	—	—	—	—	4	16	4	16	3	—
Resistance to Legal Process	4	14	1	4	—	—	—	—	3	10	3	10	1	—
Returning from Transportation	1	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	1	1	1	—	—
Escaping from Custody	7	7	4	6	—	—	1	1	3	2	4	8	—	—
Maiming and Wounding	151	689	19	79	5	28	4	8	131	445	140	481	179	2
Revenue Laws (breaches of certain)	47	117	16	38	3	7	1	1	29	76	33	84	39	—
Forcibly causing another to dip his hand in boiling Glue	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Poisoning or killing Cattle	3	3	—	—	—	—	—	—	4	5	4	5	4	—
Fraudulently making away with Letters	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Administering Poison	1	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	1	1	1	1	—
Fabricating false Receipts	1	5	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
False Imprisonment	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	18	2	18	18	1
Attempt to rob	1	16	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	7	1	7	2	—
Coin (Offences relating to)	4	5	—	—	—	—	—	—	4	5	4	5	—	—
Allowing Prisoners to escape	1	3	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	3	1	3	—	—
Attempt to Murder	1	2	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	2	1	2	—	—
Kidnapping Children	2	7	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	7	2	7	1	—
Opening Letters addressed to others	—	—	—	—	1	2	—	—	—	—	1	2	2	—
Forcible Proselytism to Mahomedanism	1	2	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	2	1	2	2	—
Bribery	4	10	—	—	—	—	—	—	4	10	4	10	1	—
Affrays	22	56	—	—	—	—	—	—	18	48	18	48	2	—
	3,482	14,959	1,856	9,089	66	260	137	420	1,472	4,359	1,675	5,038	1,977	2

* Theft, 1. Excess.

Acquitted 1,977
 Sent to the Civil Judge 2,888
 Under Examination 230

Deduct Excess 5,095
 57
 5,038

IV.—JUDICIAL.

565

DISTRICT POLICE and MAGISTRACY, from the 1st January to the 30th June 1829.

... POLICE.				MAGISTRACY.
11. Number sent by the District Police Officers to the Criminal Judge.		12. Number not disposed of by the District Police Officers, at the close of this Report.		13. Number brought before the Magistrate for Crimes or Misdemeanors whose Cases were not disposed of at the close of the last Report.		14. Number brought before the Magistrate during the absence of the Magistrate, for Crimes or Misdemeanors committed before its commencement.		15. Number brought before the Magistrate during the absence of the Magistrate, for Crimes or Misdemeanors committed within it.		16. TOTAL of Cols. 12, 14, and 15.		17. Number of Persons released by the Magistracy.		18. Number of Persons entered in Column 17, against whom the Accusation appeared to be wilfully false and malicious.		19. Number sent by the Magistracy to the Criminal Judge.		20. Number not yet disposed of by the Magistracy.		21. Number of Crimes and Misdemeanors, of the Committers whereof no one has been discovered.		Excess from Column No. 16.
Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.	Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.	Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.	Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.	Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.	Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.	Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.	Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.	Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.	Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.	Number of Cases.	Number of Persons.
58	177	1	2	3	3	7	51	14	51	24	105	75	7	7	15	6	24	30	9
14	25	—	—	1	6	2	7	11	27	14	40	31	6	—	1	3	1	1	1
9	38	—	—	1	7	—	—	1	27	2	34	2	—	—	3	33	14	337	9
189	831	19	111	8	55	19	135	64	355	91	545	355	56	30	144	26	383	384	337
47	42	—	—	—	—	2	2	10	15	18	17	11	3	6	5	1	1	105	16
8	17	—	—	—	—	1	3	1	3	2	6	6	—	—	—	1	2	804	2
169	459	11	26	—	—	5	20	27	81	32	101	72	14	11	28	2	2	1	1
288	535	17	59	3	12	8	15	79	207	90	234	140	7	39	81	9	22	383	9
88	212	1	2	1	1	2	3	11	20	14	24	9	1	7	15	—	—	6	6
20	48	6	17	—	—	4	6	10	24	14	30	18	2	1	4	2	8	49	4
5	6	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
6	12	—	—	—	—	2	2	11	15	13	17	14	4	3	3	—	—	—	—
2	2	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	4	2	4	2	—	1	2	—	—	—	—
10	23	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	1	1	1	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
10	17	1	3	—	—	2	8	9	20	11	28	5	2	4	15	4	8	—	—
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	3	7	3	7	—	—	3	7	—	—	—	—
1	2	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	5	2	6	4	—	1	1	—	—	—	—
3	13	—	—	1	1	3	10	5	13	9	24	13	4	4	7	1	4	—	—
2	9	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	5	2	5	4	—	1	1	—	—	—	—
1	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
4	3	—	—	—	—	3	3	—	3	3	3	—	—	—	3	3	—	2	—
98	295	5	7	1	10	6	17	15	45	22	72	51	—	8	21	1	4	17	4
20	44	1	1	—	—	4	37	9	21	13	58	37	—	6	9	18	36	3	24
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	6	1	5	—	—	—	1	5	—	—	—
1	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	1	1	1	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	5	1	5	—	—	—	1	5	—	—	—
1	6	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
4	5	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
1	3	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
1	2	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
2	6	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	4	3	6	—	—	—	3	6	—	—	—
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
3	9	—	—	—	—	1	—	3	6	4	7	5	—	2	2	—	—	—	—
17	46	—	—	—	—	—	—	6	10	6	10	1	—	5	9	—	—	—	—
1,091	2,888	61	230	20	96	72	321	306	977	398	1,394	856	106	149	395	75	530	1,814	387

• Gang Robbery .. 54 Excess.
 † Housebreaking by Night .. 3 ditto.
 57

Acquitted 856
 Sent to the Civil Judge 395
 Under Examination 530

1,781
 Deduct Excess .. 387
 1,394

IV. 4 C

(6.)—BOMBAY CIVIL STATEMENTS.

LIST.

I. STATEMENT of the Number of Original Suits depending at the beginning and end of 1829, and instituted and disposed of during that year, in each of the Zillah Courts ; showing by which of the Functionaries they were disposed of, and the Amount of Property in Litigation in them. Also, the Extent and Population of the Zillahs	Page 567
II. A similar STATEMENT, with respect to Appeals from the Decrees of Assistant Judges, Collectors, and native Functionaries (but not stating the Value of the Property in Litigation)	568
III. STATEMENT of the Number of Appeals on the File of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, and of the Provincial Court for Guzerat (since abolished), at the beginning and end of 1829, and disposed of by those Courts within that year. Also, the pecuniary Amount of the Appeals decided	569

IV.—JUDICIAL.

567

I.—ORIGINAL SUITS depending at the beginning and end of 1829, and instituted and disposed of during that Year, in each of the Zillah Courts under the Presidency of Bombay.

	BY WHOM DISPOSED OF.														19. AMOUNT of Property in Litigation in the Suits in Column 15.
	1. On the File on the 1st of January 1830.	2. Instituted during the Year.	3. Decided on the Merits.	4. Dismissed for Default.	5. Adjusted.	EUROPEAN AGENTS.					NATIVE AGENTS.					15. TOTAL disposed of.	16. Remaining on the 1st of January 1830.	17. On the File from One to Two Years.	18. Above Two Years.
						6. The Judge.	7. Senior Assistant detached.	8. First Senior Assistant Judge.	9. 2d or 3d Assistant Judge.	10. Junior Assistant Judge.	11. Sudder Ameer.	12. Native Commissioners at the Sudder Station.	13. Native Commissioners in the Pergunnahs.	14. Punchayet.
Surat	1,220	6,761	4,412	1,209	1,569	16	...	253	...	1,313	...	3,056	2,508	44	778	36	6	8,52,853	2 51
Ahmedabad	527	9,701	5,005	1,917	3,049	22	...	228	190	251	...	1,671	7,665	25	10,051	176	...	11,64,322	3 61½
North Concan	1,511	2,774	2,772	453	290	2	...	180	1,294	2,039	...	3,515	770	22	2,11,771	3 24
South Concan	59	3,393	1,147	1,569	678	24	392	504	2,474	...	3,394	58	...	85,457	1 52½
Poonah and Sholapore	2,243	5,377	5,189	362	937	...	124	42	21	388	241	2,678	1,139	1	6,488	1,132	58	5,78,986	6 34
Ahmednuggur and Kandesh	1,196	8,533	5,104	520	2,065	33	...	790	...	729	7,037	...	8,589	1,140	45	3,67,167	1 12
	6,756	36,539	24,569	5,960	8,588	40	124	760	211	2,742	633	9,932	22,862	70	39,227	4,054	161	32,60,565	2 34½

EXTENT and POPULATION of the ZILLAS.

	Square Miles.	Population in 1822.	Square Miles.	Population in 1822.
Surat	1,350	454,431	South Concan	6,770	640,857
Ahmedabad	6,450	1,012,808	Poonah and Sholapore... }	20,870	484,717
			Ahmednugger		650,000
North Concan	5,500	387,264	Kandeish	12,430	417,976

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.
Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments of
the Three
Presidencies.

II.—APPEALS from the Decrees of ASSISTANT JUDGES, COLLECTORS, and NATIVE FUNCTIONARIES, depending at the beginning and end of 1829, and preferred and disposed of during that Year, in each of the ZILLAH COURTS under the Presidency of Bombay.

568 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

	PREFERRED DURING THE YEAR.				Decided on Trial.	Dismissed for Default.	Adjusted.	Decrees of Assistant Judges.				Of Collectors and their Assistants.			Of Native Commissioners and Punchayets.			Disposed of by the Judge.	By the Senior Assistant Judge.	By the Third Assistant Judge.	By the Senior Assistant detached.	Total disposed of.	On the File on the 1st of Jan. 1830.	On the File more than one Year.
	From Decrees of Senior and Junior Assistant Judges.	From Decrees of Collectors and their Assistants.	From Decrees of Sudder Amiens, native Commissioners, and Punchayets.	TOTAL.				Confirmed.	Amended.	Reversed.	Confirmed.	Amended.	Reversed.	Confirmed.	Amended.	Reversed.
Surat	363	192	7	579	419	22	49	52	13	24	5	1	—	181	29	114	310	180	—	—	—	490	452	3
Ahmedabad ..	33	83	—	368	366	6	15	43	13	16	—	—	—	144	30	121	387	—	—	—	—	387	14	—
Concan, North	72	26	—	123	139	7	3	14	2	2	—	—	—	56	17	48	149	—	—	—	—	149	46	—
Concan, South	29	40	47	171	152	7	4	20	4	12	29	2	8	46	1	41	75	88	—	—	—	163	37	5
Poonah and } Sholapore.. }	313	230	—	550	396	20	37	47	13	30	—	—	—	196	42	85	90	120	41	164	443	410	98
Ahmednager } and Kandeish }	34	71	—	108	116	35	6	14	4	9	—	—	—	56	9	24	20	78	—	59	157	56	12
TOTAL ..	844	642	54	1,274	1,588	97	114	190	49	93	34	3	8	679	128	432	1,031	466	41	223	1,789	1,015	118

III.—APPEALS on the File of the SUPDER DEWANNY ADALUT, for the Presidency of Bombay, and of the Provincial Court for Guzerat, at the beginning and end of 1829, and disposed of by those Courts within that Year.

[Note.—The Provincial Court was instituted in 1828, and abolished in February 1830.]

SUPDER DEWANNY ADALUT, from the ZILLAH COURTS of	On the File on 1st January 1829.	Preferred during the Year.	TOTAL.	Decided on the Merits.	Dismissed for Default.	Ad- justed.	The Decree confirmed.	The Decree amended.	The Decree reversed.	Total disposed of.	On the File on 1st January 1830.	On the File longer than one Year.	AMOUNT OF THE APPEALS DECIDED.
													RS. A. P.
Surat	—	12	12	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	12	—	—
North Concan . .	8	4	12	3	1	—	1	1	—	4	9	5	18,599 0 0
South Concan . .	48	14	62	36	2	1	19	4	10	39	26	13	26,530 2 97
Poona and Sho- lapore }	9	7	16	9	—	1	6	1	1	10	7	2	1,47,165 1 87
Ahmedabad and Kandeish . . . }	3	5	8	1	—	—	1	—	—	1	7	2	2,311 0 0
	68	42	110	49	3	2	27	6	11	54	61	22	1,94,590 0 85
PROVINCIAL COURT for GUZERAT, from
Surat	132	63	195	74	2	7	30	13	22	74	121	56	2,81,772 1 6
Ahmedabad . .	47	41	88	22	1	5	8	—	8	22	66	27	70,895 0 66
	179	104	283	96	3	12	38	13	30	96	187	83	3,52,667 1 72

569

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 4.
continued.
(6.) Bombay Civil
Statements.

ABSTRACT of the PROCEEDINGS of the several CRIMINAL COURTS,

ZILLAHS.	MAGISTRATES AND POLICE OFFICERS.										CRIMINAL ..
	Complaints preferred.				Number of Persons		Acquitted.	Punished			Remitted to the Criminal Judges.	Acquitted, or discharged with or without Punishment.	Convicted.	Imprisoned with or without Fine and Corporal Punishment.		Fined and Released
	Cognizable by Heads of Villages and Districts.	Cognizable by Magistrates and their Assistants.	Cognizable by Criminal Judges.	TOTAL.	Supposed to be concerned.	Apprehended.		By Collectors, as Magistrates and their Assistants.	By the Heads of Villages and Districts on the spot.	TOTAL.				For One Year and under.	From One to Seven Years.
Surat	780	1,410	1,877	4,067	7,230	3,908	617	304	883	1,187	2,123	1,615	508	238	78	178
Ahmedabad	1,842	257	315	1,254	4,262	2,960	190	1,101	1,185	2,286	499	216	283	127	115	15
North Concan	1,056	116	379	1,751	3,953	1,950	104	242	1,178	1,420	411	209	202	46	53	40
South ditto	1,222	188	162	1,572	3,385	2,851	328	264	1,966	2,230	291	154	137	38	51	23
Poona and Sholapoor..	428	1,471	47	1,946	4,106	2,962	1,500	1,032	284	1,441	133	24	45	2	14	1
Ahmednuggur and Candesh	1,516	1,239	109	1,858	3,740	2,235	877	414	688	1,144	215	25	131	21	94	4
	6,844	4,681	2,889	12,488	26,736	16,866	3,616	3,357	6,184	9,708	3,672	2,243	1,306	472	405	261

	ESTIMATED AMOUNT OF PROPERTY.		AMOUNT OF ..
	STOLEN.	RECOVERED.
			By Collectors, Magistrates, &c.
Surat	1,19,785 0 44	12,043 2 25	1,648 3 83
Ahmedabad	43,869 3 75	2,581 3 50	3,112 1 08
North Concan	79,278 0 53	11,951 2 75	—
South ditto	19,882 0 47	2,656 0 92	2,631 2 07
Poona and Sholapoor	53,870 1 18	4,348 0 12	3,605 0 25
Ahmednugger and Candesh	1,26,412 3 88	44,013 3 60	2,308 0 12
	4,43,098 2 25	77,595 1 14	12,995 3 35

IV.—JUDICIAL.

571

CRIMINAL STATEMENT.

and the Police, under the Presidency of Bombay in the Year 1829.

.. JUDGES.		COURTS OF CIRCUIT.								FOUJDARRY ADAWLUT.								EXTENT and POPULATION.
Referred to the Court of Circuit, or to the Foudarry Adawlut.	Remaining to be tried.	Acquitted and Discharged.	Convicted.	Imprisoned		Fined, Punished, and Released.	Capitally convicted and referred to the Foudarry Adawlut.	Deferred to the Session of 1830.	Acquitted.	Convicted.	Sentenced to				Convicted in Gaol on the 1st January 1830.	Under Sentence of Imprisonment for Life.	Extent in Square Miles of each Zillah.	Population in 1822.
				For Seven Years and under.	For Fourteen Years.						Imprisonment		Transportation for Life.	Death (and executed).
											For Fourteen Years and under.	For Life.
to the Foudarry Adawlut	31	—	6	22	8	—	—	14	3	2	12	1	—	2	9	133	3	1,350	454,431
	26	—	15	11	4	1	—	6	—	—	6	—	1	4	1	635	28	6,450	1,012,808
	63	—	10	53	7	15	—	31	—	3	28	7	—	18	3	231	6	5,500	387,264
	25	—	3	22	10	—	—	12	—	—	12	2	2	4	4	255	3	6,770	640,857
	28	64	—	—	—	—	—	28	—	—	28	27	—	—	1	496	—	20,870	{ P. & S. } 484,717
to the Foudarry Adawlut	12	59	—	—	—	—	—	12	—	1	11	—	—	7	4	619	—	12,430	{ A. & K. } 1,067,976
	145 40																	Kandeish.
	185	123	34	108	29	16	—	103	3	6	97	27	3	35	22	2,369	40	53,370	4,048,051

.. FINES LEVIED.		NUMBER OF WITNESSES summoned to the SUDDER STATION on CAPITAL CASES.
By Criminal Judges.		Ryots.	Other Persons.	TOTAL.
1,416 3 0		95	76	171	.. Surat.
2,867 1 75		153	68	221	.. Ahmedabad.
610 0 0		231	43	274	.. North Concan.
263 0 45		25	140	165	.. South ditto.
50 0 0		—	—	—	.. Poona and Sholapoor.
178 0 0		—	—	—	.. Ahmednuggur and Candeish.
5,385 1 20		504	327	831

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

572 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments of
the Three
Presidencies.

(8.)—MEMORANDUM, prepared in the office of the Judicial Secretary at CALCUTTA, with two Notes in continuation, on the expense and Operation of the Judicial Establishment.

INDEPENDENTLY of the city of Calcutta and of the territories subject to the civil commissioners at Delhi, Cumaoon, Saugor, and the banks of the Nerbudda, and other tracts in which our Regulations are not in force, the provinces in which the system of police and of judicial administration prescribed by the code of Regulations has effect, comprise forty-five districts. On a general average each of those districts may be assumed to contain a population of not less than 1,000,000 of souls, or 45,000,000 altogether.

The total net expense of the courts of civil and criminal justice, including European and native officers, the construction, repair, and rent of gaols, cucherries, and other public buildings, the establishments for the maintenance of the police, and for the custody, transportation and support of convicts, the allowance granted to indigent prosecutors and witnesses, as well as various other contingent expenses appertaining to the Judicial department, amounted in the official year 1817-18, to Rs. 58,36,628.

The amount realized from the various branches of revenue in the territory subject to the Presidency of Fort William, in the official year 1817-18, was upwards of ten crores of rupees; and assuming the bonâ fide expenses of the Judicial department to be sixty lacs those expenses will be in the proportion of 6 per cent. of the annual revenue.

STATE OF the POLICE, and ADMINISTRATION OF CRIMINAL JUSTICE.

THE Returns periodically submitted to Government, of the number of crimes perpetrated in these provinces, comprise not merely the cases in which the persons injured come forward to inform and prosecute, but every offence which the superintendents of police, the magistrates, and their police officers can discover to have been committed.

The village watchmen, munduls, landholders, farmers, &c. are bound to give immediate information of the occurrence of offences, and are subject to penalties where they fail to do so with regard to crimes of a heinous nature. These crimes and offences are all included in the Returns submitted to Government, and comprise not only those cases in which the perpetrators are apprehended and brought to trial, but those also in which no trace of the perpetrator can be discovered.

This practice is essentially different from that of England, and there is probably no country in Europe in which the number of crimes actually committed is so fully brought to the knowledge of the Government, as with us. The periodical Reports submitted by the superintendents of police are highly valuable in this respect.

With reference to the foregoing preliminary observations, the progress of the police in the prevention or suppression of the most heinous descriptions of crimes, will be sufficiently apparent from the following Abstract Statements, separately prepared for the two divisions of the Lower Provinces and Western Provinces.

Lower

IV.—JUDICIAL.

578

IV. APPENDIX, No. 5.

continued.

(8.) Memorandum on the Expense
and Operation of the Bengal
Judicial
Establishment.

LOWER PROVINCES.

	Total Gang Robberies.	Of Wilful Murders.	Of Violent Affrays.	TOTAL.
Average of each year, from 1803 to 1807 } inclusive	1,481	406	482	2,369
Ditto of each year, from 1808 to 1812 } inclusive	927	326	204	1,457
Ditto of each year, from 1813 to 1817 } inclusive	339	188	98	625
Number committed in the year 1818 ..	217	138	49	405

WESTERN PROVINCES.

	1813.	1814.	1815.	1816.	1817.	1818.
Decoity and Murder	40	24	45	22	18	8
Ditto and Wounding	96	47	53	51	30	21
Simple Decoity	45	23	32	22	27	14
Highway Robbery by Horsemen	56	42	61	28	29	12
Highway Robbery by Footpads	635	460	395	401	384	354
Murder by Thugs	49	74	68	68	22	10
Violent Affrays	190	204	134	100	99	182
TOTAL	1,111	874	788	692	609	601

The following Statement exhibits a comparison between the number of heinous offences committed both in the Lower and in the Western Provinces in the years 1817 and 1818 respectively :

	1817.	1818.
Total Decoities	341	260
Highway Robberies	517	452
Wilful Murders	461	375
Violent Affrays	159	242
TOTAL	1,478	1,329

The total number of persons convicted and punished for minor offences by the magistrates, amounted in the year 1818 to 29,893.

The number convicted of more heinous crimes, and punished by the courts of circuit or by the Nizamut Adawlut, amounted in the year 1818 to 3,371.

The total number of convicts or prisoners in confinement for criminal offences, in all the districts of these provinces, amounted at the close of the year 1818 to 23,880, being 1,100 less than at the corresponding period of the preceding year. The foregoing statements, considered with reference to the extent of the population, exhibit no unfavourable view of the efficiency of the police, and of the administration of criminal justice.

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.
—
Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments of
the Three
Presidencies.

574 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

During the last three or four years, several very considerable improvements have been effected in the laws relating to the administration of the police and of criminal justice, and in the principles of our penal code.

The extent of these improvements will be sufficiently apparent, by a reference to the Regulations specified in the margin.*

The penalties for different crimes are either specifically prescribed by our Regulations, or, where the Mahomedan law is still in force, the application of its penalties is limited within specified bounds by general principles embodied in our code.

A sufficient judgment may be formed of the general nature of the punishments to which criminals who may be duly convicted of crimes under our system are subject, from the following statements and observations :

No sentence extending to death, or to transportation for life, or for imprisonment for a longer period than fourteen years can be passed, except by the Nizamut Adawlut.

No sentence of imprisonment exceeding two years can be passed except by the court of circuit.

The magistrates have the power of sentencing to two years, persons convicted of certain descriptions of burglary, cattle stealing, and theft, and of receiving stolen property under stated circumstances.

In all other cases their power of inflicting punishment is limited to imprisonment for six months, with the addition in some cases of stripes, and in others of fine.

Sentence extending to death, may be awarded against persons duly convicted—

No. 1. Of treason, or rebellion against the state.

No. 2. Of wilful murder.

No. 3. Of returning from transportation beyond sea, under sentence of perpetual imprisonment.

No. 4. Of gang robbery, highway robbery, burglary, or theft attended with murder.

No. 5. Leaders of gangs or watchmen convicted of gang or highway robbery, attended with torture or other severe personal injury, or of a second offence of gang robbery or highway robbery.

Sentence extending to imprisonment with hard labour, or transportation beyond sea for life, may be awarded against persons convicted of—

No. 6. Gang or highway robbery not coming under the heads Nos. 4 and 5.

No. 7. Burglary or theft, attended with an attempt to commit murder.

No. 8. Contumacy of persons outlawed on charges of gang robbery.

No. 9. Rape, sodomy, or bestiality.

Sentence extending to imprisonment for fourteen years, with hard labour, may be awarded against persons convicted of—

No. 10. Wilful maiming or wounding.

No. 11. Burglary or theft, attended with certain acts of aggravation not coming under the head No. 8, or on conviction of a second offence.

No. 12. Knowingly receiving stolen property under specified circumstances of aggravation.

No. 13. Coining.

No. 14. Forgery

* Regulations XVII. and XXII. 1816;

— XVII. and XX. 1817;

— IIL, VI., VIII., and XII. 1818.

IV.—JUDICIAL.

575

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

No. 14. Forgery under specified circumstances of aggravation, or on a repetition of the offence.

Sentence extending to seven years' imprisonment with hard labour, may be passed on persons convicted of the following offences:

No. 15. Forgery, not coming under the foregoing head; also procuring and knowingly issuing and uttering forgeries.

No. 16. Clipping and debasing the coin, or knowingly issuing counterfeit coin.

No. 17. Perjury, and subornation of perjury.

No. 18. Breaking prison under certain circumstances of aggravation.

No. 19. Cheats, frauds, and embezzlements, corruption and extortion, under certain circumstances.

No. 20. Various other offences and misdemeanors involving punishments beyond the competency of the magistrates.

Persons convicted of some of the above offences, are liable to further punishment by thirty-nine, or fewer stripes, by fines or forfeitures, by banishment to another district; and in cases of perjury and forgery, by public exposure.

It is unnecessary, in a brief memorandum of this nature, to enter into a more full detail of our penal laws. It will be seen, however, from the foregoing list, that they are not sanguinary in principle.

In their practical application the infliction is generally less than the extreme penalty authorized.

The humane attention shown by the magistrates and medical officers to the health and reasonable comforts of the prisoners, to their separation and proper classification as far as the buildings in which they are confined may admit, will be obvious from the reports of the judges of circuit, who are bound carefully to inspect and to report upon those points at every sessions of gaol delivery.*

The expense incurred by Government on account of the construction of new gaols and hospitals, and of repairs and improvements to the old ones, has for some years past annually amounted to a very considerable sum; but the importance of the objects for which the expenditure is incurred is too obvious to be disputed.

(8.) Memorandum
on the Expense
and Operation of the Bengal
Judicial Establishment.

CIVIL JUSTICE.

THE principal alterations which have lately taken place in the system for the administration of civil justice will be found in the Regulations cited at the foot of the page.†

The progress which has taken place in the reduction of the arrears of civil suits since the period when the Regulations published in 1814 began to have effect, will be sufficiently understood from the three following STATEMENTS.

STATEMENT

* Vide Rules promulgated on the 4th April 1807 and 8th February 1811.

Also, Regulation VI. 1803.
— IV. XIV. 1816.

† Regulations XXIII. XXIV. XXV. XXVI. XXVII. 1814.
— XV. 1816.
— III. XIX. 1817.

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.
Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments of
the Three
Presidencies.

576 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

STATEMENT of the TOTAL NUMBER of REGULAR SUITS and APPEALS depending before the several Courts, both in the Lower and Western Provinces, on the 1st January 1815, compared with the Number depending on the 1st January 1819.

BEFORE THE	On the 1st January 1815.	On the 1st January 1819.	Increase.	Decrease.	Remarks.
* Sudder Dewanny Adawlut } and Provincial Courts .. }	4,245	3,005	—	1,240	—
Zillah Judges & Registers	30,924	18,485	—	12,439	—
Sudder Ameens & Moonsiffs	99,700	59,716	—	39,984	—
TOTAL	1,34,869	81,206	—	53,663	Net Decrease.

MEMORANDUM of the TOTAL NUMBER of REGULAR CIVIL SUITS, whether Original or in appeal, depending in the Western and Lower Provinces, on the 1st January 1815, 1816, 1817, 1818, and 1819.

	1st January 1815.	1st January 1816.	1st January 1817.	1st January 1818.	1st January 1819.
Sudder Dewanny Adawlut ..	415	432	442	369	302
Provincial Courts	3,830	3,705	3,581	3,313	2,703
Zillah and City Judges ..	19,775	16,898	12,366	8,530	8,683
Ditto .. Registers ..	11,149	9,262	8,339	9,800	9,802
Sudder Ameens	21,932	28,594	29,041	27,230	24,835
Moonsiffs	77,768	58,235	38,730	29,795	34,881
TOTAL	1,34,869	1,17,126	92,499	79,037	81,206

STATEMENT, showing the TOTAL NUMBER of REGULAR SUITS and APPEALS depending on the 1st January 1819, and the Number disposed of in the several Courts during the whole year of 1818.

	Depending on the 1st January 1819.	Disposed of during the whole year of 1818.	Average period that would elapse between the institution and decision of Suits in each Court.
Sudder Dewanny Adawlut	302	144	2 years 1 month.
Provincial Courts	2,703	1,839	1 ditto 6 ditto.
Zillah Judges	8,683	6,254	1 ditto 4 ditto.
Registers	9,802	11,269	9 months.
Sudder Ameens	24,835	42,378	7 ditto.
Moonsiffs	34,881	77,326	5 ditto.
TOTAL	81,206	1,39,210

* The Sudder Dewanny Adawlut and Provincial Courts comprise 28 Judges.
The Zillah and City Judges and Registers amount to .. 103
The Sudder Ameens and Moonsiffs amount to about .. 685

TOTAL 1,016

The

The amount of the expense to which the parties are subjected in the adjudication of causes in our civil courts has been greatly misrepresented.

The expense incurred by both parties in civil suits cognizable in the courts of the Moon-siffs, Sudder Ameens and Registers, which vary in their value or amount from 1 to 500 rupees, or from £2 to £50 sterling, including the expenses of both parties from the commencement to the conclusion of a suit, amounts on an average to twenty-two per cent.

In suits from 500 to 5,000 rupees, or in those ordinary cognizable by the zillah judges, the expenses, as above explained, average about sixteen per cent. of the value of the thing litigated.

In the class of suits tried by the provincial courts the expense is in the average proportion of nine per cent.

In suits cognizable by the Sudder Dowanny Adawlut, the expense to the parties bears an average proportion to the thing litigated of six per cent.

These results, founded on official inquiries, were reported to Government in the Secretary's Memorandum of the 19th May 1818; they include all authorized costs and expenses of every description of both plaintiff and defendant; the institution fee, the fees on exhibits and processes of all kinds, stamp paper, pleaders' fees, allowance to witnesses, &c. &c., and are charged in the decree to the plaintiff or to the defendant, or divided between the parties according to the nature of the case, and with reference to the party in whose favour the judgment is given.

The expense can only be considered heavy in cases below 500 rupees; and even that will appear extremely light when compared with the expenses incurred by litigants either in courts of law or equity in England regarding contested claims to a similar amount.

(8.) Memorandum
on the Expense
and Operation of the Bengal
Judicial Establishment.

NOTE:

In continuation of the MEMORANDUM prepared by Mr. BAYLEY in the year 1819, on general subjects connected with the Judicial Administration.

WITH his annual report on the state of the police in the Lower Provinces for the year 1823, the superintendent submitted the result of information which he had collected, from which it appeared that, including Calcutta and the foreign settlements, the population of the several districts comprised in the provincial divisions of Calcutta, Moorshedabad, Patun, and Dacca, was computed at that time at 37,500,000 inhabitants.*

In 1817-18 the net charges of the judicial department (after deducting judicial receipts, judicial stamps, and value of convicts labour) were computed at sixty lacs.

In the Secretary's Report, the charges on the 1st of May 1818 are stated to have been 72,17,430; but it is argued that the value of the labour of convicts, estimated at 2,88,000, ought to form an off-set, as well as the revenue arising from judicial stamps, estimated at 5-6ths of the stamp revenue, and calculated (after deducting charges) at 6,53,114 rupees. These sums, together with judicial receipts, amounting to 4,39,688, making in the aggregate 138,80,802, were deducted from the gross amount of the expenses.

In that year the amount realized from the various branches of revenue in the territory subject to the Presidency of Fort William, was upwards of ten crores of rupees; and assuming the bonâ fide expenses of the judicial department to be sixty lacs, if it was shown that those expenses were in the proportion of six per cent. of the annual revenue.

In

* Population :—The population of the Western and Lower Provinces was assumed, in the former Memorandum, at forty-five millions.

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.
Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments of
the Three
Presidencies.

578 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

In 1824-25 the Revenue was computed at upwards of eleven and a-half crores of rupees; and reckoning the expenses* at sixty-seven lacs (after deducting the several items of receipt on the same principle as was assumed in the former calculation), the proportion will be rather less than six per cent. of the annual revenue.

The permanent appointment of a fifth judge of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, the distinct appointment of a magistrate from that of the judge in some districts, the additional number of joint magistrates which it has been found necessary to employ, especially in the Western provinces, the increase of subordinate establishments, and the judicial charges on account of the Saugor and Nerbudda territories, and Ajmere,† not included in the accounts of 1817-18, have combined to cause the excess beyond the expenses of that year.

STATE of the POLICE and ADMINISTRATION of CRIMINAL JUSTICE.

THE introductory remarks on this head are applicable to the present time.

The following Abstract Statements are calculated to show how far the police has been successful or otherwise, in the prevention or suppression of the most heinous description of crimes since the year 1818, compared with the last series of the averages entered in the former Memorandum.

LOWER PROVINCES.

	Total Gang Robbery.	Of Wilful Murders.	Of Violent Affrays, attended with Loss of Life.	TOTAL.
Average of each year, from 1813 to 1817 inclusive	339	188	98	625
Ditto of each year, from 1818 to 1824	234	123	30	387

WESTERN

* Gross annual amount of expenses of the Judicial Department, on the 1st of May 1825, as stated in the annual books	15,08,332
Deduct judicial receipts carried to credit in the year 1824-25	3,96,026
Deduct 1/10ths of the net amount (14,29,359) of stamp duties, after deducting the value (2,33,656) of stamp paper paid to the native commissioners on suits decided by them	9,57,474
Deduct estimated value of the labour of 16,000 convicts, (a) at 1s. 8d. per man per mensem	2,88,000
	16,41,500
	66,66,832

† Charges for Nerbudda, in 1824-25 ..	43,181
Ditto .. Saugor — ..	38,958
Ditto .. Ajmere — ..	16,749
	98,888

(a) The average number in confinement is the same as in 1817-18.

IV.—JUDICIAL.

579

IV. APPENDIX. No. 5. continued.

WESTERN PROVINCES.

(8.) Memorandum
on the Expense
and Operation of the Bengal
Judicial
Establishment.

	1819.	1820.	1821.	1822.	1823.	1824.	1825.
Decoity and Murder	18	10	14	20	12	19	11
Ditto and Wounding	26	16	10	17	13	22	22
Simple Decoity	26	20	15	16	22	28	18
Highway Robbery and other Preda- tory offences, attended with Murder }	77	105	89	65	101	97	95
Ditto .. ditto .. with Wounding	320	306	278	177	211	211	267
Murder by Thugs	10	18	9	27	21	18	19
Wilful Murder and Homicide	271	216	248	199	232	214	194
Violent Affrays, attended with loss of Life	57	82	97	82	53	79	42
Robberies and Thefts exceeding 50 Rupees	1,694	1,781	1,617	1,723	1,672	1,768	1,782
TOTAL	2,499	2,554	2,377	2,326	2,337	2,456	2,450

N.B.—This Statement differs in some respects from the form adopted in the former Memorandum, as it has not been practicable, without much research, to distinguish the number of Highway Robberies by Horsemen from those committed by Footpads.

In the year 1818, the total number of persons convicted and punished for minor offences by the magistrates and their assistants, amounted to 29,893
 In 1825 the number was, including those punished by the law officer ... 40,530*
 The number convicted of more heinous crimes, and punished by the courts of circuit, or by the Nizamut Adawlut was in the former year ... 3,371
 And in the latter 3,754†
 The total number of convicts or prisoners in confinement for criminal offences, in all the districts of these provinces, amounted at the close of the year 1818 to 23,880
 And at the close of 1825 to 25,694
 From

• Western Provinces	15,113
Lower ditto	25,417
TOTAL	40,530
† Western Provinces, Court of Circuit	1,204
Lower ditto ditto	1,551
Nizamut Adawlut, for both Provinces	999
TOTAL	3,754

IV.

580 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

APPENDIX,

No. 3.

continued.

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments of
the Three
Presidencies.

From the year 1818 to the end of 1825, the Regulations * noted at the foot of the page have been enacted for the improvement of the administration of the police and of criminal justice. The following are particularly deserving of notice.

By Regulation VI. 1819, the public ferries were placed under the control of the magistrates (subject to the orders of Government), and the collections derived from them declared applicable to "the maintenance of an efficient police, the safety and convenience of travellers, the facility of commercial intercourse, and the expeditious transport of troops." Those objects being accomplished, the surplus was appropriated to "the repair or construction of roads, bridges and drains, the erection of seraces, or other works of a like nature."

By Regulation III. 1821, the assistants to the magistrates, reported duly qualified, may be invested with special powers to inflict punishment upon offenders in cases referred to them for trial, to the extent of six months' imprisonment, with corporal punishment not exceeding thirty rattans, or with a fine of 200 rupees, commutable to further imprisonment for six months.

The magistrates were at the same time empowered to refer petty criminal cases for trial to the Hindoo and Mahomedan law officers, who were vested with similar powers to those exercised by assistants to the magistrates by Section xx. Regulation IX. 1807.

The rules requiring that petitions of appeal from the assessment fixed by the punchayet, for the maintenance of chokeedars, should be presented on stamp paper, were rescinded, and judges of circuit were directed to report to Government if the assessment appeared to them in any respects too high or essentially defective.

Provisions were made for preventing the subjects of foreign states under suspicious circumstances, from entering the British territories in large bodies.

By Regulation IV. of the same year, provisions were made for vesting the collectors of the land revenue in certain cases with the powers of magistrate or joint magistrate, and for employing the latter in the collection of the revenue.

By Regulation I. 1822, persons concerned in affrays, unattended with homicide, severe wounding, or other aggravating circumstance, were declared punishable by the magistrates and joint magistrates. In cases of a more serious nature the offenders must be committed to the court of circuit; and by Regulation II. of 1823 the court are prohibited from passing a milder sentence on persons convicted of such offences than five years' imprisonment, with or without labour and corporal punishment. If that sentence is deemed too severe, the trial must be referred to the Nizamut Adawlut.

By Regulation X. 1824, the rules regarding the offer of pardon were simplified, and rendered more practically useful; the magistrates were authorized, without previous reference to any authority, to tender a pardon to persons supposed to have been concerned in any crime, with a view to elicit information; but if offered in order to obtain evidence, the previous sanction of the superintendent of police must be applied for.

By Regulation XV. 1824, the magistrates and joint magistrates are authorized to inquire into, and decide summarily disputes regarding the possession of land, and their award is conclusive (if conformable to the Regulations), until altered by regular proceedings in the civil

* Regulation	III. VI. VII.	..	1819.
—	II. III. IV. VII.	..	1820.
—	III. IV.	1821.
—	I. IV. V. VIII. IX. X.	..	1822.
—	II. IV.	1823.
—	VII. X. XI. XII.	..	1824.
—	I. IV. XII. XVI. XVII.	..	1825.

civil court. There is every reason to believe that this and Regulation I. of 1822, and Regulation II. of 1823, have materially checked the offence of affrays.

By Regulation IV. 1825, the criminal courts were empowered to take recognizances and sureties to keep the peace.

By Regulation XII. of the same year, the use of the corah as an instrument of punishment was discontinued; females were exempted from corporal punishment by stripes; rules were enacted for the punishment of contempt of court; and the practice of the Nizamut Adawlut of requiring the concurrence of two judges in all sentences of death, was confirmed by law.

By Regulation XVI. of the same year, with a view to relieve the Nizamut Adawlut, from the numerous trials referred to that court; and to expedite the administration of criminal justice, the courts of circuit were empowered, under certain restrictions, to pass sentence extending to imprisonment with hard labour for fourteen years in banishment, and thirty-nine strokes of a rattan, on persons convicted of robbery by open violence.

And, lastly, rules were enacted by Regulation XVII. of the same year, for regulating the succession of gaol deliveries at the several stations of the magistrates and joint magistrates, in the Western and Lower Provinces.

(8.) Memorandum
on the Expense
and Operation of the Bengal
Judicial
Establishment.

CIVIL JUSTICE.

THE Regulations passed from 1818 to 1825 inclusive, affecting the administration of Civil Justice are noted at the foot of the page;* of which the following are worthy of notice.

By Regulation IX. 1819, the courts of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut and provincial courts of appeal were authorized to admit special appeals whenever from a perusal of the decree of the lower court, there might appear strong probable ground, from whatever cause, to presume a failure of justice. Experience, however, showed that the great latitude allowed by Clause 2 Section ii. of that Regulation, was productive of a large increase of appeals, which impeded the trial and decision of other more important causes, and the rule was afterwards rescinded by Section iv. Regulation II. 1825. The remaining provisions of Regulation IX. 1819, empowering the lower court to recommend the admission of a special appeal, and authorizing the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut to direct the provincial courts to admit such appeals in the event of their declining to do so, were confirmed.

By Regulation II. of 1821, the zillah and city judges were relieved from a portion of the miscellaneous business which theretofore devolved upon them. The moonsiffs were empowered to try civil suits for money or personal property not exceeding 150 rupees. The judges were directed to encourage individuals to sue for the recovery of arrears of rent in the moonsiffs' courts, in preference to adopting the summary process allowed by Regulation V. 1812. The Sudder Dewanny Adawlut were empowered to vest the sudder ameens with special powers to try civil suits to the amount of 500 rupees. The zillah and city judges were authorized to employ their registers and sudder ameens in the execution of decrees passed by sudder ameens and moonsiffs. The provincial courts were directed in certain cases to execute their own decrees as well as the decrees of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut. The zillah and city judges were declared competent to refer any summary suits to

* Regulation V.	1818.
IX.	1819.
II.	1821.
VII.	1823.
III. IV. XI. XIII. XIV.	1824.
II. V. VII. VIII.	1825.

IV.

APPENDIX,

No. 5.

continued.

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments
of the Three
Presidencies.

582 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

to their registers specially empowered and the rules allowing registers to receive fees on suits decided by them were abolished, and their salaries were fixed in lieu of such fees.

By Regulation VII. 1823, all civil servants were prohibited from borrowing money from persons subject to their official authority and influence.

By Regulation XIII. 1824, the rules authorizing the sudder ameen to receive fees on the decision of suits were abolished, and fixed salaries were allowed to them instead, and further provisions were enacted with a view to encourage the amicable adjustment of civil suits.

By Regulation XIV. the collectors of land revenue are empowered to determine in a summary manner, subject only to a regular suit, all claims for arrears or exactions of rent which may be referred to them by the zillah and city judges. It may be here also mentioned, that collectors and other officers employed in the collection of the Land Revenue, are vested by Regulation VII. 1822,* and Regulation IX. 1825, with very extensive powers in summarily defining and settling the rights of various classes of persons possessing an interest in land, subject to appeal to the Revenue Boards, but not liable to be altered by the courts of justice, excepting by a regular suit.

By Regulation VII. 1825, the rules for the execution of decrees were explained and amended.

By Regulation VIII. 1825, judicial officers are prohibited from employing their private servants in the discharge of their public duties, or public servants in the performance of their private business.

The following Statement shows the total number of regular Suits and Appeals depending before the several courts both in the Lower and Western Provinces, on the 1st of January 1815 and 1st of January 1819 (as noticed in the former Memorandum), and the number depending on the 1st of January 1826:

BEFORE THE	On the 1st of Jan. 1815.	On the 1st of Jan. 1819.	On the 1st of Jan. 1826.	Increase compared with 1819.	Decrease, compared with 1819.	Remarks.
Sudder Dewanny Adawlut and Provincial Courts }	4,245	3,005	3,944	939	—
Zillah Judges and Registers	30,934	18,485	36,391	17,906	—
Sudder Ameens and Mooniffs	99,700	59,716	91,105	31,389	—
TOTAL	1,34,869	81,206	1,31,440	50,234	—

* See Section 13, 12, 14, 15, 17, 18, 19, and 20.

MEMORANDUM of the TOTAL NUMBER of REGULAR SUITS, whether in ORIGINAL or APPEAL, depending in the WESTERN and LOWER PROVINCES on the 1st of January 1820-21-22-23-24-25-26.

(8.) Memorandum on the Expense and Operation of the Bengal Judicial Establishment.

	1st Jan. 1820.	1st Jan. 1821.	1st Jan. 1822.	1st Jan. 1823.	1st Jan. 1824.	1st Jan. 1825.	1st Jan. 1826.
Sudder Dewanny Adawlut	340	337	319	317	382	398	425
Provincial Courts	2,449	2,429	2,587	2,763	2,846	3,394	3,519
Zillah and City Judges ..	10,883	13,951	17,292	20,348	21,841	23,169	24,693
Ditto Registers	10,771	11,793	11,551	11,040	10,112	10,596	11,698
Sudder Ameens	27,244	30,206	28,131	30,517	31,600	33,756	36,102
Moonsiffs	39,062	44,677	43,996	47,241	50,085	52,337	55,004
TOTAL	90,759	1,03,393	1,03,876	1,12,226	1,16,866	1,23,650	1,31,440

STATEMENT, showing the TOTAL NUMBER of REGULAR SUITS and APPEALS disposed of in the several Courts during the years 1818 and 1825.

	Disposed of in 1818.	Disposed of in 1825.	Average Period which would elapse, as calculated in 1818, between the Institution and Decision of Suits in each Court.	Ditto .. Ditto as calculated in 1825.
Sudder Dewanny Adawlut	342,02	307,99	2 years 1 month	4 years 3 months
Provincial Courts	1,839	1,155	1 year 6 months	3 years 15 days
Zillah and City Judges ..	6,254	9,404	1 year 4 months	2 years 7 months and 15 days
Registers	5,195	5,195	9 months	2 years 3 months
Sudder Ameens	43,878	44,330	7 months	9 months 15 days
Moonsiffs	27,396	1,06,321	5 months	Nearly 6 months
	1,39,210	1,66,504	—	—

During the interval which has intervened between the years 1818 and 1825, no alteration has taken place in the regulations calculated to affect the computation assumed in the former

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued
Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments
of the Three
Presidencies.

584 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

former Memorandum of the expense attending litigation in its several grades. The Abstract* of that computation is given at the foot of the page, and, as was then stated, includes all authorized costs and expenses of every description of both plaintiff and defendant, the institution fee, the fees on exhibits and processes of all kinds, stamp paper, pleader's fees, allowance to witnesses, &c. &c., and are charged in the decree to the plaintiff or to the defendant, or divided between the parties according to the nature of the case, and with reference to the party in whose favour judgment is given.

NOTE:

In continuation of the MEMORANDUM prepared by Mr. BAYLEY in the year 1819, and by Mr. SHAKESPEAR in 1826, on general subjects connected with the Judicial Administration.

Calculating the net judicial charge on the principle assumed† in the former Memorandum, the amount would be 65,00,000.

The gross amount of the expenses of the Judicial department was stated in the annual books on the 1st of May 1825 to have been 83,08,332. The increase since that time is chiefly to be ascribed to the separation of the offices of judge and magistrate in some districts, and by the appointment of fifth judges in the provincial courts of Calcutta and Benares, in consequence of the heavy arrears of business in those courts. Within this period also, a new district station was formed at Futtehpore.

The

Expense in Suits below 500 rupees	22 per Cent.
Ditto .. from 500 to 5,000	16 —
Ditto .. above 5,000, if tried in the Provincial Court	10 —
Ditto .. if tried in the Sadder Dewanny Adawlut	8 —
COMPUTED AMOUNT OF REVENUE of Fort William, and of NET JUDICIAL CHARGES.
	PER-CENTAGE.
1817-18	About 6 per cent.
1824-25 ditto
1828-29	5½ ditto
Gross Annual Amount of Expense of the Judicial Department on the 1st May 1828, as Stated in the Annual Books	83,08,332
Deduct Judicial Receipts carried to Credit in the year 1828-29	17,98,296
Ditto six-sixths of the net Amount (65,32,020) of Stamp Duties, after deducting the value (5,05,433) of stamp paper paid to the Registers and native Commissioners, in lieu of Fees on Suits decided by them	16,96,156
Ditto estimated Value of the Labour of Prisoners (at 18 paise per man per mensem)	3,22,000
NET CHARGE
65,05,156

(a) The average number in confinement on the 31st December 1827-28 was 28,000. We exclude 10,000, being little more than one-third of these, as not subject to labour on various occasions, there were 18,000.

IV. JUDICIAL.

585

IV. APPENDIX, No. 5. continued.

(8.) Memorandum on the Expense and Operation of the Bengal Judicial Establishment.

The following Abstract Statements are given in continuation of the former Memorandum, showing the average number of crimes of the most serious nature compared with the former periods.

Lower Provinces.

	TOTAL	Of Gang Robbery, Willful Murder.	Of Violent Affrays, attended with Loss of Life.	TOTAL.
Average of each Year, from 1813 to 1817 inclusive	339	188	98	625
Ditto of each year from 1818 to 1824 ..	234	108	30	382
Ditto ditto 1825 to 1828 ..	176	105	22	297

WESTERN PROVINCES.

	1826.	1827.	1828.
Decoy and Murder ..	12	20	19
Ditto .. and Wounding ..	35	14	13
Simple Decoy ..	37	14	20
Highway Robbery and other predatory Offences, attended with Murder ..	132	95	83
Ditto .. with Wounding ..	344	251	234
Murder by Thugs ..	58	38	23
Willful Murder and Homicide ..	215	206	234
Violent Affrays, attended with Loss of Life ..	59	54	64
Robberies and Thefts, exceeding 50 rupees ..	1,014	1,815	1,581
Total ..	2,606	2,607	2,664

In the year 1818, the total number of persons convicted and punished for minor offences by the Magistrates and their assistants, amounted to 29,893

In 1825 to 40,530

In 1828 to 37,996*

The

37,996

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

Extent and
Operations of the
Judicial
Establishments
of the Three
Presidencies.

586 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

The number convicted of more heinous offences by the courts of circuit and Nizamut Adawlut was in 1818 ... 3,371
In 1825 ... 3,754
And in 1828 ... 2,487*

The total number of convicts or prisoners in confinement for criminal offences in all the districts of these provinces, amounted at the close of 1818 to ... 23,880
Ditto 1825 ... 25,694
Ditto 1828 ... 28,457†

From the beginning of 1826 to the end of 1829, the Regulations noted in the margin have been enacted for the improvement of the administration of the police and of criminal justice; the following are deserving of notice.

By Regulation VIII. 1828, the magistrates were empowered, in cases of affray unattended with homicide, severe wounding, or other aggravated circumstances, to punish the offender with imprisonment for one year and a fine of 200 rupees, to be commuted, in default of payment, to a further period of one year.

By Regulation I. of 1829, commissioners of circuit were appointed with powers of judges of circuit and of superintendents of police, on the latter office being abolished.

By Regulation II. of the same year, an appeal to the commissioners of circuit was allowed from decisions passed by magistrates and joint magistrates under Regulation XV. 1824.

By Regulation XVII. of the same year, the practice of suttee was declared illegal and punishable by the criminal courts.

CIVIL JUSTICE.

The Regulations passed from 1826, to 1830, both years inclusive, affecting the administration of civil justice are noted in the margin; of which the following are the most important.

By Regulation XI. of 1826, rules were established for providing a succession of duly qualified persons for the office of Hindoo and Mahomedan law officers in the courts of justice:

				By
• Western Provinces, Court of Circuit	1,196
Lower ... ditto	1,183
Nizamut Adawlut, for both provinces	402
Lower Provinces	1,196
Western ditto	1,183
Regulations I. II.	1827.
I. VI. VIII.	1828.
I. II. V. VI. VIII. XII. XVII.	1829.
Regulations I. II. XII.	1826.
III. IV. V.	1827.
V. IX.	1828.
III. IV. VII. XII. XIV. XVIII.	1829.

IV.—JUDICIAL.

587

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 5.
continued.

By Regulation IV. of 1827, the powers of sudder aameens, under special circumstances, were extended to the trial of suits to the amount of 1,000 rupees, and the restriction regarding the reference of suits to sudder aameens, in which Europeans or Americans are a party, was withdrawn.

Regulation V. of the same year was enacted for the better management of estates under attachment by orders of the courts of justice.

By Regulation XIII. 1829, the office of superintendent and remembrancer of legal affairs was abolished.

The following Statement shows the total number of regular suits and appeals depending before the several courts of the Lower and Western provinces:

	On the 1st of January	1815,
	Ditto	1819,
	Ditto	1826,
	Ditto	1829.

	On the 1st of Jan. 1815.	On the 1st of Jan. 1819.	On the 1st of Jan. 1826.	On the 1st of Jan. 1829.	Increase, compared with 1826.	Decrease compared with 1826.	Remarks.
BEFORE THE
Sudder Dewanny Adawlut and Provincial Courts ..	4,245	3,005	3,944	4,498	554	—	—
Zillah Judges and Registers	30,924	18,485	36,391	38,035	1,644	—	—
Sudder Aameens and Moon-siffs ..	99,700	59,716	91,105	97,611	6,506	—	—
TOTAL ..	134,869	81,206	131,440	140,144	8,704	—	—

MEMORANDUM of the TOTAL NUMBER of REGULAR SUITS, whether in Original or Appeal, depending in the Lower and Western Provinces, on the 1st of January 1826, 1827, 1828, 1829.

	On the 1st of January 1826.	On the 1st of January 1827.	On the 1st of January 1828.	On the 1st of January 1829.
Sudder Dewanny Adawlut	425	448	469	492
Provincial Courts	3,519	3,907	3,854	4,006
Zillah and City Judges	24,893	25,666	27,856	27,233
Ditto	11,698	11,666	10,392	10,802
Sudder Aameens	36,101	34,404	35,036	36,294
Moonsiffs	55,004	59,185	60,885	61,317
TOTAL	131,440	135,977	138,492	140,144

STATEMENT

(8.) Memorandum on the Expense and Operation of the Bengal Judicial Establishment.

APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

STATEMENT, showing the NUMBER of REGULAR SUITS and APPEALS disposed of in the several COURTS, during the years 1818, 1825, and 1828.

	Disposed of in 1818.	Disposed of in 1825.	Disposed of in 1828.	Average period which would elapse, as calculated in 1818, between the institution and decision of Suits in each Court.	Average period which would elapse, as calculated in 1825.	Average period which would elapse, as calculated in 1828.
Sudder Dewanny Adaw- lut }	144	99	148	2 years 1 month	4 years 3 months	3 years 4 months.
Provincial Courts ..	1,839	1,155	1,236	1 year 6 ditto ..	3 ditto 15 days	3 ditto 3 ditto.
Zillah and City Judges	6,254	9,404	8,989	1 ditto 4 ditto ..	2 yrs. 7mths. 15 days	3 ditto.
Registers	11,269	5,195	4,427	9 months ..	2 years 3 months	2 ditto 5 ditto.
Sudder Ameens ..	42,378	44,330	44,784	7 ditto	9 months 15 days	10 months.
Moonsiffs	77,326	106,321	114,360	5 ditto	nearly 6 months	6 ditto 15 days.
	139,210	166,504	173,944

APPENDIX, No. VI.

ABSTRACT

OF THE

REGULATIONS OF THE BENGAL GOVERNMENT

FOR THE

ADMINISTRATION OF CIVIL AND CRIMINAL JUDICATURE,

AND OF

THE DEPARTMENT OF THE LAND REVENUE,

ARRANGED UNDER APPROPRIATE HEADS.

(1.)

CIVIL JUDICATURE.

(2.)

CRIMINAL JUDICATURE.

(3.)

AFFAIRS OF THE REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

PREFATORY NOTE.

THE object in view in the preparation of the following Abstract, was to present a manual, which might be referred to by Members reading the discussions, either on the general principles of the Bengal Code, or on the intent and purpose of particular enactments of local legislation. The arrangement which has been adopted, places under distinct heads the rules which have been enacted, in succession, on each topic of judicial and revenue administration, from the first promulgation of Lord Cornwallis's code of 1793 to the end of the year 1831, and exhibits the reasons declared for each new enactment, or each modification of a previous law.

When the work was first undertaken, at the desire of the Judicial Sub-Committee, it was intended to confine it to the Regulations for the Administration of Civil and Criminal Justice; but it was found that so much of the duty of the Courts had its origin in proceedings more or less connected with the Revenue affairs of the provinces, and that so many duties of a judicial character were gradually devolved on the Officers of the Revenue Department, that the Summary would have been very imperfect, and almost useless, if it had not embraced the laws which regulated the powers of those officers, and presented a view of the provisions from time to time made for maintaining the rights of the Government and their subjects in the produce of the soil.

Digests, analyses, and abstracts of the Bengal Code, already exist, but none seemed calculated to supply information with so much readiness and convenience, as it is hoped the present Abstract will be found to do. The valuable work of the late Mr. Harington is in three folio volumes, the first of which was reprinted under his own revision in 1821, but the second and third extend no further than to the year 1817. Most of the other works alluded to, are mere arrangements of the detailed rules actually in force at the time when they were respectively prepared for the use of public officers engaged in carrying them into operation.

The present Abstract does not include any of the enactments which relate exclusively to the Commercial department, nor the rules for the collection of the taxes on Spirituous Liquors, nor those relating to the Salt and Opium monopolies, or to the coinage at the Company's mints.

Whoever has had occasion to study the Code of Regulations from which this Abstract is prepared, will readily acknowledge that the task which has been performed is one of considerable labour, occasioned by the complexity with which rules relating to different subjects are often thrown together, and to the innumerable references which require to be made from one Regulation to another, in order to form any thing like a methodical arrangement of so much various matter. It is feared that, after all, the task has been but imperfectly executed. It was often difficult to determine how much of any Regulation should be extracted, as exhibiting a principle or a rule of action, and how much should be omitted, as only prescribing the detail of execution. It often happened that a direction which appeared not of sufficient importance to be noticed in its place, was afterwards found to form the subject of a subsequent modification, involving a proceeding of too great importance to be omitted. When the work was completed, the abstractor would gladly have revised the whole, by a careful comparison of the Abstract with each enactment, but time would not allow of such an operation, and he has only to hope that, under the circumstances adverted to, the imperfections of which he is conscious may be pardoned, and that they may not be found such as to deprive the work of utility as a manual of general reference.

R. C.

(1.)

CIVIL JUDICATURE.

LIST.

LEGISLATION.

	Page
Authority and Form of the Regulations	592

PART I.

GENERAL.

(A.)—Constitution and Jurisdiction of the Zillah and City Courts, and general Rules of Practice in the Zillah and other Civil Courts	594
(B.)—Powers and Duties of the Provincial Courts of Appeal	617
(C.)—Powers and Duties of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut	621
(D.)—Appeals to the King in Council	624
(E.)—Vakeels	626
(F.)—Native Commissioners	629
(G.)—Fees on the institution of Suits and Appeals, and Stamp Duties, as affecting the Administration of Justice	635

PART II.

SPECIAL JUDICIAL REGULATIONS, having operation in particular PROVINCES and DISTRICTS.

(A.)—*Benares—Rajmahal—Jungle Mehals—24 Pergunnahs	642
(B.)—Ceded and Conquered Provinces, Bundelcund and Kumaon	647
(C.)—Cuttack	652

N.B.—This part includes a few Rules of Criminal Jurisdiction.

PART III.

MISCELLANEOUS REGULATIONS.

(A.)—Rules relative to European Public Officers of Government	655
(B.)—Rules relative to Europeans not in the Public Service	659
(C.)—Appointment and Removal of Native Public Servants in all Departments	663

The latter provisions are added here because they are of too little importance to form a head by themselves.

CIVIL JUDICATURE—LEGISLATION.

AUTHORITY and FORM of the REGULATIONS.

Regulations.

LIST.

- XX. 1793.—Proposed Regulations; how to be submitted to Government.
XLI. 1793.—Principles and Authority of the Code of Regulations; Form in which the Enactments were to be drawn.
X. 1796.—Interpretation of Regulations, and Provision for remedying Defects in them.

REGULATION XX.—1793.

Proposed Regulations, how to be submitted to Government.

Reg. XX. 1793.

THE preamble to this Regulation declared it to be important that the Governor-general in Council should be apprized of such general or local Regulations as the magistrates, or any of the civil or criminal courts of judicature, or any of the judges of those courts, might deem it advisable to propose, respecting matters coming within their cognizance; and that it was equally necessary that no such Regulations should be suggested without due consideration. With these views, it was deemed expedient that all such Regulations as might from time to time be proposed by the judges of the inferior courts or by magistrates, should be submitted to the Governor-general in council, with the opinion of the courts of superior jurisdiction upon them.

This enactment accordingly empowered the civil and criminal courts to propose Regulations on matters coming within their respective cognizance.

The draft of any proposed Regulation was to be transmitted through the provincial court of appeal or circuit, who were to forward it to the registrar of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, or Nizamut Adawlut, with a letter stating their approval, or otherwise, with the grounds of such opinion. If the superior court should approve the proposed Regulation in part only, they were to forward an attested copy of the Regulation as proposed with a separate draft framed agreeably to their own view of the subject, and with a letter stating their reasons for suggested alterations.

The court of appeal or circuit, or any of the judges of those courts, might likewise propose Regulations, which were to be drafted in the manner prescribed, and all such drafts were to be submitted to Government by the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut or Nizamut Adawlut, with a statement of their approval or disapproval of the draft. In cases of disapproval, the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut or Sudder Foujdarry Adawlut were authorized to submit a draft of a Regulation framed agreeably to their own views of the subject under consideration, with their reasons for any alterations suggested.

The Sudder Dewanny Adawlut and Nizamut Adawlut might also themselves submit to Government drafts of Regulations which they might deem it expedient to propose.

The Governor-general in council would reject or adopt such proposed Regulations, or pass such other Regulations as might appear proper.

REGULATION XLI.—1793.

Principles and Authority of the Code of Regulations.—Form in which the Enactments were to be drawn.

Civil Judicature.

Reg. XLI. 1793.

THE preamble to this Regulation declared it to be essential to the prosperity of the British territories in Bengal, that all Regulations which might be passed by Government, affecting in any respect the rights, persons, or property of their subjects, should be formed into a regular code, and printed with translations in the country languages; that the grounds on which each Regulation might be enacted, should be prefixed to it; and that the courts of justice should be bound to regulate their decisions by the rules and ordinances which those Regulations might contain. A code of Regulations framed upon the above principles, would enable individuals to render themselves acquainted with the laws upon which the security of the many inestimable privileges and immunities granted to them by the British Government depended, and with the mode of obtaining speedy redress against every infringement of them; the courts of justice would be able to apply the Regulations according to their true intent and import; future administrations would have the means of judging how far Regulations had been productive of the desired effect, and when necessary to modify or alter them, as from experience might be found advisable; new regulations would not be made, nor existing ones repealed, without due deliberation; and the causes of the future decline or prosperity of the Indian provinces would always be traceable, in the code, to their source.

In conformity with the principles so declared, the Regulation provided that every rule or order that might be passed by the Governor-general in council, regarding the administration of justice; the imposition or levying of taxes, or of duties on commerce; the collection of the public revenue assessed upon the lands; the rights and tenures of the proprietors and cultivators of the soil; the provision of the Company's investment; the manufacture of salt and opium; and, generally, all regulations affecting in any respect the rights, persons, or property of the natives, or of any individuals who should be amenable to the provincial courts of judicature, should be recorded in the Judicial department, and there framed into a Regulation, and printed and published in a form prescribed, and with divisions into sections and clauses.

Ten of the English copies of the Regulations passed annually, and bound up with index, were to be transmitted to the Honourable Court of Directors by the two first ships that should be dispatched for England after the volumes should have been completed.

In the English drafts of Regulations the same designations and terms were to be applied to the same descriptions of persons and things, in order that rights, property, tenures, privileges, deeds, courts, process, offices, officers, and generally all persons and things, might be uniformly described by the same designations and terms throughout the Judicial Code.

Every Regulation was to be translated into the Persian and Bengal languages, by the Persian translator to the Government, or such other person as the Governor-general in council might expressly appoint for that purpose.

The translator was to be particularly careful to preserve in the translations the same uniformity in the designations and terms applied to persons and things, as was directed with regard to the English code.

The translator was to translate the Regulations into plain and easy language, and in all possible cases to reject words not in common use. As far as might be consistent with the preservation of the true meaning and spirit of the Regulations, he was to adopt the idiom of the native languages, instead of giving a close verbal translation of the English drafts, which would necessarily render the translations obscure, and often unintelligible to the natives.

One part of a Regulation was to be construed by another, so that the whole might stand.

REGULATION

REGULATION X.—1796.

Interpretation of Regulations, and provision for remedying Defects in them.

By this Regulation it was enacted, that if a judge of an inferior court, receiving a precept from a superior court, grounded on a Regulation of the Government, should be of opinion that the superior court had misinterpreted the Regulation in question, and if upon the statement of that opinion the superior judge still maintained the same view of the question, in such case the inferior judge was to obey the exigence of the precept, and might then refer the question at issue between them to the Sudder Adawlut, who would pass a final decision thereupon. If the point referred should appear to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut not to have been sufficiently provided for by the Regulations, they were to submit a new Regulation respecting it, for the sanction of Government.

PART I.

CIVIL JUDICATURE.—GENERAL.

(A.)

CONSTITUTION and JURISDICTION of the ZILLAH and CITY COURTS, and GENERAL RULES of PRACTICE in the ZILLAH and other CIVIL COURTS.

Regulations.

LIST.

- III. 1793.—Establishment, Constitution, and Jurisdiction of Zillah and City Courts.
- IV. 1793.—Practice of the Civil Courts in the Admission and Trial of Suits.
- XII. 1793.—Appointment of Law Officers in the Courts of Judicature.
- XIII. 1793.— } Appointment and Duties of the Ministerial Officers of the Courts of Judicature.
- III. 1827.— } cature.
- XV. 1793.—Rates of Interest to be allowed by the Courts in their Decrees.
- XVI. 1793.—Reference of Suits to Arbitration.
- XVIII. 1793.—Reports and Records.
- XXXVI. 1793.— } Registry of Deeds.
- IV. 1824.— } Registry of Deeds.
- XXXIX. 1793.—Appointment and Duties of Kazees.
- XLVI. 1793.—Admission of Paupers to sue in the Civil Courts.
- XLIX. 1793.—Courts authorized to reinstate Landholders, &c. by Summary Process, on proof of violent Dispossession.
- VIII. 1794.—Powers of Registers to pass Decrees.
- XXXVI. 1795.—Appeals from Registers and Native Commissioners.
- XXXVII. 1795.—Reports to the Sudder Dewanny Adalut, of Work performed by the subordinate Courts.
- IV. 1796.—Provision for the Absence of Judges from their Courts.
- XIII. 1796.—Regarding the Execution of Decrees pending Appeals.
- I. 1798.—Mortgages in Behar, with right of Possession after a certain time (called Bya-bil-wuffa), how to be dealt with.

Regulations.

- II. 1798.—Provision for Review of Judgment.
- V. 1799.—Provision for the care of Estates of Natives dying intestate.
- I. 1800.—Administration of Portions of Estates in Joint-tenancy to be provided for by the Courts.
- III. 1800.—Extension of the Powers of Registrars.
- III. 1801.—Committals for Perjury before the Civil Courts.
- III. 1802.—Security for the Appearance of Defendants; Pauper Suits.
- XLIX. 1803.—Appointment of Assistant Judges; Extension of Registrar's Jurisdiction; Special Appeals.
- II. 1805.—Limitation of time for Institution of Suits.
- II. 1806.—Process of Citation and Attachment; Insolvent Debtors.
- XIII. 1808.—Limitation of Jurisdiction of Zillah Courts to 5,000 Rupees.
- IV. 1812.—Prosecution and Defence of Suits in which Native Princes are Parties.
- III. 1813.—Reviews of Judgment.
- VI. 1813.—Reference to Arbitration, of Suits regarding Title to and Possession of Land, Crops, &c.
- XXIV. 1814.— } Amendments in the Constitution and Jurisdiction of the Zillah Courts.
- II. 1815.— }
- XXVI. 1814.— } Amending the course of Proceeding and Practice in the Civil Courts of
- XIX. 1817.— } Original and Appellate Jurisdictions.
- XXVIII. 1814.—Consolidating and amending the Rules concerning Pauper Suits.
- IV. 1816.— } Prisons, and Prisoners in Civil Suits.
- III. 1826.— }
- VI. 1830.— }
- VIII. 1816.—Constitution of the Office of Remembrancer of Legal Affairs.
- XV. 1816.—Provision for the Trial of Suits in which Native Officers and Soldiers are Parties.
- XVIII. 1817.—Oaths of Office by Native Ministerial Officers.
- XIX. 1817.—Option granted to sue in the Provincial or Zillah Courts in certain cases.
- IX. 1819.—Admission of Special Appeals.
- II. 1821.—Increase of the Powers of subordinate Judicial Authorities.
- III. 1824.—Extension of the Special Powers of Zillah Registrars.
- XI. 1824.—Judicial Officers authorized to make local Investigations.
- II. 1825.—Reviews of Judgment.
- V. 1825.—Provision for the occasional Union of the Offices of Judge and Collector.
- XI. 1826.—Qualification of Law Officers.
- III. 1829.—Abolition of the Offices of Mahomedan and Hindoo Law Officers in the Provincial Courts.
- VII. 1829.—Reports and Calendars.
- XXIII. 1829.—Office of Remembrancer abolished.

REGULATION III.—1793.

Establishment, Constitution, and Jurisdiction of Zillah and City Courts.

THE preamble to this Regulation declared, generally, that the British Government in the establishment of a regular system of Judicial Administration, by means of courts acting under known rules and regulations, had in view the preservation to the people of their own laws in matters to which they were applicable, their protection in the free exercise

Reg. III. 1793.
Dewanny Adawlut.
(Rescinded by
Sect. ii. Reg. I.
1806.)

exercise of their religion, and the security of their persons and property. To these ends it was declared, that the Government had determined to lodge its judicial authority in courts of justice, the judges of which should not only be bound by the most solemn oaths to administer the laws and regulations impartially, but should be so circumstanced as to have no plea for not discharging their high and important trusts with diligence and uprightness. It was resolved, that the authority which by the laws and regulations was to be so lodged in the courts, should extend not only to all suits between native individuals, but that the officers of government employed in the collection of the revenue, in the provision of the Company's investment, and in all other financial or commercial concerns of the public, should be amenable to the courts for acts done in their official capacity in opposition to the Regulations. And further, in order that Government itself, in superintending these various branches of the resources of the state, might be precluded from injuring private property, they had determined to submit the claims and interests of the public in such matters to be decided by the courts of justice according to the Regulations in the same manner as suits between individuals. With a view to deprive the judges of the courts of the power of delaying or denying justice, the Governor-general in council had determined to frame the constitution of the courts upon such principles as would enable every individual, by the mere observance of certain forms, to command at all times the exercise of the judicial power of the state thus lodged in the courts for the redress of any injury which he might have sustained in his person or property. A system for the administration of the laws and regulations so constituted, would, it was observed, contain an active principle, which, allowing for the various characters and dispositions of those who might be employed in the immediate conduct of it, must continually operate to the important end of compelling men to be just in their dealings; bringing into action that spirit of industry which is implanted in mankind, and which exerts itself in proportion as individuals are certain of enjoying its fruits, dispensing prosperity and happiness to the great body of the people, and increasing the power of the state, which must be proportionate to the collective wealth which, by good government, it should enable its subjects to acquire.

By this Regulation, there were established twenty-three courts of civil justice, to have jurisdiction over that number of zillahs in Bengal, Behar, and Orissa;* and three similar courts in the cities of Moorshedabad and Dacca in Bengal, and Patna in Behar. Each zillah and city court was to be superintended by one English judge, being a covenanted civil servant of the East-India Company, who was to hold his court not less than three days in every week. All natives, and other persons not European British subjects, were declared amenable to the jurisdiction of the zillah and city courts. The courts were empowered to take cognizance of all suits and complaints respecting the succession or right to real or personal property, land rents, revenues, debts, accounts, contracts, partnerships, marriage, caste, claims to damages for injuries, and generally all suits of a civil nature, if the property sought to be recovered, or the defendant against whom the suit was brought, were actually within the limits of the court's jurisdiction. The zillah and city courts were declared to have jurisdiction over all European British subjects not being officers of the King's or Company's army, or civil servants of the Company, so far as not to allow them to reside within their respective jurisdictions at a greater distance from Calcutta than ten miles, unless they executed a bond, rendering themselves amenable to the courts in suits for sums not exceeding 500 rupees.†

The European and native officers of Government in the various departments of administration

Nuddea, Beerbhoom, Burdwan, Midnapore, Twenty-four Pergunnahs, Jessore,	Moorshedabad, Boglepore, Rajeshahiee, Purneah, Dinapore, Rungpore,	Cooch Behar, Sylhet, Dacca Jelapore, Momensing, Tipperah, Chittagong,	Behar Proper, Shahabad, Sarun, Tirhoot, and Rangpur.
--	---	--	---

† See Reg. XXVIII. 1793 (Miscellaneous).

tration, were declared amenable to the courts for acts done in their official capacity in opposition to regulations duly enacted. If the act complained of had been done under any special order of Government, or of the Board of Revenue or of Trade, the Government were to be the defendants.

No suit was to be instituted in one court for a matter concerning which a suit had already been instituted in another; nor on a matter already decreed by a former competent jurisdiction. Questions of succession to real property, were to be adjudged so that the rights of all sharers in such property should be judicially determined.

The courts were prohibited from hearing any suits in which the cause of action should have arisen previously to the 12th August 1765.* Suits were declared not cognizable if not instituted within twelve years from the time when the cause of action arose, unless some recognition of the debt by the defendant within that period could be shown, or unless the plaintiff had been precluded from seeking redress by minority or other good and sufficient cause to be approved by the court. An appeal was declared to lie to the provincial courts from the decisions of the zillah and city courts, in all suits or matters whatsoever. In cases for which no specific rule should exist, the judges were directed to act according to equity, justice, and good conscience.

REGULATION IV.—1793.

Practice of the Civil Courts in the Admission and Trial of Suits.

THIS Regulation was enacted to lay down the general rules for the institution and trial of civil suits in the zillah and city courts, and for the practice of those tribunals. †

Reg. IV. 1793.

In the trial of suits, no person was to be permitted to do any act, or to be heard in any stage of a cause, except the plaintiffs or defendants, or their respective vakeels, or witnesses. The pleadings of the parties were to be in writing, and to consist of, 1st, the plaint, which was to state precisely the matter of complaint, and the value of the property sought to be recovered; 2d, the answer; 3d, the reply; and, 4th, the rejoinder. If the plaintiff or defendant should have omitted to insert any thing material to the suit in the plaint or answer, one supplemental pleading of each kind, but no more, was to be admitted by the court. The pleadings were to be written, at the option of the parties, in Persian, Bengalee, or Hindustani.

As soon after the pleadings had been completed as the business of the court would permit, the written evidence was to be received and filed; then the witnesses were to be examined on oath, vis à voce, in open court, and their evidence was to be reduced into writing in one of the languages above mentioned.

After due consideration of the pleadings and evidence, the judge was to give judgment according to justice and right, and to order costs to be paid to the party in whose favour the decree should be made. The court were then to cause their decree to be carried into execution either on the property or person of the party against whom judgment had been given; if the defendant was to be imprisoned at the suit of the plaintiff, the court were to order an allowance to be made to him by the plaintiff, of not less than one nor more than four anas ‡ per day. Suits not prosecuted for six weeks, were to be dismissed. If a witness should be guilty of perjury in any cause before the court, the judge was to commit him for trial by the court of circuit.

In

* The date of the grant of the Dewanny to the East-India Company.

† The principles of these rules, as far as they could apply, were extended, by subsequent enactments, to the higher courts exercising original jurisdiction, as well as to those of inferior authority, viz. those of Registrars, and of native Commissioners of various degrees.

‡ Sixteen anas equal to a rupee.

In suits regarding succession, inheritance, marriage, and caste, and all other religious usages and institutions, the Mahomedan law with respect to Mahomedans, and the Hindoo law with respect to Hindoos, was to govern the decisions; and in such cases the Mahomedan and Hindoo law officers of the court were to expound the law. References to them were to be made, and their answers were to be received, in writing.

The decrees were to contain the name of every witness examined, the title of every exhibit read, and a statement of the amount or value of the money or property adjudged. A copy of the decree, duly certified and sealed, was to be tendered to each of the parties within ten days after it had been passed.

The Regulation contains a variety of rules of practice, especially concerning the attendance of witnesses, punishments for contempt, and other details.

REGULATION XII.—1793.

Appointment of Law Officers in the Courts of Judicature.

Reg. XII. 1793. THE preamble to this Regulation stated it to be essential to the due administration of justice, that the law officers in the courts of judicature should be held by men of integrity, well versed in the laws, and that they should be so constituted as to induce duly qualified persons to seek and retain them, and to discharge their duty with uprightness. It was further stated to be necessary that such officers should be subject to penalties for misconduct.

The Regulation, with these views, enacted, that the appointment of the law officers of the several courts should be vested in the Governor-general in council, and they were declared not removable except on proof of corruption, incapacity, or gross misconduct. Persons to be appointed were required to be well versed in the laws, and of unblemished moral character; they were to be sworn to the faithful discharge of their duty, and to be liable to prosecution before the civil and criminal courts for alleged misconduct or extortion. An appeal was to lie to the Sudder Adawlut from decisions passed against law officers by the lower courts; and final decrees against them were to be reported to the Governor-general in council, to whom was reserved the power of either simply dismissing the offenders from office, or of further declaring them incapable of ever exercising any employment under the Government.

REGULATION XIII.—1793.

Appointment and Duties of the Ministerial Officers of the Court of Judicature.

Reg. XIII. 1793. THIS Regulation provided for the appointment and prescribed the duties of the European and native ministerial officers of the courts of justice. The European officers, i.e. registrars and assistants, being covenanted servants of the East-India Company, were to be appointed by the Government. The native officers were to be appointed by the courts to which they were attached.

The registrars and assistants were to perform the duties prescribed to them by the judges, both in the civil and criminal jurisdiction of the courts, and were to take an oath of office; the chief native officers were likewise to be sworn to the administration of their duties. The judges of the zillah and city courts were authorized to refer to their registrars, for trial and decision, suits for property, real and personal, not exceeding 200 rupees in value. The registrars for that purpose were to sit in the judge's court, when the judge himself was not sitting; the registrar's decrees were not to be of force until countersigned by the judge. Ministerial officers were to be amenable to the civil courts courts on charges of corruption or extortion. The course of proceeding against them on such charges is detailed in the Regulation.*

REGULATION XV.—1793.

Prescribing the Rates of Interest to be allowed by the Courts in their Decrees..

THIS Regulation fixed the rates of interest which the courts of justice were permitted to decree; as follows: Reg. XV. 1793.

In suits of which the cause had arisen before the 24th March 1780 :†

On sums not exceeding 100 rupees, 37½ per cent. per annum.

— exceeding 100 — 24 — —

If the cause of action had arisen between the abovementioned date and 1st January 1793,

On sums not exceeding 100 rupees, 24 per cent. per annum.

— exceeding 100 — 12 — —

If the cause of action had arisen on or after the 1st January 1793, the courts were not to decree more than 12 per cent. per annum.

The courts were not to decree a greater sum for interest than the amount of the principal: nor any interest on instruments executed after the 28th March 1780, which should specify a higher rate of interest than those above stated. The Regulation contains special rules regarding mortgages, covenanting the usufruct to the mortgagee.

REGULATION XVI.—1793.

Reference of Suits to Arbitration.

THE preamble recited, that the Regulations for the administration of justice, passed on the 27th of June 1787, empowered the courts to refer‡ certain suits to the decision of one person, without the consent of either of the parties; that this rule deprived the parties in such suits of the benefits of having their claims tried by the regular tribunals; and was inexpedient, as it vested the judges with a discretionary power of committing the administration of the laws to any person (with certain exceptions) whom they thought proper. No provisions were made in those Regulations for determining differences of opinion that might arise between the arbitrators, or for completing the award in the event of its not being delivered within the limited period. The awards in suits referred to arbitration were consequently often protracted, from disagreements between the arbitrators, or other causes, and the suits were frequently brought again before the courts for decision. These defects in the Regulations were productive of much inconvenience and expense to the parties, and the good effects intended to be produced by referring disputes to arbitration were always liable to be counteracted. Reg. XVI. 1793.

With a view therefore to promote the reference of disputes of certain descriptions to arbitration, and to encourage people of credit and character to act as arbitrators, the following rules were enacted:

In suits concerning disputed accounts, partnerships, debts, doubtful or contested bargains, or non-performance of contracts, in which the cause of action should exceed 200 rupees,

* By Regulation III. 1827, the course of proceeding for the recovery of money or property extorted or corruptly taken by native public officers and servants, was modified in some particulars, and it was declared, that whenever money or other property paid into or deposited in Court, should be embezzled, the amount or value thereof should be refunded to the parties who had deposited the same, without reference to the solvency or otherwise of the defaulter or his surety.

† The date of one of the earliest Codes for the administration of justice. See Col. Dig. Regulations, Vol. 3, p. 14.

‡ Article 26, referring to Article 26 of the Regulations 5th of July 1781. See Col. Dig. Regulations, Vol. 3, 57-102.

rupees, the courts were to recommend to the parties to submit to arbitration. If the parties consented, they were to nominate, or, with their consent, the court might nominate one or more persons to decide the case as arbitrator; but if the persons chosen declined to act, the judge was to decide the case himself, or refer it to his registrar. The parties were to execute arbitration bonds, and a time was to be limited for the delivery of the award; the required witnesses were to be summoned by and sworn by the court; the court might enlarge the time for their final award, at their discretion; the award of the arbitrators was to be carried into execution as a decree of the court; the award was not to be set aside, except on proof of gross partiality or corruption.

Provision was made in this Regulation, for referring disputes between persons of the household of the Naib Nazim of Bengal, to be heard and decided by his Highness; and subsequent Regulations* direct the style of address to his Highness.

REGULATION XVIII.—1793.

Records and Reports.

Reg. XVIII. 1793. WITH a view of guarding against injuries by the loss of judicial records, as well as to facilitate reference to acts done by the courts, and to provide that periodical reports of the business performed, should be made by the inferior to the superior courts, native keepers of the records were ordered to be appointed in each of the courts of judicature, whose duty it should be both to preserve the records from injury, and to make entries of all documents, pleadings, exhibits, &c. entered or produced in court, each page of the register to be signed by the registrar.

Monthly reports of the causes decided in each zillah court, and half-yearly reports of depending causes, were to be made to the provincial and sudder courts, and similar reports by the provincial court to the sudder court. Half-yearly reports of the suits decided by the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, were to be forwarded by them to the Government, for transmission to the Court of Directors.

REGULATION XXXVI.—1793.

Registry of Deeds.

Reg. XXXVI.
1793.

THIS Regulation was enacted to give security to the titles and rights of persons purchasing real property, or receiving such property in gift, or advancing money on the mortgage of it, or taking it on lease, or other limited assignment; to prevent individuals being defrauded by buying, or receiving in gift, or lending money on mortgage, or taking on lease any such property that might have been so previously disposed of or pledged; to afford persons means of obviating, as far as might be practicable, litigation respecting the authenticity of their wills, or any written authority they might grant to their wives to adopt sons after their death; and that individuals might be able to provide against any injury to their rights or property, by the loss or destruction of deeds relating to transactions of the nature of those above specified. An office was to be established in each zillah and city, under the superintendence of the registrars of the zillah and city courts, for the registry of deeds of sale, gift, and mortgage, leases of assignments, wills, &c.; any such deed on being produced before the registrar, and authenticated by proper testimony, was to be copied into the registry book, and the copies attested by the parties or their representatives. All deeds executed after the 1st January 1796, if registered, were to be received in evidence, in preference to those not registered, unless there was reason to suspect fraud or collusion. The registrar was remunerated by a fee of two rupees for every deed registered, one rupee for every copy given, and half a rupee for every search.†

REGULATION

* Regulation XIX. 1805; and Regulation XVI. 1806.

† By Regulation IV. 1824, provision was made for the due execution of the office of Registrar of Deeds, in the event of the absence of the Registrar of the Zillah Court, without having appointed a deputy.

REGULATION XXXIX.—1793.

Appointment and Duties of Kazees.

THIS Regulation related to the appointment of head kazees,* and of the kazees stationed at the cities and principal towns, and in the districts, for the purpose of preparing and attesting deeds, and performing marriages and other ceremonies described by the Mahomedan law. It was declared necessary that these offices should be filled by persons of good character and legal knowledge, and that they should not be removable unless for proved incapacity or guilt.

The Regulation accordingly provided, that those officers should be appointed by the Governor-general in Council; that the subordinate kazees should be recommended by the head kazees, as men of character and legal knowledge. Kazees misconducting themselves, were to be reported to the Government by the judges of the courts of judicature; they were further declared liable to be sued in the courts, for undue practices in the discharge of their duty.

REGULATION XLVI.—1793.

Admission of Paupers to sue in the Civil Courts.

THE object of this Regulation was to enable persons who were unable to bear the expenses of a law suit, to sue for the recovery of their rights as paupers, without payment of fees. The poverty of the party was to be proved on oath by two witnesses, whereupon the court were to admit the pauper, on his producing two sufficient sureties for his appearance whenever required by the court. Reg. XLVI. 1793. (Rescinded by Sect. ii. Reg. XXVIII. 1814.)

In the event of the suit proving frivolous or vexatious, and of the plaintiff's not being able to pay his fees and costs, the court might commit him to prison for a time not exceeding three months; and if the sureties failed to produce him to be so dealt with, they might themselves be committed for the same time. A pauper suitor becoming afterwards possessed of property, might be proceeded against for his fees and costs. The vakeels of the courts were permitted to undertake the suits of paupers; if the pauper succeeded, the vakeel was to be paid his costs. If the pauper could not prevail on any vakeel to undertake his suit, it was competent to the court, on sufficient grounds, to assign one of the vakeels to perform that duty.

REGULATION XLIX.—1793.

Courts to reinstate Landholders, &c. by Summary Process, on proof of violent Dispossession.

THE preamble to this Regulation stated that instances frequently occurred, of proprietors and farmers of land, dependent talookdars, under-farmers and ryots, seizing or ordering their agents and dependents to take possession by force of disputed land or crops, under the pretext of their having a claim thereto; and that affrays often ensued in consequence, which were generally attended with bloodshed, and not unfrequently with the loss of many lives on both sides. With a view to prevent such highly criminal proceeding, this Regulation prohibited persons having claims to disputed lands or crops in the possession of others, from attempting to seize them by force; and it directed that they should prefer their claim before the civil court of the zillah, whereupon the judge was immediately to institute a summary proceeding, taking evidence of the fact of dispossession, and without inquiry into the merits of the dispossessor's claim, should cause the

Reg. XLIX. 1793.

* Under the Mahomedan Government, the kazees executed the functions of judges; but their judicial powers were withdrawn on the establishment of Courts of Justice by the British Government. Their authority in religious and ceremonial matters was continued. The head kazees were alone attached ex officio to the Sadder Dewanny and Foujdarry Adawlut, and was at once the chief law officer of those courts, and the head over the district and town kazees.

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued.

Civil Judicature.

602 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

the disputed land or crops to be restored to the complainant, and all damage done to be made good to him, with equitable costs. The Regulation further enacted, that persons guilty of killing or wounding others, either in taking or recovering possession, should be committed for trial before the criminal courts, and that in certain aggravated cases, the disputed property should be forfeited to Government.

REGULATION VIII.—1794.

Powers of Registrars to pass Decrees.

Reg. VIII. 1794.

THE preamble to this Regulation stated that the provisions made for reference of petty suits by the judges to their registrars for decision* had not proved effective, in consequence of its being required that the registrars' decrees should be always countersigned by the judge, which provision rendered it necessary that the judges should revise the proceedings before they could render themselves responsible for the judgment by affixing their signatures. The present Regulation, therefore, annulled that part of the former Regulation, and declared the decision of the registrar final in all suits not exceeding twenty-five rupees, vesting, however, a discretionary power in the judges to revise their decisions in any instances in which they might appear to them obviously unjust or erroneous, and to pass such decree as they might deem equitable. In all suits above twenty-five rupees, an appeal was to lie from the decision of the registrar to the provincial court. The decisions of the zillah and city judges were likewise declared final to the extent of twenty-five rupees.

With a view of further relieving the zillah and city courts in the examination of long and intricate accounts in suits respecting land rents or revenue, judges were empowered to refer such accounts for adjustment and report, to the collectors, forwarding, if necessary, the parties or their vakeels to the collectors to be examined. Judges, however, were prohibited from referring to those collectors, accounts relating to suits in which such collectors, or any of their public officers, or private servants, or the Government, should be parties.

REGULATION XXXVI.—1795.

Appeals from Registrars and Native Commissioners.

Reg. XXXVI.
1795.

IT being found that the time of the provincial courts was very inconveniently occupied in hearing appeals from the registrars under the foregoing provisions, and that the ends of justice would be sufficiently attained by allowing one appeal from the decisions of registrars as well as from native commissioners, it was enacted by this Regulation, that an appeal should lie to the zillah judge from all decisions of the registrar for sums exceeding twenty-five rupees. The judgment passed on such appeals, as well as those passed on appeals from decisions of the native commissioners, by the zillah judges, were declared final.

REGULATION XXXVII.—1795.

Reports to the Sudder Dewanny Adalat of Work performed by the subordinate Courts.

Reg. XXXVII.
1795.

(Rescinded by
Sect. ii.
Reg. VII. 1829.)

By this Regulation it was directed, in order the better to enable the Sudder Dewanny Adalat to form a judgment of the progress made by the zillah and provincial courts in determining the suits before them, that the registrar of the Sudder Dewanny Adalat should submit to the court, at their first meeting in every month, a general report, formed from the abstract registers, of suits decided and pending before the several courts of civil judicature.

REGULATION

* See Regulation XIII. 1793—"Ministerial Officers."

IV.—JUDICIAL.

603

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued.

REGULATION IV.—1796.

Provision for the Absence of Judges from their Courts.

THIS Regulation directed the mode in which judges should obtain leave of absence from their courts, which they were never to quit without the special leave of the Government, except in emergent cases of indisposition. The registrars on the spot were prohibited from performing any functions but those of a ministerial nature, or such as circumstances may render indispensably necessary, without special appointment and authority from the Government.

Civil Judicature.
Reg. IV. 1796.

REGULATION XIII.—1796.

Regarding the execution of Decrees pending Appeals.

IT had been provided by the Regulations of 1793, that in cases of appeal from decisions of the zillah or provincial courts, if the suit was for land or other real property, execution of the decree was to be stayed pending the appeal, on the appellant's furnishing security in a sum equal to the amount of one year's produce of the said real property; but if the suit was for personal property, the court were permitted to carry their decree into execution, on sufficient security being given by the respondent. Reg. XIII. 1796.

The present Regulation declared that the latter provision had been found objectionable, since it often occurred that a decree could not be enforced without a sale of property or attachment of the person, both of which were liable to objection, while there was a possibility of the judgment passed in the first instance being reversed or qualified on the appeal. The present Regulation therefore applied the rule regarding real property to decisions in cases of personal property; and to prevent its abuse, it ordered that interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum should be allowed on sums adjudged by the decree appealed from, if that decree should be confirmed.

Litigious appellants were to be punished by fine.

REGULATION I.—1798.

Mortgages in Behar, with right of Possession after a certain time, how to be dealt with.

THE preamble to this Regulation, stated that it had been long a prevalent practice in the province of Behar to borrow money on the mortgage and conditional sale of landed property, under a stipulation that if the sum borrowed were not repaid (with or without interest) by a fixed period, the sale should become absolute. This species of transfer had in the above province been usually denominated bye-bil-wuffa; and the same transaction was common in Bengal, where the instrument was termed kut-cubbaleh. Since the promulgation of the rules respecting interest contained in Regulation XV. 1793, the practice had become more prevalent, and instances had occurred in which persons lending money on bye-bil-wuffa, in order to render the sale absolute, and thereby possess themselves of the landed property of the borrower, had denied the tender, or evaded receiving payment of the money due to them within the period limited for the discharge of it. For the prevention of this and other abuses in the transactions referred to, the following rules were enacted:—In all instances of the loan of money on bye-bil-wuffa, the borrower who might be desirous to redeem his land by the payment of the money lent upon it, might, within the stipulated period, either tender and pay the amount due to the lender, or deposit the same in the local Dewanny Adalat. When the lender had not obtained possession of the lands, the deposit was to be the principal sum lent, with the stipulated interest thereon, not exceeding the legal rate of twelve per cent. per annum; but if the lender had held possession of the land, the principal sum borrowed only need be deposited, leaving the interest to be settled on an adjustment of the lender's receipts and disbursements during the

Reg. I. 1798.

IV.

APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued.

Civil Judicature.

604 APPENDIX to REPORT from SELECT COMMITTEE.

the period he had been in possession. In either case, a deposit, made as above required, should be considered to preserve to the borrower his full right of redemption.

When the lender had possessed the land, and an adjustment of accounts might be necessary, he was to account for the proceeds of the estate on the principles prescribed in Regulation XV. of 1793.

REGULATION II.—1798.

Provision for Review of Judgment.

Reg. II. 1798

THE preamble to this Regulation stated, that it was necessary to the ends of justice, that in suits not open to appeal, the court that had passed a decree should have the power of reviewing its own judgment, whether for the purpose of correcting incidental errors, or of amending the decision in principle.

It was declared, however, that the discretionary exercise of this power by the courts before whom the proceedings on the case had been held, ought to be subject to the control of the Sudder Dewanny Adalut, in order that the grounds on which a review should be granted in the several courts of civil judicature might be uniform, and that it might not in any instance be allowed without due deliberation.

The Regulation accordingly provided, that persons considering themselves aggrieved by an unappealable decree, might apply for a review of judgment on the discovery of new evidence which it was not in their power to adduce when the decree was passed, or for other good and sufficient reason. If the court thought the reasons stated to be of sufficient weight, they were to submit the application for review, together with their opinion thereon, for the orders of the Sudder Dewanny Adalut; but if they deemed the grounds shown to be insufficient, their order of rejection was to be final. If the Sudder Dewanny Adalut deemed it proper to grant the review, they were to pass such orders as might appear to them just and equitable, and to direct the admission or rejection of any new evidence that might be offered.

In reference to some doubts which had arisen in regard to the mode of obtaining opinions on points of Hindoo and Mahomedan law, the Regulation declared that the law officers attached to the several civil courts should expound the law in the cases referred to them, and that in all ordinary cases the judges should be guided by such exposition; but that in cases in which the judge might see cause to doubt the accuracy of any opinion so given, either in consequence of the production of other law opinion by the parties, or in consequence of a reference by the judges themselves to known books of Hindoo or Mahomedan law; or when, from whatever other cause, it should appear to the judge necessary for the ends of justice to take a further opinion, it should be competent to the court before whom the suit had been tried to obtain a further exposition from the law officers of the superior courts, by a reference of the case to them through the judges of those courts. Judges, however, were prohibited from referring questions to individuals not acting in a public capacity, and to whom, consequently, no responsibility would attach.

REGULATION V.—1799.

Provision for the Care of Estates of Natives dying intestate.

Reg. V. 1799.

THE object of this Regulation was to prescribe the duties of the civil courts on the death of natives leaving property within their jurisdiction. The Regulation enacted, that if the deceased had made a will, and appointed executors, they might take charge without application to a court of justice, provided the heir of the deceased was not a disqualified landholder, subject to the superintendence of the court of wards.* If the deceased

* See Regulation X. 1798, "Revenue."

deceased had died intestate, leaving an heir who was of age; or, in cases of minority, if a guardian had been appointed, such heir or guardian might take possession. If there were more heirs than one, and they agreed to appoint a common manager, possession might be taken by such manager without the previous order of the civil court. If the right of succession was disputed, and a suit were instituted, the judge might give possession, pending the suit, to whichever party could give the best security. If neither party could give satisfactory security, the judge might appoint an administrator. If report were made to a zillah judge, of an intestate having left personal property, to which there was no claimant, the judge was to take such measures to make the fact known as should be most efficacious. If no one came forward to claim the property within a twelvemonth, a report of the circumstance of the case was to be transmitted, for the orders of Government.*

REGULATION I.—1800.

Administration of Portions of Estates in Joint-tenancy, to be provided for by the Courts.

THE object of this Regulation was to provide for the due administration of the estates of persons being joint proprietors of land, inasmuch as portions of estates do not come under the administration of the court of wards, whenever one or more of the shareholders were competent to the administration of its affairs. Under the provisions of Regulation V. 1799, in case of a minor or other incapacitated person succeeding to a share, the next of kin who by the law and usage of the country might be authorized to act for him, was to take possession on his behalf. It had been found in practice, that such nearest of kin were sometimes unfit persons to be vested with such authority; the present Regulation therefore rendered it the duty of the judge, on receiving a report from the collector, or from any other person interested in the family, stating the grounds on which the next of kin was unfit for the care of the person, or management of the estate of the heir, to investigate the nature of such objections, and if satisfied that they were well-founded, to nominate some other person of capacity, character, and responsibility, but in no case the heir of the ward, or other person interested in outliving him. Guardians appointed under this Regulation were to have the care of the person, maintenance, and education of the ward, and were to vote in the election of the manager for the joint undivided estate. The appointment of a guardian to a shareholder, under this Regulation, was not to exempt the estate from sale for arrear of revenue. Reg. I. 1800.

REGULATION III.—1800.

Extension of the Powers of Registrars.

It having been found that a great accumulation of causes had taken place under the provisions of Regulation XL. 1793, which required that all appeals from the decisions of the native commissioners should be made to the zillah judges, whose decisions thereupon should be final, this Regulation empowered the judges of the zillah and city courts to refer to their registrars as many of such appealed causes as they should think proper, provided the property in dispute did not exceed twenty-five rupees; and the decision of the registrar in such cases was declared final. Reg. III. 1800. (Rescinded by Reg. XLIX. 1803.)

REGULATION

* It was provided by Regulation XV. of 1806, that if an European British subject died intestate in the provinces, the judges of the zillah should notify the case to the registrar of the supreme court, retaining the property in charge till letters of administration should be taken out.

By Regulation V. 1827, it was directed, that when the courts might have to provide for the administration of an estate paying revenue to Government, they were to require the collector to nominate a fit person, and to take adequate security from him, for the due discharge of the trust. Persons having an interest in an estate so administered, and who deemed the collector's appointment an improper one, might appeal to the Board of Revenue, who would either confirm the collector's nomination, or direct him to appoint another manager.

Civil Judicature.
Reg. III. 1801.

REGULATION III.—1801.

Committals for Perjury before the Civil Courts.

It had been found that the rule prescribed in Regulation IV. of 1793, for the immediate committal of persons suspected of committing perjury before a civil court, had become oppressive in practice, in consequence of parties very commonly preferring unfounded charges against the witnesses whose evidence was unsatisfactory to them, which accusations were themselves supported by gross perjury. This evil practice, it was stated, would, if it were not checked, deter all men of respectability from appearing to give their testimony on oath in any court of justice, and would greatly increase the difficulty of procuring the voluntary attendance of such witnesses. As the only effectual remedy for this abuse, it appeared necessary to take away altogether from parties in civil suits the right of bringing forward such accusations, and to leave it to the discretion of the judge to determine when any witnesses brought before him should be committed for perjury. It was therefore enacted by the Regulation, that individuals whose attendance was required in the civil courts, either as plaintiffs, defendants, or witnesses, should not be liable to prosecution for perjury, or subornation of perjury, at the instance of the parties in such civil suits, unless committed by the judge trying the case.

REGULATION III.—1802.

Security for the Appearance of Defendants—Pauper Suits.

Reg. III. 1802.

It was declared in the preamble, that the provisions of the Pauper Suit Regulation XLVI. of 1793, had been grossly perverted, to the oppression of many persons against whom vexatious suits had been instituted by paupers, and who were thereby put to heavy expenses, without any means of compensation or relief; and further, that the penalty of imprisonment which the above-mentioned Regulation imposed on the vexatious suitor, had not been found sufficient to check that flagrant abuse.

By the present Regulation it was therefore enacted, that the judge should exercise a discretion in the amount of security to be required of defendants for their appearance, with liberty at any time in the course of a suit, when it might appear necessary, to call for higher or other security; that in pauper cases it should be competent to the court giving judgment, at its discretion, to decree to the vakeels of the defendant such amount of fees as should appear adequate to their labour, leaving the remainder of the full fees to be recovered from any property which the plaintiff might be found to possess. In pauper suits, if judgment had been given by the court of original jurisdiction against the defendant, and such judgment should be afterwards reversed on appeal, the institution fee* paid on the appeal might be returned to the successful appellant, and be eventually recovered, if practicable, from any property of which the pauper suitor should become possessed. If judgment in the original suit were given against the pauper plaintiff, and the suit appeared to be a vexatious one, the court were to commit the pauper to prison, even though he should appeal from the judgment; and if the superior court confirmed the decision, they might extend the period of imprisonment, the provincial court to six months, and the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut to one year.

The power of returning the institution fee, and the discretion in the taking of security from defendant, were declared applicable to all cases besides those instituted by paupers.

REGULATION XLIX.—1803.

Appointment of Assistant Judges—Extension of Registrar's Jurisdiction—Special Appeals.

Reg. XLIX. 1803.
(Rescinded, Regs.
XXIII. and XXIV.
1814.)

A GREAT accumulation of undecided suits was found to have taken place in the zillah courts, chiefly arising from accidental circumstances, the effect of which it was thought might might be removed by a temporary arrangement for their decision, without a permanent alteration of established jurisdiction, by the appointment of temporary judges, whenever requisite, to assist in the trial of causes depending in a city or zillah. It was therefore enacted, that assistant judges should be appointed by the Government, whenever it should appear from the report of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, or otherwise, that the number of undecided suits called for such temporary relief.

* See Reg. VI. 1797, "Fees and Stamps."

To the officers so appointed, the zillah judges were authorized to refer, at their discretion, any original suits, or any appeals from the decisions of the registrars, or of the native commissioners, that were depending before them. The court of the assistant judge was to be attended by a sufficient number of the authorized vakeels of the zillah court; process was to be issued under the signature of the assistant judge, who was to proceed in the trial of causes referred to him, in conformity with the general rules for the trial of civil suits.

As a further measure for expediting the business in civil judicature, the jurisdiction of the registrars was extended to suits for 500 rupees.

The rule, rendering final the decisions of registrars, for personal property not exceeding twenty-five rupees, and on appeals from native commissioners, and the rule rendering the decisions of zillah judges on appeals from the registrars in cases of personal property, and in original cases decided by themselves, to the extent of twenty-five rupees, were rescinded; and it was enacted, that an appeal should lie to the zillah court from all decisions passed by the registrars. The decrees of the zillah judges upon such appeals, in all cases not exceeding 100 rupees, were declared final; in appeals above that amount, if the decision of the zillah judge confirmed that of the registrar, that decree was to be final; but in appeals above 100 rupees, if the judge's decree altered that of the registrar, an appeal was to lie therefrom to the provincial court.

To guard against the evils resulting from erroneous decisions in cases not regularly open to appeal, where, though the sum in issue was not considerable, a question of a general or important nature might be involved, it was deemed advisable to authorize the provincial courts to admit a second or special appeal, the admission of such special appeal not to be matter of right in the suitor, but to be at the discretion of the superior court.

The decrees of the zillah and city judges in appeals from the decision of the native commissioners for personal property, were declared final, it being presumed that the judge would refer all suits for personal property not exceeding fifty rupees to the native commissioners, and all suits for personal property not exceeding one hundred rupees, either to the registrar, or to the Sudder Amceens,* and that they would not themselves try any suit within such amount, unless it involved some general question, or were otherwise of importance. It was further enacted, that an appeal should lie to the provincial court, from all suits decided in the first instance by the zillah judge.

REGULATION II.—1805.

Limitation of Time for Institution of Suits.

The preamble to this Regulation adverted to a limitation of time formerly prescribed for the institution of suits, namely, twelve years from the time when the cause of action had arisen, or twelve years from the time of the cession to the Company of the province in which such claim had arisen; which limitations appeared to have been established on the institution of the courts of Dewanny Adawlut in 1772, when the administration of civil justice was first committed to the Company. It had been remarked in the plan then proposed by the committee of circuit, that by the Mahomedan law all claims which had had lain dormant for twelve years, whether for land or money, were invalid, and that this was also the law of the Hindoos, and the legal practice of the country.

Reg. II. 1805.

* See Regulation XLIX. 1803.

The preamble observed, that the foregoing statement was not correct with respect to the Hindoo and Mahomedan laws, though it might be so with regard to the legal practice of the country; that the rule, however, having been established, and so long in force, it would be improper to abrogate it altogether. The declared grounds on which it had been introduced, viz. "that the litigiousness and perseverance of the natives in their suits and complaints were often productive, not only of inconvenience and vexation to their adversaries, but also of endless expense and actual oppression," were not applicable to suits instituted for the recovery of public rights and dues, under the provisions of the Regulations which subject public claims and interests to the decision of the established courts of justice; and in regard to such public suits and claims, the Hindoo law prescribed no limited time: the law of England* had restricted the time for such suits to sixty years; the same period was recognized by the Hindoo law, in regard to private rights and claims, in cases of unmolested possession, unless there were proof of bad title; the same period of limitation was not incompatible with the Mahomedan law. Under these circumstances, although the Government did not judge it necessary to alter the limitation of time, in cases of land, houses, or other immovable property, held under a just and honest title, yet they were of opinion that a longer period should be allowed for the cognizance of such claims, if the claimant could show that the adverse possession had been acquired by violence, fraud, or other unjust and dishonest means, or that having been so unjustly acquired by the person from whom the occupant derived his title, it had not been subsequently held under a just and honest title for a term equal to the fixed period of prescription.

The Regulation accordingly enacted, that the limitation of twelve years for the commencement of civil suits, should not be considered applicable to suits instituted on behalf of Government for the recovery of public rights or claims, whether for the assessment of land held exempt from public revenue without sufficient title, or for the recovery of arrears of public assessment, or for any other public right. All such suits were to be received in the courts of judicature, if preferred within sixty years from the date when the cause of action had arisen, provided that date was not anterior to the Company's accession to the government of the province in which the claim had arisen.

The Regulation also extended the time for instituting private suits in cases of mala fide possession, in conformity with the principle declared in the preamble.

It likewise limited to one year the time for instituting private suits for the recovery of certain damages allowed by the Regulations to be sued for by individuals, or for the institution of public suits for fines and penalties by Government, and for the institution of summary suits for arrears of rent and forcible dispossession.

REGULATION II.—1806.

Process of Citation and Attachment—Insolvent Debtors.

Reg. II. 1806.

This Regulation was enacted to remedy certain defects in the practice of the civil courts. The first defect was in the preliminary process of citation, which compelled the party to accompany the officer serving the writ, and to give security for his appearance on a day appointed, in failure of which he might be committed to custody until he should give the requisite security. Instead of that course, the present Regulation prescribed that a simple notice should in the first instance be served, directing the attendance of the party on a certain day. The service of such notice on an accredited agent, and other facilities, were provided for; power was however given to the courts to require security in cases where it might be deemed necessary for the ends of justice.

The second defect was, that the courts had no power to attach the property of the defendant before judgment given against him. This Regulation enabled the courts to attach property in all cases where the person might be attached; and all alienations or transfers of property by the parties after notification of attachment, were declared penal as well as void.

The third defect which this Regulation supplied, was that of a power in the courts to adjudge payment of sums by instalments.

Lastly, this Regulation enacted rules for the relief of insolvent debtors, enabling the courts to receive from them statements on oath of all property belonging to them, and after due inquiry into the truth of such statements, or the validity of such objections as might be made to them, to receive a surrender of such property, and thereupon to release the individual with or without security for appearance when required.

No debtor against whom any fraud was proved was to be entitled to release; property subsequently possessed, was declared answerable for the unsatisfied debts on application to the courts.

A discovery, after release, of fraudulent concealment of property at the time of discharge, might be a ground for again confining the party.

REGULATION XIII.—1808.

Limitation of Jurisdiction of Zillah Courts to 5,000 Rupees.

The preamble to the Regulation stated, that as suits for 5,000 rupees and upwards were appealable, first to the provincial courts, and subsequently to the Sudder Adawlut, it was found that considerable delay frequently occurred in the final adjudication of contested claims to large estates, and other valuable property: the person against whom the judgment was given, being seldom willing to abide by it while at liberty to appeal. Further evil was stated to have arisen from the operation of the rule which allowed appellants to retain possession of property adjudged under security until a final decision should be passed. That rule had been found to encourage groundless appeals, instituted for the sole purpose of keeping possession of the property in dispute to the prejudice of the real proprietor. To remedy these evils, this Regulation enacted, that all suits for sums exceeding 5,000 rupees and upwards, should be instituted in the first instance in the provincial courts, so that one appeal only should lie of right in such cases, and that persons who might obtain a decree in their favour for lands or other immoveable property, should have immediate possession, notwithstanding an appeal, provided they could give security for the satisfaction of the ultimate decree. Authority, however, was left to the court to which the appeal might be preferred, if they saw cause, to allow the appellant to retain possession upon giving like security.

Reg. XIII. 1808.

REGULATION IV.—1812.

Prosecution and Defence of Suits, in which Native Princes are parties.

This Regulation was enacted, to provide for the prosecution and defence of suits in which native princes might be parties, such personages being reluctant to appear in courts of justice as plaintiffs or defendants.

Reg. IV. 1812.

It recites that the British Government had rendered its acts amenable to the courts established for the administration of justice, in civil cases, and in the same spirit of equity had precluded itself from deciding by its own authority on disputed claims to property of every description in which it might be a party with any of its subjects, except in cases expressly reserved to its decision or to that of the subordinate executive authorities by the existing Regulations; and that the sovereigns of adjacent states had occasionally claims to prefer or rights to defend, as individuals, in the territories of the British Government, and difficulties had occurred in prosecuting or defending such claims.

To

IV.

APPENDIX,
No. 6.

continued.

Civil Judicature.

616 APPENDIX to REPORT from SELECT COMMITTEE.

To meet the feelings of the persons referred to, the Regulation authorized the Government to order suits to be prosecuted or defended on behalf of native princes by the vakeels, aided by the revenue officers, of Government, in cases for the recovery of lands &c. Copies of the decrees which judges might pass in such suits, to be transmitted by the courts to the Secretary to Government in the judicial department.

REGULATION III.—1813.

Reviews of Judgment.

Reg. III. 1813.
(Rescinded by
Reg. XXVI
1814.)

It appearing requisite for the ends of justice that the powers granted to courts under Regulation II. 1798, to review their judgments in cases not appealable, should be extended, they were authorized by this Regulation to apply the rules before enacted, to admit reviews of judgment in appealable cases, if the application were preferred within three months after the delivery of the decree.

REGULATION VI.—1813.

Reference to Arbitration of Suits regarding Title to and Possession of Land, Crops, &c.

Reg. VI. 1813

THE former Regulations having only provided for reference of questions of account to the decision of arbitrators, the present enactment authorized the reference, under the same rules, of questions respecting property in land, or limited tenures therein, or rights dependent thereon, and directed that the parties in such suits should by all due means be encouraged by the courts to resort to that mode of adjusting their differences; the Regulation further provided, that persons between whom disputes should exist on such points, might, without application to the courts, refer them to private arbitration, and the awards made by the arbitrators and umpires appointed in such cases by the parties, should be supported and enforced by the courts, under certain rules and limitations to prevent abuse.

It was further provided, that if a criminal court should certify to a civil court, that any dispute existed regarding possession of land, which was likely to lead to a breach of the peace, the civil court should call on the contending parties to attend and deliver a written statement of the fact of possession, and adduce proof of forcible dispossession or disturbance by the adverse party; whereupon the court, after due investigation, should decide the case in the same manner as if it had been brought before them by a complaint in the ordinary mode. The civil courts were in these cases, as in those before stated, to endeavour to induce the litigant parties to refer the question of right to arbitration; and to give effect to the award, if open to no just cause of impeachment.

When the question of prior possession and forcible dispossession could not be summarily decided, the courts were authorized to attach the lands, and appoint an ameen to collect the rents until the question should be decided.

REGULATION XXIV.—1814.

Amendments in the Constitution and Jurisdiction of the Zillah Courts.

Reg. XXIV. 1814.

THE object of this Regulation was stated to be to expedite the decision of civil suits by the various modifications in the constitution and jurisdiction of the zillah and city courts; it accordingly enacted that the office of assistant judge, established by Regulation XLIX. 1803, should be abolished.

That no person should be appointed registrar of a zillah, city, or provincial court, or registrar, or deputy registrar of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, unless he should have obtained a certificate of his due qualification, according to the statutes of the College of Fort William.

That

IV.—JUDICIAL.

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued.
Civil Judicature.

That no person should be appointed judge and magistrate of a zillah or city court, unless he should have officiated as registrar or assistant in the judicial department for three years.

That the original jurisdiction of the zillah courts be limited to suits not exceeding 5,000 rupees.

That a regular appeal should lie to the zillah judge from all decisions by moonsiffs, sudder ameens, and registrars, except in referred cases exceeding five hundred rupees.

That judges should be authorized to refer to the sudder ameens, suits for sums not exceeding one hundred and fifty rupees. An appeal from their decisions to lie to the zillah judge, whose decision was to be final, unless the provincial court should admit a special appeal. That the judges might also refer to the sudder ameens appeals from the decisions of moonsiffs, and the decrees of the sudder ameens thereupon were to be final, unless the zillah judge should admit a special appeal. That zillah judges should be authorized to refer to the registrar's original suits, not exceeding five hundred rupees, and from their decisions an appeal was to lie to the zillah judge, whose decision was to be final, unless a special appeal was admitted by the provincial court.

Power was given to the Governor-general in Council to invest the registrar of any zillah or city court with special additional powers in the trial and decision of regular civil suits, whenever the pressure of business in the zillah court should require such relief, and the registrar should be duly qualified by his experience, industry, and ability, to be intrusted with such special powers; the registrars so appointed might try any depending appeals from the decision of moonsiffs or sudder ameens, which the zillah judge might refer to them, and the registrars' decision was to be final, unless the zillah judge admitted a special appeal; the registrar might be further empowered to try original suits exceeding five hundred rupees, which the judge might refer to him. An appeal was to lie from decisions passed by him in such cases to the provincial court.

The judges of the zillah courts were authorized to employ the registrar, assistant, or principal native officers, in taking the depositions of witnesses, in the presence however of the parties or their pleaders; the registrars also might employ their assistants and principal native officers in taking depositions in suits referred to them.

It was also provided, that the Governor-general in Council might appoint two or more registrars in a zillah, and might station one or more of them in any part of the zillah, not being the station of the judge's court. Registrars not at the zillah court stations might be invested with original jurisdiction in summary suits.*

REGULATION XXVI.—1814.

Amending the course of Proceeding and Practice in the Civil Courts of original and appellate Jurisdiction.

THE object of this Regulation was to expedite the administration of justice, by improving the rules regarding the admission of special† and summary appeals, and the pleadings and processes in civil suits. It enacted, that no second or special appeal be admitted by any of the courts, unless, upon the face of the decree or documents exhibited with it, the judgment should appear to be inconsistent with some established judicial precedent, or with some regulation in force, or with the Hindoo or Mahomedan law, in cases which were required to be decided by those laws, or with any other law or usage which might be applicable

Reg. XXVI. 1814.

* By Regulation II. 1815, it was provided, that the original jurisdiction of the registrar might be extended beyond the limits of the zillah, to cases where the registrar was authorized to exercise the powers of joint magistrate in adjoining districts.

† The difference between a regular and a special appeal is, that the former is an appeal from the first decision passed on the suit, and is claimable of right; the latter is an appeal from a Judgment on Appeal, and may be granted or not, at the discretion of the court appealed to.

applicable to the case, or unless the subject should involve some points of general interest of importance not before decided by the superior courts.

Summary appeals were declared admissible by the several courts, in all cases in which it might be alleged that the lower court had refused to admit an original suit or appeal regularly cognizable by them, or might have dismissed such suit on the ground of delay, informality, or other default, without investigation of the merits of the case. The superior court was to institute a "summary" proceeding in such case; and if it should appear to them that the lower court had acted in such rejection or dismissal upon insufficient grounds, or in opposition to the Regulation, they might command the lower court to proceed to try and determine the case upon its merits.

The Regulation next provided, that a review of judgment might be granted in any cases in which no appeal had been preferred; the rejection of an application for a review, was not to affect the right of preferring a regular appeal.

Certain rules were enacted regarding the preparation of pleadings and the presentation of the petitions of appeal: among the rest, that the written pleadings should be completed before any exhibits should be filed or witnesses summoned; and that if from the pleadings in the case the points at issue could not be ascertained, or if further explanation should be required, the court should interrogate the parties or their pleaders, with a view of ascertaining the precise object of the suit and the grounds on which it was to be maintained, and should record the result on their proceedings: the court were then to record the points to be established by the parties respectively, and proceed to take evidence thereon. In like manner they were to record any other points that might arise in the course of investigation, and no exhibit was to be filed, nor witness summoned, unless expressly declared to be in proof or refutation of some point upon which the court had directed that evidence should be taken.*

The Regulation contained some rules of practice of minor importance.

REGULATION XXVIII.—1814.

Consolidating and amending the Rules concerning Pauper Suits.

Reg. XXVIII.
1814.

THE preamble declared that the rules previously enacted for admitting persons to sue in the civil courts as paupers, had tended to encourage the institution of groundless and litigious suits; the present Regulation was framed to check that evil, and also to reduce into one regulation the whole of the provisions applicable to persons suing as paupers. It accordingly enacted, that no pauper suits be admitted in which the claim should not exceed sixty-four rupees. This rule precluded moonsiffs from receiving pauper suits; no pauper suits to be admitted for damages, or for the recovery of deeds or documents, fines or forfeitures.

The Regulation proceeded to lay down rules for admitting applications to sue in forma pauperis, and for ascertaining the truth of the allegation of poverty; if the pauper was admitted, the proceedings were to be exempt from stamps and fees. If the pauper plaintiff succeeded in his suit, the fees, or such part as the court might decree, were to be paid by the defendant; if the claim was dismissed, the defendant was to pay his own pleader such adequate compensation as the court might direct, the remainder to be recovered from any property which the plaintiff might subsequently be found to possess.

Pauper plaintiffs were declared liable to imprisonment in the civil jail for six months, for vexatious suits, if they did not pay the fees and costs awarded against them. Sums due by pauper plaintiffs might be recovered from forthcoming property, notwithstanding their confinement.

The admission of appellants and also of respondents to plead as paupers, was left to the discretion

* By Regulation XIX. 1817, a further ground of appeal was allowed, namely, where decrees pronounced with each other had been passed on the same point by the same court, or by courts of concurrent jurisdiction.

discretion of the court appealed to; but if all dues had been paid by the pauper, he had the common right of appeal on fulfilling the usual conditions.

Copies of proceedings of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, in appeals to the King in Council, were to be furnished, without expense, to pauper parties, and to be written on unstamped paper.*

REGULATION IV.†—1816.

Prisons and Prisoners.

THIS Regulation extended to civil jails and prisoners the rules in force regarding criminal prisons, viz. that petitions might be received by the judges from such prisoners, being poor, on unstamped paper, if they related to alleged ill-treatment. It also directed judges to visit the jails weekly, and to redress grievances, and to attend carefully to the cleanliness and healthy state of the prisons, and the due attendance of the surgeons.‡

Reg. IV. 1816.

REGULATION VIII.—1816.

Constitution of the Office of Remembrancer of Legal Affairs.

THE preamble of the Regulation recited, that under the existing Regulations, the duty of determining on the propriety, or otherwise, of instituting or defending, on the part of Government, original suits or appeals in the several courts of civil judicature, rested with the Governor-general in Council, and with the several Boards acting under his authority, in different departments. With a view to afford further facilities in the discharge of a duty which so materially involved the reputation as well as the interests of the Government, it seemed advisable that an officer should be appointed, to be denominated "Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs," who might aid the authorities, as well in the conduct of important suits and appeals when instituted, as generally in deciding on the propriety of having recourse to the established courts of justice for the recovery or maintenance of the rights and interests of Government. It was conceived also that the services of that officer might occasionally be available in matters of a criminal as well as of a civil nature.

Reg. VIII. 1816.
(Rescinded by
Reg. XIII.
1829.)

The Regulation accordingly constituted the office of "Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs," to be held by a covenanted servant of the Company, to whom the Government, or the chief revenue, commercial, or other public authorities, might refer for his opinion, questions either of fact, or depending on the provisions of the Regulations, or upon the principles of Hindoo or Mahomedan law, before determining on the propriety of authorizing a recourse to judicial process.

REGULATION XV.—1816.

Provision for the Trial of Suits in which Native Officers and Soldiers are Parties.

THE preamble recited, that native officers and soldiers were liable to be stationed at places remote from their homes and families, and it was impracticable to grant to them frequent

Reg. XV. 1816.

* According to the analogy of proceeding, the admission or rejection of a pauper appeal rests with the King in Council as the court appealed to; but as the court of Sudder Adawlut could not know the decision of His Majesty in Council on the question of the expediency of admitting pauper appeals generally, or any one such appeal in particular, it was deemed right to provide for transmission of the records in such cases, authenticated in the usual manner, for the final orders of His Majesty in Council.

† By Regulation III. 1826, the control of the civil gaol was vested in the Zillah Magistrate, who was authorized to punish for refractory and disorderly conduct, which should be proved on a summary inquiry before him, by close confinement, or a reduction of the prisoner's allowance, for any term not exceeding two months.

‡ By Regulation VI. 1830, provision was made for the deposit of the subsistence money for the debtor for one month previously to the issue of the process for arrest, the amount of deposit to be fixed by the judge at not less than one anna or more than four annas a day, the deposit to be renewed every thirty days, or in default thereof the prisoner to be released, and if again arrested, the same matter, unless guilty of fraudulent concealment or transfer of property.

IV.

APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued.

Civil Judicature.

614 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

frequent or prolonged leave of absence from their military duties; in consequence of which, material difficulty and embarrassment had been unavoidably experienced by them in maintaining and preserving their just rights, claims, and interests; and their fidelity and zeal entitle them to the favourable consideration of Government.

On these grounds, the Regulation enacted sundry rules providing for the prosecution and defence of suits by the agency of persons to be duly empowered by the suitors. Similar aids were provided in the transaction of business with the revenue authorities on behalf of native officers and soldiers.

REGULATION XVIII.—1817.

Oaths of Office taken by native ministerial Officers.

Reg. XVIII. 1817. THE preamble referred to doubts that had arisen as to the particular officers who were required to take the prescribed oaths, and declares the expediency of modifying the existing rules regarding oaths of office, with a view to maintain the sanctity and obligation of oaths, by confining the requisition of them to the confirmation of evidence and the administration of justice.

The Regulation accordingly rescinded the rules requiring oaths of office to be taken by the ministerial officers of the courts of justice, or by moonsiffs, sudder ameens, or vakeels, and required a declaration in writing, similar in form, with the substitution of the word "declare" for "swear." The Regulation made further provision for the prosecution, criminally and civilly, of ministerial public officers charged with malversation or corruption.

REGULATION XIX.—1817.

Option granted to sue in the Provincial or Zillah Courts, in certain cases.

Reg. XIX. 1817. THIS Regulation was enacted to promote the convenience of persons residing at a distance from the provincial and zillah courts. By Regulation XIII. of 1808, and XXV. 1814, all suit for sums exceeding 5,000 rupees were to be instituted, in the first instance, in the provincial courts; the present regulation gives an option to the plaintiff, in suits not exceeding 10,000 rupees, to sue either in the provincial or zillah courts: in all such suits a regular appeal to lie to the provincial courts, and a second or special appeal admissible by the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut.

REGULATION IX.—1819.

Admission of Special Appeals.

Reg. IX. 1819. THE preamble to the Regulation declared, that it would be conducive to the ends of civil justice, to amend the rule which limited to certain specific grounds the admission of special appeals by the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut and provincial courts. The Regulation accordingly enacted, that those courts should be competent to admit a second or special appeal, whenever, on a perusal of a decree of the court from which the special appeal was desired, there should appear strong probable ground, from whatever cause, to presume a failure of justice. It was further provided, that zillah judges might certify to provincial courts such cases as were not regularly appealable, if in their opinion they involved a point of general importance which had not been before settled, and which seemed fit to be reconsidered in a further appeal. A similar power was granted to the provincial court, in reference to the Sudder Adawlut. The special appeal, however, was not to be admitted, unless two judges concurred in the propriety of its admission.

With a view to facilitate the trial of appeals from decisions of the zillah registrars, this regulation enacted that it should be competent to the Governor-general-in-council to authorize registrars, who had been employed not less than six years in the judicial department, department, to try such appeals from decisions passed by other registrars in original suits not exceeding 500 rupees, as the zillah judges might refer to them; provided always, that the original decision had been passed by a registrar junior in the Company's service to the person so authorized to try such appeals. Provincial courts were empowered to admit a second or special appeal from decisions passed by registrars under the above powers.

REGULATION II.—1821.

Increase of the Powers of the subordinate Judicial Authorities.

THIS Regulation was enacted for the purpose of relieving the zillah and city judges of part of the business that pressed upon them, by increasing the powers of the subordinate judicial officers, European and Native; it accordingly enacted, that the decrees of the provincial courts, and of the Sudder Adawlut, should be carried into execution by the provincial courts through their own officers, instead of through the zillah courts, as prescribed by Regulation V. of 1793. Reg. II. 1821.

It empowered the zillah judges to refer to the registrars or sudder ameens, applications for the execution of decrees passed by the sudder ameens and moonsiffs.

It likewise enabled registrars to receive, in the first instance, such original suits or appeals as might be referrible to them within the local jurisdiction entrusted to them as joint magistrates under the Regulations, and to transmit the plaint for the orders of the judge, who might either direct the Registrar to try the case, or call it up before himself. And registrars residing in other places than the zillah court station were empowered by their own authority to execute the decrees of sudder ameens and moonsiffs. The fees receivable by registrars, on decisions of suits, were abolished, it being resolved that they should be remunerated by a fixed allowance determinable by Government. The office of registrar of the provincial court was abolished.

REGULATION III.—1824.

Extension of the Special Powers of Zillah Registrars.

By this Regulation the Governor-general in council was authorized to extend the original jurisdiction specially vested in zillah registrars, to those portions of other districts in which the registrar might exercise the powers of joint magistrate. Reg. III. 1824.

REGULATION XI.—1824.

Judicial Officers authorized to make Local Investigation.

THE preamble stated, that although provision had been made for enabling judges and registrars to hold their proceedings in summary suits, for arrear of rent or possession of land or crops, at any place within their jurisdiction; no general power had been given to judges and magistrates, to depute their registrars or assistants, when necessary, for the purpose of making local investigations in any matter in a depending civil suit. The Regulation accordingly vested that power in the before-mentioned officers, and authorized them to charge the expense of such deputation to the party against whom the final decision might be given, or, in cases of indigence, to discharge the same on the part of the Government. Such deputations, when ordered, were to be immediately notified to the provincial court, who, if they thought the measure unnecessary, were competent to revoke the order, transmitting in such case their proceedings, for the final decision of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut. The judicial officers were directed not to exercise the power of deputation, except when absolutely necessary. Reg. XI. 1824.

IV.

616 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued.

Civil Judicature.
Reg. II. 1825.

REGULATION II.—1825.

Review of Judgment.

THE preamble to this Regulation stated, that the small expense attending application for review of judgment in the civil courts had been found to encourage numerous ungrounded petitions of that description, to the serious hinderance of other business; and that the extension of the grounds for the admission of special appeals effected by Regulation IX. 1819, had been productive of a large increase of such appeals, numerous petitions for which, whether ultimately rejected or admitted, occupied more time than could be applied to them, without impeding the trial and decision of other more important cases. This Regulation enacted therefore on the first head, that petitions for review of judgment, if not presented within three months after the passing of the decree, should be written on the high-stamp paper prescribed for petitions of appeal, but if presented within that time, should be written on the low-stamp paper prescribed for miscellaneous petitions. If the petition written under the provisions of this Regulation on the high-stamp paper should be rejected, the petitioner was not to be entitled to a return of the stamp duty; a discretionary power was however vested in the courts, to return a portion of it in cases of particular hardship. If the petition written on the low-stamp paper was deemed litigious, the courts might fine the petitioner.

On the 2d head, the Regulation rescinded the provision of Regulation IX. 1819, authorizing the admission of special appeals, on the general presumption of failure of justice, and re-established the rules prescribed in Regulation XXVI. 1814.

These provisions were extended to pauper appeals by Regulation IX. 1828.

REGULATION V.—1825.

Provision for the occasional Union of the Offices of Judge and Collector.

Reg. V. 1825.

THE preamble recited, that it had occasionally been found expedient to place the charge of collectorships in the hands of zillah judges or registrars, and that it might be found necessary hereafter to vest officers with the united powers of judge and collector, in the administration of the affairs of particular districts, or in the adjustment of boundaries, or in the settlement of tracts occupied by peculiar tribes or classes of people, or in the execution of other special measures. Adverting to doubts which existed, whether such union of authority were legal, the Regulation declared its legality retrospectively and prospectively. It further enacted, that it should be competent to the Governor-general in Council to vest the powers of civil judge and collector of the revenue in the hands of the same officer, whenever and so long as such arrangement might for special purposes appear expedient.

REGULATION XI.—1826.

Qualification of Law Officers.

Reg. XI. 1826.

THIS Regulation provided that no person should thenceforward be appointed Hindoo or Mahomedan law officer in any of the courts of justice, who should not have obtained a certificate of qualification, in a prescribed form, after examination by a committee consisting of such persons as the Governor-general in Council might from time to time be pleased to appoint for that purpose. The Regulation provided for annual public examinations of all persons who should offer themselves as candidates for the appointment of law officer. A report of the examination to be made to the Governor-general in Council, and certificates to be given to those who should be found qualified.

REGULATION III.—1829.

Abolition of the Offices of Mahomedan and Hindoo Law Officers, in Provincial Courts.

Reg. III. 1829.

By this Regulation the offices of Mahomedan and Hindoo law officers of the provincial courts were abolished, and it was declared competent to the judges of the provincial courts to refer any questions of Hindoo or Mahomedan law, to be expounded by the officers of the nearest zillah or city court, or by the law officers of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut.

REGULATION

REGULATION VII.—1829.

Reports and Calendars.

By this Regulation all the rules in preceding Regulations, prescribing forms of reports, calendars, and other statements to be furnished periodically by the courts of judicature, were rescinded; and it was enacted, that the court of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut should from time to time, as circumstances might require, prescribe the forms and fix the periods of transmission of all such reports to be furnished by the courts, European or Native, or by the judicial or police officers of the Government.

Civil Judicature
Reg. VII. 1829.

REGULATION XIII.—1829.

Office of Remembrancer abolished.

By this Regulation the office of Remembrancer of Legal Affairs was abolished, and the rules in force previously to its establishment were revived.

Reg. XIII. 1829

PART I.—CIVIL JUDICATURE—GENERAL—continued.

(B.)

POWERS and DUTIES of the PROVINCIAL COURTS of APPEAL.

Regulations.

LIST.

- | | | |
|--------|--------|--|
| V. | 1793.— | } Establishment, Constitution, and Jurisdiction of the Provincial Courts. |
| V. | 1794.— | |
| XLVII. | 1798.— | Number of Judges necessary to pass a Decree. |
| XII. | 1797.— | Decrees of Provincial Courts on Appeal declared final to 5,000 Rupees for personal Property. |
| V. | 1798.— | Decrees of Provincial Courts declared final to 5,000 Rupees for real Property. |
| I. | 1807.— | Powers of a single Judge of a Provincial Court extended. |
| XIII. | 1808.— | Original Jurisdiction given to the Provincial Courts. |
| XIII. | 1810.— | Powers of single Judges increased. |
| V. | 1814.— | } Increase in the number of Judges of the Provincial and Circuit Courts. |
| I. | 1826.— | |
| XXV. | 1826.— | Amending the Constitution and Jurisdiction of the Provincial Courts. |
| III. | 1829.— | For supplying the place of a third Judge, when two Judges of a Provincial Court differed in opinion. |

REGULATION V.—1793.

Establishment, Constitution, and Jurisdiction, of the Provincial Courts.

The preamble to this Regulation stated, that previously to its enactment, suitors dissatisfied with the decisions of the civil courts which had existed before the establishment of the

Reg. V. 1793.

IV.

APPENDIX,

No. 6.

continued.

Civil Judicature.

513 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

the zillah courts in the provinces, had no means of obtaining redress for erroneous or unjust decisions, except by the expensive and tardy process of an appeal to the Governor in Council at the Presidency; that the important avocations of the Government had rendered it necessary to limit such appeals to suits for 1,000 rupees or upwards; which limitation had the effect of excluding from revision the greatest part of the suits instituted in the country courts, and had left the suitors without redress. The preamble further stated, that suits between Government and the proprietors and farmers of land, and between those persons and their under-tenants, on questions of rent or revenue, had formerly been solely cognizable in the revenue courts,* from which the appeal to the Board of Revenue or the Governor in Council was equally encumbered with difficulties. The preamble then declared, that the jurisdiction of the zillah and city courts having now been extended to all civil suits, including those before cognizable in the revenue courts, it was essential to the prosperity of the country that all persons, especially the cultivators of the soil, the traders and manufacturers, and the other classes of the lower and most industrious orders of the community in the different parts of the provinces, who should be dissatisfied with the decisions of those courts, might have an appeal to a higher court to which they could have ready access; and that such courts should be so constituted that they might be looked up to with confidence for speedy redress against unjust or erroneous decisions.

With these views, the enacting clauses of this Regulation provided for the establishment of four courts of appeal, to be denominated respectively "The Provincial Court of Appeal," for the divisions of "Calcutta," "Patna," "Dacca," and Moorshedabad; each court to be superintended by three judges, who should be styled "first," "second," and "third."† The Regulation specified the cities and zillahs which were to be included in the respective divisions. The powers of the provincial courts were declared to be, to try in the first instance such suits as should be transmitted to them for that purpose by the Government or by the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, and to order their decrees in such cases to be executed by the judges of the zillah or city courts; to receive original suits or complaints which any judge of a zillah or city court might have refused or omitted to receive or proceed in, and to cause such judge to hear and determine the same; to receive petitions respecting suits or matters depending in the zillah or city courts, and if any such petition had been before rejected by the zillah judge, and it appeared to the provincial court to be such as he ought to have entertained, then to cause the said judge to receive and attend to it; to receive charges which might be preferred against zillah judges for corruption, and to forward them to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut; also to report to that court whenever it should appear that any of the zillah judges had been guilty of negligence or misconduct in the discharge of their duty. The provincial courts were to receive and try appeals from the zillah courts, if preferred within three months after the passing of the decree appealed from, or after that time, for sufficient reasons,‡ which were to be recorded on the proceedings of the court. It was provided, that security should be taken from the party left in possession of the litigated property pending the appeal. The appeal being admitted, the appellant was to be informed that if he did not proceed within six weeks from the date of its being filed, his appeal would be dismissed. In all cases in which appeals should have been admitted, the zillah courts were to send up to the provincial courts the original pleadings, depositions, exhibits, and every original paper read in the cause. All process and orders of the provincial court, in appeal cases, were to be transmitted for service or execution to the zillah courts, who were to make a return to the provincial courts of what they had done in the matter. Whenever it should appear to a provincial court that a suit had not been sufficiently investigated in the zillah court, they might either take such further evidence as should be necessary, and give judgment thereon, or remand the suit to the zillah court, with instructions to take further evidence. In cases where the provincial court should take the further evidence themselves, the witnesses might be examined by the judges, or under their orders by the registrar, in the presence of the parties or their vakeels, who were to be at liberty to put any questions to the witnesses that they might think proper.

* Mal Adawlut.

† These designations were abolished by Reg. III. of 1829.

‡ It was explained by Regulation V. 1794, that this discretionary power was not to be extended to admit appeals from decisions passed by any of the Courts existing between the 6th April 1781 and 1st May 1792, in cases in which the judgments of those courts were declared final by the Regulations at that time in force.

The course of proceeding in the trial of suits, original or appealed, before the provincial court, was to be the same as that prescribed for the zillah courts. Their decrees were to be final for sums not exceeding 1,000 rupees.

REGULATION XLVII.—1793.

Number of Judges necessary to pass a Decree.

This Regulation enacted, that two judges should be necessary to hold a court of appeal, and that no decree in a suit or appeal should be valid, unless passed by two judges present in court. Reg. XLVII. 1

REGULATION XII.—1797.

Decrees of Provincial Courts on Appeals declared final to 5,000 rupees for Personal Property.

THE exercise of right of appeal to the Sudder Adawlut from all decisions of the provincial courts for sums above 1,000 rupees having been found to occupy too much of the time of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut upon questions of comparatively small importance, to the hinderance of proceedings in suits of greater amount, the decrees of the provincial courts were declared by this Regulation to be final to the extent of 5,000 rupees in all cases of personal property. Reg. XII. 1797

REGULATION V.—1798.

Decrees of Provincial Courts declared final to 5,000 rupees for Real Property.

By this Regulation the decisions of the provincial courts, which had before been declared final in suits not exceeding 5,000 rupees for personal property, were made final in cases to the same amount for real property. Reg. V. 1798.

REGULATION I.—1807.

Powers of a single Judge of a Provincial Court extended.

It had been provided by Regulation VII. 1794 (which related chiefly to the duties to be performed by the judges of the provincial courts in the exercise of their criminal jurisdiction) that when one judge should remain at the court station, the other judges being on circuit, such single judge should be enabled to receive petitions, to execute decrees, issue process, and transact other current business, but should not have authority to pass judgments or make orders in the nature of decisions. Reg. I. 1807.

The present Regulation enlarged those powers, providing that more extensive duties should be done by a single judge remaining at the court station (still, however, giving no power of adjudication); and also imparting the same authority to a single judge when two should be remaining at the court station, if one of the two were unable to attend the court from illness or other cause.

REGULATION XIII.—1808.

Original Jurisdiction given to the Provincial Courts.

By the previously existing Regulations, all suits were originally instituted in the zillah courts; an appeal of right lay to the provincial courts; and in all suits above 5,000 rupees, a further appeal was open to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut. This process had been found to lead to vexatious appeals and delay of justice, to remedy which, by this Regulation, original jurisdiction was vested in the provincial courts in suits exceeding 5,000 rupees. Reg. XIII. 1808.

REGULATION

IV. 620 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued.

Civil Judicature.
Reg. XIII. 1810.

REGULATION XIII.—1810.

Powers of single Judges increased.

THE former Regulations having required that two judges of the provincial court should always be present to render any act valid, in consequence of which great delay and accumulation of suits had taken place, it was provided by this Regulation, that a single judge should be competent to transact all the current business of the court necessary to the progress of suits, and likewise to pass judgments in cases of appeal, if his opinion confirmed the decree of the court appealed from; but if the single judge should be of opinion that the decree appealed against ought to be reversed, then the matter was to stand over until another judge should be present. It was directed that no judge should sit in the trial of any appeal from a decision passed by himself.

With a view to encourage the adjustment of suits by razeenama, it was provided, that in all original suits or appeals adjusted by compromise, the whole or a portion of the institution fee should be returned, according to the stage of the proceedings at which the razeenamah, or deed of compromise, should be filed.

REGULATION V.—1814.

Increase of the Number of Judges of the Provincial and Circuit Courts.

Reg. V. 1814.

THE preamble to this Regulation stated, that experience had shown that three* judges were inadequate to the performance of the multifarious and laborious duties of the courts of appeal and circuit; in order therefore to make provision for the more regular, uniform, and expeditious trial of civil suits in those courts, and for the more prompt dispatch of other business, this Regulation enacted that each provincial court should consist of four judges, who should exercise both civil and criminal jurisdiction.

REGULATION XXV.—1814.

Amending the Constitution and Jurisdiction of the Provincial Courts.

Reg. XXV. 1814.

THE preamble to this Regulation declared it expedient that such persons only should be appointed judges to the Sudder Adawlut and provincial courts as had been previously employed for a sufficient length of time in the discharge of judicial functions.

To ensure this object, therefore, and in modification of existing rules regarding the original jurisdiction of those courts, the Regulation enacted, that no person should be appointed a judge of a provincial court, who had not officiated three years as zillah judge, or six years altogether in the judicial department; and that no person should be appointed a judge of the Sudder Adawlut, who had not officiated three years as a judge of a provincial court, or nine years altogether in the judicial department. The following rules were also enacted:

Whenever it should appear, from the pressure of business in any zillah court, that advantage would result from the removal of cases from the zillah to the provincial court, it should be competent to the Sudder Adawlut to order any or all suits exceeding 1,000 rupees to be so transferred.

Whenever it should appear from the pressure of business in any provincial court, that it would be advantageous to remove cases to the Sudder Adawlut, the last mentioned court might call up and try any suits for sums exceeding 50,000 rupees.

An appeal was declared to lie to the provincial courts in all suits tried in the first instance by the zillah and city judges, and in suits tried by the registrars exceeding 500 rupees;

* By Regulation I. 1826, it was declared competent for the Governor-general in Council to appoint as many judges in each provincial court as might be deemed necessary for the due dispatch of business.

500 rupees; and an appeal to the Sudder Adawlut from all decisions in original suits passed by the provincial court.

Special appeals were declared admissible by the provincial courts, from decisions passed on appeals by the zillah courts; and by the Sudder Adawlut, from decisions passed on appeals by the provincial courts.

The Regulation contains some further rules relative to the powers of single judges of the provincial court.

REGULATION III.—1829.

For supplying the place of a third Judge, when two Judges of a Provincial Court differed in Opinion.

By this Regulation a previous rule, by which the senior judge of a provincial court was entitled to a casting voice, was rescinded; and it was provided, that in the event of a difference of opinion in a court consisting of two judges only, the Governor-general in Council should be authorized to issue such instructions as might appear expedient in regard to the selection and nomination of one or more public officers, to whom such cases should be referred; due notice of such nomination to be given to the Sudder Adawlut and the provincial court. If the officer so nominated should reside at the station of the provincial court, he was to exercise the same powers and proceed in the same manner, in the cases brought before him, as the other judges; but if resident at any other station, it should be sufficient that he form and record his judgment, on careful perusal and consideration of the proceedings, and without requiring the attendance of the parties or their vakeels.

Reg. III. 1829.

PART I.—CIVIL JUDICATURE—GENERAL.—continued.

(C.)

POWERS and DUTIES of the SUDDER DEWANNY ADAWLUT.

Regulations.

LIST.

- VI. 1793.—Constitution and Jurisdiction of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut.
- II. 1801.—Separation of the Legislative and Judicial Functions of the Government.
- X. 1805.—Chief Justice of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut not to be a Member of the Council.
- XV. 1807.—A Member of Council to be Chief Judge of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut.
- XIII. 1810.—Powers of single Judges of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut.
- XII. 1811.—Constitution of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut modified.
- XXV. 1814.—Amending the Constitution and Jurisdiction of the Sudder Dewanny and Foujdarry Adawlut.
- IX. 1831.—Enlarging the Powers of single Judges.

REGULATION VI.—1793.

Constitution and Jurisdiction of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut.

The Preamble declared it necessary to extend the powers and to regulate the proceedings of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, being the court of highest resort in civil suits, with reference

Reg. VI.

IV.

APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued.

Civil Judicature.

622 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

rence to those of the zillah and provincial courts, which had been then recently established. The Regulation accordingly enacted as follows:

The Court was declared to consist of the Governor-general and the members of the Council; and they were to exercise the same power as the provincial courts in regard to receiving suits, complaints, or petitions which had been rejected by the lower courts; and ordering them to admit and proceed in them. In trying suits and appeals, the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut were to follow the course prescribed for the trial of suits in the zillah courts. In cases of charge on oath against a judge of a zillah or provincial court for corruption, the Sudder Adawlut might either try the complaint themselves, or refer it for trial to a commission of judges in the provinces, or they might recommend to Government that the complaint should be prosecuted before His Majesty's Supreme Court of Judicature at the Presidency. The Sudder Dewanny Adawlut were authorized to receive appeals from all decisions of the provincial court for an amount exceeding 1,000 rupees. The course of proceeding in such cases was assimilated to that of the provincial court on appeals from the zillah court. The processes and orders of the Sudder Adawlut were to be served and executed through the provincial courts; if the appellant did not proceed in six weeks after the admission of his appeal, the court were to dismiss the appeal.

The decrees of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut were to be final, except on appeal to the King in Council in cases above £5,000.

REGULATION II.—1801.

Separation of the Legislative and Judicial Functions of the Government.

Reg. II. 1801.

THE Preamble to this Regulation stated, that, notwithstanding the right of appeal from the provincial courts had been limited to decisions in suits for 5,000 rupees and upwards, a great accumulation of arrears had taken place by reason of the various public duties to be performed by the Governor-general and the members of the Supreme Council, who then constituted the Court of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut; that it was essential to the impartial, prompt, and efficient administration of justice, and to the permanent security of the persons and property of the native inhabitants, that the exercise of the judicial functions of Government should be distinctly separated from its legislative and executive authority. This Regulation therefore provided that the Court of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut should thenceforward consist of three judges, the chief judge to be one of the civil members of the Supreme Council, and the second and third judges to be appointed by the Governor-general in Council, from among the covenanted civil servants of the Company, not being of the Council.

Two judges were declared necessary to constitute a court, and no decree was to be valid unless passed by two judges present. A single judge might sit to receive petitions, and transact current business.

This Regulation enacted sundry rules regarding the practice and proceedings of the court.

REGULATION X.—1805.

Chief Justice of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut not to be a Member of the Council.

Reg. X. 1805.

THE Preamble to this Regulation declared that the rule enacted by Regulation II. of 1801, for constituting one of the members of the Supreme Council to be the chief justice of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, was not only nugatory, inasmuch as the time of the members of Government was too much occupied to allow of their attending to judicial duties, but that it was also open to the same objections on principle as that which constituted the whole Board of Government to be the Court of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut.

With the view of giving full effect to the provisions made by the Constitution and Regulations of 1793, for ensuring to the people the permanent enjoyment of the inestimable blessings breastings of just laws duly administered, it was declared essential that the separation of the judicial from the executive authority should be complete in all their respective branches and regulations; that the fundamental principles of that constitution should be carried into full and complete execution both in form and in practice. The Regulation therefore enacted that the chief judge of the Sudder Adawlut should be selected from the covenanted civil servants of the Company, not being members of the Supreme Government.

REGULATION XV.—1807.

A Member of Council to be Chief Judge of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut.]

This Regulation enacted, that the Court of Sudder Adawlut should consist of a chief judge, being a member of the Supreme Council, and of three puisne judges, selected from the Company's covenanted servants.* Reg. XV. 1807.

REGULATION XIII.—1810.

Powers of single Judges of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut.

By this Regulation single judges of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut were empowered to pass interlocutory orders, and also to give judgments on appeal, if the opinion of the single judge confirmed the decree of the court appealed from. Reg. XIII. 1810.

See Abstract of this Regulation under the head "Provincial Courts."

REGULATION XII.—1811.

Constitution of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut modified.

This Regulation, in adverting to the increased number of trials both in the civil and criminal jurisdiction of the court, enacted that it should consist in future of a chief judge and of as many puisne judges as the Governor-general in Council might from time to time deem necessary for the despatch of business. Reg. XII. 1811.

REGULATION XXV.—1814.

Amending the Constitution and Jurisdiction of the Sudder Dewanny and Foujdarry Adawlut.

It was provided by this Regulation, that no person should be appointed a judge of the Sudder Dewanny, who had not officiated three years as a judge of the provincial court, or nine years altogether in judicial duties. Reg. XXV. 1814.

The same enactment gave to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut original jurisdiction (to be exercised at their own discretion, by calling up causes from the provincial courts) in cases of such an amount as rendered them finally appealable to the King in Council, namely 50,000 sicca rupees, or £5,000.

REGULATION IX.—1831.

Enlarging the Powers of single Judges.

The Preamble to this Regulation declared, that the accumulation of appeals from the decisions and orders of the civil and criminal courts, subject to the controlling authority of the Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut, had rendered it expedient, with a view to the more Reg. IX. 1831.

* No reason was assigned in the Preamble for this abandonment of the principle set forth in Regulation X. 1805. Haddington states, that it was in consequence of instructions from the Court of Directors, founded on a principle of economy, and a supposition that one of the members of the Supreme Council might be able to officiate as Chief Judge.

more prompt execution of the court's duties in its appellate jurisdiction, to enlarge the powers exercised by single judges. For the attainment of these objects, the Regulation enacted, that it should be competent to a single judge to hold a sitting of court, and to pass orders and judgments, and to exercise the following powers. On appeals from the decisions or orders of inferior courts, if no sufficient ground were shown to impugn the correctness of the former decision or order, the single judge might confirm the same, or if such decision or order appeared to him improper, he might refer the matter back to the lower court for revision. Before determining on any matter appealed, the single judge might call for all requisite explanations from the lower court. A single judge might admit a second or special appeal, and might stay the execution of any judgment or order passed by an inferior court.

Whenever four judges should be present in the Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut at Calcutta, and there should be an equality of voices in cases requiring a decision by majority, it was declared competent to the court to refer the question at issue for decision to a judge of the Sudder Adawlut in the Western Provinces, who should record his judgment thereupon.*

PART I.—CIVIL JUDICATURE—GENERAL—continued.

(D.)

APPEALS to the KING in COUNCIL.

REGULATION XVI.—1797.

Reg XVI. 1797.

By this Regulation it was declared, that no rules having been prescribed respecting the appeals from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut in civil suits for £5,000 and upwards, authorized by the Statute 21 Geo. 3, c. 1xx. sect. 21; and it being necessary to establish such, as well for the information of the parties who might be desirous to appeal from decrees of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut to the King in Council, as for the guidance of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut in receiving and forwarding appeals presented to them under the above authority, the Governor-general in Council had referred to the provisions made for the appeal to the King in Council, under his Majesty's charter, for erecting the Supreme Court of Judicature, and approved by his Majesty in Council, as provided by his charter aforesaid, and after due consideration of the said provisions, rules and orders, had resolved, that the following rules relative to appeals to the King in his Privy Council, against decisions passed by the Court of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, should be in force until his Majesty's pleasure be known thereupon, from the 1st January 1798.

All persons desirous of appealing from a judgment of the Court of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut to the King in Council, were required to present their petition of appeal to the Court of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, either themselves or through one of the authorized pleaders of the court, within six calendar months from the date on which the judgment appealed against might have been passed.

The Court of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut might either order the judgment passed by them to be carried into execution, taking sufficient security from the party in whose favour the same might be passed, for the due performance of such order or decree as his Majesty, his heirs or successors, should think fit to make on the appeal, or to suspend the execution of their their judgment during the appeal, taking the like security in the latter case from the party left in possession of the property adjudged against him; but in all cases security was to be given by appellants to the satisfaction of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, for the payment of all such costs as the said court might think likely to be incurred by the appeal, as well as for the performance of such order or judgment as his Majesty, his heirs or successors, might think fit to give thereupon; and after receiving such security, the Court of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut were to declare the appeal admitted, and to give notice thereof to the appellant and respondent respectively, that they might take measures, the one to prosecute, the other to defend the cause in appeal before his Majesty in Privy Council, according to the established mode of proceeding in similar cases.

In all cases wherein the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut might admit an appeal to the King in Council, they were to cause two exact copies to be made of all the proceedings held and judgment or orders given in the case appealed, including the whole of the evidence and documents (translated into English, if the original documents were in any of the country languages), and were to transmit the same as soon as prepared under their official seal and the signature of their registrar, to the Governor-general in Council, for the purpose of being forwarded by the first secure and separate conveyances to his Majesty in Council. The registrar to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut was also, on the application of the appellant or respondent, to furnish him or them with one or more copies of the proceedings held, and judgment or orders passed in the case appealed, provided they respectively agreed to defray such expenses as might be incurred thereby, but not otherwise; and the registrar was not to deliver such copies when prepared, without the payment of the expense incurred thereby, the amount of which was to be carried to the credit of Government, by whom the necessary expenditure on this account would be made in the first instance.

It was declared that nothing in this Regulation should be understood to bar the full and unqualified exercise of his Majesty's pleasure upon all appeals to him from the decisions of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, either in rejecting any he might consider inadmissible under the statute respecting such appeals, or in receiving any he might judge admissible, notwithstanding the provisions made in this Regulation, which had reference to the local jurisdiction only, and particularly to that of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, as a necessary rule for their guidance, subject in the whole of its provisions to the ultimate determination of his Majesty in Council.*

Note.—Special provisions having been made for the appointment of commissioners to hold judicial inquiries in certain cases, it has been declared in all such cases that whenever the sum of money or value of property adjudged should exceed £5,000, an appeal was open from the final judgment passed in India to his Majesty in Council; and all such appeals were to be forwarded to England in conformity with the rules prescribed in the foregoing Regulation.

* See ante, Note to Reg. XXVIII. 1814, p. 612.

PART I.—CIVIL JUDICATURE—GENERAL—continued.

(E.)

VAKHEELS.

Regulations.

LIST.

- VII. 1793.— } Appointment and Duties of Vakeels or Native Pleaders in the Civil Courts.
 VIII. 1797 — }
 XXVII. 1814.— } Consolidating and amending the Rules regarding Vakeels.
 IX. 1831.— }
 XI. 1826.— Qualification for Admission to practise as Vakeel.

REGULATION VII.—1793.

Appointment and Duties of Vakeels or Native Pleaders in the Civil Courts.

Reg. VII. 1793.
 (Rescinded by
 Reg. XXVII.
 1814.)

THE Preamble to this Regulation stated that the persons heretofore employed by suitors in the courts to conduct their cases belonged to one of two classes, viz. private servants or dependants of the parties, specially appointed for the occasion; or, 2dly, men who followed the business of vakeels to obtain a livelihood, and who appeared in the courts of justice or wherever else the concerns of their constituents might require their attendance. The former class were altogether unacquainted with the constitution and forms of the courts, and protracted the trials by irrelevant proceedings; and being equally ignorant of the Hindoo and Mahomedan law, and of the Regulations of the British Government, were incapable of rendering efficient assistance to their clients, or of judging of the merits or propriety of the decisions or proceedings of the courts. The second class, though better acquainted with the practice of the courts, had very little knowledge of the laws and regulations, and were under no check, either of rules or of public opinion; and no regulations having existed with regard to their remuneration, they had an interest in protracting the suits. The great body of the people were necessarily prevented from acquiring sufficient knowledge of the laws and regulations to be enabled to plead their own causes; it was therefore indispensably necessary that the pleading of causes should be made a distinct profession, and that no person should be admitted to plead in the courts but men of character and education, versed in the Mahomedan or Hindoo law, and in the Regulations passed by the British Government, who should be subjected to rules and restrictions calculated to secure to their clients a diligent and faithful discharge of their trusts. The appointment of such a class of pleaders would both assist the courts in developing the points of the case, and also be a check upon them, by exposing every deviation from the law which should occur in their judgments. It was proper that clients should be at liberty to select such of the pleaders as they had most confidence in; and pleaders must be secured in their office and appointments so long as they shall conform to the Regulations under which they might act. With such assistance, parties might at all times command the exercise of the judicial powers of Government lodged in the court for the redress of any injuries which they might have sustained in person or property, in conformity with the principles above declared, the chief enactments of the Regulation were as follows:

The appointment of pleaders, as well for the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut as for the provincial and zillah courts, was vested in the Sudder Adawlut. Pleaders were to be selected from among such students in the Mahomedan College at Calcutta, and the Hindoo College at Benares, as should be found qualified and were desirous of being admitted admitted to plead in any of the courts. If the colleges should not furnish a sufficient number of pleaders, the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut were to admit any other persons, provided they were Mahomedans or Hindoos, and men of good character and liberal education. A preference was in all cases to be given to persons who had been bred to the study of the Hindoo or Mahomedan law. Pleaders were to be sworn to the faithful discharge of their duties. All Regulations enacted by the Government, as soon as they had been passed and translated, were to be deposited on a table in the court-room, for the inspection of the pleaders and all other persons who might desire to refer to them, and to take copies or extracts.

Upon engaging a pleader, the client was to give him a retaining fee of four anas, and a vakalutnamah or power of attorney: the fees of pleaders were fixed at the following rates in all the courts alike:

On sums not exceeding	1,000 rupees, 5 per cent.
Ditto	5,000 — 4 —
Ditto	10,000 — 3 —
Ditto	25,000 — 2 —
Ditto	50,000 — 1 —
Ditto	100,000 — ½ —
On sums above	100,000 — ½ —

The above fees to be payable to the pleaders on the decision being passed. Suitors might retain more than one pleader, but the opposite party should be only charged in costs for one pleader. Pleaders might receive a fee of four anas for petitions or motions not relating to suits in which they were engaged; but every portion of the business of the suit in which they had been retained was to be performed for the general fee before mentioned. Pleaders might be suspended by the court for promoting or encouraging litigious suits, or for frauds or gross misbehaviour; the suspension was to be reported to the Sudder Adawlut, who might dismiss the pleader if guilty, or might fine him. The Sudder Adawlut were to appoint pleaders on behalf of the Government in the several courts, who were to conduct all public suits, on receiving an official order to that effect.* Government pleaders were to be at liberty to act in all suits except on behalf of the opponents in suits against the Government; they were to receive the same fees in Government suits as in other cases. Parties might change their pleaders in the course of the suit, at any time before the passing of judgment.

REGULATION XXVII.—1814.

Consolidating and amending the Rules regarding Vakeels.

THE Preamble to the Regulation stated its several objects to be the transfer to the provincial courts of the control till then exercised by the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, in the appointment and removal of vakeels in the zillah, city, and provincial courts; to authorize vakeels to receive fees for legal opinions which they may furnish, such measure having a tendency to facilitate the adjustment of disputes; to authorize them to act as arbitrators under the general Regulations, and to reduce into one Regulation the whole of the provisions applicable to the office of vakeel. The Regulation accordingly enacted, that vakeels shall be liable to dismissal and fine by courts for encouraging or promoting litigious suits, or receiving more or less than their authorized fees, and for neglect of their clients' business. The power of dismissal was vested in the provincial courts; that of fining; in the court to which they were attached.

Reg XXVII. 1814.

The courts were empowered to permit any of the authorized vakeels of their respective courts to be arbitrators in depending suits, subject to the rules in force for referring suits to arbitration.

Vakeels

By Regulation VII. 1797, this power was transferred to the Governor-general in Council.

Vakeels were authorized to receive from any party desirous of their opinion regarding the legal validity or sufficiency of any claim, right or title which he might suppose himself to possess, and on the expediency of prosecuting or defending it before a civil tribunal. The pleader having attentively considered the laws, usages, regulations or precedents, applicable to the case, and the proofs and arguments by which it might be supported, was to furnish to the party a written declaration of his opinion, and of the grounds upon which it might be formed; the fees to the pleader were to be—

To vakeels of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut	24 rupees.
Ditto	...	Provincial Courts	...	16 —
Ditto	...	Zillah and City Courts	...	8 —

Any pleader furnishing an opinion evidently calculated to promote the institution of unfounded or litigious suits, or discourage the amicable adjustment of dubitable claims, was declared liable to dismissal from office.

In all suits the amount of the pleader's fees were to be deposited by the suitor before the pleader could be permitted to act, and they were to be paid over to the vakeel on the decision of the suit, subject to certain deductions at the discretion of the court where the case had not been fully proceeded in.

The rate of remuneration to the vakeels was established as follows :

On the first	5,000 rupees	5 per cent.
On the next	15,000	—	additional	2 —
On the next	30,000	—	...	1 —
Above	80,000	—	the fee to be 10,000 rupees, and not to exceed that sum.

In each court there was to be one or more pleaders appointed on behalf of Government, besides which, other pleaders* of the Court might be specially retained on behalf of Government, when that measure should appear necessary to the public authorities directing the suit.

The Regulation was declared not applicable to pleaders in moonsiffs' courts, and it was declared that the Regulation was not to be construed to prevent any individual from pleading his own cause in person.

REGULATION XI.—1826.

Qualification for Admission to practise as Vakeel.

By this Regulation, native students educated in any of the public institutions, who should have received a certificate in a prescribed form, certifying their qualifications as to proficiency in the Hindoo and Mahomedan law, and in the Regulations of the British Government, might be admitted to practise as vakeels in any city or zillah court, on application to that effect.†

* It was enacted by Regulation IX. 1831, that in applications for the admission of special or summary appeals, the parties should be at liberty to settle with the vakeels the amount of fees to be paid, such amount not to exceed one-fourth of the fees in regular suits, and to be liable to reduction by the courts, if appearing to them to be excessive.

† By Reg. V. 1831, the office of vakcel was declared open to Hindoos and Mahomedans of all religious persuasions.

PART I.—CIVIL JUDICATURE—GENERAL—continued.

Civil Judicature.

(F.)

NATIVE COMMISSIONERS.

Regulations.

LIST.

- XL. 1793.—
XXXV. 1795.—
XVIII. 1797.— } Establishment and Jurisdiction of the Native Judges styled Commissioners.
- XLIX. 1803.—Establishing Moonsiffs on a new Principle.
- XV. 1805.—Law Officers declared to be ex officio Sudder Ameens.
- XXIII. 1814.—
XIII. 1810.— } Revised and amended Rules for the Office of Native Commissioner.
- XIX. 1817.—Extension of Powers of Native Commissioners.
- II. 1821.—Sudder Ameens.
- III. 1824.—Extension of Powers of Sudder Ameens.
- IV. 1827.—Further Increase of Powers of Sudder Ameens.
- V. 1831.—Establishment of principal and subordinate Sudder Ameens, with extended Jurisdiction.

REGULATION XL.—1793.

Establishment and Jurisdiction of Native Judges styled "Commissioners."

THE Preamble recited that inconvenience and expense would be occasioned to parties if they should be compelled to repair from all parts of a zillah to one court, in order to institute petty suits, and that great obstruction to the course of justice must ensue, if the time of the zillah judges were occupied in the decision of trifling cases. The Regulation therefore provided for a class of native judges, to be denominated generally "Commissioners," and to exercise their functions in three different characters, viz. as ameens or referees, as salis or arbitrators, and as moonsiffs or judges of original jurisdiction. Their jurisdiction was limited to suits not exceeding fifty rupees; they were to be nominated by the judges of the zillah and city courts, and to be approved by the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, by which court only they could be removed. The cauzees of cities and pergunnahs were to be commissioners ex officio; the judges of the city courts were to nominate a sufficient number of other commissioners to officiate within their respective jurisdictions. The commissioners were to be persons of acknowledged good character and ability. They were to be selected from the zemindars, farmers, principal revenue officers, creditable merchants and traders, and jaghirdars; they were to be sworn to the administration of their duties, and were declared liable to prosecution in the civil court for corruption or for oppressive and unwarranted acts of authority.

Reg. XL. 1793.
(Rescinded by
Reg. XXIII.
1814.)

As ameens, the commissioners were to try such cases within the prescribed limitation of amount as the zillah judges should refer to them, and to proceed in the trial in the mode prescribed for the trial of suits before the zillah court.

As arbitrators, they might decide suits without application to the court, provided arbitration bonds were duly executed to them by the parties agreeing to abide by their decision, and to make the award a decree of court.

Moonsiffs, being zemindars or farmers of land, revenue officers or jaghirdars, were empowered

IV. 4 L

empowered to receive and try of their own authority, suits preferred to them against under renters and ryots or cultivators of land within the limits of the estate, farm or jaghire, in virtue of which they had been appointed commissioners, but not against merchants, traders, or persons holding only land attached to their dwelling-houses or for gardens.

The Commissioners were not to enforce their own decrees, which could only be carried into execution by the zillah courts. On the fifth of every month the commissioners were to transmit a report of causes decided, accompanied by all original documents, to the zillah court, who thereupon were to enforce their decision, unless appealed against within thirty days after the date of the decree. Quarterly reports were to be made of causes undecided.*

REGULATION XLIX.—1803.

Establishing Moonsiffs on a new Principle.—Sudder Ameens.

Reg. XLIX. 1803.
(Rescinded by Regs XXIII. &
XXIV. 1814.)

THE provisions for the appointment of native commissioners with the power of moonsiff, under Regulation XL. 1793, were declared in the Preamble to this Regulation to have been intended chiefly for the benefit of landholders, with a view of enabling them to recover arrears of rent from their under tenants. More efficient means for the attainment of this object having been provided by Regulation VII. 1799, it was enacted by this Regulation, that the sunnuds formerly given to moonsiffs should be recalled, and that a new body of moonsiffs should be appointed, in the selection of whom the zillah judges were not to be restricted to any particular descriptions of persons, provided they were of good character and sufficient ability, and duly qualified by education and past employments for the discharge of their duty. The extent of their several jurisdictions was to be commensurate with that of the several police divisions, and their courts were to be held at the principal market towns or in central situations in the districts; they were authorized to receive and try suits against native inhabitants of their respective jurisdictions, for sums not exceeding fifty rupees.

It having been found that the general liberty given to suitors in the commissioners' courts to employ any person as vakeel, had given rise to a class of men of bad character, who frequented the courts of the commissioners for the purpose of being employed as vakeels, and who promoted litigation from motives of self-interest; the Regulation enacted, that no person should be allowed to act as vakeel before a native commissioner, unless he were a relation, servant, or dependant of the person for whom he so acted, or unless he had received a sunnud of appointment from the zillah court; and it was declared competent to the city and zillah judges, whenever they should see fit, to appoint respectable and competent persons to practise in the commissioners' courts, and to hold their appointment during good conduct. These vakeels were to settle with their constituents the fees which they were to receive for conducting their suits. The fee so agreed upon was to be specified in the power of attorney or vakalutnamah.

This Regulation further provided for the appointment of a head native commissioner in any city or zillah, when such appointment might appear advisable, on the representation of the judge, for the trial of such suits as should be referred to him by the judge, to an amount not exceeding 100 rupees of personal property or malguzary land, or 10 rupees of lakhiraj land; such commissioner to be denominated sudder ameen of such zillah or city. The suits in the sudder ameen's court were to be pleaded either by the parties or by a regular vakeel of the zillah or city court. The pleadings were not required to be on stamp paper, nor were fees to be taken on exhibits.

REGULATION

* By Sec. viii. Reg. XXXV. of 1795, Commissioners were authorized to sell distrained property attached for arrears of rent. By a special Regulation, XVIII. of 1797 (rescinded by Regulation XXIII. of 1814), jurisdiction was given to the native commissioners in the zillah Chittagong in the character of ameens, to decide suits for landed property of the value of fifty rupees, if malguzary, or five rupees, if lakhiraj; such commissioners to be specially nominated by the zillah judge, and to be styled commissioners of land suits.

REGULATION XV.—1805.

Law Officers declared to be ex officio Sudder Ameens.

THE Preamble recited, that by the existing Regulations provision had been made for the appointment of only one sudder ameen, or head native commissioner, in each city or zillah; and that it appeared expedient that the Hindoo and Mahomedan law officers of the zillah and city courts should be ex officio sudder ameens; because the salary which they received from Government, and their general respectability of character and superior knowledge, afforded the strongest ground of confidence that the powers of referee, in such causes as the judges might deem proper to refer to them, would be exercised with integrity and impartiality. This Regulation therefore enacted, that the law officers of the zillah and city courts should, in virtue of their offices, be head commissioners or sudder ameens for the trial of referred causes not exceeding 100 rupees; and should be entitled to receive as compensation the institution fees, paid in all suits decided by them on investigation of the merits, or adjusted by razeenamah; and further, that it should be competent for the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut to appoint two or more sudder ameens at any city or zillah, in addition to the law officers, whenever it might appear requisite to them 'so to do.'

Reg. XV. 1805.

REGULATION XXIII.—1814.

Revised and amended Rules for the Office of Native Commissioner.

THE objects of this Regulation were stated in the preamble to be, to revise and amend the rules for constituting the office of moonsiffs or native commissioners, to extend the jurisdiction of those officers with a view of expediting the trial and decision of civil suits, and in order to contribute to the public convenience, to transfer to the provincial courts the control now exercised by the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, in the appointment and removal of native commissioners. The Regulation abolished the office of native commissioner as constituted by Regulation XL. 1793, and directed that the judges of the zillah and city courts should prepare and submit to the provincial courts new establishments of moonsiffs, whose local jurisdictions should be so arranged as to correspond with those of thanahs or local police jurisdictions. The persons to be selected for the office were to be either Hindoos or Mahomedans, and the preference to be given to such of the pergunnah or city cauzees as might appear duly qualified for the trust; their appointment or removal was vested in the provincial courts. Moonsiffs were empowered to receive, try and determine all suits referred to them against any native inhabitant of their respective jurisdictions, for money or personal property not exceeding in amount or value sixty-four rupees; they were to be sworn to the faithful discharge of their duties, and were to be subject to civil and criminal prosecutions for corruption, extortion or oppression. Suits before them were to be conducted either by the parties or by persons connected with them; authority was however given to the zillah judges, if they should deem it necessary, to appoint fit persons by a sunnud from themselves, to practise as vakeels in the moonsiffs' courts.

Reg. XXIII. 1814

A stamp duty was to be levied on every plaint, at the following rates:

Not exceeding 16 rupees	1 rupee.
Ditto ... 32 —	2 —
Ditto ... 64 —	4 —

The further pleadings were not required to be on stamp paper.

The course of proceedings in the trial of suits was laid down in conformity generally with the proceedings of other courts of judicature; reports were ordered to be transmitted to the zillah judge monthly of suits decided, and half-yearly of depending suits. The decrees of the moonsiffs were to be executed by the zillah court, on application for that purpose to the judge

IV.

APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued.

Civil Judicature.

652 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

judge by petition. An appeal was to lie from the decisions of the moonsiffs to the zillah judge. In compensation for their labours, the moonsiffs were to receive the amount of the stamp duty on the plaint in every suit, whether decided by them on the investigation of the merits, or adjusted between the parties by razeenamah.*

Power was further given by this Regulation to the zillah and city judges, to refer for inquiry by moonsiffs, questions relating to the adjustment of accounts in mercantile or revenue transactions, or regarding boundaries or rights in land, or regarding the quantity or description of any land, the rent† to which it was liable, and generally all questions of local rights and usages which could not conveniently be decided without an inquiry on the spot; and the proceedings of the moonsiffs on points so referred to them were to be received as evidence in the case. The zillah judges were further authorized to employ moonsiffs to put parties in possession of unmoveable property under the decree of the court, as well as in the attachment and sale of personal property; the ascertaining the sufficiency or otherwise of securities; and inquiring into the indigence of persons applying to sue as paupers.

REGULATION XIX.—1817.

Extension of Powers of Native Commissioners.

Reg. XIX. 1817. UNDER the provisions of Regulation XXIII. of 1814, moonsiffs were empowered to try original suits to a limited amount, provided the cause of action should have arisen one year previous to the institution of the suit; the present Regulation extended the period of cognizance to three years.

REGULATION II.—1821.

Sudder Ameens.

Reg. II. 1821. By this Regulation it was provided, that one or more sudder ameens might be appointed to hold their courts at any station where a registrar should be fixed, holding his court at a distance from the zillah or city court.

A power was vested in the Sudder Adawlut, of authorizing sudder ameens to try original civil suits which might be referred to them by the judge, in which the claim did not exceed 500 rupees.

The provincial courts were authorized to augment from time to time the number of moonsiffs, on the recommendation of a zillah or city judge, and the jurisdiction of moonsiffs in suits receivable of their own authority was extended to 150 rupees.

REGULATION XIII.—1824.

Extension of Powers of Sudder Ameens.

Reg. XIII. 1824. This Regulation was enacted to render the services of sudder ameens more extensively available in the administration of civil justice, and to encourage the faithful discharge of their duty, by allowing them a fixed and liberal reward for their services; it accordingly

* By a provision of Regulation XIII. 1810, sect. xi., the whole of the institution fee was to be returned to the parties, if they filed a razeenamah before the pleadings were completed and read, or a moiety of it, if after the completion of the pleadings. This provision was intended to encourage the compromising of depending suits; in practice, however, it proved to have an opposite effect, for the commissioners and vakeels united their exertions to prevent compromises, which lessened their receipts. See Parliamentary Papers, 1st July 1819, p. 121.

† The term "rent" is commonly used to designate the payments made by the ryots to the zemindar, or other representative of the Government in the collection of the dues. The term "revenue" is employed in the Regulation to designate the payments made by the zemindar, or other person, into the public treasury on account of the Government share of the produce of the soil.

enacted, that the remuneration of sudder ameens by fees on the decision of suits should cease, and that they should receive from the Government such monthly allowances as should be fixed for them.

The interest of the moonsiffs in the fees being thus at an end, the Regulation enacted, with the view of encouraging the adjustment of suits by compromise, that in cases in which the compromise should be filed before the pleadings were completed, the whole of the stamp duty on the plaint should be returned; or if filed after the pleadings were completed and before judgment, a moiety thereof should be returned.

The judges and registrars were authorized to refer pauper suits to the decisions of sudder ameens, and those officers might also be employed in inquiries into the truth of alleged pauperism.

REGULATION IV.—1827.

Further Increase of Powers of Sudder Ameens.

WITH a view of lessening the accumulation of civil suits in the zillah and city courts, it was declared by this Regulation to be competent to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut to invest any sudder ameen, exercising his functions at the zillah or city court station, with original jurisdiction to the extent of 1,000 rupees. Reg. IV. 1827.

It was also declared competent to zillah and city judges to refer to sudder ameens suits in which British European subjects, or European foreigners or Americans, might be parties.

It was further provided, that appeals from the judgments of the sudder ameen in cases exceeding 500 rupees, should not be referrible to the registrars, but should be tried by the zillah judges, whose decree should be final; except on the admission of special appeal by the provincial court.

The power of increasing the number of sudder ameens, granted by Regulation XXIII. of 1814, was withdrawn from the provincial courts, who were required to report on such subjects for the consideration and orders of Government.

REGULATION V.—1831.

Establishment of principal and subordinate Sudder Ameens with extended Jurisdiction.

THE Preamble to this Regulation declared, that the state of civil business rendered it desirable, on general grounds, to employ respectable natives in more important trusts connected with the administration of the country; and in connexion with these arrangements, to modify the powers and duties of the zillah, city, and provincial courts. It also stated it to be just and proper, that no native of India should be considered ineligible to the office of moonsiff or vakeel, on account of his religion. It was accordingly enacted, that it should be competent to the Governor-general in Council to introduce the operation of this Regulation from time to time into any district, by an order in council to be notified by a proclamation. The existing establishments of moonsiffs were to be revised and regulated in such manner as the Governor-general in Council should be pleased to direct. The jurisdiction of moonsiffs was extended to suits for personal property, or malguzary land not exceeding 300 rupees. The moonsiffs were to administer the law of the defendant, if a Mahomedan or a Hindoo, and were to require an exposition of such law by reference in writing to the law officer of the zillah court; in cases not coming within this rule, the moonsiffs were to decide according to justice, equity, and good conscience. In cases of succession to landed property, moonsiffs were to post up a notification of the claim in their courts and in the village, and on giving judgment in such suits, where more than one person might be entitled to share in the property, the decree was to adjudge to each claimant the proportion to which he was entitled. Plaints in suits before the moonsiffs were declared subject to the stamp duties prescribed by Regulation X. of 1829, but the other pleadings and proceedings before them were exempted from stamp duties. Suits instituted in the zillah courts for an amount amount within the jurisdiction of the moonsiffs, were to be chargeable with stamp duties in common with all other suits before them. The decrees of moonsiffs were to be executed under the orders of the zillah judge, who might either direct the moonsiff himself to carry the decree into execution, or might employ a sudder ameen for that purpose, or might cause its execution by the officers of his own court. Moonsiffs were to receive a monthly allowance from Government in lieu of fees.

The number of sudder ameens might be extended at the discretion of Government, and the office was declared open to natives of India of any class or religious persuasion. The Mahomedan and Hindoo law officers of the zillah and city courts were declared to be no longer ex officio sudder ameens, but to be eligible to that office like other individuals. The powers of sudder ameens were declared to be as follows:

Zillah judges might refer to them original suits for personal or real property, not exceeding 1,000 rupees; in which the sudder ameen himself or his dependants had not an interest, and in which no European or American was a party. Process was to be signed by the sudder ameen, and served by his own officers.

It was declared no longer competent to a zillah judge to refer appeals to the sudder ameens, but when his file might be overloaded, he might make special application to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, for authority to refer a specified number of appeals to the principal sudder ameen. When appeals should be preferred to a zillah judge from the decision of a moonsiff or principal sudder ameen, if the zillah judge, on perusal of the record and of the petition of appeal, should see no reason to alter the decision, he might confirm the judgment without calling upon the respondent for his answer.

One or more principal sudder ameens might be appointed to any zillah by the Governor-general in Council. The office was declared open to any native, and was to be held under a commission from Government. Zillah judges might refer to the principal sudder ameens any suit for personal or real property not exceeding 5,000 rupees; the defendant not being a dependant, nor an European nor American. The zillah court might authorize any of their own vakceels, or those of the sudder ameen's court, to practise in the principal sudder ameen's court.

Zillah judges were empowered to authorize the principal sudder ameens to grant reviews of their own judgments, under the existing rules regarding reviews of judgment. The principal sudder ameens might execute their own decrees; whenever zillah judges might retain on their own files suits within the cognizance of the principal sudder ameens, they were to record in writing their reasons for so doing. Sudder ameens and principal sudder ameens were to appoint and remove their own ministerial officers.

If a zillah judge should be of opinion that any principal or sudder ameen* was unfit to be continued in office, and if the commissioners of revenue and circuit should concur in that opinion, they were to submit a joint report to the Governor-general in Council, who, if he should see sufficient cause, would remove the ameen; but no principal or sudder ameen was to be removed without the sanction of Government. Moonsiffs were declared to be removable by the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, on a like report from the judge and the commissioners of revenue and circuit. Zillah judges were declared competent to suspend sudder ameens; and further, in case of the commissioners of revenue and circuit dissenting from the judge, the latter might transmit his opinion to the Governor-general in Council, accompanied by a copy of any dissent which the commissioners might deem it necessary to present on the occasion. In like manner the single opinion and report of a commissioner of circuit might be presented. Principal sudder ameens were declared liable to prosecution for corruption or malversation, but not for error in proceeding.

In whatever zillah or city the provision of this Regulation should be carried into effect, the jurisdiction of the provincial court was to cease, except in regard to pending suits; and the zillah court was to have primary jurisdiction in all suits exceeding 5,000 rupees. In appeals from the decisions of the moonsiffs or sudder ameens, the decision of the zillah judge was to be final. From decisions by the principal sudder ameens, the first appeal was to be to the zillah judge, and a special appeal to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut. From original decisions of the zillah judge, the appeal was to lie to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut.

* See Reg. N. 1829, "Courts of Circuit."

Wherever the provisions of this Regulation should have effect, the reference of suits to the registrars was to cease, and the suits referred to them were to be recalled, and referred to the sudder ameens or principal sudder ameens. The office of vakeel was declared to be open to Hindoos and Mahomedans of all religious persuasions.

PART I.—CIVIL JUDICATURE—GENERAL—continued.

(G.)

FEES on the Institution of SUITS and APPEALS and STAMP DUTIES, as affecting the Administration of Justice.

Regulations.

LIST.

XXXVIII. 1795.—Establishment of Fees on the Institution of Civil Suits.

VI. 1797.—Establishment of a Stamp Duty on Law Papers and Money Securities.

X. 1797.—Extension of Stamp Duties to Criminal Cases.

VII. 1800.—Further Extension of Stamp Duties on Money Securities.

XLIII. 1803.—Modification of the Rules for Stamps on Law Papers.

I. 1814.—Consolidated and amended Stamp Regulation.

III. 1817.—Diminishing the Rate of Stamps and Fees on Petty Suits.

XVI. 1824.—Extended Application of Stamps to Securities, &c.

XII. 1826.—Stamp Duties prescribed within the Town of Calcutta.

X. 1829.—Consolidation of previous Rules.

REGULATION XXXVIII.—1795.

Establishment of Fees on the Institution of Civil Suits.

THE Preamble to this Regulation declared, that as no expense attended the first institution of suits, and the fees which became payable in its course were moderate and limited, litigation had been encouraged, and causes had accumulated to so great an extent, as to impede the due course of justice. It was therefore thought advisable to establish fees on the institution of suits, and in their progress, and on the presentation of petitions, as the best mode of checking the abuse of the ready means existing for recourse to the laws, without obstructing the bringing forward of just claims.

The Regulation accordingly provided, that on the institution of every original suit or appeal, a fee should be paid, called the institution fee, at the following rates:—

In the court of the moonsiff or native commissioner ... 1 ana per rupee.

Reg. XXXVIII.
1795.

(Superseded by Regs. VI. 1797 and I. 1814.)

In

IV.

636 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued.

Civil Judicature.

In the European courts, without distinction, as follows:

On the first	50 rupees	6½ per cent.
next	150	additional	3½
	800	3
	4,000	2
	20,000	1
	25,000	0½
On all above that amount		0½

REGULATION VI.—1797.

Stamp Duty to be levied on Law Papers and Money Securities.

Reg. VI. 1797.

THE Preamble to this Regulation referred to a previous enactment (XXIII. of 1793), which had provided for the levy of a tax from merchants and shopkeepers, to defray the expenses of police; and it declared that difficulties having been experienced in determining what persons were liable to be taxed under that Regulation, and in fixing the general amount and individual proportions of the tax, and frauds and exactions having taken place in the assessment and collection, to the vexation of the contributors, as well as to the diminution of the produce of the tax, it was resolved to abolish the police tax, and to substitute stamp duties, to provide for the deficiency which would be occasioned in the public revenue by the abolition of that tax. The Regulation accordingly provided for an increase in the rate of institution fees; for the levy of fees on filing exhibits, and summoning witnesses; and established stamp duties on pleadings, petitions, and securities for money. And with a view further to check litigious complaints, and to discourage the filing of superfluous exhibits, and the summoning unnecessary witnesses, the rate of institution fees was increased; fees were imposed on the filing of exhibits, the summoning of witnesses; and stamp duties were established on pleadings, petitions, and securities, at the following rates:—

NEW INSTITUTION FEES, before the European Courts.

On the first	200 rupees	6½ per cent.
next	800	—	additional	4
—	4,000	—	3
—	20,000	—	2
—	25,000	—	1
On all above that amount		0½

FEES payable for each EXHIBIT filed, and for each WITNESS summoned, in Suits before the European Courts.

In suits, if not above 200 rupees	8 anas.
Above 200 rupees, but below the amount appealable to the Sudder Adawlut	1 rupee.
In suits for an amount appealable to the Sudder Adawlut	2 rupees.

These new fees were declared equally leviable on all appeals, as on original suits.

STAMPS.

All pleadings filed in the European courts were required to be written on stamp paper of a prescribed size, at the following rates per sheet:—

In suits not exceeding 100 rupees	4 anas.
—	200	—	8
Above 200 rupees, but not appealable to the Sudder Adawlut	1 rupee.
Suits appealable to the Sudder Adawlut	2

Stamps of the above value were also declared necessary on all miscellaneous petitions and applications presented to the several courts of judicature, and on all copies of papers furnished by those courts.

Stamps

Stamps were also required to be used after the 31st of December 1797, for all bonds, promissory notes, and other obligations for the payment of money, at the following rates :—

Above 50 rupees, not exceeding 100 rupees	4 anas.
100 — — — 1,000 — — —	8 —
1,000 — — — — —	1 rupee.

A stamp was also prescribed of the value of twenty-five rupees, to be affixed to the sunnud of appointment of every cauzee or vakeel in a court of justice. This was afterwards discontinued.*

REGULATION X.—1797.

Extension of Stamp Duties to Proceedings in the Criminal Department.

COMPLAINTS preferred before the magistrates for misdemeanors which they were competent to try, were directed to be written on stamp paper, at the rate of eight anas per sheet. Reg. X. 1797.

In 1800, it appeared that the amount of stamp duties imposed by Regulation VI. 1797, had proved very inadequate to supply the deficiency of revenue occasioned by the abolition of the police tax. For the purpose therefore of increasing the revenue derivable from that source, and to explain and amend certain parts of the Stamp Regulation, the Government enacted Regulation VII. 1800.

REGULATION VII. 1800.

Further Extension of Stamp Duties on Money Securities.

THE stamps on securities for money were now extended to drafts and bills of exchange, to all acknowledgments for the receipt of money, at the following rates :— Reg. VII. 1800.

From 16 rupees to 64 rupees	2 anas.
— 64 — 125 —	4 —
— 125 — 250 —	8 —
— 250 — 500 —	1 rupee.
— 500 — 1,000 —	2 —
— 1,000 — 2,000 —	4 —
Above 2,000 — — —	8 —

It was also directed, that in cases of appeal from the Sudder Adawlut to the King in Council, the two copies of proceedings required to be transmitted to his Majesty in Council, according to Section lxxv. of Regulation XVI. 1797, as well as copies for all of the parties themselves, should be written on stamp paper, of one rupee value per sheet.

Original deeds for the transfer, mortgage, or assignment of real or personal property, and deeds of contract or agreement, and all copies thereof intended as legal vouchers, to be written on stamp paper, from four anas to two rupees, according to the size.

Applications to the registrars of the Adawlut courts for the registry of deeds, under Regulation XXXVI. 1793, and XXVIII. 1795, and all copies of deeds furnished by the registrar, were to be written on paper with a stamp, from four anas to two rupees, according to the size.

The courts were forbidden to receive in evidence any of the foregoing documents, if not written on the prescribed stamp; but provision was made for affixing the stamp to papers after they were written or executed, in certain cases.

REGULATION

* Sec. vi. Reg. VII. 1800.

IV.

APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued.

638 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

REGULATION XLIII.—1803.

Modification of the Rules for Stamps on Law Papers.

Civil Judicature.

Reg. XLIII. 1803.

WITH a view to the further discouragement of litigious complaints, and the production of unnecessary evidence, the fees on the institution and trial of suits, and for the stamps to be attached to certain papers, were further modified.

FEES.—INSTITUTION FEE.

In suits before the moonsiff 6½ per cent.

EUROPEAN COURTS.

On the first	200 rupees	6½ per cent.
next	800 —	4 —
—	4,000 —	3 —
—	20,000 —	2 —
—	25,000 —	1 —
On all the excess above	50,000 rupees	0½ —

FEES ON EXHIBITS and for WITNESSES summoned or examined.

In suits not above 200 rupees	8 anas.
Above 200 rupees, not exceeding 1,000 rupees	1 rupee.
— 1,000 —	2 —

The fees for exhibits were declared chargeable on all documents accompanying miscellaneous petitions, though not forming part of any suit or appeal.

Stamps on pleading in suits before the European courts, whether original or on appeal, on all miscellaneous petitions, and all applications to the zillah registrars for the registry of deeds, according to the value of the property affected or concerned.

100 rupees	4 anas.
100 — not exceeding 200 rupees	8 —
Above 200 rupees — 1,000	1 rupee.
— 1,000 —	2 —

Copies of decrees of the European Courts, prepared for delivery to the parties, and all copies of judicial papers prepared by the courts for the suitors, to be written on stamp paper of the respective value of

1 rupee	} per sheet, according to size.
0½ —
0¼ —
0⅛ —

The sunnuds of cauzees, and the vakeels in the European courts, to be written on stamp paper of twenty-five rupees.

This Regulation further directed that five per cent. be deducted from all fees payable to the vakeels or native pleaders, and carried to the account of Government.

REGULATION I.—1814.

Consolidated and amended Stamp Regulation.

Reg. I. 1814.

IN 1814, the former Rules having been found wanting in clearness, and abuses having been discovered in the collection of the fees, it was resolved to consolidate the institution fee with the stamp duties, and this Regulation was accordingly passed, condensing the former rules rules into one Regulation, with the following alterations, to take effect from the 1st May 1814.

The stamps for bonds, promissory notes, bills of exchange, letters of credit, or other obligations for the payment of money, for all receipts, all deeds of transfer of property, real or personal, all leases, mortgages, and assignments of land, and all deeds of contract, were fixed at the following rates :

Above	16 rupees	Not exceeding	16 rupees	1 ana.
—	64	—	64	—	...	2 —
—	125	—	125	—	...	4 —
—	250	—	250	—	...	8 —
—	500	—	500	—	...	1 rupee.
—	1,000	—	1,000	—	...	2 —
—	2,000	—	2,000	—	...	4 —
—	5,000	—	5,000	—	...	8 —
—	10,000	—	10,000	—	...	16 —
—	20,000	—	20,000	—	...	32 —
—	50,000	—	50,000	—	...	50 —
—	1,00,000	—	1,00,000	—	...	110 —
—	1,00,000	—	150 —

The fees on the institution of suits, and on summonses and exhibits, were discontinued, and in lieu thereof were substituted a stamp on the paper on which the plaint or petition should be written, at the following rates :

In suits for sums not exceeding	16 rupees	1 rupee.
Above	16 rupees	2 ...
—	32	4 ...
—	64	8 ...
—	150	16 ...
—	300	32 ...
—	800	50 ...
—	1,600	100 ...
—	3,000	150 ...
—	5,000	250 ...
—	10,000	350 ...
—	15,000	500 ...
—	25,000	750 ...
—	50,000	1,000 ...
—	1,00,000	2,000 ...

For the admission of each exhibit, and for the attendance of each witness, a written application was to be preferred, on stamp paper of the following value :

In the Court of the Registrar	8 anas.
— Zillah and City Courts	1 rupee.
— Provincial and Sudder Dewanny Adawlut	2 —

On every answer, replication, and rejoinder, on every supplemental pleading, every deed of compromise, and every petition, a stamp was fixed at the following rate :

In the Court of the Registrar	8 anas.
— Zillah and City Courts	1 rupee.
— Provincial and Sudder Dewanny Adawlut Courts	4 —

The stamp on petitions to the different authorities in the Judicial department, and powers of attorney, was fixed at—

Zillah or City Judge	8 anas.
Provincial Court	1 rupee.
Sudder Dewanny Adawlut	2 —

640 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

Copies of judicial papers to be made on stamp paper of the following value:—

Decrees of Registrars and Zillah Judges	1 rupee.
— Provincial Courts	2 —
— Sudder Dewanny Adawlut	4 —
Proceedings of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut for transmission to the King in Council	2 —
Authenticated copies of revenue and judicial proceedings, of accounts or other documents for judicial reference, or for the use of individuals, on paper of the value of	8 anas.

All charges preferred to officers in the criminal department, for certain specified offences, were to be written on stamp paper, as follows:—

If to the Magistrate	8 anas.
— Court of Circuit	1 rupee.
— Nizamut Adawlut	2 —

Every sheet of stamped paper was to be indorsed with the signature of a public officer of Government.

REGULATION III.—1817.

Diminishing the Rate of Stamps and Fees on Petty Suits.

Reg. III. 1817.

THIS Regulation was enacted for the purpose of removing certain inconsistencies in regard to suits not exceeding sixty-four rupees. The rules before enacted having had reference only to the court in which the suit might be instituted, and not to the amount sued for, the present Regulation declared, that suits under sixty-four rupees, if prosecuted in the zillah or city courts, should be exempted from the stamp fees on the plaint, and for exhibits and summonses, in like manner as they would be exempt if prosecuted before the native commissioners, and that appeals from decisions of sudder ameens, in cases above sixty-four rupees, which might be referred to the registrars, should be liable to the stamp duties, payable in the court of the registrar under Regulation I. of 1814.

REGULATION XVI.—1824.

Extended Application of Stamps to Securities, &c.

Reg. XVI. 1824.
(Rescinded by
Reg. X. 1829.)

THIS Regulation greatly extended the provisions of the former Regulations, and prescribed new stamp duties on a great variety of securities, engagements, and discharges specified in a copious Schedule annexed to the Regulation, and incapable of being abstracted. Special rules were established for the sale and distribution of stamps, and a heavy penalty was denounced for their forgery, or for abuses by the vendors, or users of stamped paper. Some of the principal classes of stamps ranged as follows:—

For bills of exchange	from 1 ana to 20 rupees.
For bonds	— 2 — 150 —
For conveyances	— 8 — 100 —
For leases	— 8 — 80 —

REGULATION XII.—1826.

Stamp Duties within the Town of Calcutta.

Reg. XII. 1826.

By this Regulation, enacted in conformity with the provisions of the 53d Geo. III. c. 155, s. 98 and 99, and reciting in the preamble the sanction of the Court of Directors, and the approbation approbation of the Board of Commissioners for Affairs of India, a stamp duty was imposed to be levied within the limits of the town of Calcutta, on instruments of conveyance, contract, obligation, and security for money on deeds in generally.

REGULATION X.—1829.

Consolidation of previous Rules.

THE two Regulations, I. of 1814, and XVI. of 1824, were consolidated into one by Regulation X. of 1829, to which two Schedules were annexed, the first exhibiting all the classes of securities and discharges, contracts, engagements, &c. on which liable to the stamp duty, with all exemptions; and the second showing the rate of stamp duties on all original plaints and petitions of appeal substituted for the former institution-fee, on all other pleadings, copies of judicial papers, proceedings, &c. of a judicial nature. The stamps in some cases were raised by this Regulation. The Schedules are very detailed, specifying also all exemptions, and they occupy thirty-two pages of folio paper.

Schedule (A.)

Bonds, promissory notes for above a year, agreements, deeds of mortgage, settlement, gift, or dower, to be written, ad valorem, from twenty-five rupees to 2,00,000, on stamps from two anas to 150 rupees, and an additional 100 rupees for every sum of one lac above the two lacs above mentioned.

- Bills of exchange and drafts from one ana to twenty-five rupees.
 - Conveyances ad valorem on stamps from eight anas to 150 rupees, and for every lac above two lacs an additional 100 rupees.
 - Leases, from four anas to eighty rupees.
 - Receipts and discharges, from two anas to four rupees.
 - Deeds of partition, from eight anas to eight rupees.
- Many minor stamps for a great variety of documents, from two anas to eight rupees.

Schedule (B.)

Contains a minute specification of every law paper requiring a stamp, or exempt from stamp duty. The rates do not vary in any important degree from those declared in Regulation XVI. of 1824, nor is the application of them materially extended.

PART II.

CIVIL JUDICATURE—SPECIAL JUDICIAL REGULATIONS, having Operation in particular Provinces and Districts.

(A.)

*SPECIAL JUDICIAL REGULATIONS, Civil and Criminal, for BENARES—and certain Districts in the Lower Provinces.*Civil Regulations.

LIST.

- | | | |
|--------------|---|---|
| VII. 1795.— | } | Introduction of the Judicial System into the Province of Benares. |
| VIII. 1795.— | | |
| IX. 1795.— | | |
| X. 1795.— | | |
| XV. 1795.— | | |
| XXII. 1795.— | | |
| VII. 1828.— | | Power of the Rajah in Revenue Suits limited. |

Criminal
Regulations.

- | | |
|---------------|---|
| XVI. 1795.— | Administration of Criminal Justice in Benares. |
| XVII. 1795.— | Benares Police Regulation. |
| I. 1796.— | } Administration of Criminal Justice in Rajmahal and Boglepore. |
| I. 1827.— | |
| XVIII. 1805.— | Administration of Criminal Justice in the Jungle Mchals. |
| VII. 1806.— | } Establishment of a separate Civil Court for the twenty-four Pergunnahs. |
| XVI. 1812.— | |

REGULATION VII.—1795.

Introduction of the Judicial System into the Province of Benares.

Reg. VII. 1795.

It was stated in the preamble to this Regulation, that the Governor-general in Council being solicitous to extend to the inhabitants of the province of Benares, and to persons resorting to it for religious purposes, the securities in the enjoyment of their religious privileges and immunities which were possessed by the inhabitants of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa, and to ensure to them equal protection with regard to their persons and property, he had determined, on similar grounds to those stated in the preamble to Regulation III. of 1793, to abolish the courts of judicature in the province of Benares, superintended by native judges (which were originally established with a view to the introduction of a more perfect system of administering the laws), and in lieu of them to erect courts for the trial of civil suits in the first instance, constituted upon the same principles, and vested with the same powers as the zillah and city courts in the Lower Provinces.

The Regulation accordingly proceeded to establish one city and three zillah courts, similar in constitution and jurisdiction to those in the provinces of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa.

• Benares, Mirzapore, Ghazepore, and Juanpore.

By Regulation VIII. 1795, the rules of practice prescribed by Regulation IV. 1793, were extended to the zillah courts of this province, with a reservation in regard to the Rajah of Benares, and the principal mahajins of the city, commonly denominated Nowputty, and the baboos (being persons of the rajah's blood or family). These persons were exempted, in the first instance, from the necessity of giving security for their appearance when sued in the civil court; but if, after receiving notice of a suit filed against them, they should fail to appear in court, they were to forfeit the privilege reserved to them, and to be dealt with in all respects as other unprivileged defendants.

By Regulation IX. 1795, a provincial court of appeal was established for the division of Benares, under rules similar to those prescribed in Regulation V. 1793. Reg. IX. 1795.

And by Regulation X. 1795, the powers of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut were extended over the province of Benares. Reg. X. 1795.

In Regulation XV. 1795, which extended to Benares the rules for referring suits to arbitration, there is a special provision, founded on one of the articles of agreement between the British Government and the rajah, dated 27th October 1794, that complaints preferred to the civil courts, touching matters of revenue within the jaghire and altungah belonging to the rajah, should not be taken cognizance of by the court, but be referred to the rajah or his dewan. If the complainants were not satisfied with the decision so obtained, they were to have recourse to the collector, who would bring the case to a just and equitable termination. Reg. XV. 1795.

Regulation XXII. 1795.—The preamble to this Regulation stated that previously to the accession of Benares to the East-India Company, the administration of justice in the several districts of that province had been committed, subject to the control of the zemindar, to the amils or native collectors of the revenue, who, in the exercise of this trust, were guided chiefly by unwritten customs: that in the city of Benares certain judicial powers in civil suits were lodged in the superintendent of an office denominated the amanat duffer, and the police was intrusted to a cutwal: that it had been deemed necessary that all rules which had been passed from the year 1781 to the date of the abolition of the residency, regarding the administration of justice or the police, should be published for the security of the rights of those individuals whose property might be held under or in any respect affected by them, and that it should be declared what part of those rules were still in force, and that provision should be made for transferring the suits pending in the abolished courts to those which had been established in lieu of them. Reg. XXII. 1795.

The Regulation proceeded to record the establishment of a court of justice for the city of Benares in 1781, and courts at Juanpore, Mirzapore, and Ghazepore, in 1788, in which year, also, an appeal was authorized, in all civil cases, from the decrees of the mofussil court to the resident at Benares. In those courts the Mahomedan and Hindoo laws respectively were to be administered to parties in civil cases, and the Mahomedan law in criminal cases. The jurisdiction of those courts was, in the first instance, limited to the cities and towns within which they were respectively established, and consequently the inhabitants of the interior parts of the province were still left without any adequate protection or means of procuring redress; for the only other court established in 1786, and called the "Moolky" or country "Adawlut," exercised but limited powers, deciding only causes referred to them by the resident. In 1787, the Moolky Adawlut had been divided into two jurisdictions, civil and criminal, and a separate judge had been nominated to each. At the latter end of that year the civil country court was vested with authority to try all civil suits arising within the province, with the exception of the city and towns in which separate courts had been established. The country criminal court was vested with a co-extensive jurisdiction, and both the courts were placed under the superintendence of the resident, appeals being declared to lie to him from the former, and the futwas or sentences of the latter being rendered subject to his revision. The Regulation then proceeded to record the rules passed for the guidance of the civil court in January 1789, both as to their practice generally, and as to the principles by which they were to be guided in trying suits for the recovery of village zemindary rights resumed resumed by the preceding native government. The Regulation further recorded the rules before issued regarding the opium contract, and the police regulations anterior to those established by the new system. In conclusion, the Regulation directed that the records, civil and criminal, of the city, town and country courts, should be delivered over to the British judges of the newly-erected courts, according to their local jurisdiction. The records in the possession of the resident, as judge of the court of appeal and revision, were to be transferred to the provincial courts, and the newly-constituted courts were to proceed with all such cases as had not been determined.

644 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

REGULATION VII.—1828.

Power of the Rajah in Revenue Suits limited.

Reg VII. 1828.

IT appearing that the power granted to the Rajah by Regulation XV. 1795, had been productive of inconvenience from the absence of specific rules for his guidance in the exercise of the privileges thus conferred upon him; and the system having in other respects failed to accomplish the objects intended by it, considerable modifications of that authority were enacted by Regulation VII. 1828, for which see Abstract under the head of "Benares Revenue." It was further enacted, by the same Regulation, that the rajah should appoint a native commissioner in each pergunnah, to be approved by the superintendent, who should be empowered to try civil suits against the inhabitants within their respective jurisdictions, relative to land, its rent, revenue, or produce, of which the cause of action should have arisen within twelve years before the institution of the suit. The commissioners to be guided by the rules of Regulation XXIII. 1814. Their proceedings were to be subject to the supervision of the superintendent, to whom appeals might be preferred within six months from the date of the decision appealed against. It was declared competent to the Governor-general in Council, on being referred to by either party, to supersede the orders passed on such appeals by the superintendent.

REGULATION XVI.—1795.

Administration of Criminal Justice in Benares.

Reg. XVI. 1795.

THE preamble to this Regulation recited, that in the year 1781, a court of justice vested with criminal jurisdiction had been established for the city of Benares; that in the year 1788 courts with similar powers had been erected in the towns of Ghazepore, Juanpore, and Mirzapore; that there was also a general criminal court for the province called Moolky Foujdarry Adawlut; and that the British resident at Benares had been vested with authority to superintend, revise, and sanction the proceedings of all those courts; the preamble proceeded to state, that it had been determined to appoint British magistrates, and to introduce generally into the province of Benares the system of criminal judicature established in the lower provinces. The present Regulation accordingly declared, that the judges of the zillah and city courts in the province which had been constituted by Regulation VII. 1795, should be magistrates; that the provincial court constituted by Regulation IX. 1795 should have the powers of a court of circuit for the division, and that the jurisdiction of the Sudder and Nizamut Adawlut should extend over the province of Benares.

It was declared by this Regulation, that no Brahmin should be punished with death, but if convicted of an offence for which according to law he would be subject to capital punishment, he should be sentenced by the Nizamut Adawlut to transportation for life.

REGULATION XVII.—1795.

Benares Police.

Reg. XVII. 1795.

THE preamble to this Regulation adverted to the engagements into which the landholders and farmers of this province had entered with the Government, to preserve the peace and apprehend apprehend offenders within their respective estates or farms, and to recover or make good all property stolen within their several boundaries; and to similar engagements executed by each tehseldar to the Government, for the entire pergunnah or other division within which he was intrusted with the charge of the police, and the collection of the revenue, such tehseldars, however, being at liberty to have recourse, for their own indemnification, to the landholder or farmer within whose limits a loss by theft or robbery might occur. It was stated that this rule had become so far modified in practice, that it was an established principle throughout the province, that when night robberies occurred in the open roads or woods, the tehseldars, landholders, or farmers, were not held responsible unless they had such knowledge of the arrival of the persons robbed as would have enabled them to provide for their security and protection; but that for thefts or robberies committed in inhabited places, they were held responsible under any circumstances, if the magistrate was of opinion that the robbery had been committed with their connivance, or was ascribable to their want of due care and vigilance. The Regulation proceeded to declare the several powers of the tehseldars and landholders in regard to their police jurisdiction, and the duties of the various classes of village watchmen which were to be discharged under the authority of the tehseldar; the magistrates were to furnish the tehseldars with warrants of appointment of police officers, and translations of the police regulation. Special rules were also enacted for the establishment of an efficient town police for the city of Benares, and the three principal towns of the zillah to be severally superintended by a cutwal.

Regulation XXII. 1795, recorded the successive measures adopted to provide for the administration of criminal and civil justice, from the year 1781 until the introduction of the new judicial system. (See note of this Regulation under the head "Civil Justice, Benares.") Reg. XXII. 1795.

SPECIAL RULES for Rajmahal and Boglepore.

REGULATION I.—1796.

Administration of Criminal Justice in Rajmahal and Boglepore.

THIS is a special Regulation to provide for the administration of criminal justice to the inhabitants of certain hills to the south and west of Rajmahal, and other parts of the zillah of Boglepore; they are described as an uncivilized race, differing in manners, customs, and religion, from the surrounding neighbourhood; never submissive to the native governments, living by plunder, and desolating the neighbouring districts by their incursions; * they were reduced under the authority of the British administration by a former collector, Mr. Cleveland, who granted certain pecuniary allowances to their chiefs on the condition of their preserving the peace of the country. In the year 1782, the privilege was granted to them of having criminal justice administered to them by assembly of their chiefs, under the superintendence of the magistrate, subject to the confirmation of the Governor-general in Council in certain cases. The purpose of the present Regulation was to transfer the duty of revising sentences from the Governor-general in Council to the Nizamut Adawlut, and to provide special rules for the trial of accused persons. The magistrate was to receive complaints as in other zillahs, but in cases where the prisoner would have been committed for trial before the court of circuit, the prisoner was to be sent for trial before an assembly of hill chiefs, whom the magistrate was to convene for that purpose: magistrates were to furnish the assembly with lists of the witnesses summoned, and all the necessary information. The magistrate was to convene an assembly twice a year, to sit at such places as should be most convenient; the assemblies were to be held in the presence of the magistrate, who was at liberty to suggest to the court any questions which appeared to him necessary, to elicit such information as would enable the Nizamut Adawlut to decide on the case submitted to them; the magistrate was to cause regularity to be observed in the meetings, but was in no way

Reg. I. 1796.
(Rescinded by
Reg. I. 1827.)

republican and other... See Reg. I. 1796. bureaucracy

IV.

APPENDIX,

No. 6.

continued.

Civil Judicature.

646 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

way to interfere with the deliberations or sentence of the court. The magistrate might himself confirm sentences of confinement not exceeding fourteen years; sentences for higher punishment were always to be referred to the Nizamut Adawlut; sentences of mutilation were to be commuted to imprisonment. The custom stated to have obtained among the hill people, of leaving to the next of kin to the deceased an option of pardoning the murderer, or of demanding retaliation or pecuniary compensation, was not to be admitted; but whenever the accused was declared guilty of murder he was to be sentenced to death, unless there were reasons for pardon or commutation of the sentence, apparent to the Nizamut Adawlut.

Reg. I. 1827.

This Regulation rescinded the special rules enacted by Regulation I. 1796, and declared the hill people of Boglepore amenable to the general Regulations; with this modification, however, that in criminal trials it should not be necessary to take the opinion of the Mahomedan law officer, but in lieu thereof a committee of not less than three hill chiefs, called "Manjees," were to sit as assessors, and to declare their opinion, according to the laws and customs of the hills, which was to be subject to the confirmation of the judge of circuit conducting the trial. In cases remitted to the Nizamut Adawlut, that court was not to refer to their law officer for his futwa, but was to pass such sentence as should appear equitable to not less than two judges of the court. The magistrate was to keep a register of manjees, and when a prisoner of the hill tribes was committed for trial, the magistrate was to summon not less than twelve manjees to attend the session, three of whom, to be chosen by ballot or otherwise, as the judge of circuit might deem proper, were to sit on the trial. The three first selected might be challenged peremptorily, and any others for reasons assigned by the prisoner.

REGULATION XVIII.—1805.

Jungle Mehals.

Reg. XVIII. 1805.

By this Regulation the districts called "Jungle Mehals," situated in the zillahs of Beerbhoom, Burdwan, and Midnapore, were formed into the jurisdiction of a distinct officer, denominated "Magistrate of the Jungle Mehals." Special rules for the police of the Jungle Mehals were enacted, for which see "Police."

REGULATION VII.—1806.

Establishment of a separate Civil Court for the Twenty-four Pergunnahs.

Reg. VII. 1806.

By this Regulation, a court of Civil Judicature was established in the vicinity of Calcutta, denominated the court of the Twenty-four Pergunnahs. The court was vested with the same powers as other zillah courts, but the judge was not to exercise the authority of magistrate. The duties of that office being dischargeable by the justices of the peace of the town of Calcutta, or such other persons as the Governor-general in Council might be pleased to appoint. By Regulation XVI. 1812, the judge of the Twenty-four Pergunnahs was required to give effect to the judgments of the court of requests at Calcutta, in the cases of defendants resorting to that jurisdiction to evade the process of the court of requests.

Reg. XVI. 1812.

PART II.—CIVIL JUDICATURE—SPECIAL JUDICIAL REGULATIONS—
continued.

Civil Judicature.

(B.)

SPECIAL JUDICIAL REGULATIONS, CIVIL AND CRIMINAL, for the Ceded and Conquered Provinces, Bundelcund and Kumaon.

Regulations.

LIST.

- | | | |
|--------------|--|---|
| I. 1803.— | } | Introduction of the Code of Regulations into the Ceded Provinces of Oude. |
| II. 1803.— | | |
| IV. 1803.— | | |
| V. 1803.— | | |
| VI. 1803.— | | |
| VII. 1803.— | | |
| VIII. 1803.— | } | Introduction of the Judicial System into the conquered Provinces in the Doab. |
| IX. 1804.— | | |
| X. 1805.— | | |
| XI. 1806.— | } | Administration of Criminal Justice in Deyra Doon. |
| IV. 1817.— | | |
| XXI. 1825.— | } | Administration of Criminal Justice in Kumaon. |
| V. 1829.— | | |
| X. 1817.— | Administration of Criminal Justice in Kumaon. | |
| II. 1818.— | Annexation of Territory to Bundelcund. | |
| IV. 1818.— | Re-establishment of Zillah North Saharunpore. | |
| X. 1822.— | Administration of Criminal Justice in the Garrow Hills. | |
| VI. 1831.— | Establishment of a Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut for the Western Provinces. | |
| XI. 1831.— | Police of the Ceded and Conquered Provinces. | |

REGULATION I.—1803.

Introduction of the Code of Regulations into the Ceded Provinces of Oude.

By this Regulation the system of judicial administration provided by the Code of Regulations was introduced into the territories ceded to the East-India Company by the Nawaub Vizier on the 10th November 1801. These provinces are described in the Regulations as the provinces "ceded by the Nawaub Vizier."

They were divided into seven zillahs,* in each of which courts were established on the same model, and with the like jurisdiction as the zillah courts established in the Lower Provinces in 1793; and the judges were invested with the authority of magistrates by Regulation VI. 1803.

A superior court was established, under the title of "the Provincial Court," in its civil

Reg. I. 1803.

By Reg. II. 1803.

Reg. VI. 1803.

By Regs. IV. & VII. 1803.

* Moradabad, Bareilly, Etawa, Furruckabad, Cawnpore, Allahabad, Goruckpore.

IV.

648 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued.

Civil Judicature.
By { V. }
Regs. { VIII. } 1803.

Reg. LI. 1803.

civil jurisdiction, and "Court of Circuit" in its criminal jurisdiction, for the division of the Ceded Provinces.*

The jurisdiction of the Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut was extended over the courts of civil and criminal jurisdiction, under the same rules as those which established the authority of that tribunal in the Lower Provinces. A succession of Regulations, enacted in the same year, introduced, as far as appeared necessary, the various branches of judicial administration, civil and criminal, into the Oude provinces.

By Regulation LI. 1803, the court of circuit for the ceded provinces was empowered to take cognizance of all depending criminal cases, the trial of which had been commenced but not completed by the native criminal court, which had been temporarily established before the introduction of the judicial system.

JUDICIAL ADMINISTRATION in the CONQUERED PROVINCES in the Doab.

REGULATION IX.—1804.

Introduction of the Judicial System into the Conquered Provinces in the Doab.

Reg. IX. 1804.

CERTAIN territories forming part of the Doab, or country situated between the Ganges and the Jumna, and on the right bank of the Jumna, had been ceded to the East-India Company in full sovereignty by Dowlut Rao Scindiah; and certain other territories, forming part of the province of Bundelcund, on the right bank of the Jumna, had likewise been so ceded by the peishwa. The system of judicial administration was extended to these territories by the present Regulation. The first-mentioned territories were divided into five zillahs,† which were included within the jurisdiction of the court of circuit for the division of Bareilly. The territory of Bundelcund was formed into one zillah, and placed under the jurisdiction of the court of circuit for the division of Benares. The courts in the circuit of Bareilly were not to take cognizance of crimes committed in those districts previously to the 30th December 1803, the date of the treaty with Scindiah; nor those in the circuit of Benares of crimes placed under their supervision anterior to the 16th December 1803, the date of the treaty of Bassein.

Reg. VIII. 1805.

By Regulation VIII. 1805, the several laws and regulations for the internal government of the provinces ceded by the nawab vizier were extended to the territories in the Doab, and in Bundelcund, with certain modifications. For the number and jurisdictions of the courts established, see the preceding Regulations; and

Reg. XIV. 1806.

By Regulation XIV. 1806, the number of courts in these provinces was reduced to four, the northern and southern divisions of Saharunpore being united into one zillah.

REGULATION IV.—1817.

Administration of Criminal Justice in Deyra Doon.

Reg. IV. 1817.

A TRACT of country called Deyra Doon having been ceded to the East-India Company in full sovereignty by the rajah of Nepaul, it was by this Regulation annexed to the district of Saharunpore,‡ and the date of its annexation was declared to be 15th May 1803. In sentencing to punishments for crimes committed between the 15th May 1815 and the promulgation

* This designation was altered by Regulation IX. 1804, to the division of Bareilly.

† Zillahs of Paniput, Saharunpore North, South, Allyghur, and Agra.

‡ By Regulation XXI. 1825, it was transferred to the jurisdiction of the commissioner for the province of Kumaon. By Regulation V. 1829, this provision was rescinded, and it was declared open to the Governor-general in Council to provide, in such manner as he should see fit, for the administration of criminal justice in Deyra Doon.

promulgation of the present Regulation, which bears date the 28th February 1817, no heavier punishments than would have been prescribed by the existing laws and usages of the district were to be adjudged; but in all such cases, if the punishments prescribed by the British Regulations would have been milder than those by the laws of the district, the offenders were to have the benefit of those provisions.

Power was reserved to the Government to fix at their pleasure the periods for the formation of the revenue settlements of the district.

REGULATION X.—1817.

Administration of Criminal Justice in Kumaon.

By this Regulation provision was made for the administration of criminal justice in the province of Kumaon, and in several small tracts of country which had been ceded by the rajah of Nepaul (exclusive of Deyra Doon, for which provision had been made by Regulation IV. 1817). Local circumstances having rendered it inexpedient to annex the above-mentioned districts to the Ceded and Conquered Provinces, the judicial administration had been conducted by British officers under instructions from the Governor-general in Council; but under that system embarrassment had been experienced from the want of a suitable tribunal for the trial of prisoners charged with heinous offences. It was enacted by this Regulation, that the trial of such cases should be referred to a commissioner, being an experienced judicial officer, whom the Governor-general in Council would appoint, who would be vested in those respects with the same powers as the judges of circuit, and was to be guided in the discharge of his duties by the spirit and principles of the Regulations in force in the Ceded and Conquered Provinces. It was not, however, to be necessary to have the futwa of a Mahomedan law officer, and in cases of reference to the Sudder Nizamut Adawlut, that court were to pass sentence without requiring a futwa from their law officer. The date of the annexation of this territory, for judicial purposes, was declared to be the 15th May 1815; the same provision was made as in Regulation IV. 1817, in regard to the operation of the penal laws, between the date of the cession and the promulgation of the present Regulation. Reg. X. 1817.

REGULATION II.—1818.

Annexation of Territory to Bundelcund.

By this Regulation, certain districts ceded to the East-India Company by Nana Govind Rao having been annexed to the zillah of Bundelcund, and the laws and regulations for the administration of Bundelcund were declared to be extended to those districts; the date of their annexation was declared to be the 1st November 1817. But it was notified, that the authority of the civil courts of judicature was not to commence until they should be officially apprized by the Government that the first settlement of the revenue of the said district and villages had been completed and duly sanctioned. In sentencing to punishments for crimes committed between the 1st of November 1817 and the promulgation of the present Regulation, which bears date the 31st March 1818, no heavier punishments than would have been prescribed by the existing laws and usages of the district were to be adjudged; but in all cases in which the punishments prescribed by the British Regulations would have been milder than those by the laws of the district, the offenders were to have the benefit of those provisions. Reg. II. 1818.

REGULATION IV.—1818.

Re-establishment of Zillah North Saharunpore.

THE court of Northern Saharunpore was again re-established by Regulation IV. 1818, under the title of the Zillah of Saharunpore, and the Southern division was denominated the Zillah Mehrut. Reg. IV. 1818.

IV.

APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued.

650. APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

REGULATION X.—1822.

Civil Judicature.

Administration of Criminal Justice in the Garrow Hills.

Reg. X. 1822.

By this Regulation special provision was made for the administration of justice to certain savage tribes occupying the Garrow Hills, on the north-east frontier of Rungpoor. The preamble stated, that little had been done to reclaim or civilize these people; and that the reciprocal animosity subsisting between them and the inhabitants of the cultivated country prevented any extensive intercourse of a pacific nature, while their mutual injuries had produced feuds leading frequently to disturbance and bloodshed. The zemindars within the British frontier were stated to have been generally the aggressors, and the Garrows had seized frequent occasions of private revenge and retaliation. Wherever those zemindars had been successful in establishing their authority, and were deriving incomes from cesses paid by the mountaineers, the tracts so occupied by them had been considered as parts of such zemindari, and as coming within the operation of the general regulations of the British Government, which were accordingly administered within them. The judicial system, however, had been found inapplicable to their savage and secluded condition, and was calculated to leave them at the mercy of the zemindars, rather than to offer any substantial means of redress. Under such circumstances, it seemed necessary that a special plan for the administration of justice, adapted to their peculiar circumstances and prejudices, should be arranged and concerted with the head men, and that they should be freed from dependence on the zemindars of the British provinces. With this view, it was resolved to suspend the operation of the Regulations in the Garrow country, and to substitute the system prescribed in the present Regulations. An officer, denominated "Commissioner for the North-east parts of Rungpoor," was invested with the powers of a judge of a court of circuit, as well as with those of magistrate. No reference to a Mahomedan law officer was to be necessary to the conviction or punishment of an offender; but whenever the commissioner should deem the punishment which he was authorized to inflict inadequate to the crime, he was to refer the trial to the Nizamut Adawlut, accompanying it with a statement of his opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, and with an explanation of any special custom of the parties or witnesses that might be necessary to the proper understanding of the proceedings.

REGULATION VI.—1831.

Establishment of a Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut for the Western Provinces.

Reg. VI. 1831.

It was stated in the preamble to this Regulation, that the remoteness of the districts comprised in the Western Provinces from the Presidency, and the difference of their climate from that of Bengal, operated to deter individuals from availing themselves of the benefits obtainable from the higher tribunal, and caused considerable difficulties in procuring representatives to attend on their behalf before the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut. To remedy these evils, and also to provide for the more expeditious passing of the final decision on important criminal cases tried in the Upper Provinces, and for the more efficient control of the several judicial and magisterial authorities in those districts, it had been resolved to appoint a separate court of the Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut for the Western Provinces, including the province of Kumaon, and to place under the authority of that tribunal the trial of persons charged with offences of a heinous nature committed within the Saugur and Nerbudda territories.* The Regulation accordingly provided for the constitution of a Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut for the Western Provinces, to be ordinarily stationed at Allahabad, but removeable to any other place that the Governor-general might appoint. The court was to consist of one or more judges, and was to have two muftis, a registrar, and such other officers as might be deemed necessary; it was to possess the same powers powers within its local jurisdiction as were exercised by the Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut at Calcutta.

* See Reg. II. of 1818.

In cases requiring under the Regulations the concurrent voices of two judges, when only one judge might be present, in the Western Sudder court, or when two judges being present should differ in opinion, the question was to be referred for the decision of ten of the judges of the Sudder court at the Presidency.

REGULATION XI.—1831.

Police of the Ceded and Conquered Provinces.

It was declared in the preamble to this Regulation, that as provision had been made for occasionally vesting collectors with the power of magistrates, it was expedient, with a view to improve the efficiency of the police in districts of the Ceded and Conquered Provinces, where tehseeldary establishments * were maintained, that the Governor-general in Council should be empowered by an order in council to vest the tehseeldars with the powers exercised by darogahs of police; and it was also expedient to modify the rules regarding the removal of police officers. The Regulation accordingly declared the power of the Governor-general, by an order in council, to vest the powers of darogah in tehseeldars, and to fix their local jurisdictions, within which all resident officers of police, including the tannah and village establishments, were to be subject to the authority of the tehseeldar, in his capacity of chief police thannadar. Reg. XI. 1831.

Wherever the foregoing arrangement should have effect, the persons before filling the office of darogah were to be designated naib, or deputy. Darogahs, and their powers and duties under the General Police Regulations (XX. 1817), were to be those of police officers at outposts; the tehseeldars exercising the powers of darogahs under this Regulation were authorized to employ, when necessary, in aid of their regular police establishments, any of the revenue officers on fixed thannadarry establishments, who were in such case to discharge their police duties in conformity with the Regulations; but the fixed police establishments were not to be employed in the revenue duties, except in cases provided for in the Regulations. When the arrangement provided for by this Regulation should be carried into effect, it was to be notified by the publication and proclamation of the several Police and Revenue jurisdictions, to be suspended in a conspicuous place in the cutcherry of the collector and magistrate. In such districts all practicable reductions were to be made in the police establishments,* and the office of naib darogah, when vacant, was not to be filled up; and the appointment and removal of police officers were declared to rest with the magistrate, subject to the orders of the commissioner of circuit, and the final decision of the Governor-general in Council in any special case.

* Similar to those in Benares. See Reg. XVII. 1795.

Civil Judicature.

PART II.—CIVIL JUDICATURE—SPECIAL JUDICIAL REGULATIONS—
continued.

(C.)

SPECIAL JUDICIAL REGULATIONS, Civil and Criminal, for CUTTACK.

Regulations.

L I S T.

- IV. 1804.—Date of Cession; Provision for the Administration of Criminal Justice.
XIII. 1805.—System of Police for Cuttack.
XIV. 1805.—Provision for the Administration of Civil Justice.
XI. 1816.—Civil Suits regarding Inheritance arising in the tributary Mahals of Cuttack.
XXII. 1817.—Special Powers vested in the Judge and Magistrate of Cuttack.
V. 1818.—Appointment of a Commission in Cuttack.

REGULATION IV.—1804.

Date of Cession;—Provision for the Administration of Criminal Justice.

Reg. IV. 1804.

THE province of Cuttack, including Balasore and other dependencies, was ceded to the East-India Company in full sovereignty, by the Rajah of Berar, in January 1804; the fort and town of Cuttack having surrendered to the British arms on the 14th October 1803.

By this Regulation, provision was made for the administration of criminal justice in that province, according to the Mahomedan law, with the modifications introduced by the British Government; the province was divided into two zillahs,* and included in the jurisdiction of the court of circuit for the division of Calcutta.

REGULATION XIII.—1805.

System of Police for Cuttack.

Reg. XIII. 1805.

This Regulation was passed to introduce a regular and efficient system of police into the province of Cuttack. The preamble stated, that, under the Mahomedan government, it had been the practice to vest the immediate maintenance of the peace in certain sirdar pykes, or head police officers, also called kandytes, aided by inferior officers under their orders, for whose support lands were assigned under the authority of the said Government. The general control of the sirdars and other officers was vested in the holders of land within their respective estates. This system, it was stated, had been found well calculated for the prevention of crimes, and the maintenance of the general tranquillity of the country. By the present Regulation, the districts of Cuttack were formed into one zillah,† to be called the zillah of Cuttack, with the exception of certain pergunnahs, which were included in the zillah Midnapore; the principal zemindars were constituted darogahs of police within the limits of their respective possessions; and the inferior zemindars, being pro-

* North Cuttack and South Cuttack.

† Instead of two, as provided by Reg. IV. 1804.

prietors of petty estates, were to be considered subordinate officers of police, under the immediate authority of the darogahs. In cases where any zemindars had been divested of the charge of police for misconduct, or any other reason, either by the Mahratta Government or by the commissioners for the settlement of Cuttack, one, two, or more kandytes were to be vested with the maintenance of the peace within those districts, subject to the control of the darogahs, who should be appointed over them by the Government, and who would receive adequate salaries for the performance of their duties. The sirdar and other pykes were to retain their lands, but were liable to be dispossessed for disobedience of the orders of the darogahs, neglect of duty, or other misconduct, proved to the satisfaction of the Nizamut Adawlut. All holders of land were declared bound to afford every assistance for the preservation of the peace within their respective limits, and were to be amenable to punishment for neglect or connivance of crime.

Certain hill zemindars, whose names were specified, were exempted from the operation of this Regulation.

REGULATION XIV.—1805.

Provision for the Administration of Civil Justice.

THE laws and regulations for the trial of civil suits in the Lower Provinces were extended to Cuttack; the date of limitation for the institution of suits was fixed at twelve years antecedent to the 14th October 1803; the power of the courts to admit was restricted to such suits of a private nature as would have been taken cognizance of by the courts of justice, under the administration of the rajah, and they were forbidden to entertain complaints regarding acts of the rajah's government. In suits originating before the 14th October 1803, the courts were to decree interest at the rate of thirty per cent. per annum, on sums not exceeding one hundred rupees, and twenty four per cent. on sums exceeding that amount. On suits that had originated subsequently to that period, twelve per cent.

Reg. XIV. 1805.

Certain tributary estates were exempted from the operation of this Regulation.

REGULATION XI.—1816.

Civil Suits regarding Inheritance arising in the Tributary Mehals of Cuttack.

By this Regulation, provision was made for the trial of questions of inheritance and succession arising in the tributary estates, which had been exempted from the operation of the general system of administration, by Regulation XIV. 1805. It stated, that the nature of the tenures by which those estates were held, the character of the inhabitants, and other local circumstances, rendered it expedient that the estates should not be subject to partition, but should descend, entire and undivided, to the persons who had the strongest claim, according to local and family usage. The adjudication of all such claims was vested in an officer styled the "superintendent of the tributary Mehals," who was to be guided in his decisions by the established laws and usages of the respective tributary estates, which were in no case to be considered liable to division, according to the common rules of Hindoo law. The superintendent's court was to be held in the zillah Adawlut, and was to be attended by the established pleaders of this court; the proceedings were to be exempted from the operation of the stamp regulations. An appeal was to lie from decisions of the superintendent to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut. The principles of the rules for the conduct of civil suits generally, were to be held applicable to suits under this Regulation. Decrees requiring a transfer of property, or a change in possession, were not to be carried into execution without a previous communication through the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut to the Government, in order that sufficient time might be afforded for the adoption of any precautionary measures to prevent hazard to the public tranquillity. The judgments of the Sudder Adawlut were declared final, except in cases in which the amount or value adjudged, exclusive of costs of suit, should exceed £5,000, or sicca rupees 43,103; in all which cases a further appeal would be open to His Majesty in Council, under the provisions of Regulation XVI. 1797.

Reg. XI. 1816.

REGULATION XXII.—1817.

Civil Judicature.

Special Powers vested in the Judge and Magistrate of Cuttack.

Reg. XXII. 1817. By this Regulation, power was given to the judge and magistrate of Cuttack, in consideration of the then disturbed state of the district, to remove and appoint native ministerial officers of his establishment, without reference to the provincial court.

REGULATION V.—1818.

Appointment of a Commissioner in Cuttack.

Reg. V. 1818.

CONSIDERATIONS connected with the state of Cuttack, and with the disturbances which had prevailed in various parts of it, rendered it expedient that the superintendence of the civil affairs of the district, judicial, revenue and commercial, should be vested temporarily in a commissioner, who should exercise, within the local limits of Cuttack, the functions which, under the existing Regulations, appertained to the provincial courts, and to the Boards of Revenue and Trade. This Regulation accordingly provided for the exercise of those authorities by the commissioner. The decisions of the commissioner in civil suits, whether regular or summary, were declared final, except in cases which, from their amount, would be appealable to His Majesty in Council.* In criminal cases, the reference to the Sudder Nizamut Adawlut was to take place as before. Authority was given to the judge and registrar, to hold their court, for the investigation of summary suits, regarding rent, or dis-possession in any part of the district of Cuttack; and it was likewise declared competent to the commissioner to employ the registrars or the assistance of the judge and magistrate, on local duties in the Territorial department, whenever such employment should appear calculated to promote the public service.

* See Note, p. 625.

PART III.

CIVIL JUDICATURE—MISCELLANEOUS REGULATIONS.

(A.)

RULES relative to EUROPEAN PUBLIC OFFICERS of GOVERNMENT.

Regulations.

I. I S T.

- XXXVIII. 1793.—The Company's European Servants forbidden to lend Money to Natives.
- | | | |
|-------|--------|---|
| VIII. | 1806.— | } Prosecution and Defence of Suits against European Public Officers of the |
| X. | 1806.— | |
| XVII. | 1813.— | } Modification of the Course prescribed by previous Regulations, for the |
| VIII. | 1825.— | |
| II. | 1814.— | Further Modification of the preceding Rules. |
| XXI. | 1814.— | Public Officers forbidden to appoint their Creditors to Situations under them. |
| VIII. | 1817.— | Further Modification of the Rules for Proceedings against European Public Officers. |
| VII. | 1823.— | The Company's European Public Servants prohibited from borrowing Money from Natives under their Authority. |
| VIII. | 1825.— | European Public Officers of Government forbidden to employ their private Servants in public Duties, or public Servants in private Duties. |

REGULATION XXXVIII.—1793.

The Company's European Servants forbidden to lend Money to Natives.

THE preamble to this Regulation stated first, that at an early period after the establishment of the British Government in India, the servants of the Company employed in the administration of justice and in the collection of revenue, had been prohibited from lending money to landholders, farmers and others concerned in the collection or payment of the revenue; that the object of this prohibition was to guard against the abuse of official power in transactions with individuals, subject to their control and authority.

Reg. XXXVIII.
1793.

It was stated that the above rule had been incorporated into the judicial regulations passed on the 5th July 1781, and had continued in force ever since.

The Regulation then declared, that judicial and revenue officers, and all covenanted servants of the Company, were prohibited lending money to proprietors or farmers of land or heir under tenants; and all such loans were declared not recoverable in any court of judicature.

REGULATIONS VIII. and X.—1806.

Prosecution and Defence of Suits against European Public Officers of the Government.

THE object of these Regulations is stated at much length in the preamble to the former of the two enactments, which relates to prosecutions against public officers in the executive departments of Government. Its provisions were extended generally to those of the judicial department by the latter enactment. The preamble to Regulation VIII. stated, that it had

Reg. VIII. & X.
1806.
(Rescinded by
Reg. XVII. 1813,
and by Reg. II.
1814.)

IV.

APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued.

Civil Judicature.

656 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

been intended by former enactments of the Legislature, to make provision for distinguishing between such acts as had been done by public officers, under the immediate orders and responsibility of the Government. concerning which suits instituted were to be considered "public suits," and defended at the public expense, and acts done in breach or opposition to the laws for which the public officers were to be left to defend themselves. Adverting to the statutes of 13 Geo. III. c. 63, sec. 33, and 33 Geo. III. c. 52, sec. 62, it observed, that individuals could not be expected, in all cases, to prosecute charges of the nature there specified, at their own risk and expense, in the supreme court at the Presidency; and when an accusation was preferred to any of the courts of judicature authorized to receive the same, or when public information was given to the local government of corruption, embezzlement, or other gross malversation, breach of trust or high misdemeanor by a public officer, justice required that an immediate investigation should be instituted, for the purpose of ascertaining whether such officer deserved any longer to be continued in the employment of the Company; and that in cases which might appear to require it, the provisions of the law should be carried into effect by a public prosecution in the supreme court of judicature; or if the charge should appear to be unfounded, that justice should be done to the character of the accused.

The Regulation then provided, that information should be given to Government of all suits or complaints preferred to the courts of justice against European public officers of the Government, and declared the various modes of proceeding which would be adopted according to the circumstances of the case; viz. either the appointment of a special commission to try the charge, or prosecution before the supreme court, or the investigation of the charge before the established courts of Adawlut.

REGULATION XVII.—1813.

Modification of the Course prescribed by previous Regulations for the Investigation of Charges against European Public Officers.

Reg. XVII. 1813.

THIS Regulation was passed to simplify the rules prescribed in Regulations VIII. and X. 1806, for the conduct of inquiries into charges of corruption or other gross misdemeanor preferred against European public officers, with a view to the more expeditious termination of such investigations.

It provided, that no such accusations or charges should be acted upon unless stated on oath, from the deponent's personal knowledge. It declared it to be the duty of every court of civil judicature, by whom such charges might be received, to examine the informant circumstantially, upon oath, and to transmit his examination to the Sudder Adawlut, who, if they should be of opinion that the charge was frivolous and vexatious, should merely inform the party that they did not see any substantial reason for entering further into the inquiry. If, on the contrary, they should see ground for a more formal investigation, they were to submit a report to the Governor-general in Council, together with a clear statement of the charges, reduced to distinct heads or articles, which they would propose to be made the regular subject of investigation. The Governor in Council would, thereupon, if he saw fit, appoint a special commission to try and report upon the case; and, on the receipt of their report and proceedings, the Governor-general in Council would pass such decision on the case as might appear to him most consonant to the principles of justice, and to the constitutional powers possessed by Government in matters of this description; and, if it appeared necessary, would give instructions to the law officers of Government, to institute a prosecution against the offender before the supreme court of judicature.*

REGULATION

* By Regulation VIII. 1825, power was given to the controlling authorities passing a final judgment or order in the case, if the accusation should be found manifestly unfounded and malicious, to punish the accuser by imprisonment, with or without labour and irons, for six months, and to fine, not exceeding 500 rupees, commutable to a further imprisonment of six months.

REGULATION II.—1814.

Further Modification of the preceding Rules.

THE course of proceeding laid down in Regulation VIII. of 1806, which prescribed to the Government the duty of determining, whether suits against public officers should be prosecuted in the ordinary courts, or how otherwise, having been found to occasion much delay in consequence of the necessary references to be made to public authorities, before the final determination could be made; it was enacted by the present Regulation, that whenever a court should receive a complaint against a public officer, for any act done in the discharge of his official duties, by which the party complaining deemed himself aggrieved, the court should transmit the petition to the Board having the controlling authority over the department to which the officer belonged, who, if they deemed the case to be one in which the party was entitled to redress, would report accordingly; or if they considered the case to be such as the party should be left to prosecute individually, were to inform the court who had made the reference what they should decide on the subject. The controlling Board were further to determine whether the defence of any suit instituted should be carried on in behalf of Government, or be left to the individual prosecuted.*

Civil Judicature
Reg. II. 1814.

REGULATION XXI.—1814.

Public Officers forbidden to appoint their Creditors to Situations under them.

THE preamble to this Regulation declared, that public inconvenience had been experienced from the European officers of the Government appointing their creditors to situations in their several departments. The Regulation accordingly forbade the practice, and charged the superintending Boards and courts with the duty of satisfying themselves fully, that natives recommended to fill vacancies on the establishment of the European public officers were not creditors, or the relatives and dependents of creditors of such public officers.

Reg. XXI. 1814.

REGULATION VIII.—1817.

Further Modification of the Rules for Proceedings against European Public Officers.

THE preamble declared, that such part of the provisions of Regulation XVII. 1813, as placed the superintendence of the proceedings held by Commissioners appointed under that Regulation in the superior Board or court of the department to which the proceedings related, and directed that such superior court or Board should submit the whole of the proceedings to the Governor-general in Council, with their opinion, whether any and what facts charged against the party appeared to have been established, might be productive of serious delay in the final termination of the case. The present Regulation, therefore, enacted, that whenever a special commission might be appointed under the provisions of Regulation XVII. 1813, for the investigation of charges exhibited against a public officer, the Governor-general in Council would determine whether the commission so appointed should be placed under the control of the courts or Boards, or should act immediately under the authority of Government, and under such instructions as they might issue in that behalf.

Reg. VIII. 1817.

It was provided, that in any case wherein the commissioners should entertain doubts on the meaning of any provision of a Regulation, they were to submit the point to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut for their determination. Commissions, which were to act without the supervision of intermediate authority, were in no case to consist of less than two persons, one of whom at least was to be selected from the Judicial department.

REGULATION

* By Reg. VIII. of 1816, the office of Remembrancer was established, for which see p. 613.

REGULATION VII.—1823.

The Company's European Public Servants prohibited from borrowing Money from Natives under their Authority.

Reg. VII. 1823.

FORMER Regulations having only prohibited the civil European officers of the Government from lending money to natives, the present enactment strictly prohibited all civil servants from borrowing money from native officers under their authority, or from zemindars, or from other proprietors, or from ryots, under pain of dismissal from office; and it prohibited all those persons from lending money to civil servants, under pain of forfeiting to Government a sum equal to the amount in which they might so illegally have become creditors. It further enacted, that if any civil servant should be so illegally indebted at the end of one year after the passing of this Regulation, he should make a report of the same to the Government, or failing to do so, should be liable to dismissal from office. Any person who might be thereafter appointed to office being so illegally in debt, who should not report the same to Government, was declared liable to the same penalty. Any native causing himself to be appointed to any office, in opposition to the provisions of Regulation XXI. 1814, was declared liable to forfeit to Government a sum equal to ten times the annual profit of the office to which he might have been so appointed. The penalties were declared recoverable in the provincial court of the district, subject to appeal to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut.

REGULATION VIII.—1825.

European Public Officers of Government forbidden to employ their private Servants in public Duties, or public Servants in private Duties.

Reg. VIII. 1825.

It had been enacted in Regulation II. 1793, that no collector should be permitted to employ his private servants, nor any persons except public and registered officers, in any part of their public duties, nor to confer on their public officers any private trust relating to their personal concerns. By the present Regulation the same rule was enjoined to all officers of Government, under a penalty of dismissal from office. All native servants who at the passing of this Regulation should be disqualified by the foregoing prohibitions, were to be immediately removed from office, and successors appointed; and in all future nominations, every public officer recommending a native was to state explicitly that such native was not disqualified under this Regulation.

PART. III.—CIVIL JUDICATURE—MISCELLANEOUS REGULATIONS—continued.

Civil Judicature.

(B.)

RULES relative to EUROPEANS not in the PUBLIC SERVICE.

Regulations.

LIST.

- XXVIII. 1793.—European British subjects not to reside more than ten miles from Calcutta.
XXXVIII. 1793.—Forbidding European British subjects from holding Land in the Provinces without the special sanction of Government.
XXXIII. 1795.—Rules relative to the Rent of Lands; the Cultivation and Manufacture of Indigo by European British subjects.
XX. 1812.—Allowing the Registry of Indigo Contracts.
VI. 1823.— } For the enforcement of Indigo Contracts.
V. 1824.— }
V. 1830.—Breach of Indigo Contracts declared punishable by Magistrates.

REGULATION XXVIII.—1793.

European British Subjects not to reside more than Ten Miles from Calcutta.

THE preamble to this Regulation stated, that although European British subjects residing in the interior could obtain redress against the natives of the country by application to the established courts, the natives could only obtain redress against European British subjects by suing them in the Supreme Court of Judicature at Calcutta; a process attended with so much difficulty and expense, that the manufacturers and cultivators of the soil were in fact wholly precluded from obtaining redress if wronged. As the prosperity of the country must depend upon the due protection of the industrious classes of the people, the present Regulation, with a view to remedy the evil above stated, enacted, that European British subjects (with the exception of the King's and the Company's civil and military servants) should not be permitted to reside at a greater distance from Calcutta than ten miles, unless they entered into a bond rendering themselves amenable to the civil court within the jurisdiction of which they should reside, in all civil suits for an amount or value not exceeding 500 rupees. Any European British subject residing within the jurisdiction of any zillah or city court more than ten miles from Calcutta, who should refuse to execute such bond when required, was to be ordered by the judge to quit his jurisdiction within one month from the date of the written order to that effect, which was to be served upon him; and in the event of his not complying with that order, the judge was to send him to Calcutta under charge of his officers.

Reg. XXVIII.
1793.

It was declared, that Europeans not British subjects, residing out of the limits of Calcutta, were amenable to the civil courts in the same manner as natives.

REGULATION XXXVIII.—1793.

Forbidding European British Subjects from holding Land in the Provinces, without the special sanction of Government.

THAT part of the preamble to this Regulation which related to European British subjects not public servants of the Government, stated that, from a regard to the prejudices of the natives and with a view to promote their ease and happiness, as well as to obviate obviate the evils which would necessarily result from allowing persons not amenable in common with the natives to the provincial courts of judicature, to purchase or rent estates without restriction or limitation, or to hold any land whatever, excepting for the erection of dwelling-houses or buildings for manufacturers or other commercial purposes, a rule had been early established, that no European should purchase or hold land out of the limits of Calcutta without the sanction of Government. This rule had been included in the Revenue Regulations passed on the 8th June 1787, and had remained in force ever since. The present Regulation was passed for the purpose of re-enacting those rules in the prescribed form with certain modifications.

Reg. XXXVIII.
1793.

Europeans, of whatever nation or description, were prohibited holding land out of Calcutta by purchase or otherwise, without the sanction of the local Government. Europeans possessing, renting or occupying lands without the sanction of the Governor-general in Council, were declared liable to be dispossessed at his discretion. It was declared that such Europeans as were not prohibited from lending money to proprietors of land, &c. on mortgage of an estate or a lease, should nevertheless not be allowed to have possession of the land, or to have any concern in the collections of the rents or revenues thereof.

The collectors were to depute their officers to measure all such ground as the Governor-general in Council might permit any Europeans to hold. They were likewise charged to report whenever any Europeans might possess themselves of land without such authority.

Annual statements of lands held by Europeans were to be sent by the collectors to the Board of Revenue by the 1st January.

REGULATION XXXIII.—1795.

Rules relative to the Rent of Lands, the Cultivation and Manufacture of Indigo by European British Subjects.

Reg. XXXIII.
1795.

Benares

THE preamble to this Regulation began by declaring, that the observance of the rule which prohibited Europeans from holding lands in the interior of the country, without the express permission of Government, appeared particularly necessary in the province of Benares. It stated, that the first engagements entered into by two Europeans to farm certain talooks for facilitating the raising of the plant, were made without the knowledge of the British Government, and as soon as they were discovered, the resident was ordered to dispossess the parties of their farms, but in consideration of the loss to which they would be thereby exposed, and of the benefit which might result to the province from the improvement of the indigo manufacture, they were permitted in 1790 to proceed. This permission led to several other persons establishing themselves between that period and 1794, at which time the attention of Government was attracted to many inconveniences and evils which had arisen in consequence, and it was ordered by the Government that Europeans should not be permitted to acquire landed property, or hold land on lease in Benares, beyond what might be sufficient for the erection of houses or buildings for carrying on their manufactures. Nevertheless, on consideration of a memorial from the planters, the Government consented to rescind that order, and to allow existing leases to continue to the expiration of the decennial settlement. The Regulation then recorded the rules and orders from time to time passed, the ultimate effect of which was to allow Europeans to enter into contracts, either with the persons who had engaged with the Government for the revenue, or with the putteedars or co-parceners of those persons, or with the khudcasht ryots (the cultivators with perpetual right of occupancy). The powers exercised under the former rules by the resident in respect to all such engagements, were declared to be transferred to the judges of the zillah and city courts.

REGULATION

REGULATION XX.—1812.

Allowing the Registry of Indigo Contracts.

THIS Regulation was enacted to improve the forms for the registry of deeds,* and to admit to such registry engagements for the delivery of indigo; also for the establishment of a separate register of obligations for the payment of money.

REGULATION VI.—1823.

For the Enforcement of Indigo Contracts.

THIS Regulation was enacted to afford relief to indigo manufacturers in Bengal, against the frauds to which they were exposed by cultivators, to whom advances of money and seed had been made upon a contract to receive the produce of a defined quantity of land on certain specified terms. No redress had been attainable in such cases except by regular suit, and the necessary delay attending that process had not unfrequently led to acts of violence and serious affrays. In the decision of such suits, also, much diversity of opinion had been found to exist in different judges as to the extent of the penalty recoverable on agreements between the indigo manufacturer and the cultivator. To remove these inconveniences, the Regulation enacted, that persons making advances to cultivators under written engagements for the cultivation of the indigo plant, and for the delivery of the produce, should be held to have a lien or interest in the indigo plant enforceable under the rules of this Regulation.

Reg. VI. 1823.
Bengal.

If a manufacturer should have cause to complain that a person with whom he had engaged for the delivery of indigo was evading his contract, or had entered into engagements to deliver the same produce to other persons, he might present a petition of complaint to the zillah judge, who would immediately issue a summons for the attendance of the cultivator; and would also cause a bamboo to be erected on the ground where the plant was growing, as a public notice of the claim preferred, with a view that all persons desirous of contesting the plaintiff's claim or establishing a prior right to the produce, might appear before the court. If no person appeared to contest the claim, the case was to be decided ex parte; if the defendant or any third party appeared, judgment was to be given in favour of the party whose right should be established on the inquiry before the judge. If the engagement appeared to have been compulsorily obtained or if the claim was unfounded, the court were to dismiss the case with costs, and might adjudge reasonable compensation to the defendant. If a claim were preferred to the same produce by another party, the judge was summarily to investigate the respective claims, and determine which had the prior and better title; preference in all cases being given to engagements duly registered under the provisions of Regulation XX. 1812, before such as were not so registered. Whenever it might appear that the plant, being ripe, would be injured if it were not cut before the decision of the summary inquiry, the judge was authorized to pass an order for the delivery of the plant, at his discretion, to either of the parties, on an engagement to pay a pecuniary compensation, to be fixed by the judge, to the other party, in the event of the decision of the case being ultimately made in favour of the latter.

When a summary award might have been passed under the provisions of this Regulation, the party in whose favour it had been given might set a watch over the crop, and if necessary, might require the assistance of the police to prevent the removal of the plant. With the view, however, of protecting the rights of the landholders, it was declared that persons who should possess themselves of the produce under the provisions of this Regulation, should should be held responsible conjointly with the ryot for any arrear of rent which should accrue on the ground whereon such plant had been grown.

* See Reg. XXXVI. 1793, p. 603.

In cases in which a ryot having received advances under written engagements should have failed to fulfil those engagements, or have sold the produce to others, the aggrieved party might at his option institute either a summary or regular suit; if the summary suit were resorted to, the defendant might be decreed to repay the advance with interest and costs. In a regular suit, the aggrieved party might prosecute both the cultivator and the party to whom the produce had been sold or delivered, who might be adjudged jointly and severally answerable for the full amount of the penalty, with all costs and charges.

The summary suits under this Regulation might either be tried by the judge, or referred to the collector or the registrar. In cases referred to the collector, that officer was to pass a final decision. No appeal was to lie from the summary decision under this Regulation, either of the judge or the collector or registrar. Any person, however, whose claim under a deed of engagement had been set aside, or who was otherwise dissatisfied with the summary decision, might institute a regular suit for the establishment of any claim or interest to which he might deem himself entitled. The Regulation concluded with a declaration regarding the stamps to be used, which were to be regulated by the amount advanced as the consideration for entering into the agreement.*

REGULATION V.—1830.

Breach of Indigo Contracts declared punishable by Magistrates.

Reg. V. 1830.

By this Regulation, enacted for the more effectual enforcement of engagements relative to the cultivation and delivery of the indigo plant, it was enacted, that all persons who had instigated ryots to evade the performance of their engagements might be sued and adjudged answerable for the amount of the penalty and costs conjointly with the contracting ryot. Power was given to magistrates to convict persons who had received advances and entered into written engagements, but who had refused to sow or cultivate the ground, and to sentence them to imprisonment, not exceeding one month for the first offence, and two months for a repetition. The magistrate might also compel the defaulter to sow or cultivate the ground according to his agreement. Persons wilfully damaging indigo crops were declared punishable by the magistrate with six months' imprisonment and thirty rattans, or a fine not exceeding two hundred rupees, commutable to six months' further imprisonment. Zillah judges were authorized to receive applications from persons who had completed their engagements to be released from their obligations. The judges were in such cases to make summary inquiry, and if no balance was due from the petitioner, or if he paid into court any balance that might be due, the judge was to declare him released; if the proprietor of the factory refused to receive the amount tendered, the money was to be returned to the petitioner, and the proprietor was to be left to seek his remedy by a regular suit.

* This Regulation was extended to the Ceded and Conquered Provinces by Regulation V. 1834.

PART III.—CIVIL JUDICATURE—MISCELLANEOUS REGULATIONS—
continued.

(C.)

APPOINTMENT and REMOVAL of NATIVE PUBLIC SERVANTS in all DEPARTMENTS.

Regulations.

LIST.

V.	1804.—	} Appointment and Removal of Native Ministerial Officers.
II.	1813.—
VIII.	1809.—

REGULATION V.—1804.

Appointment and Removal of Native Ministerial Officers.

THE Preamble to this Regulation stated, that for the purpose of insuring a faithful, able, and diligent discharge of the important duties assigned to the natives in the several public offices of the Judicial and other departments, it was necessary that they should be secured in the possession of their offices, so long as they should discharge their duties with diligence, ability, and integrity; that the selection of persons to fill such offices should be made with due regard to character and qualification, and that they should not be liable to removal without proof of incapacity or misconduct. That although these objects had been provided for in regard to some principal native officers, it had not been so with regard to others. This Regulation therefore enacted, that the appointment, resignation, and removal of the head ministerial officers in the civil and criminal courts, as well as in the Revenue and other departments of Government, should not be at the discretion of the courts or public officers under whom they might be serving, but should have the previous sanction of the Governor-general in Council. The Regulation directed, that whenever the authorities under whom any such officers held their appointments might see cause for the removal of any officer, they should communicate to them the grounds upon which he might be considered undeserving of continuance in his station, and call upon him to state what he might have to offer in his defence; after which they should submit through the Sudder Dewanny or Nizamut Adawlut, Board of Revenue or Trade, or other controlling authority under whom they acted, a statement of the case, with copy and translation of the native officer's defence, and all material proceedings and documents for the consideration and orders of the Governor in Council. The court or board were to accompany the reference with their opinion on the case.

The foregoing rules regarding the cause of investigation and report were declared applicable to cauzees and law officers, not being head officers, employed on the establishments of the zillah and provincial courts. Native collectors, or others whose salary amounted to ten rupees per mensem, but whose removal or appointment by the Governor-general in Council was not provided for, were not to be removed without a similar report to the Sudder Adawlut, Board of Revenue or Trade, or other controlling authority of the department in which they served, and without their previous sanction and orders.*

REGULATION

* By Regulation II. 1813, native treasurers and collectors of the revenue were declared amenable to punishment before the courts of circuit for perverting to their own use the public money entrusted to their charge.

REGULATION VIII.—1809.

THE Preamble to this Regulation stated, that the observance of the rules of Regulation V. 1804, requiring a reference to the Governor in Council, before the removal or appointment of the principal ministerial native officers in the several departments of Government, had been found productive of considerable labour and occupation of the time of Government, to the interruption of other business of importance; that the objects stated in the preamble to Regulation V. 1804, might be as effectually obtained, with some modification of the requisition for a full report of proceedings, by transferring to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, and the provincial courts, and the Boards of Revenue and Trade, the power of confirming the appointment, resignation, and removal of such native officers, with exception, however, of the law officers of the courts of Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut, whose appointment and removal, from the nature of their functions, ought still to be reserved to the Government. The Regulation accordingly enacted, that the appointment and removal of the law officers of the provincial, zillah and city courts, and of the zillah and city cauzees, should be vested in the Sudder Adawlut; and those of the native ministerial officers of zillah and city courts in the provincial courts; and those in the Revenue and Commercial departments, in the controlling Boards of those departments respectively; provided that no alteration in the general distribution of duties, nor any addition to the fixed establishment should be made without the special sanction of Government.

(2.)

CRIMINAL JUDICATURE.

L I S T.

LEGISLATION.

Sketch of the General Principles of the Mahomedan Criminal Law	Page 666
--	-----	-----	-------------

PART I.

GENERAL.

(A.)—Appointment, Powers, and Duties of Magistrates in the Apprehension and Committal of Offenders, and in punishing certain Offences	678
(B.)—Constitution and Jurisdiction of the Courts of Circuit and Commissioners of Circuit	692
(C.)—Constitution and Jurisdiction of the Sudder Nizamut Adawlut	698
(D.)—General Rules for the Administration of Criminal Justice, and Modifications of the Mahomedan Law	699

PART II.

POLICE.

Regulations for the Establishment and Maintenance of an effective Police	713
--	-----	-----	-----	-----

PART III.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Regulations for checking Superstitious Practices, &c. &c.	727
---	-----	-----	-----	-----

N. B.—For the Special Regulations for Benares, the Ceded and Conquered Provinces, &c.—see CIVIL JUSTICE.

CRIMINAL JUDICATURE—LEGISLATION.

SKETCH of the GENERAL PRINCIPLES of the MAHOMEDAN CRIMINAL LAW.

LIST.

Preliminary Remarks.

Principles of Punishment.

First Class of Judicial Retribution—Retaliation (Kisās)—Compensation or the Price of Blood (Deyut).

Second Class of Judicial Retribution—Specific Penalties (Hudd).

Third Class of Judicial Retribution—Penal Correction (Tazeer)—Punishment for Example (Seasut).

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

Preliminary Remarks.

WHEN the British Government succeeded to the administration of justice in the provinces of Bengal, Bahar, and Orissa, they found Mahomedan criminal law established, and well known to the people, and Mahomedan lawyers trained to its study and its execution. Indeed, when the officers of the British Government first took their seats on the judicial bench, it was in character of assessors to the kazees under the Mahomedan rule, and to see that they performed their duty. Thus mixed up with the administration of Mahomedan law, when the British Government made provision for the establishments of courts of criminal justice, the modification of that law was the most simple and the most popular mode of proceeding.

The Mahomedan law is based on the Koran, all the precepts of which, as construed by the highest legal authorities, are deemed imperative on the judge. But the precepts of the prophet could not comprehend all the cases to which the varied circumstances of life give rise. The Koran therefore, though the chief, was an insufficient rule of itself.

The judgments and opinions of Mahomed being paramount to all other authority, his sayings, as recorded by his companions and followers, and by those who received them by oral tradition from his contemporaries, have been collected together in various tracts, and form a second authority of the Mahomedan law.

Next in weight are esteemed the concurrent opinions and judgments of those who enjoyed the benefit of personal communication with Mahomed, on subjects on which no saying of the prophet himself is to be found. Reports of such opinions exist in considerable numbers, and form the third authority for the guidance of Mahomedan lawyers.

Failing all these, the judge is permitted to exercise his own judgment, under the guidance of analogy, and to apply the best principles to the case before him.

Very large collections of decided cases have been made and are diligently studied by Mahomedan lawyers.

It is known that the disputes respecting the succession to the Khalifat created a schism or division, which subsists to this day, between those who consider the succession of Aboo Buecr to have been proper, who are styled "Soonies," and are considered the orthodox party; and those who hold that Ali was the lawful successor of Mahomed, and are styled "Shiyyas."

"Shi'as." The consequence of this division is, that each party attaches credit to the traditionists, respectively, as they are "Soonies" or "Shi'as." The Mahomedan rulers of India were "Soonies."

It may be fairly allowed that the Arabian jurisprudence is a science of great extent, and the study of it calculated to produce acute reasoners; and it must in justice be added, that many of the law officers of the highest rank in our Indian courts have proved able judges.

Sir William Jones, in speaking of two Mussulman authors who wrote on the law of inheritance, says,* "Their compositions have equal authority in all the Mahomedan courts, which follow the system of Aboo Hanifah, with those of Littleton and Coke in the courts of Westminster; and there is indeed a wonderful analogy between the works of the old Arabian and English lawyers, and between those of their several commentators; with this difference in favour of our own country, that Littleton is always too clear to need a gloss; and with this difference in favour of the Arabs, that the sole object of Sharif was to explain and illustrate his text, without any ostentatious display of his own erudition." The lawyer Aboo Hanifah, of whom Sir W. Jones spoke in the passage above quoted, and his two disciples Yusuf and Mahomed, are the chief authorities on the criminal law, according to whose opinions the futwas † of the law officers in the Company's courts in India, are by the Regulations required to be given.‡ In the same work from which the foregoing quotation was made, the following passage is to be found:—"This may be no improper place to inform the reader, that although Aboo Hanifah be the acknowledged head of the prevailing sect, and has given his name to it, yet so great veneration is shown to Aboo Yusuf, and the lawyer Muhammed, that when they both dissent from their master, the Mussulman judge is at liberty to adopt either of the two decisions, which may seem to him more consonant to reason, and founded on the better authority."

As a system, the Mahomedan criminal law is mild; for, though some of the punishments which it sanctions be barbarous and cruel, yet not only is the infliction of them rarely rendered compulsory on the magistrate, but the law seems to have been framed with more care to provide for the escape of criminals, than to found conviction on sufficient evidence, and to secure the adequate punishment of offenders.

When it is considered that the commands and sayings of Mahomed can only embrace a part of the cases that come for adjudication before a criminal tribunal; that the authenticity of many traditions is disputed; that the application of a rule to a case must be frequently open to dispute, it will not be matter of surprise that the rules laid down in the works of learned Mussulmans on the classification of crimes, under various circumstances, should exhibit important differences; and that the futwas or judgments of the native lawyers of India, in applying tradition, analogy, and precedent to the cases laid before them, should frequently be inconsistent with the views of enlightened Europeans.

The difficulties and uncertainties in the construction and application of the law were not the only points which early embarrassed the administration of it under British rule. Some of its principles were manifestly unjust and absurd; the means provided for giving effect to its sanctions were inefficient; the inferior judges were venal and corrupt, and the control of the Nazim,§ or chief criminal judge, was weak and partial.

Succeeding to the administration of justice in a country where such a system was in operation, with such instruments to be employed, and such aids to be obtained, Mr. Hastings endeavoured, as early as 1772, to remedy the most glaring of the existing evils, by substituting merciful punishments for mutilation and torture; by making the public good,

* See Sir William Jones's Translation of Al-Sirajiyah, Preface, page 3.

† Decisions, judgments.

‡ See Reg. IX. 1793.

§ The chief officer of criminal justice, who was the governor of the province or soobah.

good, not individual satisfaction or revenge, the principle and measure of public punishments; and by placing the general control in the hands of the British Government.

In 1773 it was declared by the Supreme Council of Bengal, that the sovereign power in every Mahomedan state reserved to itself the right of interposing its authority, to prevent abuses of the law, and to provide a remedy for extraordinary evils; and in conformity with these principles, the Governor-general assumed a general control over the administration of criminal justice, which he exercised for eighteen months, till April 1775, when the superintendence was transferred again to the representative of the Mahomedan governor, the Naib * Nazim, under whom criminal justice was administered in the provinces by Mahomedan judges styled Darogahs. The English judges of the civil courts were constituted magistrates in 1781, but their power did not extend beyond the apprehending and committing of criminals. In 1781 the powers of collector, judge, and magistrate, were united in the same persons, and they were authorized to punish for petty offences, but all crimes of magnitude continued exclusively cognizable by the Naib Nazim and his subordinate officers.

In this state remained the administration of the criminal law until the Government of Lord Cornwallis, who, with a view to ascertain the nature and causes of the defects still existing in the constitution and proceedings of the criminal courts, directed certain inquiries to be made of the magistrates in the several districts, the result of which he laid before the Council on the 1st December 1790, with suggestions for the amendment of the most glaring and important defects: first, in the Mahomedan law itself; secondly, in the constitution of the courts established for the trial of offenders. His Lordship argued the competence of the British Government to amend the law, as might appear essentially necessary, from the recognition by Parliament of the propriety of the modifications introduced in 1772, and the subsequent passing of the Act 13 Geo. III. chap. 63, vesting extensive powers of control and management in the Governor-general and Council of Bengal.

The alterations proposed in the law were, 1st. That the criminality of homicide should be judged of, not by the weapon or means used, but by the intention of the slayer, however discoverable. 2d. That the heirs of a murdered person should not be allowed to remit the punishment of the murderer. 3d. That imprisonment, hard labour, and fine should be substituted for mutilation of limb.

The defects in the administration arising from the constitution of the courts were, that the tribunals before which the prisoners were tried were at so great a distance from the superior court, who were to confirm the sentence, that the lower courts might and did so draw their proceedings as to lead to whatever result they desired, however inconsistent with justice; and that delay and detention of prisoners operated both to oppress the innocent, and to weaken the effect of punishment. The rules framed to correct these evils were promulgated in 1790, and were re-enacted in the form of a "Regulation" in 1793.†

PRINCIPLES OF PUNISHMENT.

Principles of Punishment.

THE Mahomedan law declares punishment applicable to penal offences, according to three principles of judicial retribution.

First Principle.

RETALIATION is due to the injured party, or his heirs or representatives, for wilful homicide and severe bodily injury; or if equal retaliation be impossible, then compensation must be made in money. Such retribution, however, being the right of the heirs of the slain, it may be claimed or remitted by them.

* Second

* Deputy.

† Regulation IX. 1793: see Preamble, head "Magistrates."

Second Principle.

PARTICULAR punishments having been prescribed in the Koran for specific offences, namely, whoredom, slander of whoredom, drinking wine, theft, and robbery, in vindication of "the right of God" or public justice, those punishments are to be inflicted by the magistrate only; and whether claimed or not by the party injured, who has no power to remit or compound them.

Third Principle.

THE retaliation and the punishments which are to be adjudged under the foregoing heads being subject to many legal "impediments" created either by a defect of certain requisite characteristics to constitute the full crime, or by compromise between the parties, or by some particular in the relation which the injurer and the injured bear to each other, or by some insufficiency in the evidence; and many offences not being at all provided for under either of the two preceding heads, some of which are of so heinous a character as to require capital punishment, and others of a lower degree of criminality.—some of private, others of public detriment—it seemed necessary that a discretionary powery should be vested in the sovereign or his representative, to inflict adequate punishment in all such cases, extending even to death itself when requisite, in vindication of "the right of God or of the individual" injured, and in support of public justice.

FIRST CLASS OF JUDICIAL RETRIBUTION.

RETALIATION (KISÂS).—COMPENSATION OR THE PRICE OF BLOOD (DEYUT).

First Class —
Retaliation.

RETALIATION is declared to be due for homicide, and for severe bodily injury not causing death, both of which are included in the Arabic term, jinâyât.

Kisâs. Deyut.
Jinâyât.

I.—RETALIATION FOR HOMICIDE.

HOMICIDE is considered as justifiable, or culpable.

Kutl.

Justifiable Homicide. (Kutl-i-mobah)

Homicide is declared justifiable in the following cases:

Justifiable Homicide.
Kutl-i-mobah.

1st,—In prosecution of war against hostile infidels, for the advancement of Islam, or in support of a Mussulman community.

2d,—Of an apostate from the faith of Islam, who, after being duly called upon, may persist in his apostacy.

3d,—Of an insurgent against the rightful Imam, when slain in the act of insurrection, or of open resistance to the established government.

4th,—Of a condemned criminal, by order of the khazee or magistrate authorized to pass sentence of death.

5th,—Of a murderer liable to retaliation, if killed by a person legally entitled thereto, or by his express direction, although sentence of retaliation may not have been passed by the kazee.

6th,—In self-defence or in defence of another, if life be endangered or be thought in danger from the assault of a person having a drawn sword, or other mortal weapon, provided self-defence be manifestly unattainable without killing the aggressor.

7th,—In preservation of property from theft or robbery.

iv. 4 Q

8th,—In

8th.—In prevention of adultery, rape, or other offences of a heinous nature, being chiefly such as by the Mahomedan law are punishable with death.

9th.—The killing another at his express desire or command.

10th.—By compulsion, under menaces which induce a fear of death; in this case it is held by some authorities that the penalty of retaliation is transferred to the compeller.

In several of the instances of justifiable homicide given above, the slayer, according to some opinions, is liable to pay the fine of blood, or to discretionary punishment.

It may be observed generally, that a variety of questions arise on the application of the principle to specific instances under each of these heads; and that, generally, to reduce a case within justifiable homicide, the necessity of prompt execution, without reference, must be fairly inferrible from the circumstances; otherwise, resort ought to be had to the public authority to punish.

Culpable Homicide.

Culpable Homicide.

The Mahomedan law distinguishes five sorts of culpable homicide, of which the first only entitles to retaliation.

Kutl-i-umd.

1st. "Wilful homicide."—The voluntary act of a responsible person (i. e. of one who is adult and sane), done with a murderous intention, inferred from the use of a weapon likely to produce death. Within this definition is brought the death of a person whom one has wilfully wounded with a deadly weapon, if the wound occasion death, though death was not intended; also the case of one wilfully disabled, so as to be constantly bedridden until death. The punishment of this crime is retaliation of death, and exclusion from inheritance to the property of the slain.

Shibah-i-umd.

2d. "Wilful-like homicide."—The voluntary act of a responsible person, causing death by using a weapon not likely to produce death, the blood of the person slain being "under protection."

A great nicety of distinction arises, and a vast variety of cases are cited, in which the distinction has been settled into precedent, as to what is "wilful murder," subjecting the offender to retaliation, and what "wilful-like," which incurs only the fine of blood.

It being declared by the law that the intention of the slayer is to be inferred from the instrument used, different authorities have concluded differently, as to the power of the means employed, ex. gr. in the case of water and fire, in reference to the possibility of escape from them, &c. A singular instance of the reasoning used in the application of this principle occurs in regard to death by poison. It is held by the best authorities, that the design to kill is not inferrible from the administration of poison, because poison is occasionally administered medicinally, and it is possible that the person who gave it may not have been aware that the quantity was excessive. It must, however, be remarked, that although, by this sort of reasoning, a crime may be taken out of a specific class of punishment by the doubt raised, it is still left to the cognizance of the magistrate, under the third principle, who may deal with it according to sound discretion. The principle on which legislation in India has proceeded, has been to use that "discretion" by declaring of punishments, to be inflicted according to rules laid down in the code of judicial regulations.

The punishment for this second species of homicide is a fine of a hundred camels, or if commuted to a money payment, 1,000 denars, a sum variously estimated from about £250 to about £350. To the above are added expiation and exclusion from inheritance.

Kutl-i-khutá.

3d. "Homicide by error."—The "errors" which characterize this offence are of two kinds.

First,—In the instrument producing an effect not intended or foreseen by the agent; as when an arrow shot at a mark hits a man. If an arrow shot at one person person pass through him, and afterwards kill another, the homicide is wilful as regards the first, and erroneous as regards the second.

Second,—In the apprehension of the agent; as when one shoots at what he apprehends to be a deer, but which proves to be a man; or when a Mussulman kills another Mussulman whom he took to be a hostile infidel.

The punishment is the same as for wilful-like homicide.

4th. "Homicide by an involuntary act," as by falling on a person from the roof of a house; accidentally dropping any thing on another, &c.

Kutl-i-kacem mo-
kam-i-klutá.

Punishment the same as for wilful-like homicide.

5th. "Homicide by an intervenient cause."—When a person, by doing an illegal act, produces a cause which occasions the death of another; as if a man digs a well in ground not belonging to him, which is a transgression, and another falls into the well and is killed.

Kutl-ba-subub.

The punishment is fine; but expiation is not incumbent, nor is the offender excluded from inheritance of the deceased.

Of the Circumstances requisite to the Enforcement of Retaliation, and those which exclude or bar it.

Retaliation is either of death, for murder; or of mutilation, for bodily injury.

Retaliation of Death.

The first requisite for retaliation is that the person killed be under perpetual "protection." The Mahomedan lawyers call a country which is governed by a Mahomedan power, "the seat of peace," and a country ruled by a prince of any other religion, "the seat of hostility," and such countries are always virtually in a state of warfare with each other. When an alien visits a Mahomedan country, his residence there is only tolerated for a certain time, and for the benefit of commerce, &c. His permanent continuance can be only as a slave, or as a "zimnee," that is, a protected alien, subject to the payment of the capitation tax; in the latter character he becomes entitled to perpetual protection, and his death by wilful murder would subject the slayer to retaliation.

The requisites to support claim for Retaliation.

The British possessions in India are held by Mahomedan lawyers to be "the seat of peace," on account of the virtually acknowledged sovereignty of the King of Delhi, in whose name the coin is struck; the sanctioned administration of the Mahomedan law; and the appointment of kazees for the performance of part of the duties prescribed by it.

If the person slain was under permanent protection, the slayer is equally liable to retaliation, whether the party slain was a Mussulman or a zimnee, the slave of another (not the slayer's), or free, a woman or a man, an infant or of mature age, sound in body and mind, or sick, dismembered, blind, lame, or insane; for in all these cases the equality of protection, which is a requisite for retaliation, existed between the slayer and the slain; but a Mussulman may not be put to death for a "moostamin," that is, an alien in a state of enmity, who has only temporary protection during a limited residence in a Mahomedan country.

Retaliation is not incurred by a parent, or by any paternal or maternal ancestor, for the murder of a child or lineal descendant; in consequence of a specific declaration to that effect in the Koran, and in consideration of the slain having derived existence from the slayer.

Retaliation being the right of the heir, it cannot be awarded against a master for the murder of his slave, for the master would be the only person entitled to demand it, nor for the murder of his child's slave, because the claim for retaliation would accrue to the child against the father, and the enforcement of such a right is forbidden, out of regard to paternity. If the slave were the joint property of the murderer and others, the other owners could not claim retaliation, for their right is not entire, and retaliation of death does not admit of being inflicted in part only.

If a murder be committed by several, one of whom is legally exempt, retaliation is barred against the whole; but if none can claim exemption, then the analogy of equality, which would require that one be put to death for the murder of one, is abandoned in favour of a more approved construction of law, namely, that each individual concerned is as if he alone had committed the act, and the requisite equality being thus established, retaliation is incurred. Another reason assigned for the application of this principle is, because murder is often committed by a number, and one of the purposes of retaliation is to deter others, that the lives of mankind may be in security. The doctrine further rests on a dictum of Omar. An infant's or an idiot's right to claim retaliation belongs to the father.

If a murdered person leave no heir, the kaze, as the representative of the sovereign, may enforce retaliation.

If two persons jointly strike another, one with a mortal weapon, the use of which characterizes wilful murder, and the other with a weapon not likely to inflict death, retaliation is barred against both; but the fine of blood is payable in equal shares in the following manner: one half of it is to be exacted from the offender who struck with the mortal weapon, because in all cases in which fine is not the prescribed punishment, but a commutation, the fine is due from the property of the offender; and the other half is to be exacted from the *akilah of the offender, who struck with the weapon not deadly, because specific fines for offences are due from the akilah.

Several curious cases are stated of divided responsibility, arising out of the application of the principles above stated, which cannot fail to produce consequences inconsistent with justice.

Retaliation being the right of the heir or representative of the slain, it is permitted to the heir to forego the claim altogether, or to commute it for a fine of whatever amount the parties may agree upon. If several persons are entitled to retaliation for the same murder, and one of them forgive or compound, the others are bound thereby, and cannot claim retaliation, though they are severally entitled to their respective shares of the fine. But if a man murder two persons, and the heirs of one forgive him, the heirs of the other may claim retaliation. If the offender be put to death for one murder, the heirs of the other murdered person cannot claim the fine of blood. If a murderer condemned to retaliation become insane before execution, he is not to be put to death, but his property is answerable for the fine of blood.

II.—RETALIATION FOR BODILY INJURY.

Retaliation for Bodily Injury.

MAIMING and other injuries not affecting life, entitle the party injured, in certain cases, to retaliation, in others to pecuniary compensation. An injury to the person entitling to retaliation must be wilful, and admitting of equality in the retribution. The intention is judged of by the circumstances exhibited in evidence, not as in wilful homicide, by the weapon or instrument used; because the destruction of a limb or member may be intended or effected by any instrument, as an eye may be put out by a small rod as effectually as by a weapon.

Equality must exist in the condition of the person injured, and the person to be retaliated upon; and there must be a certainty that the consequences of the retaliation will not be more severe than those of the original injury. On these principles retaliation

* By the Institutes of Mahomed, persons enrolled as soldiers or otherwise in the public service are answerable in fines for each other; for persons not in the public service, their families or neighbours were answerable, under certain rules, which are supposed, however, to have been intended to have operation only in Arabia, and which at all events have never been considered of force in India. The responsible persons were termed Akilah.

cannot be claimed, if one party be a man, the other a woman, or one a slave, the other free; nor is the right limb to be amputated for the left, nor a sound member for an unsound, nor are dismemberments to be made except at the joint, because of the difficulty of maintaining equality, and the danger of life.

Personal injuries which do not admit of retaliation, are punishable by fine; the amount of which, in some cases of heavy injury wilfully inflicted is specifically fixed.

It is competent to the injured party to forego or compound the retaliation, and to remit the fine.

Of the Evidence necessary to the Infliction of the Penalties under the first head of Judicial Retribution.

The Mahomedan law prefers confessions before all other evidence; but to found a conviction of murder, the confession must declare the deadly act to have been wilful. What- Evidence.
ever may be stated in explanation, is to be taken as part of the confession.

If the prisoner plead 'not guilty' to a charge of murder, the evidence requisite to establish it so as to warrant a sentence of retaliation, is the positive testimony of two competent eye-witnesses of ascertained or apparent credit. The testimony of slaves, denied the property of their masters, is not admissible in any case; as their state of bondage precludes them from exercising any act of authority, which the delivery of evidence is considered to be. The testimony of women is also not admitted to prove a charge of wilful homicide, on the ground of a tradition, that in the time of the prophet and his two immediate successors, it was an invariable rule to exclude the evidence of women in all cases involving either Kisas or Hudd. In cases of homicide not wilful, as in all other cases wherein specific punishment or retaliation is not incurred, the evidence of one man and two women is received as equivalent to that of two men. But if the person accused be a Mussulman, it is requisite that the witnesses against him be also of the same religion. The testimony of zimmees or infidel subjects, with respect to each other, is admissible, although they be of different religions. The evidence of a Mussulman is also valid against a zimme, and the testimony of both has validity against an infidel moostamin or protected stranger. But the evidence of the latter is invalid against any person except one of his own countrymen, who is also a protected alien. Convicted slanderers, atrocious criminals, and persons of known bad principles or character, are not admitted to be sufficient witnesses, from want of credit. And the testimony of near relations or connexions, such as father and son, grandfather and grandson, husband and wife, master and slave, in favour of each other, is not admissible, in consideration of their relative interests."

SECOND CLASS OF JUDICIAL RETRIBUTION.

SPECIFIC PENALTIES (HUDD).

The specific penalties ordained by the law to be inflicted for certain offences in vindication of the "right of God" or public justice, can only be enforced by the sovereign or his representative; they admit of no discretion in their application, when all the circumstances required for their infliction are found to concur. But the requisites to complete conviction are so many and various, that they can rarely be found together; and in regard to one of the crimes amenable to Hudd, namely, whoredom, there is a tradition of the prophet, which can scarce ever fail to save an offender, if the magistrate choose to allow its full influence, namely, "Seek a pretence to prevent punishment according to your ability."

Specific penalties, amounting in some cases to capital punishment, are ordained for five several offences:

1st. Whoredom. 2d. Drinking Wine. 3d. Slander of Whoredom. 4th. Secret Theft. 5th. Open Robbery.

1st. Zina.—

674 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

1st. Zina.—Whoredom.

To constitute the crime, it is necessary that the act should have been committed by a Mussulman married, sane, free and of mature age, with a woman in whom the man has no right either by marriage or bondage. The punishment is barred by the existence of any doubt on the question of right, or by any conception in the mind of the accused that the woman was lawful to him, and by his alleging such conception as his excuse.

To the establishment of the crime by evidence, the positive testimony of four men, of ascertained credit, is requisite; if less than four competent witnesses bear evidence, they are liable to the punishment of slander, unless the accused subsequently confess; if any witness retract, his testimony is no longer valid.

The confession requisite to establish the charge must be made by a person of sound mind and mature age, at four different times, at four different sittings of the kazee, who is directed to turn the party away, without receiving the confession until the fourth time, and is authorized to suggest a denial or the mention of circumstances which may exculpate or absolve from the legal penalty.

The punishment for the offence, when legally established in all its points, by confession or evidence, is lapidation. If the offender be not a Mussulman, or be unmarried, then the punishment is one hundred stripes; if he be a slave, fifty* stripes. The punishment is the same for the woman as the man. If the charge have been established by the evidence of witnesses, they are required to commence the stoning, which is to be continued by the imam or kazee and concluded by the bystanders. If the conviction be founded upon the confession of the party, the imam or kazee is to begin the stoning, and the people present are to finish it. Scourging is directed to be inflicted with the greatest leniency; and the magistrate may add banishment or imprisonment for a limited period.

Confession may, at any time, be retracted, even during the infliction of punishment, and the party must then be set free. A conviction cannot be founded partly on confession, partly on evidence.

Besides the particulars above enumerated, a great variety of circumstances are stated in the books, which may prevent the conviction or the punishment, especially in reference to the character of the witnesses, and the nature and consistency of their evidence.

2d. Shoorb.—Drunkenness.

Shoorb.

This crime consists in drinking wine or other fermented liquor, especially of grapes, dates, and raisins, to intoxication. Considerable difference of opinion appears to exist in regard to certain liquors, whether they are exempted or not; also whether the taking of some liquors, if not to intoxication, be prohibited. To render a person liable to punishment he must be a Mussulman, adult, sane, and capable of speech. The crime may be established by confession when the party is sober. Retraction will exempt from punishment. The testimony of two witnesses is necessary to establish it by evidence; the offender must be seized while yet affected by or smelling of the liquor.

The punishment for a free man or woman is eighty stripes, and for a slave forty.

3d. Kazif.—Slander of Whoredom.

Kazif.

This crime is defined to be the false imputation of whoredom to a Mahomedan man or woman of good reputation, free, chaste, and adult; the proof that the offence imputed had actually been committed, discharges the accused. It is necessary that the party injured should himself prosecute, because in this case the right of the individual is blended with the public right. The proof may consist in the confession of the accused, which he is not permitted to retract if once made, or in the evidence of two credible male witnesses. The prescribed punishment is eighty stripes for a free person, and forty for a slave. The ten

* The punishment of a slave is, by a general rule, half that of a free person.

timony of a person punished for slander is for ever after inadmissible; the slanderer of a deceased person may be prosecuted, if it can be shown that the slander affects the living; lapse of time does not prevent the prosecution, as it does for whoredom and drunkenness.

4th. Surikāh-i-soghra.—Secret Larceny by Stealth.

This offence is defined to consist in a sane and adult person, wrongfully and furtively, taking the undoubted property of another, such property being in due custody, and of the value of not less than three dirms. The "custody" requisite to constitute the crime is of two kinds—of place—of person: 1st. Custody of place is when the property is in a house or other receptacle, generally used for preserving the property; and to constitute the offence, the thing stolen must be taken away from such place; 2d. Custody of person is when the property is within sight of the possessor, whether on a road or plain, and whether the keeper be asleep or awake. The crime is complete if the property be seized by the robber, though it be not carried away; and the personal custody is perfect, whether the possession of the property by the holder be absolute and permanent, or delegated and temporary. The crime may be established by confession, or by the evidence of two credible male witnesses. If a confession be retracted, the infliction of specific punishment will be stayed; but this will not prevent the restoration of the property. In giving evidence, both the prosecutor and witnesses are permitted to use such terms as may secure the right of the owner, without subjecting the party accused to the infliction of the prescribed punishment.

The penalty for a first offence is the amputation of the right hand, and for a second offence, that of the left foot. If the crime be further repeated, the criminal may be imprisoned until he repent, or for life; or in cases requiring exemplary punishment, he may be put to death.

In cases of robbery, the Mahomedan law has two objects in view: one, the punishment of the offender, which is so severe that every facility is afforded to avoid its infliction; the other, the restoration of the property, to effect which various provisions of the law directly tend, and which does not take place if the prescribed punishment be inflicted.

The existence of any doubt as to the completeness of the crime, in regard to any one of the particulars stated in the definition, will prevent the infliction of the punishment; and of such doubts a great many instances are enumerated, especially as to the custody; as when the robbery is committed by kindred or by domestic slaves, who may have easy access to the property; also as to the value of things, such as are not of intrinsic value, or were originally of common use, as wood, fish, birds, &c., or things of a perishable nature, are not held to be entitled to the protection afforded by such severe penalties. In the application, however, of these principles to specific cases, the Mahomedan lawyers occasionally establish precedents inconsistent with the principles of justice. Amputation is prevented if the robber return the property before prosecution, or if the party robbed choose to give up the property to the robber.

5th. Surikāh-i-kobra.—Highway Robbery.

This crime is defined to consist in a party going forth with force capable of resistance, for the purpose of committing robbery, or a single person so going forth prepared for resistance, under confidence in his strength and courage. There are five conditions requisite for the infliction of the prescribed penalty: 1st. That there be force sufficient to overcome opposition from travellers, whether the party be armed with mortal weapons or no; 2. That the act be committed at a distance from any city, the extent of that distance being a point on which opinions differ; 3d. That it be committed in a country which is the seat of peace; 4th. That all the circumstances which constitute "larceny" be found to exist, the robbers also being strangers to the robbed, and legally subject to punishment; 5th. That robbers be seized before they repent, and before restoration of the property to the person robbed.

"Four

"Four descriptions of highway robbers are specified in the Hidayah, with the penalties incurred by each upon conviction, according to their respective degrees of criminality; first, Those who are seized before they have robbed or murdered any person, or put any person in fear; secondly, Those who have committed robbery only, whether upon a Mussulman or infidel subject; thirdly, Such as have perpetrated murder without robbery; fourthly, Such as have committed both robbery and murder. Of these descriptions, the first are to be imprisoned, until by their appearance and demeanour they show evident signs of contrition. The second are to suffer amputation of the right hand and left foot, provided the property taken be of such value as, when divided amongst the whole of the robbers, amounts to ten dirms for each. The third class are to suffer punishment of death; and as it is inflicted by the right of God, for public example, and not to satisfy a private claim to Kisas, the forgiveness of the heir of the slain is of no avail. With respect to the fourth and last, it is optional with the imam, either to cut off a hand and foot, and then put them to death, or he may put them to death at once without amputation. He may also order them to be crucified."

"If any one among a gang of robbers commit murder, the whole are liable to the prescribed penalty, 'because,' says the author of the Hidayah, 'the punishment in this instance is considered as a penalty for the assault of the whole, which is established by each of them being aiding and abetting to the others.' But if any one of the band of robbers be an infant or a lunatic, or dumb, or a relation within the prohibited degrees of the person robbed or murdered; or if any of the robbers have a joint interest in the property plundered, or such property be not in legal custody with respect to any one of the robbers; or if the property taken amount not in value to ten dirms for each robber; or lastly, if the person robbed or murdered be not a Mussulman, or under the permanent protection of a Mahomedan government, a sentence of Hudd is prevented against any of the party. In this, as in the preceding case, one great object of Mahomedan law being the restoration of stolen property, if the robber repent before he is seized, the infliction of the punishment is thereby prevented, but the property stolen is restored to the owner."

It may be remarked generally, of crimes subject to the prescribed penalties termed "Hudd," that the commission of them cannot be proved by the evidence of women, except where a private right is co-existent with the public claim; in which cases the evidence of two women is received as equivalent to that of one man, in corroboration of male testimony; that witnesses are encouraged to withhold evidence which may lead to the infliction of "prescribed punishment," because the concealment of the faults of a brother Mussulman is deemed equally virtuous with the establishment of a penal act; that extorted confessions are not admitted; that a slave is punished only to half the extent to which a free person is subject, in conformity with a dictum of Mahomed; and that one punishment includes all offences of the same description committed before such punishment.

Third Class.

THIRD CLASS OF JUDICIAL RETRIBUTION.

Discretionary Punishment.

PENAL CORRECTION (TAZEER)—PUNISHMENT FOR EXAMPLE (SEASUT.)

Tazeer. Seasut.

OF the penalties provided under the former heads, some were claimable by the injured parties, in retribution or compensation for the injury sustained by themselves, as Kisas; others were commanded to be inflicted in satisfaction of public justice, as Hudd; and no discretion was allowed as to the infliction of them where the offence was complete, according to the legal definition, and proved by such evidence as the law required, which was always positive evidence, given by duly qualified witnesses.

The discretionary punishments, of which the adjudication is vested in the Imam, i. e. the sovereign or his delegates, were intended to provide for—

First.—Cases not included in the preceding classes, or for which the specified penalties were inapplicable or insufficient, as, 1st. Some specific heavy offences, not particularized among those punishable by "Hudd," in the law books; 2d. Heinous and flagrant crimes, such as are included generally in the class "Hudd," but the commission of which, in the particular instance, was attended with circumstances of particular atrocity and aggravation, requiring punishment beyond the ordinary measure, for example's sake; or the perpetrators of which were hardened offenders, whom there was no hope of reclaiming from their evil courses by temporary correction; 3d. Petty offences of a private nature, or of inconsiderable public detriment, for which the offender deserved chastisement for his personal correction and amendment, such as abusive language, not amounting to slander.

Second.—Cases in which, though the crime committed was included in the heads "Kisâs" or "Hudd," the penalties could not be inflicted, because—1st. The direct proof by competent witnesses, required by the law, was wanting; or, 2d. Because the punishment demandable for the private satisfaction of the injured party had been remitted or compromised; or, 3d. Because the application of "Hudd" or "Kisâs" was precluded by some legal defect or doubt; for it is a principle that where a doubt exists of the full applicability of the rule prescribed under "Kisâs" or "Hudd," the infliction of the punishment cannot take place.

The crimes for which punishment is to be inflicted, under the third branch of Judicial Retribution, are either such as are injurious to individuals, or such as affect public security, or they are of a mixed character.

In cases where the right of God, or public justice, is considered to prevail, the Imam, i. e. the sovereign or his delegate, is exclusively competent to remit the punishment of the criminal; and even this competency is qualified by a condition of ascertained previous repentance. In such cases, as in other public prosecutions, the evidence of the prosecutor is admissible, or the offender may be brought to trial and punishment, without any complaint from the party injured. But when the right of the individual is deemed to prevail, his claim, or that of his representative, is requisite, as in other instances of private retribution; the claimant, though incompetent to bear testimony in his own cause, is at liberty to forgive the offence; for establishing which, moreover, secondary witnesses, viz. persons appointed by absent witnesses to give evidence for them, who are not admissible in any public prosecution, may be admitted, or in defect of proof, the accused party may be put upon his oath.

Although the Mahomedan law requires positive evidence to justify a conviction, leading to the infliction of "Kisâs" or "Hudd," it admits of circumstantial evidence for the adjudication of discretionary punishment. The following example is quoted in Harington's Analysis: "If a man come out of a house with a bloody knife in his hand, and he appear terrified and run away; and the people immediately entering the house, find a person whose throat has been recently cut, the blood dropping from it, and there be no other man in the house; these circumstances warrant a strong presumption that the man described is the murderer. A mere possibility of the person in question having cut his own throat, and escaped over the wall, is too remote from probability to be relied upon."

The application of this sort of evidence to conviction is termed in the Indian Judicial Codes of the British Government, "Strong Presumption."

When the discretionary punishment is to be inflicted for the personal correction of the offender, or in a case to which the specific penalty was not held applicable, owing to circumstances of defect or extenuation, the discretionary punishment was not to come up to the measure of "Kisâs" or "Hudd." Thus, in a case of flagellation, the lowest degree of that kind of correction prescribed under "Hudd" being that for slaves, viz. forty stripes, the sentence under "Tazeer" is considered lawful only to the extent of thirty-nine stripes.

On the other hand, where the sovereign authority was to exercise discretion in awarding punishment to flagrant offences, for example's sake, the punishment of death itself might be inflicted if necessary.

In the application of these principles to particular instances of criminality, considerable differences of opinion prevail in different authorities of law.

Considerable variety has been found, as might be expected, in the exposition of the law by the kazees and muftis employed in our courts, according to the extent of their learning, and the powers of their understanding. To check the evils and injustice occasionally arising from this cause, the powers of the judges of the English courts to control and modify the futwas have been from time to time extended, as will be seen in the abstracts of the Regulations. The sketch which has here been presented of the Mahomedan criminal law is necessarily imperfect and defective; but it is hoped that it may suffice as an introduction to the abstract of the Code of Criminal Regulations, to render the object of its provisions more readily perceptible, and to show that the modifications introduced by the British Government were made to conform with the principles of the law on which they were ingrafted, as far as could be done consistently with the great object of administering equal justice.

PART I. CRIMINAL JUDICATURE—GENERAL.

(A.)

APPOINTMENT, POWERS, and DUTIES of MAGISTRATES in the Apprehension and Committal of Offenders, and in punishing certain Offences.

Regulations.

LIST.

- | | | |
|---|---|---|
| IX. 1793.—
XXII. 1793.— | } | Review of former Systems of Administration.—Powers and Duties of Magistrates. |
| II. 1796.—Zillah Magistrates to be Justices of Peace. | | |
| IX. 1796.—Attendance of Witnesses. | | |
| XI. 1796.—Resistance of Magistrate's Process. | | |
| XIII. 1797.—Duties of Assistants to Magistrates. | | |
| XV. 1806.—Committal of European British Subjects for Trial before the Supreme Court. | | |
| IX. 1807.—Modifications of the Proceedings of Magistrates. | | |
| IX. 1808.—Proceedings to be held on the Proclamation of Gang Robbers. | | |
| V. 1809.—
VIII. 1829.—
VIII. 1813.—
IX. 1822.— | } | Trial of British Subjects for Offences committed in Foreign States. |
| XVI. 1810.—Power to appoint Magistrates not being Civil Judges. | | |
| I. 1811.—Prevention and Punishment of Housebreaking. | | |
| III. 1812.—Provision for checking litigious and vexatious Complaints. | | |
| XIV. 1816.—Superintendence of Gaols. | | |
| VI. 1818.—Rules regarding Cases not ready for Trial. | | |

Regulations.

- VIII. 1818.— } Security for good Conduct.
 III. 1819.— }
 XII. 1818.—Extension of the power of Magistrates to punish.
 VII. 1819.—Power of Magistrates to punish particular Offences.
 III. 1820.—Pressing Natives as Coolies or Bearers forbidden and declared penal.
 IV. 1820.—Execution of Sentences of Courts-Martial.
 III. 1821.—Powers of Assistants to Magistrates.
 IV. 1821.—Union of the Powers of Collectors and Magistrates.
 I. 1822.— } Cognizance to be taken by Magistrates of Affrays originating in Revenue
 VIII. 1828.— } Questions.
 VIII. 1822.—Prescribing the Place of Trial of Criminals.
 VI. 1824.— } Extension of Powers of Magistrates to punish.
 VI. 1829.— }
 X. 1824.—Conditional Pardons to be offered by Magistrates.
 XV. 1824.— } Primary Cognizance of disputes regarding Possession of Land, Crops, or Water,
 VII. 1822.— } vested in Magistrates.
 IV. 1828.— }
 IV. 1825.—Recognizances to keep the Peace.
 I. 1828.—Allepore Gaol—Transportation.
 VIII. 1830.—Grounds of Committal for Trial.

REGULATION IX.—1793.

Review of former Systems of Administration.—Powers and Duties of Magistrates.

THE Preamble to this Regulation contains a brief history of the several systems successively adopted by the British Government for the administration of criminal justice, from August 1772 to December 1790, when courts of circuit were established, under the superintendence of English judges, for the trial, in the first instance, of persons charged with crimes or misdemeanors, and the Governor-general and Council were constituted the chief criminal court. The Preamble is as follows:—

“ Pursuant to the Regulations passed by the President and Council on the 21st August 1772, criminal courts, denominated Foudarry Adawluts, were established in the interior parts of the provinces, for the trial of persons charged with crimes or misdemeanors; and the collectors of the revenue, who were covenanted servants of the Company, were directed to superintend the proceedings of the officers of those courts, and, on trials, to see that the necessary witnesses were summoned and examined, and due weight was allowed to their testimony, and that the decisions passed was fair and impartial. By the same Regulations, a separate and superior criminal court was established at Moorshedabad, under the denomination of the Nizamut Adalut, for revising the proceedings of the provincial criminal courts in capital cases; and the committee of revenue at Moorshedabad was vested with a control over this court, similar to that which the collectors of the revenue were empowered to exercise over the provincial courts. Upon the abolition of the committee of revenue at Moorshedabad, the Nizamut Adalut was removed to Calcutta, and placed under the charge of a darogah or superintendent, subject to the control of the President of the Council, who revised the sentences of the criminal courts in capital cases. The above arrangements continued in force, without any considerable alteration, until the 18th October 1775, when the entire control over the department of criminal justice was committed to the Naib Nazim. The Nizamut Adalut was in consequence established at Moorshedabad; and the Naib Nazim appointed native officers, denominated Foudars, assisted by persons versed in the Mahomedan law, to superintend the criminal courts

Reg. IX. 1793.
Rules of 1790 re-enacted.

courts in the several districts, and to apprehend and bring to trial offenders against the public peace. This system was adhered to, without any material variation, until the 6th April 1781, when the institution of foudars not having answered the intended purposes, the general establishments both of foudars and tannahdars, or police officers acting under them, were abolished. Foudarry courts, however, were continued in the several divisions, subject, as before, to the control of the Naib Nazim as superintendent of the Nizamut Adalut; and the English judges of the courts of Dewanny Adalut were appointed magistrates, with a power to apprehend decoits and persons charged with crimes or misdemeanors within their respective jurisdictions, and commit them to the nearest Foudarry court for trial. With a view to enable Government to superintend in some degree the administration of justice in criminal cases, a separate department was at the same time established at the Presidency, under the control of the Governor-general, to receive monthly returns of the sentences passed in the Foudarry courts; and for the assistance of the Governor in this duty, a covenanted civil servant of the Company was appointed, with the official appellation of Remembrancer to the Criminal Courts. From the inefficacy, however, of the authority of the English magistrates over the zemindars and other landholders, the administration of justice in criminal cases was much impeded; whilst the Regulation which vested the magistrates with the power of apprehending offenders, but without permitting them to interfere in any respect in the trials, gave rise to a new evil. The magistrates being obliged to deliver over to the darogahs, or superintendents of the Foudarry courts, all persons charged with a breach of the peace, however trivial, and a considerable time often elapsing before they were brought to trial, many of the lowest and most indigent classes of the people were frequently detained for a long period in prison, where their sufferings often exceeded the degree of their criminality. The magistrates, therefore, on the 27th June 1787, were vested with authority to hear and decide on complaints of petty affrays, abusive names, and other slight offences; and, under certain restrictions, to inflict corporal punishment, and impose fines on the offenders. But the numerous murders, robberies, and other enormities which continued to be daily committed throughout the country, evincing that the administration of criminal justice was still in a very defective state, and as these evils appeared to result principally from the great delay which occurred in bringing offenders to punishment, and to the law not being duly enforced, as well as to other material defects in the constitution of the criminal courts; and as it was essential for the prevention of crimes, not only that offenders should be deprived of the means of eluding the pursuit of the officers of justice, but that they should be speedily and impartially tried when apprehended, the Governor-general in Council passed certain Regulations on the 3d of December 1790, establishing courts of circuit under the superintendence of English judges, assisted by natives versed in the Mahomedan law, for trying, in the first instance, persons charged with crimes or misdemeanors; and enabling the Governor-general and the members of the supreme council to sit in the Nizamut Adalut (which was for that purpose again removed to Calcutta), and superintend the administration of criminal justice throughout the provinces. Those Regulations, with the subsequent amendments, are now re-enacted, with further alterations and modifications." The Regulation then proceeded to re-enact the rules of 1790, to the following effect:

The Judges of the civil courts (Dewany Adalut) of the several zillahs and cities were declared "Magistrates" within their respective jurisdictions, and were to qualify by taking an oath of office, but were not to have jurisdiction within the limits of his Majesty's supreme court of judicature.

Magistrates were required to apprehend disturbers of the peace and persons charged with crimes and misdemeanors. On a complaint being taken down in writing and sworn to, the magistrate was to issue a warrant against the person complained of, and on his apprehension was to examine him, and to take the deposition of witnesses, and of the complainant on oath, in the language best known to the deponents. If the charge was unsupported, the prisoner was to be dismissed; if it was supported by evidence, the the prisoner was to be committed or held to bail (according to the nature of the offence), to be tried at the next sessions of the court of circuit.

Confessions (which were to be received with caution) were to be witnessed by as many of the magistrates' officers, or other creditable persons present at the time of their being made, as the Mahomedan law required to give them validity.

The crimes of murder, housebreaking, theft, and counterfeiting coin were declared not bailable.

Magistrates were authorized to hear and determine complaints for abusive language, calumny, inconsiderable assaults or affrays, and the like petty offences; and to punish the offenders by imprisonment not exceeding fifteen days, or by fine not exceeding fifty sicca rupees; except in the case of the offenders being persons paying directly to the Government more than 10,000 rupees revenue, or holding its equivalent in rent-free land; such persons to be liable to a fine not exceeding 200 rupees.

Magistrates were authorized to punish for petty thefts, unattended with aggravated circumstances, by whipping not exceeding thirty rattans, or imprisonment for not more than one month.

In cases in which magistrates were authorized to punish the offenders, they were likewise empowered to inflict on persons preferring vexatious and unfounded complaints, the same measure of punishment as prescribed above for petty offences.*

Magistrates were to provide for the attendance of all parties, witnesses, &c. on the arrival of the court of circuit, and to submit to that court calendars, in English and Persian, of prisoners committed or held to bail; specifying the charges against them, and the names of the witnesses for the prosecution and defence. The calendars to be accompanied by all papers and documents necessary for the information of the court of circuit.

Magistrates were likewise to submit to the court of circuit calendars of persons discharged, and of persons punished by them.

When magistrates might commit persons who paid their revenue direct to Government, they were to give notice thereof to the collector, that due provision might be made against loss of revenue.

The magistrates were to enforce payment of fines in their capacity of civil judges.

All complaints, with the orders upon them, were to be recorded in English and Persian or Bengalee.

Reports to be made to the Nizamut Adawlut monthly: 1st. Of persons apprehended; 2d. Of casualties and prisoners released; 3d. Of sentences passed by the court of circuit; 4th. Of trials referred to the Nizamut Adawlut; 5th. Of sentences passed by the Nizamut Adawlut on reference; 6th. Of prisoners committed for trial; 7th. Of prisoners under sentence.

The Regulation contained detailed rules for the management and care of gaols, the separation of prisoners according to sex, and the nature of their offences, &c., and for the payment of subsistence money, and other allowances to prisoners, witnesses, &c.

By Regulation XXII. 1793, magistrates were authorized to detain persons of suspicious character, and of habits likely to be dangerous to the community, not having any visible means of subsistence, and to employ them on any public works until they should find security for their good behaviour. Reg. XXII. 1793

REGULATION II.—1796.

Zillah Magistrates to be Justices of Peace.

This Regulation declared the zillah and city magistrates to be justices of the peace, and Reg. II. 1796.

* The power of imprisonment in such cases was extended, by Regulation VII. 1811, to six months.

and provided that they should, as such, receive complaints against European British subjects, having first duly qualified by taking the necessary oaths.

REGULATION IX.—1796.

Attendance of Witnesses.

Reg. IX. 1796. This Regulation contained some additional rules of practice for ensuring the attendance of witnesses before the courts of circuit, especially those on behalf of the prisoners.

REGULATION XI.—1796.

Resistance of Magistrates' Process.

Reg. XI. 1796. This Regulation provided for the punishment of persons resisting the process of the magistrates, which extended to the forfeiture of zemindary rights in the case of proprietors; the sentence of forfeiture, however, was only to be enforced with the sanction of the Governor-general in Council; but all minor punishments, including fine, imprisonment, and corporal punishment, were to be confirmed by the Nizamut Adawlut. In cases of persons absconding to evade process, their property was declared liable to attachment, under certain rules.

REGULATION XIII.—1797.

Duties of Assistants to Magistrates.

Reg. XIII. 1797. This Regulation was enacted to enable magistrates, with a view of expediting business, to employ their assistants in the execution of such part of the duties of zillah magistrates as they might themselves be unable to give due attention to; the assistants, however, before entering on the performance of judicial functions, were required to take an oath of office similar to that of the magistrate, after which they might be empowered to perform any duties with which the magistrates were charged.

REGULATION XV.—1806.

Committal of European British Subjects for Trial before the Supreme Court.

Reg. XV. 1806. This Regulation was enacted to direct the proceedings of the zillah or city magistrates when acting as justices of the peace. It directed, that when magistrates should commit European British subjects, or hold them to bail for trial before the supreme court, they should forward the original depositions to the clerk of the crown, and copies of them for the information of the Governor-general, who, in aggravated cases, would direct their law officers to conduct the prosecution against the accused. If any magistrate in the provinces had not taken the oaths of qualification as a justice of peace, he was to send European British subjects, who should be charged before him with offences, to the magistrates in Calcutta, who would deal with them according to the exigency of the cases.

REGULATION IX.—1807.

Modification of the Proceedings of Magistrates.

Reg. IX. 1807. This Regulation was enacted to alter, in several important particulars, the course of proceeding to be adopted by magistrates on receiving complaints of various offences committed. By previous Regulations, magistrates had been directed, on receiving a charge on oath of any crime or misdemeanor, to issue a warrant for the apprehension of the party accused; by the present Regulation, this course of proceeding was limited to charges of crimes not bailable, or such as should seem to require the immediate apprehension of the accused; in all other cases, the officer executing the warrant might be authorized authorized by the magistrate to take bail from the accused for his appearance before the magistrate.

The Regulation provided that the presence of the accuser might be dispensed with, if he were unable to attend, or if he had not been himself present at the commission of the act complained of. In such cases the magistrate might proceed, on receiving a written plaint, corroborated by the oaths of witnesses.

In cases where magistrates should see reason to distrust the truth of the charge, they might cause a previous local inquiry to be made by the police officers or others, before issuing a warrant or summons against the accused, and their future proceedings were to be regulated by the result of that enquiry.

On receiving a charge against a person for the commission of a bailable offence, the magistrate might, if he saw fit, issue a summons requiring the attendance of the party accused before calling upon him to give bail; if the party summoned should not attend in person or by vakeel, and give bail if required, the magistrate was to issue a warrant for his apprehension.

In cases of a trivial nature, the officer serving the summons might receive a duly certified compromise between the parties as a sufficient return to the process; but excepting in such trivial cases, no compromise was to be received without the special sanction of the magistrate, nor might the magistrate admit compromises in cases of a heinous nature.

All cases of homicide short of actual murder were declared bailable. In cases of homicide which might be clearly proved before the magistrate to have been accidental, or justifiable under the Mahomedan law and the Regulations, the magistrate might release the accused.

In cases not bailable under the Regulations, the court of circuit might, for sufficient cause, authorize the magistrate to receive bail.

The Regulation prescribed forms of bail-bonds and warrants, as well those issuable by magistrates as those by darogahs or zemindars in charge of police, for the apprehension of persons charged with heinous offences, and of process in bailable cases.

Recognizances from prosecutors and witnesses were substituted for the security before required of them, and forms prescribed.

Powers of magistrates to punish offenders were extended to imprisonment for six months, with corporal punishment not exceeding thirty rattans, with a fine not exceeding 200 rupees commutable to additional imprisonment not exceeding six months; but it was provided that assistant magistrates should not be authorized, when discharging the duty of magistrates, to exercise these additional powers. Assistant magistrates were to be limited to the powers before granted to magistrates, except that they might adjudge both the fine and the imprisonment within the first prescribed limits, and might commute the fine to fifteen days' additional imprisonment, making in the whole not more than thirty days.

In referring cases to their assistants, magistrates were recommended, as much as possible, to commit to them only the duty of examination, and to pass judgment themselves on the assistants' proceedings. They were also authorized and required, whenever they should see cause, either on complaint preferred to them or otherwise, to revise the assistants' proceedings, and if necessary, to annul them and pass fresh orders. Magistrates were directed to include in their calendars the cases of persons discharged or punished by their assistants.

The Regulation required further annual reports to be submitted, of cases depending before the magistrates, and of heinous crimes ascertained to have been committed within the zillah during the year; exhibiting the number of persons known to have been concerned in the commission of them, and the number apprehended and convicted, or committed for trial before a court of circuit.

REGULATION IX.—1808.

Proclamation for Gang Robbers.

By this Regulation, provision was made for the issue of proclamations, offering rewards for the apprehension of leaders of gangs of robbers. Those rules are stated under the head of police. The same Regulation directed that if the person proclaimed should appear within the time limited in the proclamation, the magistrate should proceed against him under the general rules, in regard to the examination of accused persons; but if he should appear or be apprehended after the expiration of the limited time, the magistrate should take evidence of his identity, and after calling upon him to offer any plea which he might deem proper, why the sentence specified in the proclamation should not be pronounced against him, he was then to commit him to gaol, to appear before the court of circuit, when the witnesses to prove his identity, and the due publication of the proclamation, and the time of the prisoner's apprehension, as well as the witnesses for the prisoner, were to attend.

REGULATION V.—1809.

Offences committed in Foreign States by British Subjects.

Reg. V. 1809.

THE object of this Regulation was to provide for the trial of native subjects of the British Government, charged with the commission of crimes in places beyond the jurisdiction of the British Government. It directed, that when such persons should be apprehended within its territories, the magistrates should commit or hold them to bail, according to the circumstances of the charge, and immediately report the case for the orders of the Governor-general in Council, who would direct before what court the accused should be brought to trial.

Reg. VIII. 1813.

By Regulation VIII. of 1813, the above rules were declared applicable to natural-born subjects of the British Government in India: Natives of India become British subjects by conquest or cession; and natives of foreign Indian states, in the British service.

Reg. IX. 1822.

By Regulation IX. of 1822, they were further extended to all persons other than British-born subjects of the King, who had settled or resided more than six months in the Company's territories; and by Regulation VIII. 1829, the above rules were declared applicable, whether the parties should be apprehended within or without the British territories.

Reg. VIII. 1829.

REGULATION XVI.—1810.

Power to appoint Magistrates, not being Civil Judges.

Reg. XVI. 1810.

By this Regulation, the Governor-general in Council was authorized, 1. To appoint persons to hold the office of magistrate, who were not the civil judges of zillahs or cities, and to direct in such cases, whether the judge of the civil court should or should not exercise a concurrent jurisdiction as joint magistrate. 2dly. To invest the magistrate of any city or zillah with a general concurrent authority as joint magistrate in any contiguous or other jurisdiction, or in any part thereof. 3dly. To appoint an "assistant magistrate" in any city or zillah, who should be required to take the same oath of office as a magistrate.

The joint and assistant magistrates were declared to be invested with the general powers of magistrates, subject to such special directions as should be issued to them by the Government on their appointment. Assistant magistrates were to be considered subordinate to the magistrates of their respective zillahs in the general discharge of their official duties, in as far as might be consistent with the purposes of this Regulation: but no appeal was to lie to the magistrate from the sentence of an assistant magistrate, nor from his orders for committing prisoners or holding them to bail.

REGULATION

IV.—JUDICIAL.

685

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued.

Criminal
Judicature.

REGULATION I.—1811.

Prevention and Punishment of Housebreaking.

THIS Regulation (for the preamble to which see under the head "Administration of Criminal Justice") enacted, that any person on whom the instrument known to be generally used by native housebreakers should be found, might be sentenced by the magistrate to work on the roads, until he should give security for his good conduct. It further enacted, that persons concerned in housebreaking or gang robbery, not attended with murder or any aggravating act of personal violence, might receive a pardon, upon their giving such information to the magistrates as should lead to the apprehension of the principal receiver or receivers; and magistrates were directed to recommend to the Nizamut Adawlut cases in which they were of opinion that such conditional pardons should be offered to accessaries, to be confirmed if the information given should lead to the apprehension and conviction of any principal receiver; a pardon might also be given to any receiver who might cause the apprehension and conviction either of a vendor or of a principal in the robbery.

Reg. I. 1811.

REGULATION III.—1812.

Provision for checking Litigious and Vexatious Complaints.

THIS Regulation embraced a variety of subjects, chiefly connected with the police. Its provisions, as far as regarded the duties of the magistrates, had for their object the checking of litigious complaints, and provided that in cases of adultery, &c., as well as in cases of petty offences, the complainant, before any witnesses were summoned on his behalf, should deposit such sum as the magistrate should consider sufficient for the maintenance of those witnesses for one month; and it having been found in practice, that complaints of the above description had ordinarily proved unfounded, misrepresented, or greatly exaggerated, the magistrates were directed not to issue process thereon, without first satisfying themselves by examination of the prosecutor, that there appeared sufficient grounds for proceeding against the accused; and such inquiries were on no account to be committed to darogahs.

Reg. III. 1812.

It appearing that much inconvenience had been experienced from the indiscriminate permission allowed to agents to conduct criminal prosecutions,* it was provided that such agency should not be permitted, unless satisfactory reasons were assigned and recorded on the magistrates' proceedings, why the complainant should not carry on the prosecution in person.

REGULATION XIV.—1816.

Superintendence of Gaols.

THIS Regulation empowered magistrates more effectually to preserve subordination and good conduct in the gaols, by punishing contumacious and refractory behaviour; the exercise of this power was subject to the general superintendence of the court of circuit. Magistrates were further authorized to reward prisoners for any meritorious act, such as preventing the escape of other prisoners, &c.

Reg. XIV. 1816.

REGULATION VI.—1818.

Rules regarding Cases not ready for Trial.

By this Regulation, magistrates were required to lay before the judge of circuit at the periodical gaol deliveries, a calendar exhibiting the names and offences of persons whose cases

Reg. VI. 1818.

* See Regulation IX. 1807.

cases were not in a state of sufficient forwardness to be brought before the court then sitting, or to be disposed of by their own orders; and the magistrates were to be guided in regard to such cases by the orders they should receive from the court of circuit.

REGULATION VIII.—1818.

Security for good Conduct.

Reg. VIII. 1818.

It had been provided by Regulation LIII. 1803,* that in cases of strong suspicion, or upon proof of notorious bad character, the judge of circuit might direct the magistrate to detain a prisoner in custody, although acquitted of the crime charged, until he should give sufficient security for his good behaviour and appearance when required. The present Regulation was enacted for the purpose of defining more exactly the power to be exercised in the requisition of security for good behaviour, as well by the zillah and city magistrates, as by the courts of circuit and Nizamut Adawlut, and to provide for a revision of such cases from time to time as occasion might require.

Security was not to be required of prisoners who had been acquitted, except on proof of notoriously bad character. Whenever such security should be required, the order was to specify distinctly the amount of the security, the number of the sureties, and the period of their responsibility; and when prisoners might be committed on account of failure to furnish such security, the period of their confinement was to be distinctly stated; except in the cases of notorious robbers, of so dangerous a character as to render their release without security evidently unsafe. Magistrates were empowered to release prisoners confined under requisition of security for good behaviour by themselves or by any other magistrates, whenever they might consider such release to be free from hazard. In regard to prisoners committed by the court of circuit or Nizamut Adawlut, magistrates were to report to those authorities when the release of such prisoners might be unattended with danger. Sureties for the good behaviour of prisoners might discharge themselves within the period of their suretiship, by delivering up the prisoners. It was further directed, that the requisition of security for good behaviour should, in all safe cases, fix a time, in no case exceeding twelve months, at the end of which the prisoner should be released; but if his release should then be deemed unsafe, the magistrate was to require specific security for his good behaviour; and on failure of its being given, was to submit the case to the court of circuit, who might order the prisoner to be detained, but for not longer than three years, except in the case of notorious gang robbers,† who might be continued in confinement for want of security, subject to a triennial renewal of the order of detention by the court of circuit, after having had the prisoner brought up before them.

The period for which sureties were to be responsible was directed never to exceed three years; but the same parties might again become sureties for other three years. Whenever sureties might deliver up prisoners to be detained, the case was to be brought before the court of circuit at their ensuing session.

The foregoing rules were declared to have been enacted with the view of reconciling the safety of the community, with a due regard to the rights of individuals. It was further stated in the Regulation, that certain prisoners were then in confinement under requisitions for security made in conformity with previous Regulations, and that such prisoners required and were entitled to relief. To that end, the Governor-general in Council was authorized to nominate officers of experience in the Judicial department, who should revise such cases upon the principles of the foregoing rules: the revision was to include cases of persons confined on strong suspicion of having committed offences offences of which they had been acquitted, though there was no proof of notoriously bad character; of persons imprisoned for an indefinite time for want of security; or for a definite time, if the period of suretiship and the amount of security had not been distinctly specified in the order, provided that the unexpired period of detention exceeded three years; all prisoners so detained were to be discharged, excepting persons of notorious general bad character, whose release might be dangerous to the community. The officers to be appointed for this special duty were authorized to pass final orders on the several cases, according to sound and humane discretion, and in general conformity with this Regulation, and they were to submit a report of their proceedings to the Nizamut Adawlut.

* See under head D.

† This provision was extended to all notorious robbers of desperate or dangerous character by Regulation III. of 1819.

REGULATION XII.—1818.

Extension of the Power of Magistrates to punish.

This Regulation conferred on magistrates the power of punishing cases, not greatly aggravated, of housebreaking and of receiving stolen goods. The objects in view in granting this power, were, first, to relieve the judges of circuit from great pressure of business; secondly, to diminish the inconvenience suffered by prosecutors and witnesses, in attending successively before the magistrates and the court of circuit, and by prisoners from prolonged detention before trial; thirdly, to provide thereby for the more prompt and effectual administration of criminal justice in such cases. The offences for which the magistrates were empowered to inflict punishment were not to include such as came under the description of robbery by open violence, accompanied by the commission or attempt to murder, or aggravated personal violence, or where the accused were persons before convicted, or of notoriously bad character, or persons employed in the police, where the value of the property stolen might exceed 100 rupees.

The punishment which magistrates might award under this Regulation was extended to two years' imprisonment and thirty stripes.

Similar power, under the like restrictions, was granted to the magistrate in cases of theft. If the property did not exceed in value fifty rupees, he might refer the case to be tried by his assistant.

Certain provisions of Regulation I. 1811, prescribing fourteen years' imprisonment as the punishment of persons receiving goods, knowing them to have been obtained by gang robbery, were rescinded; in lieu thereof, the present Regulation provided, that aggravated cases only should be remitted for trial to the court of circuit; magistrates were empowered to convict in ordinary cases, and to sentence to imprisonment for two years, with thirty stripes. It was also provided that receivers of stolen goods might be punished, though the thieves should not have been brought to justice, provided there were sufficient proof of the robbery having been committed.

Power was given to magistrates to sentence convicts or prisoners effecting their escape to thirty stripes and to additional imprisonment for two years. Prisoners under confinement for examination, and effecting their escape, might be imprisoned for six months; but if the escape were attended with aggravation or violence, the prisoner was to be committed for trial by the court of circuit. A separate calendar was to be submitted by the magistrate to the court of circuit of all persons sentenced to imprisonment for a longer period than six months, and the court of circuit might revise such sentences.

REGULATION VII.—1819.

Powers of Magistrates to punish particular Offences.

This Regulation provided a remedy for three different evils:

First.—The seduction of females from their houses and families, effected chiefly by women, for the purpose of rendering them prostitutes or concubines, a practice stated to prevail in cities and large towns. The Regulation authorized magistrates to punish persons convicted before them of seducing a married woman living under the protection of her husband, or an unmarried female under the age of fifteen, living with her parents or guardians, by fine and imprisonment, within the limits of their powers in respect of such punishment.

Reg. VII. 1819.

Second.—The abandonment by men of their wives and families; the magistrate might require such offenders to make suitable provision on pain of imprisonment, and might also order a proper maintenance to the mothers of illegitimate children whilst in a state of pregnancy, or having the care of an infant child.

Third.—The failure of workmen or servants to complete their engagements; such failure might be punished by imprisonment for one month, and the contract might be ordered to be fulfilled on pain of further imprisonment, not exceeding two months; the same principle was declared applicable to domestic servants who should quit their service without completing the engagement they had made, and to monthly servants quitting their masters without a fortnight's notice; masters were likewise to be required to complete their engagements, and give similar notice to their hired servants.

REGULATION III.—1820.

Pressing Natives as Coolies or Bearers forbidden and declared penal.

Reg. III. 1820.

It having been found that the power vested in magistrates by Regulation XI. 1806, of assisting to procure carriers of burdens to attend troops or individuals on march through their districts, had encouraged the forcible pressing of inhabitants of towns and villages to carry baggage from stage to stage, it became desirable entirely to suppress so injurious a practice. This Regulation, therefore, positively prohibited all such pressing, and required magistrates to investigate all complaints on this subject that should be brought before them, and to punish, according to their discretion, persons convicted of that offence.

REGULATION IV.—1820.

Execution of Sentences of Courts Martial.

Reg. IV. 1820.

MAGISTRATES were authorized to give effect to the sentences of courts martial, adjudging persons under their jurisdiction to imprisonment with hard labour among the convicts of the civil power. It was further provided, that in all cases of theft, in which the value of the property stolen should exceed 300 rupees, the magistrate should commit the prisoner for trial to the court of circuit.

REGULATION III.—1821.

Powers of Assistants to Magistrates.

Reg. III. 1821.

THE object of this Regulation was to afford more efficient aid to the judicial authorities in disposing of the mass of public business pressing upon them. It enacted, that whenever the accumulation of judicial business in a zillah might be such as the magistrate could not discharge with sufficient dispatch, the Governor-general in Council might invest the "assistant to the magistrate" with special powers to try cases referred to him, and to punish the offenders, on conviction, to an extent not exceeding six months' imprisonment, with thirty strokes of a rattan, or a fine not exceeding 200 rupees, commutable to further imprisonment for six months. The magistrates were authorized to refer for trial to the Hindoo or Mahomedan law officers cases of petty offences unattended with aggravating circumstances, and the law officers might sentence the parties, on conviction, to imprisonment not exceeding fifteen days, and a fine of fifty rupees, commutable to a further imprisonment of fifteen days. For petty thefts, the the law officers might sentence to thirty rattans and one month's imprisonment. Appeals might be received by magistrates from the orders passed by their assistants, and also from orders of magistrates by the courts of circuit, if preferred within one month from the date of the orders appealed against.

REGULATION IV.—1821.

Union of the Powers of Collectors and Magistrates.

By this Regulation the Government were empowered, whenever it might appear expedient, to vest collectors of the revenue with the powers of magistrates, and to intrust magistrates with the power of collecting the revenue. No reason is stated in the preamble for the enactment of this Regulation, except that such measures might be expedient. Reg. IV. 1825.

REGULATION I.—1822.

Affrays.

By Regulation XLIX. of 1793, the zillah judges were required to take cognizance, in their civil capacities, of affrays committed in taking or retaining possession of disputed crops, boundaries, &c., and to pass a summary judgment on the right to immediate possession. It was stated in the preamble to that Regulation, that such affrays were generally attended with bloodshed, and not unfrequently with loss of lives. Reg. I. 1822.

The present enactment authorized the magistrates to try such charges, and to punish the offenders to the extent of their power of punishment under the General Regulations. Aggravated cases were to be referred to the provincial court.

By Regulation VIII. of 1828, for the more effectual punishing of affrays unattended with aggravating circumstances, power was given to the magistrates to punish the offenders by imprisonment, with or without labour, for a period not exceeding one year, and a fine not exceeding 200 rupees, commutable to a further period of imprisonment not exceeding one year. Reg. VIII. 1828.

REGULATION VIII.—1822.

Prescribing the Place of Trial of Criminals.

THE preamble to this Regulation set forth that the Regulations had nowhere specifically directed, although it had become an established principle of usage, that offenders should be tried in the court within the local jurisdiction of which the offence was committed. To remedy this deficiency, as well as to provide for exceptions to the application of the rule, this Regulation enacted that offenders should be brought to trial at the sessions held for the zillah in which the crime had been perpetrated; but as circumstances might arise which might render the trial in a different district more desirable, safe, or expeditious, it was declared competent to the Governor-general in Council, or to the Nizamut Adawlut, to remove the trial to a different zillah whenever it should appear that such measure would promote the ends of justice, or without hinderance thereto, would tend to the general convenience of parties and witnesses. Reg. VIII. 1822.

REGULATION VI.—1824.

Extension of Powers of Magistrates to punish.

THE principal object of this Regulation was to enable magistrates, in the cases of persons charged before them with the commission of two several burglaries or aggravated thefts, each of which was punishable under the provisions of Regulation XII. of 1818 by two years' imprisonment and thirty stripes, to take cognizance of the double charge, and Reg. VI. 1824.

APPENDIX,

No. 6.

*continued.*Criminal Judicature.

Reg. VI. 1829.

and, on conviction, to sentence the two offences jointly to the measure of punishment which they were authorized to inflict under that enactment for a single offence, with power, however, if the magistrate should deem that punishment insufficient, to commit the offender for trial before the court of circuit.

* The powers of magistrates were extended by Regulation VI. 1829, to the punishment of persons guilty of two or more petty thefts, by inflicting upon them punishment not exceeding the measure above stated, without reference to the court of circuit, except when a greater punishment than the above might seem called for.

REGULATION X.—1824.

Conditional Pardons.

Reg. X. 1824.

THIS Regulation authorized magistrates and superintendents of police to tender pardon to persons not being principals, supposed to have been directly or indirectly concerned in cases of murder, gang robbery, highway robbery, coining, and forgery, as well as as in cases of burglary, and theft attended with circumstances of aggravation. Magistrates were to report their opinions in such cases to the superintendents of police, who would sanction the offer of pardon, unless there should appear no prospect of obtaining by that means any other evidence than the deposition of an accomplice or an accessory, in which case they were to refuse their sanction.

REGULATION XV.—1824.

Primary Cognizance of Disputes regarding Possession of Land, Crops, or Water, vested in Magistrates.

Reg. XV. 1824.

It had been provided by Regulation XLIX. 1793, that in cases of alleged dispossession from land or crops, the complaint should in the first instance be preferred to the zillah judge, who would, after a summary inquiry, replace the ousted party in possession, leaving his opponent to establish his right by a civil suit. (See that Regulation, and also Regulation VI. 1813, under the head Zillah Courts.) The preamble to this Regulation stated, that it appeared desirable, for the better maintenance of the public tranquillity, and with a view to prevent breaches of the peace in cases of disputed boundaries or contested claims to the possession of lands, crops, wells, water-courses, and other premises, that the summary investigation in such cases should, under certain circumstances, be conducted in the criminal court, leaving the parties, if dissatisfied with the award of the magistrate, to institute regular suits in the civil court for the final determination of their rights. The Regulation accordingly enacted, that whenever it should appear to a magistrate that disputes concerning the right to possession of land, or the right to water for the purposes of irrigation, would be likely to terminate in a breach of the peace, if not speedily adjusted, the magistrate might require the attendance of the parties, and proceed to determine summarily the right to possession, until his award should be altered by the decision of a regular suit in the civil court. In the event of a summary suit between the parties being at the time pending in the civil court, the judge or registrar was directed to forward his proceedings therein to the magistrate for his consideration. The summary process authorized by this Regulation being intended only to be subsidiary to a regular suit, no appeal was to lie from the magistrate's judgment, except on the ground that the case was one not properly coming within the meaning of the Regulation.

Reg. IV. 1828.

By Regulation VII. 1822,* special powers having been granted to collectors while engaged in the investigation authorized by that Regulation, it was enacted by Regulation IV. 1828, that during the time in which such powers should be exercised by the revenue

* See under "Land Revenue—Special."

revenue officers in any district, the powers vested by Regulation XV. 1824 in magistrates should be suspended, until the revenue settlement of the district, being made under the rules of Regulation VII. 1822, should have been finally confirmed by Government.

REGULATION IV.—1825.

Recognizances to keep the Peace.

THIS Regulation defined the powers to be exercised by the criminal courts in taking recognizances for keeping the peace, with or without the security of persons to be bound on the prisoner's behalf; magistrates were authorized to take recognizances for one year, the courts of circuit and Nizamut Adawlut for three years; if security were also to be taken, the amount of the security bond was not to be excessive, and the length of imprisonment which the offender should be adjudged to suffer, in the event of his not giving security, was not to exceed the periods above mentioned. Magistrates were also authorized to require recognizances for good behaviour from persons not convicted of any specific offence, whenever it might appear necessary for the preservation of the peace; the penalty in such recognizances not to exceed 200 rupees, and the proceedings of the magistrate regarding them to be open to the revision of the court of circuit. Reg. IV. 1825.

REGULATION I.—1828.

Allepore Gaol.—Transportation.

It appearing that some of the convicts under sentence of imprisonment for life in Allepore gaol were desirous of having their sentences commuted to transportation for life, the present Regulation authorized the Government, on the report of the officer in charge of the gaol, and on the application of a prisoner, signed by himself and duly attested, to commute such sentence of perpetual imprisonment to transportation for life to any of the British settlements in Asia. Reg. I. 1828.

REGULATION VIII.—1830.

Grounds of Committal for Trial.

THE Preamble declared, that there was reason to believe, that owing to the ex parte nature of the investigations which by the Regulations the magistrates were required to make previously to committing a prisoner for trial, or requiring him to give bail for his appearance at the sessions, many individuals had been exposed to the hardships of imprisonment, who, if they had been permitted to adduce evidence in their exculpation, might have immediately established their innocence; this Regulation therefore empowered magistrates, in their preliminary investigations, to make full inquiry into every circumstance likely to lead to the ascertainment of truth, and to allow the prisoner to adduce evidence on his own behalf; and in the event of there not being a reasonable probability of conviction under a committal for trial before the court of circuit, then to release the person charged. Reg. VIII. 1830.

PART I.—CRIMINAL JUDICATURE—GENERAL.—continued.

(B.)

CONSTITUTION and JURISDICTION of the COURTS of CIRCUIT and COMMISSIONERS of CIRCUIT.

Regulations.

LIST.

- IX. 1793.—Constitution and Jurisdiction of the Courts of Circuit.
- VII. 1794.—Turn of Judges to go on Circuits and hold Sessions.
- III. 1797.—Succession and Number of Circuits.
- IV. 1797.—Circuit Reports to be made by the Judges on their return to the Chief Station.
- I. 1806.—Order of Circuits and Sessions.
- IX. 1807.— } Powers of Court of Circuit.
- IX. 1831.— }
- IX. 1808.—Punishment of proclaimed Decoits.
- I. 1810.—Futwas of Law Officers dispensed with occasionally.
- V. 1814.—Constitution of Court of Circuit.
- XXV. 1814.—Powers of single Judges of Courts of Circuit.
- VI. 1818.—Powers of the Courts of Circuit over Magistrates.
- IV. 1820.—Powers of the Courts of Circuit over Magistrates.
- IV. 1823.—Futwas—Judges of Circuit.
- XVI. 1825.—Increase of Powers of Courts of Circuit.
- I. 1829.— }
- I. 1830.— } Commissioners of Circuit established.
- IV. 1830.— }
- II. 1831.— }
- II. 1829.—Appeals to Commissioners of Circuit from Magistrates.
- VII. 1829.—Reports.
- VII. 1831.—Appointment of Zillah Judges to hold Sessions.

REGULATION IX.—1793.

Constitution and Jurisdiction of the Courts of Circuit.

Reg. IX. 1793.

THIS Regulation embodied the rules for the administration of criminal justice promulgated in 1790, as stated in the Preamble, for which see the head "Magistrates."

It declared that the judges of each provincial court of appeal should exercise the powers of a criminal court, under the title of Court of Circuit; having the same extent of local jurisdiction as in their civil capacity.

The registrar and other ministerial officers, and the law officers of the provincial courts, were to be the ministerial and law officers of the courts of circuit.

The judges were to hold two circuits annually for gaol delivery, beginning respectively on the 1st April and the 1st November, to include all the magistrates' stations within each circuit, except the station where the provincial courts were fixed. The judges judges on circuit were to remain at each station until all prisoners committed or held to bail should have been tried.

The judges were to form two courts to be on circuit at the same time, the two senior judges delivering the gaol at one zillah, and the two junior judges at another zillah within the province. On the return of the judges to the provincial court stations, they were to deliver the gaols at those places.

The courts of circuit were to report to the Nizamut Adawlut instances of neglect or misconduct on the part of the magistrates or the law officers.

In cases of difference of opinion the majority of judges were to decide, if only two should be present, the senior judge was to have the casting voice.

The judges were to submit to the Nizamut Adawlut, as occasion might require, any rules that should appear to them calculated to improve the administration of criminal justice or of the police.

REGULATION VII.—1794.

Turn of Judges to go on Circuits and hold Sessions.

THIS Regulation was enacted to remedy two inconveniences which had been found to arise from the arrangements prescribed in Regulation IX. 1793, for the delivery of gaols. By that enactment the three judges were all on circuit at the same time. The present Regulation provided that the two courts on circuit should each be held before one judge, and that one judge should always remain at the sudder station, to carry on the routine duties of the court, to receive petitions, and to do all acts other than deciding cases; the second inconvenience arose from the rule, that on return from circuit the three judges should sit together in the criminal court, for the trial of prisoners in the gaol of the zillah in which the provincial court was stationed; the present Regulation directed that the judge who should first return from circuit should deliver the gaol of that zillah. By these measures it was expected that the judges would be enabled to assign a greater portion of their time to the civil business of their courts, which had been found to be seriously impeded by the previous arrangement. Reg. VII. 1794.

REGULATION III.—1797.

Succession and Number of Circuits.

UNDER the operation of the foregoing rule, so great a portion of the judge's time was occupied on circuit, that it rarely happened that two of them remained sufficiently long at the sudder station to decide the appeal causes, and the duties of the civil courts had greatly in arrear. To remedy this evil, the present Regulation provided that one judge only should proceed on circuit, and that two should always remain at the sudder station; and that the senior judge of the court should never go on circuit. Reg. III. 1797.

REGULATION IV.—1797.

Circuit Reports to be made by the Judges on their Return to the Chief Station.

THIS Regulation, which related generally to the administration of the criminal law, contained a direction that each judge, on his return from his circuit, should transmit to the Sudder Nizamut Adawlut a report, comprising such observations as they might have made during the circuit, regarding the effect of the system of criminal administration in the prevention and punishment of crime, the state of the gaols, treatment and employment of prisoners, and such other matters as they might deem of importance. Reg. IV. 1797.

REGULATION I.—1806.

Order of Circuit and Session.

Most of the provisions of this Regulation related to alterations in the jurisdictions of certain courts, and in the times when the sessions should be held: but it also provided, with a view of expediting the general administration of criminal justice, that when the number of persons for trial at one station should be very small, they might be brought to trial before the court sitting at an adjoining station; and likewise, that the senior judges of the provincial courts should take their turn of circuit in common with the other judges.

This arrangement was altered by the provisions of Regulation V. 1814, which increased the number of judges of each provincial court to four; and directed that the senior judge should remain at the sudder station to transact the ordinary business of the civil court.

REGULATION IX.—1807.

Powers of Courts of Circuit.

Reg. IX. 1807. By this Regulation, two or more judges of a court of circuit, or of the Nizamut Adawlut,* were declared competent to call upon the magistrate for his proceedings, or those of his assistant, upon petitions presented to them, whenever it might appear necessary; and to pass such orders thereon as they might deem proper and consistent with the Regulations.

REGULATION IX.—1808.

Punishment of proclaimed Dacoits.

Reg. IX. 1808. By this Regulation (for which see Police) it was declared, that when a gang robber, who had been committed by the magistrate for not having come in and surrendered himself before the expiration of the time limited in the proclamation, should be brought before the court: the judge, if he were satisfied of the identity of the prisoner, and of his contumacy in not appearing, should sentence him to imprisonment and transportation for life, forwarding the trials in all such cases to the Nizamut Adawlut, who would pass their final judgment on the case.

A conviction under this Regulation was not to exempt the prisoner from trial on any specific charge, which might render him liable to an equal or greater punishment under the Regulations.

REGULATION I.—1810.

Futwas of Law Officers dispensed with occasionally.

Reg. I. 1810. By this Regulation, the grounds of which are not stated in the Preamble, it was declared competent to the Governor-general in Council to dispense with the attendance and futwa of the law officers of the courts of circuit whenever he should deem it expedient; and an official communication of an order to that effect by the secretary to Government in the Judicial department, should be considered sufficient authority by the court to whom it should be addressed to proceed without them. In such cases, no sentence was to be passed by the court of circuit, but the proceedings were to be transmitted for the final sentence of the Nizamut Adawlut. Any questions of Mahomedan law arising upon the proceeding were to be referred to the Nizamut Adawlut.

REGULATION

* By Regulation IX. 1831, it was enacted that in all matters of a miscellaneous nature, not being criminal trials, this authority should be exercised by the commissioners of circuit.

IV.—JUDICIAL.

695

IV.

APPENDIX.

No. 6.

continued.

Criminal
Judicature.

REGULATION V.—1814.

Constitution of Courts of Circuit.

THIS Regulation, which increased the number of judges of the courts of appeal and circuit to four, directed that the senior judge should not proceed on circuit, but remain to perform the duties of his office, civil and criminal, at the sudder station. Reg. V. 1814.

REGULATION XXV.—1814.

Powers of single Judges of Courts of Circuit.

THE object of this Regulation was to define the powers of single judges of the provincial courts, both in their civil and criminal jurisdiction. As regards the latter, it authorized a single judge, when sitting at the sudder station, to call for the proceedings of magistrates in cases requiring revision; to execute orders received from the Nizamut Adawlut; and to confirm the orders of magistrates, or of judges on circuit, when referred to the court conjointly. If the judge at the sudder station should concur in opinion with the officer making the reference, he might confirm the proceeding; but if he differed from the judge making the reference, he should record his opinion, and the case should lie over until the attendance of another judge. The same principle was declared applicable to proceedings before a single judge of Nizamut Adawlut. Reg. XXV. 1814.

REGULATION VI.—1818.

Powers of the Courts of Circuit over Magistrates.

By this Regulation (the magistrates having been directed to lay before the judge of circuit at the periodical gaol deliveries a calendar, exhibiting the names and offences of persons whose cases were not in a state of sufficient forwardness to be brought before the court then sitting, or to be disposed of by their own orders), the judges of circuit were authorized to call for the magistrates' proceedings on any case which might appear from inspection of the calendar to require an early decision; and they were empowered to direct the magistrate, in cases determinable by himself, to pass a final order thereon; and in cases determinable before the court of circuit, might order their being immediately brought forward in a supplemental calendar. Reg. VI. 1818.

The object of this rule was declared to be, the preventing unnecessary confinement of prisoners under charge. Judges of circuit were required to use discretion in the exercise of the authority. It was declared not competent to them to reverse the proceedings of a magistrate for bringing a person to trial before the court of circuit; but two judges of circuit concurring, might require a magistrate to take bail for a person committed for trial; and they might likewise, for sufficient cause, admit of the appearance of a vakeel, or representative, instead of the personal attendance of the accused.

REGULATION IV.—1820.

Powers of the Courts of Circuit over Magistrates.

THIS Regulation authorized the courts of circuit to revise the proceedings of magistrates sentencing to more than six months' imprisonment, though no petition should have been presented on the subject, if, on perusal only of the magistrates' calendar of such cases, such revision appeared called for. Reg. IV. 1820.

REGULATION IV.—1823.

Futwas—Judges of Circuit.

THIS Regulation declared that the futwa of a law officer of a zillah, or of any other court, called in to act in the absence of the law officer of the circuit court, should be deemed
iv. 4 T 2

deemed legal and valid. It also provided, that a magistrate who had committed a prisoner for trial should not, on his promotion to the circuit court, preside at the trial of a prisoner whom he had so committed.

REGULATION XVI.—1825.

Increase of Powers of Courts of Circuit.

Reg. XVI. 1825.

THE object of this Regulation was to afford further relief to the Nizamut Adawlut, by increasing the powers of the courts of circuit. It authorized those courts to pass sentence in all cases of robbery by open violence and gang robbery, unless attended with murder or corporal injury endangering life; such sentence to extend to thirty-nine strokes and fourteen years' banishment; provided that if the robbery had been committed by a gang of three or more armed robbers, no less a sentence * than that above stated should be passed. If a mitigation should appear desirable in any particular instance of such cases, reference should be made to the Nizamut Adawlut.

REGULATION I.—1829.

Commissioners of Circuit established.

Reg. I. 1829.

THE Preamble to this Regulation is as follows :—“ The system in operation for superintending the magistracy and the police, and for controlling and directing the executive revenue officers, who in several cases are also magistrates, has been found to be defective. The provincial courts of appeal and circuit, as now constituted, partly from the extent of country placed under their authority, and partly from their having to discharge the duties of both civil and criminal tribunals, have in many cases failed to afford that prompt administration of justice which it is the duty of Government to secure to the people. The gaol deliveries have been, in some instances, delayed beyond the term prescribed by law, especially in the divisions of Bareilly, which comprise thirteen stations, at which gaol deliveries have to be held, besides the joint magistracies of Belah and Sirpoorah; and a great arrear of cases under appeal has accrued in all the courts, to the manifest injury of many individuals, and to the encouragement of litigation and crime. The judges of circuit, when employed singly in the districts under their authority, do not possess sufficient powers, nor have they the opportunity of acquiring sufficient local knowledge to enable them adequately to control the police or protect the people. The great extent of country under each of the Boards of Revenue has similarly operated to impede them in the execution of the duties which belong to them, as tribunals for the determination of all questions relative to the assessment of lands under settlement, and for the judicial decision of many other important cases, as the general guardians of the fiscal interests of the state, as directors and superintendents over the executive officers, and as the confidential advisers of Government. For the correction of the above defects, it has appeared to be expedient and necessary to place the magistracy and police, and the collectors and other executive revenue officers, under the superintendence and control of commissioners of revenue and circuit, each vested with the charge of such a moderate tract of country as may enable them to be easy of access to the people, and frequently to visit the different parts of their respective jurisdictions; to confide to the said commissioners the powers now vested in the courts of circuit, together with those that belong to the Board of Revenue, to be exercised, with the modifications hereinafter provided, the former under the authority of the Nizamut Adawlut, and the latter under the instructions and control of a Sudder, or Chief Board of Revenue; and altogether to disjoin the functions of the courts of circuit from those of the judges of appeal.”

In conformity with the views and purposes above stated, the following rules were enacted, to be in force from the 1st March 1829.

The

* This was rescinded by Reg. I. 1831.

The provinces were formed into twenty districts ; to each of which a Commissioner of Revenue and Circuit was appointed. The commissioners were vested with the authority of judges of circuit, and were to hold sessions at the stations of the several magistrates not less than twice a year in each district ; the Mahomedan law officers of any zillah within the division or of a provincial court were to attend the sessions. The provincial courts were relieved from the duties of criminal courts.

The remainder of the Regulation relates to the arrangement of the local divisions and to the revenue authority to be exercised by the commissioners. Reg. I. of 1830.

It was declared by Regulation IV. 1830, that the Government might appoint any competent person not being a law officer of any zillah or provincial courts, to act as law officer, and that trials held with such assistance should be considered legal. Reg. IV. 1830.

Certain trials having been held by the commissioners at the sudder stations, and the legality of such trials having been doubted, Regulation II. of 1831 was passed to declare them valid. Reg. II. 1831.

REGULATION II.—1829.

Appeal to Commissioners of Circuit from Magistrates.

By this Regulation an appeal was declared to be to the commissioners of circuit from the decision of any magistrate on a summary inquiry, under Regulation XV. of 1824, on questions of dispossession of lands, crops, &c., if such appeal was preferred in one month from the date of such decision. Reg. II. 1829.

REGULATION VII.—1829.

Reports.

THIS Regulation rescinded all the rules previously enacted regarding the forms of reports from the inferior judicatories, and the periods at which they were to be sent ; and it empowered the Nizamut Adawlut to issue such instructions from time to time on those points as it should deem fit. Reg. VII. 1829.

REGULATION VII.—1831.

Appointment of Zillah Judges to hold Sessions.

THE objects of this Regulation were declared to be, to enable the Commissioners of Revenue and Circuit to devote a sufficient portion of their time to the discharge of their revenue duties, and to provide for the more speedy trial of persons committed for criminal offences. The Regulation with this view enacted, that whenever the pressure of business devolving on a Commissioner of Revenue and Circuit should render it advisable, it should be competent to the Governor-general in Council, by an order in council, to invest the judges of the zillahs or cities within those divisions with full powers to conduct the duties of the sessions. The session judges so appointed were to try all persons committed by the magistrates of their respective divisions as soon as convenient, and gaol deliveries for each district were to be held once at least in every month ; but they were not to exercise authority over the magistrates nor to interfere in matters of police. All appeals from the acts or orders of magistrates were to continue to be made as before to the commissioners. Judges of session were, however, empowered to make any requisitions to the magistrates which might be necessary to the due conduct of any pending trial ; and if such requisition were disobeyed, the session judge might make a representation thereof to the Nizamut Adawlut, as also of any misconduct of a police officer that might come to his knowledge. Reg. VII. 1831.

The Regulation contained a few further rules to determine the relative jurisdictions and authorities of commissioners of circuit, zillah judges of sessions, and local magistrates.

PART I.—CRIMINAL JUDICATURE—GENERAL—continued.

(C.)

CONSTITUTION and JURISDICTION of the SUDDER NIZAMUT ADAWLUT.

Regulations.

LIST.

- | | |
|---|---|
| IX. 1793. | } Constitution of the Sudder Nizamut Adawlut. |
| II. 1801.— | |
| IX. 1831.—Powers of single Judges in the Nizamut Adawlut. | |

REGULATION IX.—1793.

Constitution of the Sudder Nizamut Adawlut.

FOR the Preamble to this Regulation, see the head “Magistrates.”

Reg. IX. 1793.

As regarded the chief court of criminal justice, the Regulation enacted, that the Sudder Nizamut Adawlut should consist of the Governor-general and the members of the supreme council; and should be assisted by the head kazeer and two muftis. The court was to have a registrar and such assistance as might be required, and all those persons were to take oaths of office. The Sudder Nizamut Adawlut was empowered to take cognizance of all matters relating to criminal justice and police; and was to propose Regulations for the consideration of Government, to be enacted if approved. The court was to exercise all the powers with which it had been invested when superintended by the late Naib Nazim. By Regulation IX. 1807, the court might call for the proceedings of any circuit court, or of any officer of criminal justice. And, by Regulation XIV. 1816, the gaol at Allepore, in the vicinity of Calcutta, which was the general receptacle for convicts under sentence of perpetual imprisonment and transportation, and of banishment from other zillahs, was placed under the special superintendence of the Nizamut Adawlut.

Reg. IX. 1807.

Reg. XIV. 1816.

By Regulation II. 1801, it was enacted that the court of Sudder and Nizamut Adawlut should consist of three judges, of whom the chief should be a civil member of the council; the other judges to be selected from the body of the civil service. The Nizamut Adawlut being the chief court of judicial administration, sitting in its capacity of a criminal court, the variation in its constitution under different Regulations will be found in the abstract of the civil Regulations, under the title Sudder Dewanny Adawlut. See Regulation X. of 1805, XV. 1807, XII. 1811, XXV. 1814.

REGULATION IX.—1831.

Powers of Single Judges in the Nizamut Adawlut.

Reg. IX. 1831.

WITH a view to the more expeditious despatch of the business of the Nizamut, it was provided by this Regulation that a single judge should possess authority to do the following acts. He might revise the proceedings of a trial by an inferior court, and reverse or alter the sentence, provided such alteration were favourable to the prisoner. In cases of referred trials, if a single judge concurred in opinion with the commissioner of circuit or session judge who referred the trial, he might pass a final decision thereon, except in cases involving capital punishment, in which the concurrent opinion of two judges of the Nizamut Adawlut was to be considered necessary; if the judge referring the trial was for acquittal, or otherwise in favour of the prisoner, the single judge of the Sudder Nizamut Adawlut

Adawlut was not to be competent to decide against the prisoner. It was declared competent to the Nizamut Adawlut to mitigate any sentence passed by a commissioner if it should appear too severe, or to annul any sentence so passed, which should appear to them to be in opposition to any law or regulation in force.

PART I.—CRIMINAL JUDICATURE—GENERAL—continued.

(D.)

GENERAL RULES for the ADMINISTRATION of CRIMINAL JUSTICE and MODIFICATIONS of the MAHOMEDAN LAW.

Regulations.

LIST.

- IX. 1793.—Rules for the Trial of Criminals.
 - VI. 1796.—Power to pardon or grant Mitigation of Punishment.
 - IV. 1797.—Modification of the Mahomedan Law of Retaliation.
 - XIV. 1797.—Relief of persons suffering indefinite Imprisonment for fines unpaid.
 - XVII. 1797.—Punishment for Perjury.
 - VIII. 1799.—Modification of the Mahomedan Law of Retaliation.
 - VIII. 1801.—Modification of the Mahomedan Law of Retaliation, of Death, and of Bodily Injury.
 - LIII. 1803.—Modifications of the Mahomedan Law regarding discretionary punishment.
 - III. 1805.—For the more effectual Punishment of Gang Robbery.
 - XIII. 1806.—
 - VIII. 1807.—
 - VII. 1809.—
 - XII. 1810.—
 - II. 1807.—Rules for the more effectual Punishment of Perjury and Forgery.
 - VIII. 1808.—Rules for the more exemplary Punishment of Gang Robbery.
 - XIV. 1810.—Powers of the Sudder Nizamut Adawlut to pardon and mitigate Punishment.
 - I. 1811.—Punishment for Housebreaking.
 - XIV. 1811.—Transportation abolished.
 - II. 1813.—Punishment for Misappropriation of Public Money.
 - IX. 1813.—Transportation re-established.
 - XI. 1814.—Punishment for Housebreaking.
 - XV. 1814.—Aggregate Penalties for several Offences.
 - XVII. 1817.—Amendments of the Mahomedan Law in regard to Punishments and Evidence.
 - VII. 1820.—Punishment for Dhurna.
 - IV. 1822.—Amendments of the Mahomedan Law in Cases of Murder and Insanity.
 - II. 1823.—Punishment for violent Affrays.
 - VI. 1828.—Explaining the Nature of the Affrays referred to in the foregoing Enactment.
 - III. 1825.—Punishment of Gang Robbery.
 - XII. 1825.—Modification of the Powers of Courts in regard to Punishment.
 - XII. 1829.—Punishment for Wounding with Intent to commit Murder.
-

REGULATION IX.—1793.

Rules for the Trial of Criminals.

THIS Regulation promulgated in the prescribed form the rules which had been framed and published in 1790, relative to the constitution of the courts of justice and the duties of magistrates, which will be found under their proper heads. The preamble will be found abstracted under the head "Magistrates." The Regulation prescribed the following rules regarding the general administration of the criminal law.

On the trial of a prisoner before the court of circuit, the Mahomedan law officers were to be present; and, at its conclusion, they were to write at the end of the record of proceedings a futwa or declaration of the law applicable to the case. The court were to consider this declaration, and, if it appeared to them to be consonant to natural justice and conformable to the Mahomedan law, they were to pass sentence in the terms of the futwa, and to issue their warrant for its immediate execution, provided it did not condemn the prisoner to death, or to imprisonment for life; in either of which cases the whole of the proceedings, with English translations, were to be transmitted to the Nizamut Adawlut for their final sentence.

On trials for murder, the Mahomedan law officers of the courts of circuit, and of the Nizamut Adawlut, were to deliver their futwa according to the doctrines of Yusuf and Mahomed.

Mutilation.

In modification of the Mahomedan law, it was declared that mutilation should not be inflicted, but that a sentence to lose two limbs should be commuted to imprisonment with hard labour for fourteen years, and a sentence to lose one limb be commuted to the like punishment for seven years.

Retaliation of Death.

On a conviction of murder, if the heir of the deceased should demand retaliation, the court of circuit were to pass sentence of death, and then refer the trial to the Nizamut Adawlut; but if the heir only demand the price of blood, the reference was to be made without passing sentence. In all cases where the court of circuit should disapprove of the proceedings or of the futwa, they were to transmit the proceedings with a special separate letter for the final decision of the Nizamut Adawlut. The court of circuit were to refer to the Mahomedan law officers all questions of law on which no specific Regulations had been passed, and to regulate their proceedings by the futwa; from which they were not to deviate without a reference to the Nizamut Adawlut.

Non-prosecution
by the heir.

In cases of murder, the refusal or neglect of the heir to prosecute, or his minority, should not be considered sufficient grounds to bar the trial. In such cases the court of circuit were to require their law officers to declare what futwa they would have delivered, if the defect according to Mahomedan law had not existed; and were to refer the case, with the futwa, to the Nizamut Adawlut, who would pass the same sentence as if the objection had not existed.

Evidence.

When the evidence of any witness would, according to Mahomedan law, be invalidated on account of the religion of the witness, the law officers were to be required to declare what would have been the judgment if such evidence had not been so affected. The trial and futwa were then to be referred to the Nizamut Adawlut, who would pass sentence as if the evidence had been valid in Mahomedan law.

Reference to the Sudder Nizamut
Adawlut.

In all cases, judges of circuit were to accompany the referred trials with a letter, containing their opinion on the merits of the case.

The sentences of the Nizamut Adawlut were to be regulated by the Mahomedan law, excepting where a deviation therefrom should be sanctioned or directed by any Regulation. But the distinctions made by Yusuf and Mahomed, and by Hunneefah, as to the mode of committing murder, were not to be adhered to by the Nizamut Adawlut; the intention of the criminal, inferrible from the nature and circumstances of the case, and not the the manner or instrument of perpetration (except as evidence of the intent), were to constitute the rule for determining the punishment.

A person convicted of murder was not to be exempted from punishment on account of the heir not demanding retaliation, or demanding the price of blood. The proceedings in trials referred by the courts of circuit were to be submitted to the Mahomedan law officers of the Foujdarry Adawlut, who were to state in writing at the foot of each trial, whether the futwa of the law officers of the court of circuit was consistent with the evidence and conformable to the Mahomedan law; if it was not so, the law officers were to state what futwa in their opinion should have been delivered. The court on perusal of the whole were to pass the final sentence.

The sentence when passed was to be communicated by the registrar of the Nizamut Adawlut to the court of circuit, who would issue a warrant to the proper officer to cause it to be carried into execution.

If a criminal sentenced to death should appear to the Nizamut Adawlut to be a proper object for mercy, they were to recommend to the Governor-general in Council his pardon, or a commutation of his sentence.

The appointment and removal of law officers and of ministerial officers in criminal courts is provided for under the rules relative to such appointments in the civil courts of corresponding jurisdiction.

REGULATION VI.—1796.

Power to pardon or to grant Mitigation of Punishment.

THIS Regulation declared, that when the futwa of the law officers of the Nizamut Adawlut should sentence a prisoner to a more severe punishment than the court should deem suited to the circumstances of the crime, in cases in which the Mahomedan law allowed no discretion, the court were to pass sentence according to the futwa, but might suspend execution thereof, and submit the case to the Governor-general in Council, with a recommendation of pardon or mitigation of punishment. Reg. VI. 1796.

The Nizamut Adawlut were also authorized to recommend to the Governor-general in Council the offer of conditional pardon to accessaries, in cases of a heinous nature, such pardon to be confirmed on the conviction of the principals. The judges of the courts of circuit were to recommend to the Nizamut Adawlut cases in which such conditional offer of pardon should appear to them expedient.

REGULATION IV.—1797.

Modification of the Mahomedan Law of Retaliation.

THIS Regulation was passed to amend certain provisions of the Mahomedan law, as operating under the rules of Regulation IX. 1793; it directed that in all cases of murder the attendance of the heirs competent to prosecute and entitled to retaliation should be assumed in the futwa. If the law officer declared a prisoner guilty, the trial was to be referred to the Nizamut Adawlut, whether the sentence passed according to the Mahomedan law adjudged the prisoner to death, or whether it declared him exempt from capital punishment, on account of the relation between the prisoner and the deceased, as that of parent and child, master and slave, &c. If the futwa declared the prisoner guilty of one of the four kinds of homicide not being murder, if the punishment adjudged were the payment of the price of blood, the court of circuit was to commute the sentence to imprisonment, referring the sentence to the Nizamut Adawlut in cases of imprisonment for life, and carrying it into execution if only temporary. The Nizamut Adawlut might either require further evidence, if they saw occasion for it, or might pass such final sentence as should be conformable to justice and to the Mahomedan law, as modified by the Regulations. In any case not provided for by the Regulations, in which the Mahomedan Reg. IV. 1797.

law might appear repugnant to justice, if its provisions were in favour of the prisoner, he was to have the benefit of it; if against him, then his pardon or a mitigation of the punishment was to be recommended to Government. In either case a legislative enactment to remedy the evil for the future was to be proposed by the Nizamut Adawlut, for the consideration of the Government.

This Regulation declared, that the putting any one to death on the ground of practising sorcery should be deemed murder; and further, all persons forming assemblies, or causing such to be held, for the trial of any supposed sorcerer, who in consequence might be put to death, should be deemed accomplices in the murder.

The Nizamut Adawlut were authorized to commute sentences of imprisonment for more than seven years to transportation. Persons sentenced to imprisonment for life were to have the following particulars inscribed on their foreheads; their name, sentence, date of sentence, and the court by which it was passed; such inscription was to be made by the process termed "godena," by which the Hindoo women ornament their faces, and which leaves a blue mark that cannot be effaced.

REGULATION XIV.—1797.

Relief of Persons suffering indefinite Imprisonment for Fines unpaid.

Reg. XIV. 1797.

UNDER the operation of the Mahomedan law, as administered by the courts established before 1793, and also under the Regulations prescribing the punishment of fine in certain cases, without requiring a period of imprisonment to be fixed as equivalent to the fine, it was found that several persons had been sentenced to the payment of sums which they were unable to discharge, and that they must, unavoidably, have remained imprisoned for life, or for periods greatly disproportionate to the offences committed, and much beyond the probable intention of the courts by which they had been passed. The present Regulation was enacted to afford relief to persons actually suffering under the previous rules, and to prevent the recurrence of the like evil in future. It vested power in the Nizamut Adawlut to revise all cases of persons sentenced to indefinite imprisonment, for the payment of deyt or the fine of blood, or for the value of stolen property; for pecuniary compensations to individuals or fines to Government, and to grant relief according to their discretion. The Regulation further provided, that no pecuniary compensations should in future be recoverable by individuals in any criminal prosecution; that no fines should be imposed, except for the use of Government; that in sentencing to the payment of a fine, the court should fix a definite period for imprisonment, at the end of which the prisoner should be discharged, although the fine were not paid. It was declared, that the Regulation did not prohibit the restoration of stolen property produced, nor the reimbursement of costs to prosecutors.

REGULATION XVII.—1797.

Punishments for Perjury.

Reg. XVII. 1797.

THE object of this Regulation was to prescribe specific punishments, by imprisonment, corporal punishment and public exposure, for the crime of perjury, which, by the Mahomedan law, was declared punishable, according to the discretion of the judge. The Regulation accordingly directed, that on a conviction of perjury, the law officers should declare whether the prisoner had incurred the penalty of exposure as well as corporal punishment and imprisonment. If the answer were in the affirmative, the court might sentence the offender, in addition to the last-mentioned punishment, to have inscribed on his forehead, by the process termed "godena," in the native language, words characterizing his offence. Whenever this stigma should be inflicted, the judge passing the sentence was to record his reasons.

REGULATION VIII.—1799.

Modification of the Mahomedan Law of Retaliation.

THE modification of the Mahomedan law in cases of murder, enacted by Regulation IV. 1797, had not been found sufficient in regard to that class of cases in which the criminal was exempted from the punishment of death, on the ground of the relation in which he stood to the deceased; the Regulation referred to had directed that all such cases should be sent up for final decision to the Nizamut Adawlut. The Mahomedan law officers of that court had declared, that a father or mother, or grandfather and grandmother, wilfully murdering their child or grandchild, or murdering any person of whom their child or grandchild might be one of the heirs, could not be sentenced to suffer death by retaliation; and that such sentence could not be passed against a master for murdering his slave, nor against any one for the murder of a slave, appropriated by his owner to the service of the public, nor against a person wilfully killing another at the desire of the party slain; moreover, if any of the persons above-mentioned were concerned with others in the perpetration of wilful murder, their exemption from retaliation precluded the infliction of capital punishment (except under the discretion allowed in all cases of tazeer and sensut), upon any of their accomplices; the operation of this rule being repugnant to the principles of justice, the present Regulation enacted, that in all cases of wilful murder, though the futwa should declare the culprit exempted from retaliation on account of the relation between him and the deceased, the Nizamut Adawlut should sentence him to death; and that the accomplices of the party should also be liable to sentence of death. The desire of the party slain to be put to death was declared to be no justification of wilful homicide.

—
Criminal
Judicature.
Reg. VIII. 1799.

REGULATION VIII.—1801.

Modification of the Mahomedan Law of Retaliation of Death and of Bodily Injury.

THIS Regulation was enacted to remedy the evils arising from the erroneous principle on which the Mahomedan law deals with cases in which death or maiming ensues from the act of a person, if that act differ from the intention of the agent, either as to the object struck, or the manner in which the stroke is inflicted. In all such cases the Mahomedan law looks at the result, not at the intention; whether the slayer intended to murder A., and unintentionally killed B., or whether in the commission of a lawful act, and without any evil intention to any one, he accidentally killed the deceased, or whether actually intending to commit murder, the weapon which he used, instead of striking direct, struck by rebound or otherwise; in all these cases the act differing from the precise intention of the slayer, the Mahomedan law declares that retaliation does not apply, and only imposes the fine of blood. This Regulation, therefore, provided, that if a man intending to murder one individual should kill another, the Mahomedan law officer should be required to declare what would have been the punishment by law, if the prisoner had carried his murderous intention into effect; and if the futwa should condemn him, he was to be sentenced to death. The same rule was directed to be applied to all cases in which death should ensue in the prosecution of any intention, the completion of which would have rendered the offender liable to a sentence of death; and likewise to cases of maiming or wounding, where, if the act should have differed from the intention, the Mahomedan law officers were to be required to state what would have been the sentence if the act contemplated had been completed, and the court were to pass sentence accordingly.

Reg. VIII. 1801.

REGULATION LIII.—1803.

Modifications of the Mahomedan Law regarding Discretionary Punishment.

THIS Regulation was enacted to provide for a more equitable and consistent adjudication of the discretionary punishments which the Mahomedan law places in the power of

Reg. LIII. 1803.

704 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

the magistrate to award. First, for offences for which no stated punishment is fixed by the law.

Second, for such as, though liable to specific punishments have not been proved against the persons charged, according to the Mahomedan law of evidence, or where the application of the prescribed punishment is barred by some special exception or legal defect, as in certain relations of the prosecutor to the culprit, &c. Third, for heinous crimes requiring, for the ends of justice, a heavier punishment than the law has prescribed for the offence under ordinary circumstances: the discretion in the latter case extending to capital punishment. The principles which had guided the Mahomedan law officers in declaring the punishments due under such discretionary authority, having been found to lead to inadequate and unjust sentences, it was deemed necessary to determine by a Regulation the punishments which the criminal court should adjudge in all cases in which discretion is vested in the judge by the Mahomedan law.

It was also found necessary to define and to apply a new rule of punishment to robbery by open violence; a prevalent crime, not unfrequently attended with murder or great personal injury and with burnings. The Mahomedan law assigns capital punishments to the principals and accessaries in murders committed in the perpetration of open and violent robbery; and amputation of two limbs to the robbers if no death have ensued; but these penalties cannot be applied to murders or robberies committed in any other place than on or near the highway, and at a distance from any inhabited place; and the offenders are exempted from the prescribed punishments, collectively or individually, under a variety of circumstances not affecting the criminality of the acts, and according to rules repugnant to justice. To obviate these evils, and to modify certain rules regarding the disposal of persons returned from transportation before the time of banishment had expired and re-captured, the Regulation enacted as follows:—

Rules for the adjudication of Discretionary Punishment.

In cases of discretionary punishment, the futwas of the law officers were to leave the measure thereof to be determined by the court of circuit or Nizamut Adawlut.

If any Regulation had assigned specific punishment for the offence, the courts were to pass sentence conformably thereto.

If no Regulation had assigned specific punishment, but such punishment had been assigned by the Mahomedan law, then, if the offender were declared by the futwa to be exempted from such punishment, on the ground that the evidence, though amounting to strong presumptive proof, was not such as the Mahomedan law requires for conviction, or because of some legal exemption, the courts were to require their law officer to state what would have been the punishment if the evidence had been sufficient to convict, or if the offender had not been legally exempt; and the court were required to pass sentence according to the second futwa, provided the evidence, though not conformable to Mahomedan law, were sufficiently strong and convincing.

If no punishment were specified by the Mahomedan law, or by any Regulation, the court of circuit were not to sentence to more than thirty-nine stripes, and imprisonment with hard labour for seven years. If that punishment should appear insufficient they were to refer the trial for the sentence of the Nizamut Adawlut, who might pass sentence not extending to capital punishment, according to the circumstances of the case. The Nizamut Adawlut were at the same time to propose a Regulation to fix the punishment for any crime of magnitude not before provided for, and which might appear to require an express enunciation of the penalty to be incurred by its commission.

Definition of Dacoity.

Punishment.

Gang robbery by open violence (dacoity) was defined to be, the going forth armed, or in a gang, for the purpose of committing robbery, and actually robbing and attacking any person, or any building in which there might be any person or property. If an adult of sound understanding should be convicted of such offence, he was not to be exempted from punishment by the circumstances which are allowed to bar it by the Mahomedan law. If any Regulation prescribed the penalty, penalty, the court was to conform thereto. If the law officer declared the offender liable to amputation, the court might either refer the trial to the Nizamut Adawlut or commute the punishment.

The Regulation prescribed the following specific punishments :—

1st,—Whenever murder should have been committed, the principals and accessories were to suffer death.

2d,—In cases of severe injury to the body short of murder, or setting fire to a dwelling-house, principals and accessories were to be imprisoned, and transported for life. Leaders of gangs might for a second offence be sentenced to death.

3d,—In cases of gang robbery by open violence, without murder or severe bodily injury or burning, the offenders were to suffer imprisonment and hard labour for fourteen years. For a second offence a leader might be imprisoned and transported for life.

4th,—Persons convicted of the intention to commit gang robbery by open violence, who had been prevented from completing the act, were to be imprisoned with hard labour for seven years.

The same punishments were declared applicable to cases of burglaries or any entry by night into a house or building for the purpose of committing theft, if after entry murder were committed or great personal injury inflicted.

The Regulation then provided, that no person should be sentenced to transportation beyond the sea unless sentenced to confinement for life; and in such cases, the court passing the sentence was required to specify whether the convict should or not be transported beyond the sea. Power was given to the courts to banish convicts from the district in which they abode, and to keep them to hard labour in that to which they might be removed. Transportation.

Convicts escaping from confinement before the expiration of their sentence were declared liable to further punishment, in addition to their former sentences; and convicts sentenced to transportation for life, and returning before the expiration of the sentence, might be adjudged to suffer death.

The remaining provisions of the regulation related chiefly to the detail of practice, and are of no great importance.

REGULATION III.—1805.

For the more effectual Punishment of Gang Robbery.

THE object of this Regulation was to add flogging to the other punishments declared for gang robbery, and to render village watchmen and police officers amenable to exemplary punishment for conniving at gang robbery or at the escape of the robbers. It accordingly enacted that persons sentenced to transportation for life, or to imprisonment for not less than fourteen years, might be further punished with not more than thirty-nine lashes of the corah, and persons sentenced to imprisonment for seven years might be further punished with thirty lashes of the corah. It was likewise declared that any officer of the village or general police who should be convicted of being a party to any of the different species of gang robbery specified in Regulation LIII. 1803, should be liable to the severest punishment assigned to the most aggravated character of the act in the Regulation above referred to. Connivance at the offence to be punished in the same way as participation in the actual commission of the act. Reg. III. 1805.

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued.

Criminal
Judicature.

Reg. XIII. 1806.
(Rescinded by
Reg. I. 1814.)

706 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

REGULATION XIII.—1806.

For the Prevention and Punishment of the Forgery of Stamps, and of the unauthorized Sale of them.

THE preamble stated that attempts having been made to imitate the stamps established by the Regulations of Government, it had become necessary, for the security of the public revenue derived from that source, to adopt measures more effectually to prevent the fabrication of false stamps, and the use of forged stamp paper, for which offences the Mahomedan law did not prescribe any specific punishment. The Regulation, after prescribing several precautionary measures in the issue of stamps, provided for the appointment of special agents, under written sunnuds from the magistrates, and rendered it penal for any person to vend stamps without such appointment. It further enacted, that persons charged with forging or uttering forged stamp paper, should be tried before the courts of circuit, and be liable on conviction to corporal punishment, not exceeding thirty-nine stripes of the korah, and to imprisonment and hard labour for seven years.

Reg. VIII. 1807.
VII. 1809, &
XI. 1810.

Those rules were modified by Regulations VIII. 1807, and by VII. 1809, and by XII. 1810.

REGULATION II.—1807.

For the more effectual Punishment of Perjury and Forgery.

Reg. II. 1807.

Definition of Perjury ;

and of Forgery.

Punishment.

THIS Regulation was enacted for the more effectual prevention and punishment of perjury and forgery, no specific penalties having been attached to those crimes by the Mahomedan law, which left them punishable at discretion, by flagellation, imprisonment, and public ignominy. This Regulation defined perjury to be the giving, intentionally and deliberately, before a court of judicature, magistrate, or other authorized public officer, a false deposition, upon oath, or under a solemn declaration taken instead of an oath, relative to some judicial proceeding, civil or criminal, and upon a point material to the issue thereof.

Forgery was declared to include all fraudulent and injurious fabrications or alterations of written deeds, or of written or printed papers, as well as all counterfeit seals or signatures thereto, and the illicit imitation of any public stamp or stamped paper established by the Government. The Regulation provided, that if any person should be convicted of perjury or forgery, and if the futwa should declare him liable to discretionary punishment, the judges of circuit (concurring in the conviction) should sentence the offender to be publicly exposed, to be branded in the forehead with words descriptive of his crime, to receive thirty stripes, and to be imprisoned, with hard labour, for not less than four nor more than seven years, during which time he might be banished from the district in which he resided. It was declared that persons charged with perjury or forgery should not be admitted to bail by magistrates, except under special authority of the court under whose directions they were committed for trial.

Persons considered by the court of circuit to be guilty of perjury before them, might be committed for immediate trial before the same sessions, provided all the witnesses, both for the prosecution and the defence, were in attendance.

In these, as in other cases, if the judge of circuit should differ from the futwa of the law officer, declaring the prisoner guilty, he was to refer the case to the Nizamut Adawlut.

REGULATION VIII.—1808.

For the more exemplary Punishment of Gang Robbery.

Reg. VIII. 1808.

AN option had been given by Regulation LIII. 1803, to the courts of circuit in cases of gang robbery not attended with murder, either to refer the case for the final sentence of of the Nizamut Adawlut, if the court thought the offenders deserving of transportation for life, or of passing a mitigated sentence of temporary imprisonment in cases which should appear to them less aggravated.

The Nizamut Adawlut had been empowered by the previous Regulations, in cases of which the ordinary punishment was imprisonment for fourteen years, to adjudge a higher degree of punishment, if they saw fit, upon leaders of gangs or upon other offenders, if convicted of a repetition of the crime, or found to be persons of notoriously bad character. In practice, however, it had been found that the courts of circuit, if they concurred with the futwa, had exercised the authority vested in them of passing sentence in cases of conviction, wherever a sentence of perpetual imprisonment was not prescribed by the Regulations; and that in consequence, the Nizamut Adawlut had seldom been enabled to exercise their discretionary power above mentioned; and many persons convicted of robbery, of whose amendment no hope could be entertained, had been set at liberty at the expiration of a limited period, to join their former associates and to renew their depredations. The present Regulation therefore enacted that all persons convicted of robbery by open violence, as defined in Regulation LIII. 1803, and not liable to capital punishment, should be sentenced to receive thirty-nine lashes, and to be imprisoned and transported for life, unless the Nizamut Adawlut should see fit to mitigate that sentence; all convictions therefore for that offence were to be referred to the Nizamut Adawlut.

In consideration of the additional labour which this enactment would cast upon the judges and the law offices of the Nizamut Adawlut, it was provided, that whenever the state of business should require it, it should be competent for one law officer to write the futwa, and one judge to pass sentence, provided such futwa should agree with that of the court making the reference, and that the sentence was in accordance with the opinion of the court of circuit. In cases where these did not agree, the other law officer and another judge of the Nizamut Adawlut were to be called in to decide.

The Regulation further provided, that before the liberation of persons sentenced to temporary imprisonment for gang robbery, they were to be required to give substantial security for their good conduct, and were not to be released without giving such security, unless from their character and conduct, while in confinement, it might seem proper to discharge them on their own recognizances. Security for good behaviour.

REGULATION XIV.—1810.

Powers of Sudder Nizamut Adawlut to Pardon and mitigate Punishment.

THIS Regulation rescinded the provisions of former enactments which required a reference from the Nizamut Adawlut to the Governor-general in Council, to obtain a pardon or mitigation of punishment for persons convicted of any criminal offence; and it enacted that in all cases in which the punishment adjudged by the futwa of the law officer, or declared by the Regulations to attach to any crime, should appear excessive in the particular case, it should be competent to two judges of the Nizamut Adawlut to remit or mitigate such sentence; provided that in all such cases the grounds of the remission or mitigation should be recorded and communicated to the court before whom the trial had been held, with directions that it be made known in open court to the prisoners concerned. The Regulation further empowered the Nizamut Adawlut to authorize conditional offers of pardon to accessaries in cases of heinous crimes, a power which by Regulation VI. 1796, was vested only in the Governor-general in Council. Reg. XIV. 1810.

REGULATION I.—1811.

Punishment for Housebreaking.

THIS Regulation was enacted for the more effectual check of the offence of breaking into houses and other buildings, tents, or boats, whether used for dwellings or for the reception Reg. I. 1811.

reception of property ; it likewise contained rules for the punishment of the receivers of stolen goods, which will be found under the head of "Magistrates;" and for licensing retail dealers in gold, silver, and other metallic wares, which are placed under the head of "Police." The Regulation defined the crime of housebreaking, and declared the commission of it in a dwelling-house between sunset and sunrise to subject the offender to banishment for fourteen years and thirty-nine stripes; if between sunrise and sunset, to seven years' banishment and twenty stripes. The same offence, however, if committed in a warehouse or other place not used as a dwelling-house, whether by day or night, was to subject the offender to seven years' imprisonment and twenty stripes. If a person in the commission of housebreaking should kill another, he was to be adjudged to suffer death; all accessories were to suffer the same punishment as principals.

Persons convicted of receiving stolen goods with a guilty knowledge were to be imprisoned for seven years, and receive thirty-nine stripes. If they knew the property to have been gained by gang robbery, they might be sentenced to fourteen years' imprisonment with thirty-nine stripes.

REGULATION XIV.—1811.

Transportation abolished.—Allepore Gaol.

Reg. XIV. 1811. By this Regulation the punishment of transportation for life beyond sea was abolished, and in lieu thereof was established perpetual imprisonment in a gaol at Allepore in the vicinity of Calcutta, where convicts were to be employed in the manufacture of articles saleable at the Presidency, or in such other labour as the superintendent should direct, but were not to be worked upon the public roads, nor to quit the area attached to the gaol.

REGULATION II.—1813.

Punishment for Misappropriation of Public Money.

Reg. II. 1813. This Regulation declared that the native cash keepers, collectors, and other native officers of Government, who should make use of the public money for their own advantage or that of any other individual, should be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and should be liable to imprisonment for seven years on conviction before the court of circuit; such public officers, however, were not to be sentenced to stripes or hard labour; but if the stated period of imprisonment should be deemed by the court not a sufficient punishment, they were to refer the case for the final sentence of the Nizamut Adawlut.

REGULATION IX.—1813.

Transportation re-established.

Reg. IX. 1813. This Regulation restored the punishment of transportation, and declared that all convicts sentenced to transportation should be sent to such of the British settlements in Asia as the Governor-general in Council should appoint, who might also direct the transfer of convicts from one place to another. The local authorities were to be consulted upon the propriety of allowing any convicts to be exempted from removal, whose good conduct might have merited that indulgence, or who, from sickness or infirmity, might not be fit objects to be removed.

REGULATION XI.—1814.

Punishment for Housebreaking.

Reg. XI. 1814. The purpose of this Regulation was to enable the Courts of circuit, without reference to the Nizamut Adawlut, to mitigate the sentence which they were directed to pass in cases of housebreaking by Regulation I: 1811. The sentence of banishment for fourteen years and thirty-nine stripes might be reduced to seven years' imprisonment with or without stripes or banishment. The sentence to seven years' banishment with twenty-nine stripes stripes might be reduced to three years' imprisonment with or without stripes or banishment. Whenever a further mitigation or a remission of the punishment might appear proper to the court of circuit, they were to refer the case for the orders of the Nizamut Adawlut.

REGULATION XV.—1814.

Aggregate Penalties for several Offences.

This Regulation was enacted to define the punishment to which an offender should be subject, who had been convicted on separate charges, when the aggregate penalties on the several convictions might involve a period of imprisonment exceeding fourteen years. In such cases the court of circuit might reduce the punishment to fourteen years' imprisonment in banishment and thirty-nine stripes; but if that punishment should appear insufficient, the trial was to be referred to the Nizamut Adawlut.

Reg. XV. 1814.

REGULATION XVII.—1817.

Amendments of the Mahomedan Law in regard to Punishments and Evidence.

THE objects of this Regulation, as stated in the preamble, were, 1st, To supply a deficiency in the existing Regulations, which contained no provision for enabling the judges of the Nizamut Adawlut to pass a sentence of punishment when the futwa of the law officers should not convict the prisoner of the fact or facts charged against him, nor declare him liable on strong presumption to discretionary punishment. 2d. To amend the provisions of the Mahomedan law of evidence in certain cases in which its effect was such as almost to prevent the due course of justice, especially where, on failure of direct evidence, punishment could not be inflicted on presumptive evidence. These defects of the Mahomedan law were found to have most injurious effects in cases of rape, incest, and adultery, and also in those of perjury, its exceptions to the competency or credibility of witnesses being, in several instances, arbitrary and unjust. The present Regulation therefore provided as follows:

Reg. XVII. 1817.

Whenever a prisoner should be acquitted by the futwa of the Mahomedan law officer, if the judge of circuit should be of opinion that the proof was sufficient to convict him, and that he was a proper object of punishment, the judge should refer the case to the Nizamut Adawlut. If the futwa of the law officers of the Nizamut Adawlut acquitted the prisoner, but two or more judges of that court considered the evidence sufficient to convict him, they should, notwithstanding such futwa, pass sentence upon him according to the nature and degree of the offence.

If the evidence of a witness before a court of circuit should be declared by the Mahomedan law officers inadmissible on any ground which might appear unreasonable, the judge should nevertheless take the examination of the witness, and, at the conclusion of the trial, should require the Mahomedan law officer to state what would have been the sentence if such evidence had been admissible, and the judge was directed to pass sentence accordingly; if, however, the conviction was found to rest exclusively on the objectionable evidence, then the judge was to refer the trial for the decision of the Nizamut Adawlut.

In cases of zina, the futwa of the law officers was only to declare whether the prisoner was legally convicted, or whether there was, from the evidence, strong presumption of his guilt. If the judge of circuit concurred in the conviction, or in the presumption of his guilt, he was to sentence the prisoner to imprisonment, with hard labour, not exceeding seven years, with thirty-nine stripes: but in all cases where that punishment should not appear sufficient, and always in cases of rape, the trial was to be referred to the Nizamut Adawlut.

Zina.

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued.

Criminal
Judicature.
Homicide.

Robbery.

Forgery and Perjury.

Branding.

Perjury.
Extension of the Definition.

710 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

No prosecution of a married woman for adultery was to be instituted but by the husband.

The Regulation declared, that in cases of homicide not amounting to murder, in which the fine of blood might be commuted by the circuit court, such power of commutation shall only extend to a sentence of seven years' imprisonment, with hard labour, and thirty-nine stripes. If any heavier punishment appeared requisite, the case was to be referred to the Nizamut Adawlut.

The Regulation declared, that in all cases of robbery, if the act had been accompanied with an attempt to commit wilful murder, or with actual corporal injury such as to endanger life, the principals and accomplices were liable to the same punishment as that prescribed for gang-robbery, viz. transportation for life and thirty-nine lashes; all such cases to be referred to the Nizamut Adawlut.

In cases of robbery in which corporal injury to a less degree than stated above had ensued, the court of circuit might pass sentence of imprisonment in banishment for fourteen years and thirty-nine stripes.

In cases of perjury or forgery, the court of circuit might sentence the prisoner, on conviction, to imprisonment in banishment for seven years, and to receive thirty lashes; or in cases of forging or counterfeiting the current coin or securities of the British Government, to the like punishment for fourteen years.

The crime of uttering or giving currency to forged deeds, stamps, coin, or bank notes, with a guilty knowledge, also that of clipping or defacing the coin, were declared punishable by the court of circuit with imprisonment for seven years; and in aggravated cases, or for second offences, to exposure and corporal punishment; if the offence were repeated a third time, the case was to be referred to the Nizamut Adawlut.

Persons having base coin in their possession, unable to give a good account of it, might be sentenced by the magistrate to pay four times the value, and to be imprisoned for six months.

The punishment of branding on the forehead was declared applicable only to convicts sentenced to imprisonment or transportation for life.

The definition of perjury was extended to include false oaths taken before any public officer duly authorized, though the deposition sworn to might not relate to any judicial proceeding. In all cases of perjury, subornation of perjury, before any public officer, the accused were not to be committed or held to bail, except on the requisition of the public officer before whom the perjury had been committed.

In cases of reference from the court of circuit to the Nizamut Adawlut for mitigation or remission of punishment, a single judge of the Nizamut Adawlut was declared competent to grant such remission, if he concurred in opinion with the judge who had referred the case. It was further declared, that a single judge might order a mitigation of punishment, if such mitigation appeared called for, even though no mitigation has been recommended by the judge of circuit. The judge of the Nizamut Adawlut was in all such cases to record his reasons for directing the mitigation.

REGULATION VII.—1820.

Punishment for Dhurna.

Reg. VII. 1820.

It is stated in the preamble to this Regulation, that the rule which required that in cases of dhurna, the opinion of the pundit, instead of that of the Mahomedan law officer, should be taken, whether the crime of dhurna was established by the evidence, had been found inconvenient; because the pundit not travelling with the circuit court, the reference to him at the sudder station occasioned delay. It had moreover been ascertained, that the crime itself was punishable as a misdemeanor according to the Mahomedan law, under the head of "Oppression." This Regulation consequently provided, that on trials for dhurna, as in other cases, the futwas should be taken from the Mahomedan law officer. The court of circuit were authorized to punish the offence by imprisonment, not exceeding one year, and a fine not exceeding 1,000 rupees, commutable to a further imprisonment not exceeding one year.*

REGULATION IV.—1822.

Amendments of the Mahomedan Law in Cases of Murder and Insanity.

THIS Regulation was intended to provide a remedy for certain defects of the Mahomedan law, by authorizing two or more judges of the Nizamut Adawlut to acquit a prisoner, notwithstanding his conviction by the futwa, if they should consider the evidence insufficient for the conviction.

Reg. IV. 1822.

In cases of murder or severe personal injury, if the heirs refused to prosecute, the trial was nevertheless to proceed, and the law officers were to declare what would have been the futwa had they prosecuted.

According to the Mahomedan law, if a person should become insane after the perpetration of murder, but entirely recover before his conviction, the intervening insanity is considered to bar all capital or discretionary punishment; the criminal being subject only to the payment of the fine of blood. In all such cases the law officers of the Nizamut Adawlut were to declare what would have been the futwa, if such insanity had not intervened.

In cases of murder in which it should be pleaded in justification that the deceased was discovered in the act of adultery or fornication, the law officers were to declare in their futwa what would have been the sentence if such plea had not existed; and the judges were to pass sentence in consideration of all the circumstances of the case.

It had been found in many cases of severe corporal injury, that the Mahomedan law officers only awarded to the injured person his expenses for medical attendance; such reparation being often inadequate, the court of circuit were by the present Regulation authorized under such futwa to pass sentence of imprisonment for seven years; or in aggravated cases, might refer the trial for the final sentence of the Nizamut Adawlut.

Whenever the futwa should declare that a person convicted of a criminal offence was exempted from punishment by reason of a doubt as to his sanity when he committed the act; if two judges of the Nizamut Adawlut should consider the evidence to have satisfactorily established that the prisoner was not insane at the time, they might pass sentence of punishment, notwithstanding the futwa of acquittal.

REGULATION II.—1823.

Punishment for violent Affrays.

THE frequent occurrence of violent affrays, especially those occasioned by disputes regarding the possession or boundaries of land, and the importance of checking a crime which had not unfrequently led to homicide and other serious ill consequences, are declared in the preamble to this Regulation to have rendered it expedient that a minimum of punishment should be fixed for such offences. The Regulation accordingly provided, that whenever any persons should be convicted of affrays attended with homicide, it should not be competent to the court of circuit to sentence the offenders to a less term of imprisonment than five years, with or without labour and corporal punishment.

Reg. II. 1823.

REGULATION

* See Regulation V. 1797, under the head "Miscellaneous."

Criminal
Judicature.
Reg. VI. 1828.

REGULATION VI.—1828.

Explaining the Nature of the Affrays referred to in the foregoing Enactment.

By Regulation VI. of 1828, the provisions of this Regulation were explained not to be applicable to unpremeditated affrays, nor to aggressions in which the assailed party might not appear to have been previously prepared to meet their adversaries in the field of combat, nor to affrays, though accompanied by homicide, in which persons, legally protecting crops or other property, might be attacked by trespassers, or might resist aggression when defending such property, or in self-defence; in all which cases, the circuit judges agreeing with the futwas of their law officers, were to pass such legal sentence as might be suitable to the offence.

REGULATION III.—1825.

Punishment of Gang Robbery.

Reg. III. 1825.

It had been enacted by preceding Regulations, that in all cases of conviction of robbery by open violence, the trial should be referred to the Nizamut Adawlut. The present Regulation enacted, that if the crime had not been perpetrated by a gang, or if it were unattended with circumstances of aggravation, such as could not be adequately punished by the courts of circuit, those courts might pass sentence on convicted offenders, without reference to the Nizamut Adawlut.

REGULATION XII.—1825.

Modification of the Powers of Court, in regard to Punishment.

Reg. XII. 1825.

This Regulation modified the practice of the criminal courts in several particulars. It substituted in all cases the rattan for the corah, as an instrument of flagellation, and forbade the punishment of women by stripes. Contempts of court were declared not punishable by the rattan, but only by fine not exceeding 200 rupees, commutable to imprisonment in the civil gaol for a period not exceeding two months.

In cases of culpable homicide, not amounting to wilful murder, and other cases in which the courts of circuit were authorized to pass sentence of seven years' imprisonment, with or without stripes or hard labour, with power to refer to the Nizamut Adawlut if that punishment should appear insufficient; such references were declared unnecessary by the present Regulation, and the courts of circuit were empowered to pass sentence to the full extent of the legal punishment, without such reference, if they concurred in the futwa of the law officer. It was further declared that no sentence of death should be passed by the Nizamut Adawlut, but with the concurrence of two judges.

REGULATION XII.—1829.

Punishment of Wounding, with Intent to commit Murder.

Reg. XII. 1829.

It was declared in the preamble to this Regulation, that the effect of the provisions of Regulation XII. 1825 had been, that under many circumstances of wounding, which manifested a deliberate intention of committing murder, the punishment of seven years' imprisonment had been found wholly inadequate, and that relief intended to be afforded to the Nizamut Adawlut had not been experienced to the extent anticipated; the present Regulation therefore enacted, that in all cases of wounding, where the intention to commit murder was manifested, if the opinion of the commissioners of circuit concurred with the futwa of the law officer on that point, he might pass sentence of imprisonment for a period not exceeding fourteen years.

PART II.

CRIMINAL JUDICATURE.—POLICE.

REGULATIONS for the ESTABLISHMENT and MAINTENANCE of an EFFECTIVE POLICE.

Regulations.

LIST.

- XXII. 1793.—Abolition of Zemindary Police and Establishment of the Darogah System.
 XXIII. 1793.—Establishment of Police Tax.
 IV. 1797.—Inquests by Darogahs.
 VI. 1797.—Abolition of the Police Tax.
 XVIII. 1805.—Zemindary Police brought into Operation.
 XI. 1806.— } Assistance to be afforded to Troops on March.
 VI. 1825.— }
 IX. 1807.—Duties and Powers of Native Officers of Police.
 XII. 1807.—Appointment of Ameens of Police.
 IX. 1808.—Proclamation of Rewards for Apprehension of Dacoits.
 X. 1808.—Superintendents of Police for Three Divisions established at Calcutta.
 VI. 1810.—Penalties for Zemindars not co-operating in the Suppression of Gang Robbery.
 VIII. 1810.—Superintendents of Police for the Upper Provinces established.
 XVI. 1810.—Proclamation of Rewards for Apprehension of Dacoits.
 I. 1811.—Rules for the Discovery and Apprehension of Receivers of Stolen Goods.
 VII. 1811.—Powers of Police Darogahs.
 III. 1812.—Native Police.
 XXI. 1812.—Licenses to certain Trades.
 XIII. 1813.— }
 III. 1814.— } City Police and Assessment.
 IX. 1814.— }
 XVI. 1814.— }
 VIII. 1814.—Inhabitants in general to assist in keeping the Peace.
 XIII. 1814.—The Office of Cutwal abolished.
 XVII. 1816.—Appointment and Duties of the Native Police.
 XXII. 1816.—Appointment and Duties of the Native Town Police.
 XX. 1817.—Consolidated and amended General Police Regulation.
 XII. 1818.—Suspension of Arrest.
 VI. 1819.—Police Ferries.
 III. 1821.—Arrest of suspicious Gangs.
 V. 1822.—Apprehension of proclaimed Dacoits.

Criminal
Judicature.
Reg. XXII. 1793.

REGULATION XXII.—1793.

Abolition of Zemindary Police and Establishment of the Darogah System.

Powers of Darogahs.

City Police.

THE preamble to this Regulation, after adverting to the importance of an efficient police, proceeded to state that the clause in the engagements between the landholders and the government binding them to keep the peace, and to produce both robbers and property plundered within their estates, had not only been found nugatory, but, in numerous instances, had proved the means of multiplying robberies, owing to collusion between the robbers and the police officers entertained by such landholders. This Regulation therefore enacted, that the police of the country should thenceforward be considered under the exclusive charge of officers appointed by the Government. Landholders were released from responsibility for property stolen unless they were parties to the offence. Each zillah was divided into police jurisdictions, generally of the extent of ten coss (twenty miles) square, each superintended by a darogah, whose station was in the centre of his jurisdiction. Darogahs were authorized to receive charges of criminal offences committed, and to forward the accused to the magistrate, taking security from the prosecutors and their witnesses to appear before the magistrate. The darogahs were also to take up vagrants and suspicious persons, and to send them to the magistrates. The authority of the darogahs was limited to the apprehension of accused or suspicious persons, except that in cases of petty assaults, if the parties compromised and filed a razeenamah, they might discharge the prisoner. All the native watchmen of the village establishments were declared subject to the orders of the darogah, and were to be required to apprehend persons committing offences, and to forward them to the darogah, to whom they were also to give information of suspicious persons, vagrants, &c., and of breaches of the peace. The village officers might be dismissed for neglect of duty. The police officers of one district might follow persons charged with crimes into other districts. Darogahs were to receive a reward of ten rupees for every convicted dacoit* who might have been apprehended within their respective jurisdictions, and ten per cent. on the value of all recovered property on conviction of the robbers. Boats of particular descriptions were forbidden to be built without a license from the magistrate. The darogahs were to send monthly reports to the magistrates of all persons apprehended by them; the omission of such report would render the darogah liable to dismissal from office. The cities of Patna, Dacca, and Moorsshedabad, were to be divided into wards, each to be the jurisdiction of a darogah, who was to be under the authority of the cutwal of the city. The darogah's guards were to parade their wards from sunset to daylight in two divisions, one, during the first half of the night, under the jamadar or deputy, the other under the darogah himself. The general duties prescribed to the cutwals of cities were of the same nature as those of the darogahs in districts.

REGULATION XXIII.—1793.

Establishment of Police Tax.

Reg. XXIII. 1793.
(Rescinded.)

IT was stated in the preamble to this Regulation that it had appeared equitable to the Government, on the introduction of a general system of police on the 7th December 1792, that the expense of the police establishments should be defrayed by the merchants, traders, and shopkeepers residing in the cities, towns, and bazars, because they were particularly interested in the establishment of an efficient police for the protection of their property, and because, in consequence of the recent abolition of the inland customs, they at that time paid no immediate tax to the state. With a view, therefore, of equalizing the assessment of that tax on native merchants, traders, and shopkeepers, throughout Bengal, Behar,

* Gang robbers of a very dangerous character.

Behar, and Orissa, this Regulation was passed. It vested the assessment and collection of the police tax in the collectors of the revenue. The collectors were annually to estimate the total amount of the tax that would be required for the support of the police in each zillah or city, and to assess it proportionately on the several pergunnahs and wards. They were to appoint native assessors, who should fix the amount payable by each merchant or shopkeeper in each pergunnah or ward, and the assessors were to be sworn to the performance of their duties. Their number in each pergunnah or ward was not to exceed six, nor to be less than three. The inhabitants of the wards or pergunnahs collectively might appeal against the sum assessed as their proportion of the general zillah or city tax, and each individual might appeal against the sum fixed as his quota by the assessors of his pergunnah or ward to the civil court; the judge was immediately to try the objection, and to lower or confirm the assessment as might seem proper.

REGULATION IV.—1797.

Inquests by Darogahs.

DAROGAHS of police, on hearing of a person having died an unnatural death within their jurisdiction, were to proceed to the spot to make personal inquiries into the circumstances of the case, and reduce them to writing in the presence of creditable people of the neighbouring villages. The statement signed by the persons present was to be immediately forwarded to the magistrate. Reg. IV. 1797.

REGULATION VI.—1797.

Abolition of the Police Tax.

IN this Regulation it was declared, "That difficulties having been experienced in determining what persons were liable to be taxed under Regulation XXIII. 1793, and in fixing the general amount and individual proportions of the tax; and frauds and exactions having taken place in the assessment and collection to the vexation of the contributors as well as to the diminution of the produce of the tax, it was resolved to abolish the police tax, and to substitute stamp duties, to provide for the deficiency which would be occasioned in the public revenue by the abolition of that tax." Reg. VI. 1797

REGULATION XVIII.—1805.

Zemindary Police.

THE objects of this Regulation were to establish a separate magistracy and a zemindary police in certain districts, commonly called the Jungle-mehals, situated within the limits of zillahs Beerbhoom, Burdwan, and Midnapoor, and to enable the Government to extend the system of zemindary police wherever they should see fit. It was stated in the preamble, that the zemindars of those districts had, with the consent of Government, exercised a local charge of the police, either jointly with the police darogahs appointed under Regulation XXIII. of 1793, or instead of such police officers, under rules adopted in the first instance experimentally; that those rules had been found successful in operation, and that it was therefore expedient that they should be published in the form of a Regulation, and that Government should be enabled to extend their application to other districts as should be found advisable. Accordingly, it enacted the following provisions for the employment of zemindary police wherever the Governor-general in Council should see fit to intrust such powers to landholders. Reg. XVIII. 1805.

Such zemindars as the Governor-general in Council might intrust with police authority were to receive a sunnud of appointment from the magistrate, not revocable but under the authority of the Government. They were to furnish the magistrate with lists of persons whom they might employ as police officers, and of their allowances in land or money, and were to fill up all vacancies. Such police officers were to be subject to the the orders of the magistrate, and punishable by him for misconduct. In zemindaries where there should be police darogahs, the village watchmen were to be also subject to the darogahs; and the zemindar and his officers were to act in co-operation and support of the darogah. The zemindars were to observe the general police regulations, and to forward to the darogah or magistrate, within twenty-four hours after apprehension, all persons charged with heinous offences. Zemindars were prohibited from summoning the ryots of other zemindars, and the police officers of one zemindar were declared not subject to the orders of another, though all were required to co-operate for the public good. Zemindars might apply to the nearest military station for assistance in apprehending gangs of robbers. Zemindars participating in or conniving at gang robberies, were declared liable to fine or imprisonment; and in heinous cases, to forfeiture of their lands. They were to engage to be responsible for the amount of all properties stolen within their zemindaries, unless it were satisfactorily shown that the robbery was not attributable to any want of care on the part of themselves or their police officers. They might be sued in the civil court for the amount of any loss sustained by robbery within their zemindaries. Zemindars were to transmit periodical reports, and all other necessary communications, to the magistrates of their respective zillahs. It was further declared that managers of the estates of disqualified zemindars should be eligible to the charge of the police within their several districts.

REGULATION XI.—1806.

Assistance to Troops on March.

Reg. XI. 1806.

This Regulation required magistrates, on receiving intimation from commanding officers of troops being to march through their districts, to provide all necessary supplies of provisions, bearers, carts, and other necessaries and accommodations which such commanding officers might apply for; the magistrates, however, were prohibited from putting under requisition cattle or carriages never let out to hire, but solely appropriated to agricultural purposes. All such supplies and assistances were to be paid for by the commanding officer of the troops, at the regulated prices of the district; and commanding officers were strictly enjoined to inquire into all complaints of the misbehaviour of their troops. Men and cattle whose services were engaged for the assistance of military detachments, were not to be compellable to proceed beyond the first police station in the next zillah. When assistance was afforded by landholders in providing boats, temporary bridges or other accommodation for crossing rivers, or when any injury was sustained by such landholders, in consequence of the march of troops, compensation was to be afforded them through the Revenue department. The Regulation prohibited the sending of soldiers into the villages to procure provisions, or to press bearers or boatmen; and it likewise forbade the dressing of persons not soldiers in military apparel, or the investing private servants with badges or belts as worn by persons belonging to public establishments. The Regulation contained also special rules for the guidance of magistrates in applying for detachments, guards, or escorts for the public service; and also provided for the punishment of soldiers permitting the escape of prisoners under their charge.

Reg. VI. 1825.

It was enacted by Reg. VI. 1825, that landholders who, after due requisition, should refuse their aid in the supply of provisions, boats, &c., should, on proof thereof after summary inquiry before the collector, be liable to fine.

REGULATION IX.—1807.

Duties and Powers of Native Officers of Police.

Reg. IX. 1807.

By this Regulation, police officers were forbidden to issue process without special instructions from the magistrates, in any cases not involving a breach of the peace; but were to transmit the complaint deposed to on oath, to the magistrate, for his orders.

Darogahs,

Darogahs, tehseeldars, and zemindars, having charge of police, receiving a charge of murder or other heinous crime, were permitted to take the examination or confession, if offered, of the accused; and to make full inquiry into all important circumstances, and to submit to the magistrate a report, authenticated by the attestation of the persons examined, and the signature of such police officer; but no prisoner was to be detained for the purpose of such inquiry beyond forty-eight hours.

Police officers were required, on receiving reports of recent robberies or other violent crimes, to proceed to the spot and make diligent inquiry into the circumstances, and to submit a full report thereof, with the names of all suspected persons, for the information of the magistrate.

REGULATION XII.—1807.

Appointment of Ameens of Police.

THE objects of this Regulation are,—

Reg. XII. 1807.

1st. To enable the Government to avail themselves of the services of such respectable Mussulman and Hindoo inhabitants of credit and influence, as from their qualifications and character might be considered deserving of confidence in the maintenance of the peace, in preventing crimes, and apprehending offenders, and to confer upon them appointments as ameens or head officers of police.

2d. To cause lists to be annually furnished to the magistrates of all watchmen and guards maintained in aid of the police.

The Regulation accordingly provided that any respectable Hindoo and Mussulman inhabitant of the several zillahs might be appointed ameens of police. Preference was to be given, in the provinces, to zemindars, managers of estates, revenue officers collecting the rents of estates under Government management, responsible under-renters, and agents having the management of estates; but in towns, any respectable inhabitant might be chosen. The commissions were generally to be in force only so long as the parties occupied the stations in consideration of which the office of ameen had been bestowed upon them.

The authority of the ameens of police was to be concurrent with that of the police darogahs, in the preservation of the peace, and in the apprehension of offenders. They might receive complaints regarding crimes and misdemeanors, and having apprehended the persons charged, were to forward them to the darogah, to whom they were also to communicate all information they might obtain concerning robbers, vagrants, &c. within their several jurisdictions. They were also specially charged with the supervision of the village watchmen. In the absence of the darogah, or if he were otherwise engaged, the ameens of police were to hold inquests, transmitting their proceedings to the darogah. They were not to take cognizance of petty offences, except in cases specially referred to them by the magistrates. The village police officers were declared to be subject to the orders of the ameens of police, in the same manner as to those of the darogah.

With a view to the more complete preparation of the register of the village watchmen subject to the orders of the darogah, the Regulation required that every landholder, farmer, or other person employing any description of watchmen or guards, should transmit a list of them annually to the magistrate of the zillah or city in which they might be employed, under a penalty not exceeding 200 rupees, in case of disobedience.

REGULATION IX.—1808.

Proclamation of Rewards for Apprehension of Dacoits.

THE continued prevalence of gang robbery having rendered it necessary that further measures should be taken to facilitate the apprehension of the leaders (sirdar dacoits)

Reg. IX. 1808.

iv. 4 Y

to

to whose ascendancy over their respective gangs the existence of the crime was chiefly ascribed, the present Regulation was enacted to afford security and reward to persons who should be actively assisting in bringing such offenders to punishment, and on the other hand, to prescribe adequate penalties to such persons as should neglect the means in their power for the prevention of a crime so injurious to the peace and happiness of society. The Regulation enacted as follows: Whenever a magistrate should be of opinion that the ordinary process for the apprehension of offenders would be ineffectual for the apprehension of any notorious leaders or members of a gang of dacoits, whose apprehension was essential to the security of the district, he was to submit a report of the case to the Nizamut Adawlut, who, if they considered the circumstances to require it, might order the issue of a proclamation, offering a reward for the apprehension of the offender, not exceeding 500 rupees; if it were desirable to offer a larger reward, the authority of the Governor-general in Council to that effect must be first obtained. The proclamation was to require the person named to appear before the magistrate, to answer to the matter alleged against him, within two months from the date thereof, and was to notify, that in default of such appearance he would be deemed guilty of the crime of which he was accused, and would in consequence be liable to imprisonment and transportation for life. The proclamation was further to notify the amount of reward to be paid on the apprehension of the person proclaimed, and likewise to state, that any person aiding or harbouring such proclaimed offender would be subject, on conviction, to fine, imprisonment, and confiscation of property.

All persons were enjoined to afford assistance in the apprehension of gang robbers, and it was declared, that if any person, in his endeavours to apprehend a proclaimed offender, should wound or slay him in consequence of flight or resistance, he should be deemed entirely guiltless in respect of that act. Zemindars and others were declared specially accountable for the early communication to magistrates of information which they might possess respecting gang robbers; and magistrates were enjoined not to divulge any secret information which might affect the personal security of the informant. Zemindars or others, who should be proved, to the satisfaction of a magistrate, to have concealed the knowledge of the resort of gang robbers, &c. to their districts, were declared liable to imprisonment for six months and a fine of 200 rupees, commutable to imprisonment for a further period of six months. Zemindars or others assisting or harbouring proclaimed dacoits were declared further liable to the forfeiture of their estates or farms, such forfeiture, however, to take place only when confirmed by the Governor-general in Council, who was likewise authorized to remit that punishment, or commute it to a fine.

REGULATION X.—1808.

Superintendents of Police for three Divisions established at Calcutta.

Reg. X. 1808.
(E.)

THIS Regulation constituted the office of superintendent of police, to have authority and jurisdiction in certain provinces, but to be stationed at Calcutta, for the purpose of concentrating information obtainable from different parts of the country, with a view to more extensive and better concerted operations for securing the peace, and especially for the discovery and seizure of gangs of dacoits. The superintendent of police was to have concurrent jurisdiction with the several zillah and city magistrates in the divisions of Calcutta, Dacca, and Moorshedabad, and a power to execute his process either by means of his own officers or through those of the local authorities. He was to be subject to the authority of the Nizamut Adawlut in all matters relative to the police, and was to be guided by their instruction upon all points not expressly provided for by the Regulations, or by the orders of the Government.

IV.—JUDICIAL.

719

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued.

Criminal
Judicature.

REGULATION VI.—1810.

Penalties for Zemindars not co-operating in the Suppression of Gang Robbery.

THIS Regulation re-enacted, with little variation, the rules before declared in Regulation IX. of 1808, for the punishment of persons withholding information of gang robberies, &c. The only material addition was the declaration, that if the offender were an officer of Government, the Nizamut Adawlut should order him to be dismissed from his office, and should report to the Governor-general in Council, whether it appeared expedient that he should be declared incapable of ever serving the Government again.

Reg. VI. 1810.

REGULATION VIII.—1810.

Superintendents of Police for the Upper Provinces established.

IN consequence of the great benefits experienced from the appointment of the superintendent of police for the divisions of Dacca, Calcutta, and Moorsshedabad, under the provisions of Regulation X. 1808, it appeared advisable that similar arrangements should be adopted in the divisions of Patna, Benares, and Bareilly. This Regulation accordingly enacted, that the division of Patna should be annexed to those of Calcutta, &c., and that a separate superintendent of police should be appointed for the divisions of Benares and Bareilly, with the like powers and authority as those conferred by Regulation X. of 1808; subject however to any special Regulations that might be enacted for the internal administration of Benares and Bareilly respectively. The primary object of the appointment was declared to be the suppression and prevention of gang robbery; and with this view, the superintendents were authorized to move about the different zillahs of their districts as occasion might require, or as the Government might direct.

Reg. VIII. 1810.

REGULATION XVI.—1810.

Proclamation of Rewards for the Apprehension of Dacoits.

THIS Regulation enacted, that the native establishments of police were to remain generally under the authority of the zillah magistrates, but any part of them might be specially placed by the Governor-general in Council, under the control of a joint or assistant magistrate.

Reg. XVI. 1810.

The general rule authorizing the payment of a reward of ten rupees for every dacoit apprehended was rescinded; and it was enacted, that such rewards as should have been offered by proclamation under Regulation IX. 1808, for the apprehension of robbers, should be payable, on the delivery of the parties proclaimed, to any magistrate or darogah.

The Regulation further provided, that in cases where heinous crimes had been committed, the perpetrators of which might not be known, it should be competent to the court of circuit, at the recommendation of the magistrate, to offer a reward by proclamation, not exceeding 100 rupees, for a leader of the gang, and twenty rupees for each inferior offender. The Nizamut Adawlut might authorize, for the same purpose, rewards not exceeding 500 rupees for a leader, and 100 rupees for each inferior offender. If higher rewards should appear necessary, the sanction of Government must be obtained for the offer of them.

The Regulation authorized the payment of rewards, upon the same scale, to police officers and others for meritorious services in the apprehension of gang robbers, though not proclaimed.

REGULATION I.—1811.

Receivers of Stolen Goods.

FOR the Preamble, which sets forth the various objects of this Regulation, see head "Court of Circuit." As regards police, it enacted, that all zemindars, managers of estates, and revenue officers, neglecting to give information of notorious receivers or venders of stolen property within their several spheres of revenue collection, should be liable to fine and imprisonment. The Regulation further contained provisions regarding the issue and execution of search warrants. It also required that all gold or silversmiths, braziers, coppersmiths and ironsmiths, pawnbrokers, and itinerant dealers in second-hand articles, should take out licenses for exercising their trades; and that persons exercising those trades without such license, and likewise those who employed them, should be liable to imprisonment and fine.

REGULATION VII.—1811.

Powers of Police Darogahs.

Reg. VII. 1811.

THERE having been reason to believe that abuses had been practised by the police darogahs and zemindars intrusted with the charge of police, in the exercise of the powers confided to them for bringing offenders to justice; and it appearing advisable that the attention of those officers should be exclusively directed to the maintenance of the public tranquillity, the present Regulation provided that complaints of the commission of adultery and such crimes, as well as of petty offences, should not be received by police darogahs, but should be preferred direct to the magistrate. The officers of justice, however, were to continue to receive complaints of affrays and tumultuary assemblies; and on written charges being preferred to them against persons of suspicious or bad characters, they were to make immediate inquiry into the matter, and if the charge were substantiated, to send the accused, with the evidence they had collected, to the magistrate. Police officers were prohibited from taking depositions on oath.

REGULATION III.—1812.

Native Police.

Reg. III. 1812.
(also under (A.)
p. 685.)

THE parts of this Regulation which regarded police, had for their chief object to render more efficient, and better to control the native heads of police. It provided, that the sentences and orders of the superintendents of police should be carried into execution by the zillah magistrates, on proper certificates of such proceedings from the superintendents.

Escape of Offenders.

It likewise directed that the magistrates of the several cities and zillahs should prepare and keep three registers: 1st. Of convicts who had broken gaol; 2d. Of persons for whose apprehension proclamations had been issued; 3d. Of persons charged with, or suspected of having committed heinous offences who had eluded the pursuit of justice. Copies or extracts from such registers were to be transmitted by the magistrates to darogahs, zemindars, and other native heads of police, together with warrants for the apprehension of offenders; and all such police officers were required to use the utmost diligence for their apprehension. It also directed, that the magistrates should cause it to be explained to all persons to whom such warrants were issued, that no guilt would be imputed to them for any consequences which might follow on resistance being made by the offenders to the execution of such warrants; and further, that no personal attendance before the court to prove the offence charged, nor any expense to themselves, would be entailed on such zemindars or others, by the execution of such warrants; on the other hand, if they neglected to discharge the duty imposed upon them, they would be be called upon by the magistrates to answer the charge, and if found guilty, would be sentenced to imprisonment for a period not exceeding six months, and to a fine not exceeding 200 rupees, commutable to a further imprisonment of six months.

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 6,
continued.
Criminal
Judicature.

REGULATION XXI.—1812.

Licenses to Trades.

THIS Regulation declared that the provisions of Regulation I. 1811, which required persons exercising certain trades to take out licenses, had been found productive of inconvenience disproportionate to the benefits resulting from them; those rules were, therefore, by the present Regulation rescinded. Reg. XXI. 1812.

REGULATION XIII.—1813.

City Police and Assessment.

THIS is a Regulation providing for the establishment of efficient police in the cities of Dacca, Patna, and Moorshedabad, the expense of which should be defrayed by the communities for whose benefit and protection it was to be established. The Regulation directed that the inhabitants of those cities respectively should appoint all their own subsidiary police, and should also be chargeable for the expense of maintaining them. The cities were to be divided into mohullahs, or subdivisions of wards. The chokeydars or policemen were to receive not less than three rupees a month each, and their number was to be fixed by the magistrate, and not to exceed the proportion of two to every fifty shops or habitations; their pay was to be collected from the inhabitants, and was not to exceed the average rate of two anas* a month for each shop or habitation. A convenient number of merchants or substantial householders of each mohullah being assembled by the magistrate, they were to select one or more of their own class, but not exceeding four, to perform the duty of appointing and paying the chokeydars, and of collecting the monthly stipend. The persons so selected were to receive sunnuds of appointment according to a form prescribed in the Regulation, bearing the official seal and signature of the magistrate, and specifying the extent and nature of their powers and duties. They were authorized to levy the assessment, if not duly paid, by distress and sale. Reg. XIII. 1813.
(Rescinded by
Reg. XVII. 1816.)

Magistrates were directed to be cautious in receiving complaints against persons holding sunnuds under this Regulation, and not unnecessarily to harass them. Sunnuds might be withdrawn for neglect of duty or misconduct. On the failure of the inhabitants of any mohullah to discharge the duties prescribed in this Regulation, the magistrate might nominate the chokeydars, and levy the monthly assessment. An appeal was allowed to the magistrate against the assessment fixed by the inhabitants. The duties of the chokeydars generally were those of inferior officers of police or watchmen.

The application of the foregoing rules was extended by Regulation III. 1814, to the several stations at which the magistrates ordinarily resided in the divisions of Calcutta, Dacca and Moorshedabad, and Patna; and, Reg. III. 1814.

By Regulation IX. 1814, the provisions of the foregoing enactments were declared applicable to British subjects as well as to all others residing within the districts in which those Regulations should be in force; and by Regulation XVI. 1814, they were extended to the divisions of Benares and Bareilly, with the exception of the city of Benares. Reg. IX. 1814.
Reg. XVI. 1814.

REGULATION

* One-eighth of a rupee.

REGULATION VIII.—1814.

Inhabitants in general to assist in keeping the Peace.

THIS Regulation declared it to be the duty of all zemindars, local agents, and other native officers employed in the collection of the revenue, whether having special police charge and authority or not, to give early notice of crimes and breaches of the peace; and on failure of so doing, it declared them liable to fine and imprisonment.

REGULATION XIII.—1814.

The Office of Cutwal abolished.

Reg. XIII. 1814. IT having appeared that the office of cutwal in the cities of Dacca, Patna, and Moorshedabad was not only unnecessary, but had in some respects proved prejudicial to the maintenance of an efficient police, that office was abolished.

REGULATION XVII.—1816.

Appointment and Duties of the Native Police.

Reg. XVII. 1816. THE object of this Regulation was to provide for the most economical as well as the most efficient employment and superintendence of the native police. It directed in the first place, that all persons employed on police gaol establishments should be registered by the superintendents of police, who should regulate them upon the most economical scale consistent with efficiency, and should annually submit to the Government a comparative statement, showing the strength and expense of all descriptions of police and gaol establishments during the two preceding years within their respective jurisdictions, with all necessary information and suggestions on the subject.

The Regulation next provided, that magistrates in cities and zillahs, cutwals, darogahs and subordinate officers of police subject to their jurisdiction, should submit to the courts of circuit at the sessions lists of all cutwals, darogahs, and gaolers appointed by them since the previous sessions. Any police officer considering himself unjustly removed, might prefer a petition to the court of circuit, who would investigate the circumstances of the case, and might order his restoration. If the court of circuit considered the magistrate to have abused his authority, they were to report on the subject to the Nizamut Adawlut.

Magistrates were authorized to station a part of their establishment at any spot other than the fixed station within their respective tannahs, reporting such arrangements to the superintendents of police. Officers of police, when so stationed at outposts, might exercise the powers of darogahs in apprehending suspicious persons, vagrants, &c. whom they were immediately to forward to the tannah or stations to which the police officers might belong.

Superintendents of police were empowered to remove and appoint their own ministerial officers; also to fine or suspend police officers, communicating their orders in such cases to the magistrates who were to carry them into effect. Superintendents of police might also assume special charge of any particular tannahs, ordinarily under the jurisdiction of the magistrates, whenever such measure might appear desirable.

All correspondence relative to the expense or distribution of police establishments between the magistrates and the Government, was to be conducted through the superintendents of police. Magistrates were to communicate the escape of prisoners to the superintendents of police, who might offer rewards not exceeding one hundred rupees for their apprehension; and sanction rewards to police officers or others, for meritorious conduct in apprehending offenders.

The general superintendence over public roads, bridges, and similar works, was vested in the superintendents of police, who were to submit to Government reports relative to the the construction of public works that might seem to be required, and were also to ascertain whether any means existed for defraying the expense of such works otherwise than from the funds of Government. Superintendents of police might also apply to the Nizamut Adawlut, to order that the convicts working in different zillahs should be collected together in one spot for the execution of any public works.

REGULATION XXII.—1816.

Appointment and Duties of the Native Town Police.

THIS Regulation was substituted for those previously enacted, especially Regulation XIII. of 1813, relative to the appointment and maintenance of chokeydars of police. It consolidated the former rules, and in some respects modified the system. It enacted that subsidiary police should be nominated and maintained by the community for whose benefit it was established. Each chokeydar was to receive not less than two nor more than three rupees.* The number was to be determined by the magistrate, not exceeding two to every fifty shops or houses, of which each was to contribute not more than two annas per month. Reg. XXII. 1816.

The magistrate was to appoint five respectable inhabitants of each mohullah to constitute a punchayet for regulating the rate of assessment, and appointing the chokeydars, subject to the approval of the magistrate. The punchayet having prepared a table of assessment and of persons assessed, were to submit the same to the magistrate for his final approval, subject to such amendments as might appear to him necessary, on consideration of any complaints or representations that might be preferred to him. The rates of assessment finally adjusted were to be exposed to view for general information every year. The magistrates were authorized, in certain cases, to refer the rates for revision and amendment to the punchayet, in the course of the year for which they had been fixed.

A respectable and intelligent native was to be selected and appointed by the magistrate, whose duty it should be to prepare from the lists a book, which the magistrate was to sign, and which should contain the names of each person assessed, the amount payable by each, and the names and number of chokeydars in each mohullah. On the first of each month the person appointed by the magistrate was to collect the amount from each person assessed, returning to the magistrate the names of defaulters. The chokeydars were to be paid on the last day of the month, in the presence of the magistrate. The magistrate was to summons reported defaulters; and if the amount which should be found on inquiry to be due was not immediately paid, he was to issue a warrant for the distraint and public sale of so much property as should suffice to make good the amount. The buxshce or collector might be punished for corrupt conduct by dismissal from office and imprisonment for six months; and for not refunding undue exactions, might be further imprisoned for six months. Vexatious complaints were to be liable to punishment. Persons refusing to serve as members of the punchayet, without sufficient grounds, were to be liable to a penalty of fifty rupees. In the event of the punchayet refusing to act, the magistrate was to fix the assessment and to appoint the chokeydars. The duties of the chokeydars were stated, and were the same as set forth in the former Regulations. The chokeydars were declared not removeable without the sanction of the magistrate.

REGULATION XX.—1817.

Consolidated and amended General Police Regulation.

By this Regulation all the rules which had from time to time been enacted respecting the duties of darogahs and other native-officers of police, were reduced, after careful revision, Reg. XX. 1817.

* Extended by Reg. VII. of 1817 to four rupees.

revision, into one Regulation, and arranged under various heads in thirty-four sections. Certain modifications were introduced relative to the enforcing of process, and the duties of native heads of villages, farmers, and proprietors of land, in reporting suspicious deaths, and the presence of suspected persons, or prisoners escaped from confinement.

The following outline exhibits the chief provisions of this enactment.

The appointment of all police officers was vested in the magistrates.

Each tannah or police station had three native officers, called the darogah, the mohurrir, and the jamadar, whose powers were subordinate one to the other, but each inferior officer was required to act in the absence of his superior; they had under their orders burkundazes or armed policemen. Police officers at outposts might arrest offenders or suspicious persons without the magistrate's warrant, forwarding them immediately to the tannah station. Detailed registers of all acts and occurrences; diaries of all persons apprehended; and various minute-books of entry were required to be kept at each tannah station; and extracts therefrom, and very detailed and accurate reports, all arranged according to the specific directions, and according to forms given in the appendix to this Regulation, were required to be kept at each police station. Provision was made for the speedy and regular transmission, by post and other means, of all communications between the police stations under the several public authorities to whom they were subordinate. Police officers were forbidden to trade; the inferiors were not to be employed by the superiors in private affairs; nor were they to receive money from parties. The darogahs were not permitted to employ professional spies without express permission. Darogahs were not to take cognizance of petty offences, but were to send all complainants in such cases to the magistrates, and were not to admit compromises.

In receiving charges or informations of heinous offences, the police officers were to make local inquiry, and to take notes of the information they might receive; the information of the prosecutor was to be certified on oath, but police officers were not authorized to swear witnesses. The directions for the discharge of this part of their duty in the Regulation are very full and precise. In all cases of murder, or unnatural or suspicious death, the darogahs were immediately to hold an inquest on the spot, and to communicate the result to the magistrate; they were to render all necessary assistance to wounded persons, and to endeavour to find out, and to trace the offenders. Ample directions are also given in the Regulation respecting the inquiries to be made regarding gang robbery. Particular points to which the above inquiries are to be directed are minutely detailed. Houses were not to be searched for stolen property except under the warrant of a magistrate, or on very specific information in writing, particularizing the missing goods, and the place where they were supposed to be concealed. A commission of ten per cent. was granted to darogahs on all stolen property recovered by them. Police officers were to search the houses of persons accused of counterfeiting the coin.

Detachments of police officers were to attend at fairs and festivals, and were also required to disperse rioters. Darogahs were authorized to take the voluntary confessions of prisoners who should be disposed to make them. Such confessions were to be attested by the signatures of at least three subscribing witnesses, being persons unconnected with the police. Police officers were declared subject to exemplary punishment, if they held out threats or promises to lead a prisoner to confess. Police officers were permitted to make use of the stocks for securing the persons of robbers or murderers, or other persons of dangerous character or disorderly behaviour, or prisoners who had escaped from custody, and to forward them with all due expedition to the magistrate; but such confinement was only to take place during the night. Police officers might also use hand-cuffs for the purpose of forwarding heinous criminals with safety. Darogahs were strictly forbidden to detain prisoners beyond the time indispensably necessary to make the prescribed inquiries, and in no case for more than forty-eight hours.

On receiving information of suspicious characters, the darogahs were to make all necessary inquiries, and if requisite, were to apprehend and send them to a magistrate.

Persons

Persons of bad character, when liberated from prison, were to be sent to the tannah of the district in which they resided, and the head-men and watchers of the village were to be desired to watch their conduct, and to aid them in procuring an honest livelihood. The head-men of the village were to be required to give notice, if the parties so under surveillance should absent themselves from the village without cause, or for bad associations, or cease to work for a livelihood. If the village officers neglected so to do, and the suspected person were afterwards convicted of a capital offence, the village officers would be liable to a fine of 100 rupees each, commutable to a month's imprisonment.

A register was to be kept at the police station of all village watchmen, who were ordinarily subject to the orders of the darogah; such as should reside within two miles of the tannah station were to report daily the occurrences in their respective villages during the preceding twenty-four hours; those residing within six miles were to report twice a week, and those at a greater distance once a week or fortnight, as the darogah might direct; the due transmission of all such reports was to be recorded in the diaries. The village watchmen were to perform all the duties of the inferior police officers, in the discovery and apprehension of offenders; darogahs were allowed, under certain restrictions, to follow and apprehend offenders in the limits of adjoining tannahs. The Regulation contains a great variety of rules regarding the service of process, the punishment of persons resisting, and the apprehension of those evading it. The property of landholders resisting process was declared liable to confiscation, subject to the confirmation of Government; and the property of persons absconding was declared liable to attachment, with a view of compelling their appearance; and in the event of the non-appearance of the owner, it was declared liable to be sold for payment of fines which might be imposed.

The killing or wounding proclaimed offenders who should resist process was declared justifiable homicide.

Darogahs were empowered to afford assistance to landholders distraining for rent, when there might be violent resistance or concealment of property. They were also to assist the officers of revenue in distraining for arrears of the abkarry or excise revenue.

Discretion was vested in the darogahs, to exempt persons employed in the public establishments of the commercial Salt and Opium departments of the Government from attendance during the manufacturing seasons, reporting the grounds of such exemption to the magistrate.

Police officers were also to assist the officers in the Salt and Opium department, in the seizure of smuggled salt and opium.

Police were to apprehend persons not in the military or civil employment of the Company, wearing military uniforms or official badges; also to prevent nuisances and encroachment on the road, and to secure and send to the magistrate all insane persons. Darogahs were to report the arrival of Europeans proposing to settle within their limits. They were also to afford protection to the public treasure when passing through their districts, and likewise to private treasure.

Copies of this Regulation were to be furnished to all head police officers, and copies or extracts to zemindars and landholders; and darogahs were admonished to take all opportunities to make known to landholders and inhabitants their duties in aid of the police, and for the maintenance of the public peace.

REGULATION XII.—1818.

Suspension of Arrest.

By this Regulation a discretionary power was vested in police officers to suspend under certain circumstances the arrest of persons accused, as in the case of the extreme youth of the offender or the previous respectability of his character, or for the preservation

Reg. XII 1818.

vation of the honour of families, when the offender might be nearly connected with the party who had suffered the injury: in such cases the police officer was to report the circumstances to the magistrate for his orders, who would exercise a discreet judgment on the case.

REGULATION VI.—1819.

Public Ferries.

Reg. VI. 1819.

By this Regulation the public ferries (which were defined to be such as should be situated at or near the chief stations of magistrates, or as should intersect the chief military routes or other much frequented roads, or such as from special considerations might be declared by the Government to be public ferries) were placed under the immediate control of the magistrates. The general objects of this arrangement were stated to be, the maintenance of an efficient police, the safety and convenience of travellers, the facility of commercial intercourse, and the expeditious transport of troops.

The magistrates were to provide commodious boats, and to fix the rates of toll so as to bear lightly on the poorer classes of the community, and leave a fair profit to the person in immediate charge of the ferry. No collections were to be taken on account of the Government from the proceeds of any ferry, until these benefits should have been fully secured; after which any surplus collection was to be applied solely to the furtherance of similar objects, such as the repair of roads, bridges, &c.

Lists of ferries declared public were to be annually certified by the magistrates to the superintendents of police; the magistrates were not to interfere with private ferries, except in cases of individuals being drowned, or property lost or damaged in consequence of the overloading of the private ferry boat, or from its being in bad repair, in which cases the magistrate might punish the ferryman, by imprisonment not longer than six months, or a fine not exceeding 200 rupees.

REGULATION III.—1821.

Arrest of Suspicious Gangs.

Reg. III. 1821.

By this Regulation power was granted to native officers of police to detain persons travelling in bodies through their jurisdictions, or assembling therein under circumstances leading to the suspicion of their being subjects of foreign states, assuming fictitious characters, for the purpose of committing robberies or other crimes in the British territories. The principal inhabitants of villages, landholders, &c. were required to give the earliest intimation of such assemblages of persons to the magistrates.

REGULATION V.—1822.

Apprehension of Proclaimed Dacoits.

Reg. V. 1822.

This Regulation was enacted in modification of the rules in Regulation IX. of 1808, which enacted that proclaimed dacoits not surrendering themselves within the period fixed by the proclamation, should be presumed guilty of dacoity; and, on proof of the contumacy only, should be sentenced to imprisonment and transportation for life. Under the operation of those rules, persons had been sentenced to that punishment, who were justly amenable to a capital sentence, on account of the dacoity having been attended by murder. To remedy this defect in the law as it stood, the present Regulation enacted, that when a proclaimed dacoit should be apprehended after the expiration of the time limited in the proclamation, it should be determined by the superintendent of police and the magistrate, in communication together, whether the prisoner should be tried for the contumacy, or for the crime for which he had been proclaimed. If he were tried for the contumacy and acquitted, he might be afterwards tried for the crime for which he had been proclaimed; but if he were acquitted of the crime, he was not to be tried for the contumacy.

PART III.
CRIMINAL JUDICATURE—MISCELLANEOUS.REGULATIONS for checking SUPERSTITIOUS PRACTICES, &c. &c.

Regulations.

LIST.

- XXI. 1795.—Superstitious Practices in Benares.
 V. 1797.—Punishment of Dhurna.
 IV. 1799.—Trials for Rebellion.
 VI. 1802.—Prohibiting Sacrifices of Life at Saugur.
 X. 1804.—Martial Law.
 III. 1809.— }
 XX. 1810.— } Military Police in Bazars—Camp Followers subject to Military Courts.
 V. 1828.— }
 X. 1811.—Importation of Slaves prohibited.
 XI. 1812.—For Removal and Punishment of Emigrants from Foreign States.
 III. 1818.—Arrest of State Offenders.
 XX. 1825.—European British Soldiers amenable in certain cases to Courts-Martial for heinous Crimes.
 XVII. 1829.—Prohibition of Suttees.

REGULATION XXI.—1795.

Superstitious Practices in Benares.

This Regulation was enacted for the purpose of checking three species of offences, the commission of which had its origin in the religious prejudices of natives, perverted to the impeding of the course of justice, or causing the death of innocent persons. Reg. XXI. 1795

The first offence is one stated to have been chiefly practised in the province of Benares, where the persons of Brahmins were held in the highest reverence, and reputed to be inviolable. Whenever any process from the judicial or fiscal authorities was to be executed upon them, they threatened, and sometimes executed, personal violence on themselves, occasionally extending to suicide, or brought forward others of their family or tribe, threatening to wound or put them to death, if the officer charged with the process should approach too near. These threats were not unfrequently carried into execution, the victims themselves acquiescing, under a notion that after death they should become the tormentors of those who were the occasion of their being sacrificed. One particular mode of offence was constructing a circular enclosure, called a "Koorh," in which they raised a pile of combustibles, and placed within the circle an old woman, who was to be destroyed by the burning of the pile, on the approach of any person to exercise coercion over the constructors of the koorh. The following proceeding was directed by the Regulation to be adopted in the cases above mentioned. Upon information being given to a magistrate of a Brahmin being prepared to resist the service of process, by placing persons within a koorh, on the officers passing the boundaries of which the persons placed within it for the purpose were either to be wounded or killed, the magistrate was to cause a written notice to be served, by a Brahmin, upon the offender, warning him to abandon the intention, and desist from his preparations. If the offender failed to obey this notice, a warrant was to be issued for his apprehension, which was to be executed upon him by a Mahomedan. When the person charged was brought up before the magistrate, the proceedings against him were to conform to the general rules for bringing offenders to trial before the court of circuit. Principals were to be committed, but bail might be taken for accomplices. The Mahomedan law not being applicable to such cases, the court, if they were of opinion that the charge was proved, were to sentence principals to the payment of a fine, equal to their income for one year, and accessaries to a fine equal to their income for a quarter of a year; and they were to be imprisoned until the fine was paid, or security given for the payment. They were further to be confined until they should give security not to offend in like manner again. If there was loss of life by carrying into execution the threats set forth, then the Brahmin who might have constructed the enclosure, and the persons who might have set fire to the combustibles in the enclosure, were to be sentenced to death; and such sentence was to be pronounced upon them by the court of circuit. But, inasmuch as it was declared by Regulation XVI. 1795, enacted for the trial of persons charged with crimes or misdemeanors in the province of Benares, that no Brahmin should be punished with death, but in lieu thereof should be sentenced by the Nizamut Adawlut to transportation, the sentence of death was not to be executed, but the case was to be referred to the Nizamut Adawlut, who, if they approved of the condemnation, would order the offender to be conveyed to Calcutta, to be thence transported for life.

Koorhs

For killing their women or children, Brahmins were to be transported for life, their families were to be banished from the province of Benares and the Company's territories, and their estates to be forfeited and disposed of as the Government should think fit; and for wounding them, were to be sentenced to temporary transportation.

Dhurna.

The second offence this Regulation was intended to check was that called Dhurna, which consists in a person taking post at the door of another, frequently armed with some offensive weapon, or with poison, for the purpose of realizing some supposed claim recovering a debt, or extorting a donation. According to the received opinions on the subject, it was understood that the besetter was to remain fasting in the place, until his object should be obtained, and that it was equally incumbent on the party beset to abstain from nourishment until the other should be satisfied; during all which time ingress and egress from the house could not be attempted, except at the risk of the besetter wounding himself with the weapon, or swallowing the poison with which he had come provided. The Regulation enacted, that persons charged with this crime should be tried before the court of circuit, who were to refer the evidence taken for the opinion of their Hindoo law officers, whether the facts proved amounted to the crime of dhurna, according to the Shaster; if the bewusta decided in the affirmative, the court were to sentence the prisoner to forfeit all claim to the matter, for the realization of which the misdemeanor was committed, and to be expelled from the province of Benares.

In the event of the bewusta of the puudit declaring the offence not to have been completed, according to the construction of Hindoo law; if the court of circuit should consider that it had in substance been committed, they were to require the prisoner to give a written obligation or engagement, that if he should repeat any act of actual dhurna, or equivalent to that offence, he should suffer the full penalty.

Infanticide.

The third offence contemplated in this Regulation was that prevalent among a tribe of Raj Koomars, of causing their female infants to be starved to death. That tribe having, in December 1789, bound themselves to discontinue the practice, the Regulation enacted, that any Raj Koomer guilty of such crime should be tried for that as for any other murder, before the court of circuit, and dealt with accordingly.

IV.—JUDICIAL.

729

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued.

Criminal
Judicature.

REGULATION V.—1797.

Punishment of Dhurna.

THE criminal practice known by the name of dhurna, a particular description of which is given in Regulation XXI. 1795, as frequently occurring in the province of Benares, having been found to prevail in other places, the present Regulation was enacted to provide for its punishment in all parts of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa. It directed that proclamation should be issued, notifying the penalties to be incurred by the commission of the crime, and it enacted the same penalties as those specified in the Benares Regulation, with the exception of banishment from that province, for which it substituted a fine not exceeding 1,000 rupees, and in aggravated cases confinement in the civil gaol for a period not exceeding one year.—See Reg. VII. 1820, under head (D.) p. 710.

Reg. V. 1797.
(Rescinded by
Reg. VII. 1820.)

REGULATION IV.—1799.

Trials for Rebellion.

It being deemed expedient, in certain cases, that persons charged with treason, rebellion, or other offences against the state, should be brought to immediate trial before the ordinary courts, or before a special tribunal to be convened for the occasion, this Regulation authorized the executive Government to order, that persons charged with such offences should be tried either before all the judges of a court of circuit, or before a court to be specially appointed for that purpose. The sentences in such cases, whether of acquittal or conviction, were to be reported to the Nizamut Adawlut, who were to submit them for the final orders of the Government, and to communicate those orders to the court who had tried the prisoners.

Reg. IV. 1799.

REGULATION VI.—1802.

Prohibiting Sacrifices of Life at Saugur.

THIS Regulation was enacted to put an end to the practice which prevailed at the island of Saugur, and at several places on the Ganges, of sacrificing children by exposing them to be drowned or devoured by sharks. It declared, that this practice was not sanctioned by the Hindoo law; and it enacted, that in cases in which death ensued, the perpetrators of the act should be deemed guilty of murder; or if the child were rescued or escaped, the offenders should be held to have committed a high misdemeanor. In cases of conviction the trials were to be referred to the Nizamut Adawlut, who were to pass sentence thereon, according to the character of the act, whatever might be the futwa of the law officer.

Reg. VI. 1802.

REGULATION X.—1804.

Martial Law.

THIS Regulation authorized the Governor-general in Council, in times of rebellion, to declare martial law within any part of the British territories, in order to the immediate punishment of persons owing allegiance to the British Government who should be found in the commission of rebellion, or aiding the enemies of the Government.

Reg. X. 1804.

REGULATION III.—1809.

Military Police in Bazaars—Camp Followers subject to Military Courts.

By this Regulation, the charge of the police in cantonments and military bazars was vested in the officers commanding the troops; and by Regulation XX. 1810, retainers of the army and camp followers were made subject to trial by courts martial, according to military

Reg. III. 1809.
Reg. XX. 1810.

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued.
Criminal
Judicature.
Reg. V. 1828.

730 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

military law, as well for petty offences as for suits for civil debt, not exceeding 200 rupees, subject, however, to certain rules of registry.

By Regulation V. 1828, power was given to zillah courts to execute to a limited extent the awards of such military courts.

REGULATION X.—1811.

Importation of Slaves prohibited.

Reg. X. 1811.

THE preamble recited that instances had occurred of the importation of slaves from foreign countries into the British territories, and such traffic being inconsistent with the principles on which the administration of those territories was conducted, the importation of slaves was strictly prohibited by this Regulation, whether by land or sea, into any of the places dependent on the Presidency of Fort William. Persons infringing this prohibition were declared liable to prosecution before the criminal courts, and, on conviction, to imprisonment for six months, and fine not exceeding 200 rupees, commutable to further imprisonment for six months.

The captains of vessels not in the Company's service coming to Calcutta were, previously to landing their cargo, to execute a bond in a prescribed form, rendering themselves liable to a penalty of 5,000 rupees in the event of their disposing of any persons as slaves.

REGULATION XI.—1812.

For Removal and Punishment of Emigrants from Foreign States.

Reg. XI. 1812.

The immediate cause of the enactment of the present Regulation, as stated in the preamble, was the misconduct of considerable bodies of persons who, having emigrated from Arracan and established themselves on the British frontiers in the district of Chit-tagong, contiguous to that country, had committed outrages in their former country of Arracan, and had received assistance and co-operation from inhabitants of the British territories. The object of the Regulation was to enable the Government in this and similar cases to remove such emigrants and their descendants from the frontiers, and to provide for the trial of persons committing or aiding in the commission of such offences. The Regulation accordingly granted such power of removal to the Governor-general in Council; and it further provided that whenever any of the said emigrants should be found to have abused the protection afforded them, by attempting to excite disturbances in the state from which they or their ancestors had emigrated, they should be brought to trial for that offence before the court of circuit, and, on conviction, be sentenced to imprisonment for seven years. Any persons, whether native British subjects or aliens, who should furnish such emigrants with men, money or arms, or should otherwise aid them in the prosecution of their criminal designs, were declared liable to the like punishment.

REGULATION III.—1818.

Arrest of State Offenders.

Reg. III. 1818.

This Regulation was passed to enable the Governor-general in Council to place persons under restraint without any judicial proceeding, whenever such a measure might be requisite for reasons of state, having reference to the due maintenance of the alliances formed between the British Government and foreign powers, the preservation of tranquillity in the territories of native princes entitled to its protection, and the security of the British dominions from foreign hostility. It also empowered the Government, for similar reasons, to attach the estates and lands of zemindars and other proprietors. The Regulation provided that the warrant for the confinement of a state prisoner should issue under the authority of the Governor-general in Council, and be signed by one of the the secretaries to Government; that it should be addressed to such person as the Governor might choose, who should report half-yearly on the conduct and health of the prisoner. If the prisoner were in the custody of the judicial authorities, he was to be visited by the judge of the circuit; if in other custody, the Governor in Council would direct who should visit him. Every representation which a state prisoner might be desirous of submitting to Government, was to be immediately forwarded, accompanied by such remarks as the officer having the custody of him might deem necessary.

Whenever the Governor-general in Council should direct the attachment of lands, they were to be placed under the management of the revenue officers of Government, and were not to be sold in execution of decrees of the civil courts, or for the realization of fines or otherwise during the period of their attachment.

REGULATION XX.—1825.

European British Soldiers amenable in certain Cases to Courts-Martial for heinous Crimes.

THIS Regulation was enacted for the guidance of magistrates in the execution of the provisions of the Act of the 4th Geo. IV. c. 81, which rendered European British officers and soldiers amenable to courts-martial, for crimes committed at a distance of more than 120 miles from the Presidency.

Reg. XX. 1825.

REGULATION XVII.—1829.

Prohibition of Suttees.

THIS Regulation was enacted to put an end to the practice of widows being burnt or buried alive on the death of their husbands. The preamble declared that this practice was not enjoined by the religion of the Hindoos as an imperative duty, and was not observed by a vast majority of that people throughout India; a life of purity and retirement on the part of the widow being more especially and preferably inculcated; that in places where it was most frequent, it had been in many instances attended with acts of atrocity shocking to the Hindoos themselves, and in their eyes wicked and unlawful. Under these considerations, the present Regulation declared the practice to be illegal, and punishable by the criminal courts. All landholders, village officers, and revenue officers, were declared specially accountable for giving immediate information of any such intended sacrifice, and might be fined by a magistrate for default, in a sum not exceeding 200 rupees, commutable to imprisonment for not more than six months. On receiving intelligence of an intended sacrifice, the darogah or his deputy was to proceed to the spot, attended by Hindoo peons, and was to endeavour to dissuade the parties from persisting in their intention.

Reg. XVII. 1829.

If the advice was not followed, the police officers were to apprehend the parties and their abettors, and to forward them to the magistrate. In cases of sacrifice actually performed, police officers were to institute inquiries, as in other cases of unnatural death, and to report the particulars for the information of the magistrate, who was to take the necessary measures for bringing the parties to trial before the court of circuit. All persons convicted of aiding and abetting in the sacrifice of a Hindoo widow, whether voluntary on her part or not, were declared guilty of culpable homicide, and punishable by fine and imprisonment at the discretion of the court of circuit. Persons convicted of using violence or compulsion, or of having assisted in the sacrifice of a Hindoo widow while in a state of intoxication or stupefaction, or otherwise prevented from the exercise of her free will, might be sentenced to death by the Nizamut Adawlut.

(3.)

AFFAIRS IN THE REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

LIST.

PART I.

LAND REVENUE.—GENERAL.

	Page
(A.)—Rules relative to the Assessment of the Revenue—Rights of Zemindars and Tenants—Powers and Duties of the Revenue Officers of Government, deliberative and executive	733
(B.)—Rules for the Recovery of Arrears of Revenue due to the Government, and Sales of Land in discharge of such Arrears, or in satisfaction of Decrees of Courts of Justice	754
(C.)—Rules for the Recovery of Arrears of “Rent” due to those who pay the Revenue to Government; and regarding Summary Suits on that Account	767
(D.)—Rules regarding the Registry and Division of Estates, and of their Subdivisions	774
(E.)—Rules relative to the Right of holding Lands free from, or at a low Rate of Assessment, and to other Alienations of the Revenue of Government: and regarding Money Pensions	780
(F.)—Powers and Duties of the Boards of Revenue, as Courts of Wards	794

PART II.

LAND REVENUE.—SPECIAL.

(A.)—Special Revenue Regulations for Benares,—and certain Districts in the Lower Provinces	799
(B.)—Special Revenue Regulations for the Ceded and Conquered Provinces, Bundelcund, and Kumaon	807
(C.)—Special Revenue Regulations for Cuttack	822

PART III.

LAND REVENUE.—MISCELLANEOUS.

Miscellaneous Rules in the Revenue Department	825
--	-----

PART I.
 LAND REVENUE—GENERAL.

(A.)

RULES relative to the ASSESSMENT of the REVENUE—the RIGHTS of ZEMINDARS and TENANTS—the POWERS and DUTIES of the REVENUE OFFICERS of GOVERNMENT, deliberative and executive.

Regulations.

LIST.

- I. 1793.—
 VIII. 1793.—
 X. 1793.— } The permanency of the Assessment declared.
- II. 1793.—Abolition of Revenue Courts—Powers and Duties of Collectors—Powers and Duties of the Board of Revenue.
- VIII. 1793.—
 I. 1801.— } The Principles on which the permanent Assessment was formed—the Classes of Persons with whom the Government engaged—and their relation to others holding Interests deemed subordinate.
- XXVII. 1793.—
 VI. 1811.—
 IX. 1825.— } Resumption by the Government of the Sayer Collections, formerly made by Proprietors, and Grant of Compensation to those Persons.
- XLIV. 1793.—Validity and Effect of Leases from Proprietors and Talookdars, &c.—Term for which they might be granted.
- IV. 1794.—Delivery of Pottahs or Agreements between Proprietors and Cultivators.
- XVII. 1805.—Management of joint undivided Estates.
- XIII. 1811.—
 XXIV. 1817.— } Powers of single Members of the Board of Revenue.
- V. 1812.—
 XVIII. 1812.—
 VIII. 1819.— } Leases and Pottahs by Landholders to their Tenants and Cultivators.
- XV. 1813.—Abolition of the Office of Dewan.
- XXIX. 1814.—Rules for the Protection of the Ghautwal Tenure in Beerbhoom.
- VIII. 1819.—Powers of Landholders to create certain Lease Tenures called Putnee.
- III. 1822.—New Constitution of Boards of Revenue.
- I. 1824.—For enabling the Government to obtain Lands for public Purposes.
- IX. 1825.—Extension of the Rules of Regulation VII. 1822 (enacted for the Upper Provinces) to Bengal, &c.
- XI. 1825.—Rights in Lands acquired by Alluvion, and Liability of such Lands to pay Revenue.
- I. 1829.—Establishment of the Office of Commissioners of Revenue (and Circuit).

REGULATION I.—1793.

The Permanency of the Assessment declared.

THIS enactment promulgated in the form* of a Regulation the several articles of the Proclamation, dated 23d March 1793, addressed to the zemindars, independent talookdars, and other "actual proprietors of land paying revenue to Government, in the provinces of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa." That Proclamation had notified to them that the sanction of the Court of Directors of the East-India Company had been given to the permanency of the decennial settlement of the revenue, which had been made under certain rules dated the 18th September 1789, 25th November 1789, and 10th February 1790; and that in consequence the assessment then fixed would be continued, and would remain unalterable to them, their heirs, and lawful successors.

Certain proprietors not having agreed to the terms of the assessment proposed to them under the Regulations of 1789 and 1790, their lands had been assumed by the Government, and in some cases had been held khas (i.e. under the administration and management of the revenue officers of Government), and in others had been let out in farm. The Proclamation notified to the proprietors so circumstanced, that such lands as were under Government management would be restored to them upon their agreeing to the assessment proposed; and that such as had been let to farm would be restored at the expiration of the leases (but not before, except with the voluntary consent of the farmers), on the proprietors agreeing to the payment of the assessment that might be required of them, after which the said proprietors and their heirs would hold the lands without increase to that assessment for ever.

Lands belonging to the Government, which might be transferred to individuals, would be held by them and their heirs for ever at the assessment fixed at the time of such transfer.

The Proclamation went on to declare, that it was well known to all actual proprietors of land in Bengal, Behar, and Orissa, that the amount of the public assessment upon the lands had never until that time been fixed, "but that, according to established usage and custom, the rulers of those provinces had from time to time demanded an increase of assessment;" in order to obtain which, not only were frequent investigations made into the profits of the estates, but the proprietors were often removed or suspended, and either their estates were let in farm, or officers were appointed "on the part of the Government to collect the assessment immediately from the ryots." The declaration now made of the permanency of the assessment had in view the future ease and happiness of the people; the orders fixing the amount of the assessment were to be considered as irrevocable by any future administration in India, and the Government trusted that the proprietors would be duly sensible of the advantages thus conferred upon them, and would exert themselves in the cultivation of their lands, in the certainty of enjoying the fruits of their industry, since no demand would be made upon them, nor any increase of the public assessment take place in consequence of such improvement.

The Proclamation then pointed out the duties of the proprietors of land, which were, to discharge the revenues without delay or evasion, to conduct themselves with good faith and moderation towards their dependent talookdars and ryots, and to enjoin the strictest adherence to the same principles in the persons whom they might appoint to collect their rents from those dependent talookdars and ryots. It further notified, that no claims or remissions on account of drought, inundation, or other calamity of the season, would for the future be attended to; but that on failure in the punctual discharge of the revenue assessed, "a sale of the whole of the lands of the defaulter, or such portion of them as might be sufficient to make good the arrear, would positively and invariably take place."

The

* As prescribed by Regulation XLI. 1793.

The Proclamation proceeded to make the following declarations:—

First. That the Government reserved to itself the right of enacting Regulations* “for the protection and welfare of the dependent talookdars, ryots, and other cultivators of the soil;” and that no proprietor should be entitled on that account to make any objection to the discharge of the fixed assessment.

Second. That the Government having before directed† the abolition of the Sayer‡ duties, formerly collected by the landholders, and having granted to them a full compensation on that account, it should be competent to the Government to re-establish Sayer collections, or any other internal duties, on their own account, and to appoint officers to collect the same without any right of participation or claim to further remission accruing to such landholders.

Thirdly. That the Government reserved to themselves the right of imposing such assessment as it might deem equitable on all lands which had been held exempt from the payment of revenue under illegal or invalid grants; and that the assessments which might be so imposed should belong exclusively to the Government.

Fourthly. That the fixed assessment had been made exclusively of any allowances made for the support of police establishments, and of the produce of any lands which had been appropriated to that purpose; and that inasmuch as the Government had exonerated proprietors from the charge of keeping the peace, and had appointed police officers to that duty, they reserved to themselves the option of resuming such allowances, and the produce of such lands. But the Proclamation at the same time declared that the allowances or produce of lands above mentioned, whenever they should be resumed, would be exclusively appropriated to the expenses of the police, and that the collectors would be instructed not to add the amount or value thereof to the assessment of the proprietors, but to collect the same from them separately.

Fifthly. That the lands belonging to proprietors disqualified by reason of minority or other cause from the management of their own estates, and on that account placed under the management of the Court of Wards,§ should not be saleable for any arrears that might accrue during their management by the Court of Wards.

The proclamation then declared the right of all actual proprietors of land “to transfer to whomsoever they might think proper, by sale, gift, or otherwise, their proprietary rights in the whole or any portion of their respective estates, without applying to Government for their sanction to the transfer, and that all such transfers would be held valid, provided they should be conformable to the law of the parties, whether Mahomedan or Hindoo, and not repugnant to any regulation of the British Government.” No such transfers, however, were to affect the responsibility of the whole estate to satisfy the claims of Government, unless the transfer were duly registered in the office of the collector, according to rules prescribed in that respect.

The proclamation next declared the principles on which, in the event of an estate requiring to be subdivided, the amount of the assessment which had been fixed upon the whole should be distributed on the several portions. The value of an estate was defined to be, the difference between the amount of the fixed annual assessment payable thereon to the Government, and the total amount of the produce of the estate receivable by the proprietor, after deducting the charges of management. Estates might be subject to transfer, either wholly or in part, under any of the following circumstances: first,

* As an example of the exercise of this right, it was provided by Sect. 52, Reg. VIII. 1793, that every engagement of a proprietor with an under farmer should be specific as to the amount payable by the latter, and that all payments received in excess of such engagements should be deemed extortion, and be repayable with a penalty. Several other enactments were subsequently passed of a like character. See also Regulation VIII. 1819, which defined the relative rights of zemindars and putnee talookdars.

† 28th July 1790.

‡ Inland duties, customs, tolls, &c.

§ See Regulation X. 1793.

first, when sold entire, or in portions, on account of arrear of revenue, or in satisfaction of decrees of court; secondly, when transferred wholly or in portions by the proprietors by private sale, gift, or otherwise; thirdly, on the division of joint estates among several coparceners. It was declared that all transfers or divisions must be registered in the books of the collector or other public officer appointed for that purpose, after which the possessor of each share must enter into a separate engagement for the payment of the fixed assessment upon such share, and would thenceforward be deemed an actual proprietor. It was further declared, that no private transfer or subdivision, if not so registered, would be recognized by the officers of Government, but that the assessment would continue to be demanded entirely from the original proprietor. In all the above cases of division, the principle on which the revenue was to be assessed was declared to be, that the assessment upon each divided portion was to bear the same proportion to the produce of such subdivided portion as the assessment of the whole had borne to the produce of the whole; and the assessment so regulated was to remain fixed upon those portions for ever.

The proclamation next proceeded to declare the following rules for the assessment (or apportionment of the assessment on transfer or subdivision) of lands which, having been assumed by the Government, on account of the proprietors not having agreed to the terms of the assessment proposed to them under the previous regulations for the decennial settlement, were, at the date of the Proclamation, either under the administration of the revenue officers of Government, or let to farm:—

1st. Whenever lands so circumstanced might be put up to sale in satisfaction of a decree of a court of justice, they were to be “disposed of at whatever assessment the Governor in Council should deem equitable, and such assessment should be permanent. In the case of lands let to farm, the purchaser was to receive, during the unexpired term of the lease, the allowance which the former proprietor had been permitted to receive in consideration of his proprietary right (malikanah); and the purchaser was to engage to pay at the expiration of the lease (when he would enter on the possession of his purchase) such assessment as the Government might have fixed at the time of sale. The amount of the “malikanah” and of the future assessment were to be declared at the time of sale, and such assessment was to be permanent for ever.

2d. If a proprietor whose lands were held khas, or let to farm, in consequence of his having declined to accede to the proposed assessment, should transfer the whole or part of his lands while so held khas or let to farm, the person to whom the transfer might be made was to receive the “malikanah” allowed to the transferring proprietor, and was, in all respects, to stand in the same predicament as that proprietor.

3d. In the event of a division of lands taking place while held khas or let to farm, as above stated, the holders of the divided shares were to stand in the same predicament in respect to their shares as the transferring proprietor.

REGULATION II.—1793.

Abolition of Revenue Courts—Powers and Duties of Collectors—Powers and Duties of Board of Revenue.

Reg. II 1793.

THE preamble to this Regulation began by declaring the importance of affording protection to the agriculture of the country, which was the source of its commercial prosperity, since the great mass of the population were dependent upon it not only for subsistence, but for employment. Experience had shown that droughts and inundations were always followed by famine and the widest spreading calamities; and these evils could not be abated until the proprietors and cultivators of the land should have the means of increasing the number of reservoirs, embankments, and other artificial works for the preservation and direction of the waters. To effect these improvements in agriculture had ever been one of the primary objects of the British Administration in its arrangements ments for the internal government of the Indian provinces. The two fundamental measures which it had with these views adopted, were to declare "the property in the soil to be vested in the landholders, and to fix for ever the revenue payable to Government from each estate. These measures had at once rendered it the interest of the proprietors to improve their estates, and had given them the means of raising the funds necessary for that purpose. The property in the soil had never before been formally declared to be vested in the landholders; nor had they before been allowed to transfer such rights as they possessed, or to raise money upon the credit of their tenures, without the previous sanction of Government."

Under former administrations the public demand had been liable to frequent variation at the discretion of Government. The amount of assessment of every estate had been fixed upon estimates formed by the public officers of the aggregate of the rents payable by the ryots or tenants of such estate, for each begah of land in cultivation; of which aggregate, after deducting the expenses of collection, ten-elevenths were usually considered as the right of the public, and the remainder the share of the landholder. Refusal by the landholder to pay the sum required of him was followed by his removal from the management of his lands, and the public dues were either let in farm or collected by an officer of Government; and the above-mentioned share* of the landholder, or such sum as special custom or the orders of Government might have fixed, was paid to him by the farmer, or from the public treasury. The extension of cultivation being thus productive always of a heavier assessment, and even the possession of property being uncertain, the hereditary landholder had little inducement to improve his estate, and monied men had no encouragement to embark their capital in the purchase or improvement of land. The same causes, therefore, which had prevented the improvement of land, had depreciated its value; these evils it was the object of the permanent settlement to remove. The preamble then proceeded to state, that besides the measures which had been provided, as before stated, for the security of tenure and the extension of cultivation, there were others equally essential to the attainment of the important objects in view. These related to the administration of justice on questions between the Government and the landholders respecting the assessment and collection of the public revenue, and on disputed points between proprietors of land and the ryots, and others who paid to them. All such questions had until that time been cognizable in revenue courts, in which the collectors of the revenue presided, from whose decision an appeal lay to the Board of Revenue, and eventually to the Government. It was observed in the preamble, that the proprietors could never consider the privileges conferred upon them as secure whilst the revenue officers were invested with these judicial powers. Exclusively of the objections to revenue courts, arising from their irregular, summary, and often ex parte proceedings, and from the collectors being obliged to suspend the exercise of their judicial functions whenever they should be found to interfere with their financial duties, it was obvious that if the Regulations for assessing and collecting the public revenue should be infringed, the revenue officers themselves must be the aggressors, and that individuals who had been wronged by them in one capacity could not hope to obtain redress from them in another. Their financial occupations equally disqualified them for administering the laws between the proprietors of land and their tenants. It was therefore necessary, in order to give due security to the rights of landed property, that the Government should divest itself of the power of infringing, in its executive capacity, the privileges which in its legislative it had conferred on the landholders; that the revenue officers should be deprived of their judicial powers; and that all financial questions should be subjected to the cognizance of impartial judicial tribunals, and that the fiscal officers of Government should be amenable to the courts of judicature for acts done by them in breach of the Regulations. When this should be effected, no power would exist in the country by which the rights vested in the landholders by the Regulations could be infringed, or the value of landed property

* This is the "Melikanah."

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 6,
continued.

738 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

Revenue Affairs.
Public Officers.

Collectors.

property be injured, and land would in consequence necessarily become the most desirable of all property.

The enacting part of the Regulation began with the abolition of the Revenue Courts, or Mâl Adâlat, and then proceeded to define the powers which should thereafter be exercisable by the local officers of land revenue, and by the controlling Board at the Presidency. It declared the collection of the revenue to be committed to European covenanted servants of the Company, to be styled "Collectors of the Revenue;" and it stated the duties to be performed by them to consist in the collection and apportionment of the assessment; in prosecuting claims on behalf of Government; administering the estates of minors, and other disqualified landholders, under the direction of the Court of Wards; and generally in performing such other duties as should be prescribed by the Regulations. They were further to conform to such special orders as they should receive from the Board of Revenue, or other duly authorized public officers. The Regulation further declared the duties of the dewan and native officers of the collectors; and it directed that native treasurers should give sufficient security for the faithful discharge of their functions. Collectors and their public native officers were forbidden to purchase lands at public sale. Europeans were not to be allowed to hold lands in farm, nor to be securities for farmers or tenants.

Board of Revenue.

The Regulation next detailed the powers of the Board of Revenue, in whom it vested the superintendence of the settlement and collection of the land revenue, and all other matters entrusted to the collectors. The Board were empowered to summon collectors to the Presidency to explain their conduct, and were vested with authority to fine them, to the extent of one month's salary. The duties of the Board and the powers of the President, and the mode in which business was to be transacted, were fully detailed in this Regulation.

REGULATION VIII.—1793.

The Principles on which the permanent Assessment was formed—the Classes of Persons with whom the Government engaged, and their Relation to others holding interests deemed subordinate.

Reg. VIII. 1793.

REGULATION I. 1793, had declared the permanency of the assessment which had been made under the Regulations for the previous decennial settlement. The original Regulations relative to that settlement had been passed, for Bengal, Behar, and Orissa respectively, on the 18th September and 25th November 1789, and 10th of February 1790; but having undergone considerable alterations during the progress of the arrangement, an amended code of rules had been promulgated on the 23d November 1791. The present Regulation re-enacted the last-mentioned code, adapting the rules to the new principle of the separation of the revenue from the judicial functions. It therefore exhibited both the principles on which the permanent settlement was effected, and those which were to govern future arrangements with successors to the zemindary rights.

The Regulation began by declaring the decennial settlements in Bengal, Behar, and Orissa (which were eventually declared permanent), to have commenced with the local year 1197, (i. e. Behar and Orissa, September 1789,—Bengal, April 1790,) and it proceeded to declare that the several classes of persons with whom the settlement was made (with certain exceptions), viz. zemindars, independent talookdars, or chowdries, were to be deemed "actual proprietors of the soil."

Talookdars.

Talookdars, that is, persons holding talooks (which were originally subdivisions or portions of zemindaries), were to be considered as either "independent" or "dependent."

Independent
Talookdars.

The talookdars who were to be considered independent, and therefore "actual proprietors," were declared to be—1st. Those who had obtained their talooks by gift or sale from the proprietor, and possessed deeds making over to them the proprietor's rights therein, therein, though they should have actually continued to pay their revenues through the original zemindar. 2d. Those whose talooks were formed before the actual proprietors succeeded to the zemindaries of which their talooks formed part. 3d. Those whose land had never been the property of the zemindar through whom their revenues were paid. 4th. Those who had purchased or inherited talooks of the two last descriptions.

The following talookdars were to be considered "dependent," and to continue the payment of their assessment through the zemindar:—1st. Those whose title-deeds contained a stipulation that they should pay their revenue through the zemindar. 2d. Those whose title-deeds did not contain an actual transfer of the property in the soil, but whose tenure was subject to the performance of stipulated conditions. These were to be considered as "leaseholders" only. 3d. Those whose lands were held on what is denominated junglebhooary tenure, that is to say, on condition of clearing away the jungle, and bringing the land into a productive state, with a right to the talookdar and his heirs in perpetuity to dispose of it either by sale or gift, paying no revenue until after a certain term.

Dependent
Talookdars.
Leaseholders.
Junglebhooary.

Talookdars holding malguzary ayma lands, that is, lands granted for charitable purposes, but subject to the payment of a fixed quit revenue, were to be deemed independent talookdars, unless their lands had been granted on junglebhooary tenure, in which case they were to be included in the estates to which they stood annexed when the decennial settlement was made.

Holders of Malguzary Ayma lands.

The Regulation then declared, that the duty of the collector in the classification of talooks as "dependent" or "independent," was limited to such inquiry and examination as would enable him to ascertain to which of the above classes they should respectively belong; and that it was no part of his duty to examine into the legal title to possession. When the collector should have acquainted the parties with his decision, a zemindar dissatisfied with a separation which he had declared, or a talookdar dissatisfied that he was not declared entitled to separation, might sue in the civil court for the establishment of the right claimed; and an appeal would lie to the provincial court, and eventually to the Sudder Adawlut.

The next class of payers of revenue whose tenures were noticed in the Regulation, were mocurrerydars, that is, persons holding permanent leases of lands at fixed assessment; of these leases such as had been granted previously to the Company's accession to the Dewanny, or if granted after, had been confirmed by the Company's Government, to persons being actual proprietors, were to continue in force, subject to the final sanction of the Court of Directors. Such as had been granted or confirmed under like circumstances, to persons not being proprietors, were to be continued during the lives of the lessees, and after their deaths were to be resumed, and the settlement was to be made with the actual proprietors of the soil. In all these cases a deduction was to be made from the amount of the mocurrery lease, proportionate to the value of the sayer, which was now resumed or abolished. Mocurrery leases to persons not the actual proprietors, obtained since the Company's accession to the Dewanny, and not confirmed by the British Government, were to be annulled, and the lands resumed, and the settlement to be made with the actual proprietors. If the lessees, however, had held their leases upwards of twelve years before the resumption, they were to receive during their lives the difference between the amount of their leases and the sum at which the settlement might be made with the actual proprietors. These rules were not to apply to persons holding permanent leases from the proprietors themselves, and considered as their lease-tenants.

Proprietors being females (with the exception of some competent individuals, who should be declared to be so by the Government,) minors, idiots, or otherwise incapable of managing their lands by reason of natural defects or infirmities, or unworthy of such trust by reason of contumacy or notorious profligacy of character, were not to have the assessment of their estates formed with themselves, but were to be under the management of the Court of Wards; incapacitated persons, however, who held shares only of zemindaries, were to be represented by joint managers.

Disqualified
Landholders.

When

Revenue Affairs.

Sources of Revenue
excluded from the Settlement.

Sayer.

Lakheraj lands.

Malikanah.

Pottahs.

Engagements between zemindars, and holders under him.

When an estate belonged to more than one person, the proprietors were jointly to elect a serberakar or manager, with whom the settlement should be made on their behalf; joint-proprietors failing so to nominate, the collector was to name a manager to be approved by the Board of Revenue. In cases of mortgage, the settlement was to be made with the party in possession, with a reservation of the rights of the other party. In the cases of absentees or of the proprietor not being discovered, the lands were to be held khas. In cases of disputed property, the settlement was to be made with the party in possession; if neither were in possession, the estate was to be administered by the officers of Government, until the question of title should be settled in a court of justice. In cases of disputed boundaries, the question of right was to be left for decision by the civil court, and the settlement was to be made with each party for the lands in his possession. The allowances of cauzees* and canongoes† were no longer to be paid by the proprietors to those persons, but were to be added to the assessment, and the allowances were to be paid by the collector. The Regulation then declared the sources of revenue formerly received by proprietors, but which were to be excluded from the assets of the zemindary in fixing the permanent assessment. These were, 1st, Duties, taxes, and other collections known under the general denomination of sayer: 2d, Lakheraj lands, whether duly exempted from the payment of revenue or held free without due authority, with the exception of private lands (nancar) appropriated by actual proprietors of land in Bengal and Orissa for the subsistence of themselves and families; all such lands were to be annexed to the malguzarry‡ estate, and the assessment was to be fixed upon the whole. There were some special exceptions to this rule. The lands held by public officers and private servants in lieu of wages were also to be annexed to the revenue lands.

The amount of the assessment of an estate being fixed and sanctioned by the Board of Revenue, if the proprietor should refuse to accept the terms, his lands were to be let in farm or held khas, as the Board should direct; in such event, an allowance was to be made to the proprietor, at the rate of ten per cent. on the assessment of the estate if let in farm, or on the net amount realized by Government if held khas. Out of the malikanah, provision was to be made for members of the proprietor's family entitled thereto.

As soon as the settlement should be concluded with the actual proprietors, they were to enter into engagements with their dependent talookdars for the same period as their own engagements with the Government, if the talookdars would consent to pay such amount as the proprietors were entitled to demand of them.§ Proprietors who had granted moccerry or istimrary leases of their lands were not to raise the rents of such lessees as had held them for upwards of twelve years, during the lives of those lessees. The proprietors were to deliver a record of the engagements formed with their dependent talookdars to the collector, within three months after the conclusion of the settlement.

The engagements before alluded to as existing between the proprietors and the istimrary lessees, though binding on the contracting proprietors, were not to preclude the Government in the event of the estates being taken under the administration of the Government officers, or being let to farm, from assessing such istimrary lessees according to the general rate of the district. Proprietors requiring an increased rent from their dependent talookdars, unless entitled to do so by the conditions of the tenure or by the special custom of the district, were to be subject in a civil action to pay damages equal to double the amount of the exaction.

The next provisions of the Regulation related to the terms of engagement to be entered into between a zemindar and his under farmers for lands not coming within the description of talooks. It was declared competent to proprietors to let such lands in whatever manner they might think proper, subject to the restrictions hereafter specified: but the engagements with the under farmers were to specify the actual amount to be paid.

* Mahomedan judges.

† i. e. Paying revenue.

‡ Provincial registers and accountants.

§ See Reg. IV. 1794.

paid. All sums which proprietors might receive in excess of those engagements were to be deemed extortions, recoverable with a penalty of double the amount. The following were the restrictive rules to be imperative on the parties: No person contracting with an actual proprietor for lands or collections was to enter upon them without an amilnamah, or authority in writing from the zemindar. The engagements between the proprietors and the ryots were to include a consolidation, after careful revision, of all cesses and extra assessments, and no new cesses were to be imposed under a penalty of three times the amount.

The ryots were to receive from the proprietors of land, &c. written specifications, called pottahs, exhibiting the extent of the lands for which they had engaged, and the rents or rates or portion of the crop for which they were answerable, or other terms of their engagement. Each proprietor was to prepare the form of pottah suited to his own zemindary, and to lodge copies of it in the collector's office, in the civil court of the district, and in the principal cutcherries of the estate. Each ryot was entitled to receive a pottah, according to such form; it was declared the duty of the proprietor to tender it, and the right of the ryot to demand it, and the refusal to grant a pottah was declared punishable in the civil court; no farmer, however, was to grant a pottah exceeding the period of his own lease.

Pottahs.

The next rules regard the office of putwarry or village accountant. The purposes for which these offices were required to be preserved were stated to be, 1st, To facilitate the decision of suits in the courts of judicature between proprietors or farmers and persons paying rent or revenue to them; and, 2d, To enable collectors to procure the necessary information and accounts for allotting the public assessment upon estates that might come to be subdivided; and it was declared that no proprietor who did not contemplate the commission of fraud on the Government or on individuals could object to the rules now enacted. The rules prescribed regarding the appointment of putwarries were as follows:—

Proprietors were to appoint one putwarry to each village, except in particular cases in which the Board of Revenue should permit a union of villages. Putwarries were to produce, when required by the court, all accounts relating to the lands, produce, collection or charges of their respective villages, and to attend collectors when summoned to produce those accounts, for the purpose of enabling them to allot the public revenue on the separate portions of estates which might be subdivided, either on sale or transfer; but collectors were forbidden, under a penalty, to summon putwarries for any other purposes. Putwarries were, when required to verify their accounts on oath, subject to the penalties of perjury. Proprietors or putwarries falsifying accounts were declared amenable to punishment by the criminal courts. Proprietors neglecting to appoint putwarries were to be punishable by fine in the civil courts.

The remaining provisions of the Regulation were of a miscellaneous character, and generally related to details. Landholders and their dependant tenants and ryots were prohibited from taking cognizance of, or interfering in any matters coming within the jurisdiction of the civil or criminal courts.

The Regulation concluded with special rules and directions, as to the mode in which the amount of assessment was to be fixed and adjusted in the provinces of Bengal and Behar, and in Midnapore, a district of Orissa, respectively, so as to make it just and equitable.

Note.—By Regulation I. 1801, it was declared, that the time for applications of dependent talookdars to be made independent under the foregoing provisions should be limited to one year from the date of that Regulation.

REGULATION XXVII.—1793.

Revenue Affairs.

Resumption by the Government of the Sayer Collections formerly made by Proprietors, and Grant of Compensation to those Persons.

Reg. XXVII. 1793.

It had been declared in Regulation VIII. 1793, that in assessing the land revenue to be paid by proprietors, the duties formerly levied by them under the title of Sayer, were to be excluded, and the collection of them by proprietors prohibited; that compensation* would be made where due, in consideration of the resumption of those duties; and that the Government would reserve to themselves the right of imposing duties of that nature, as might seem proper to them.

The preamble to the present Regulation contained a summary of the measures adopted at different times on this subject, and was as follows :—

The imposition and collection of internal duties have from time immemorial been admitted to be the exclusive privilege of Government, not exercisable by any subject without its express sanction, and consequently it has ever been a well-known law of the country, that no person could establish a gunge, haut, or bazaar without authority from the governing power. Grants from the sovereign, or his representative delegating this authority, as well as universal tradition, proved that this right was asserted by the Mahomedan government; and the orders of the Honourable Court of Directors, as well as the repeated declarations and promulgations by the British administrations, demonstrate that this right was constantly asserted by the Company. It was, however, judged advisable to leave the exercise of this privilege to the landholders, Government contenting themselves with imposing general Regulations for the prevention of undue exactions, and occasionally interfering to modify or abolish particular imposts as they occurred or were discovered. Experience having at length proved that prohibitory orders for preventing oppression were not attended with the desired effect, it was determined, on the 11th June 1790, to take from the landholders the power of imposing and collecting duties altogether, and to exercise this privilege immediately and exclusively on the part of Government. The consequences of this measure were expected to be the effectual abolition of many vexatious duties on articles of internal manufacture and consumption, as well as on exports and imports, the suppression of many petty monopolies and exclusive privileges which had been secretly continued, to the great prejudice of the lower orders of the people; and, as the natural effects of the reform of these abuses, benefit to trade, and ease to the inhabitants of the country in general. A further consequence expected from the exercise of this privilege was a future opportunity of augmenting the public revenue, in case the exigencies of the Government should render it indispensably necessary, without increasing the assessment on the land. But this was a secondary expectation only; the primary objects intended were those first stated; the promotion of commerce and the general relief of the inhabitants. In the adoption of the above arrangements, the Governor-general in Council had no intention to divest the landholders of any collections they had made, under the denomination of sayer, not in reality a duty, but a consideration for the use of ground, shops, or other buildings belonging to them. As, however, the rent of warehouses (golahs) and shops (dokans) had in general been received by the officers employed to collect the gunge, haut, and bazaar duties, and had frequently been let in farm with them, and as the rent paid for orchards, pasture ground, and fisheries had been sometimes included in the sayer, under the denominations of phulkur, bunkur, and julkur, the Governor-general in Council thought it necessary to declare expressly, that it was by no means his intention to include in the resumption of the sayer then ordered, the monthly or annual rents paid for ground, or buildings erected thereon of whatever description, or the phulkur, bunkur, and julkur; such rents being properly the private right right of the proprietors, and in no respect a tax or duty on commodities the exclusive right of Government. The principles on which it was determined that a compensation should be made to the parties affected by the discontinuance of the privilege of collecting duties, were as follows :—

* By Regulation VI. 1811, a period was put to the time for applying for such compensation.

Firstly.—It having never been lawful to exercise this privilege without the sanction of Government, it followed of course that all instances of the exercise of it without such sanction were illegal usurpations, and the usurpers, so far from having any just claims to a compensation, might without injustice have been made answerable for the amount unlawfully received by them. As, however, the Company had limited their retrospection in similar cases to the period of their accession to the Dewanny, this principle was adopted only with regard to collections commenced since that period.

Secondly.—Government having always reserved to itself a power of abolishing all duties deemed oppressive, it followed that all collections made contrary to any prohibitory orders of Government were unauthorized exactions, for which no compensation was due to the parties who had benefited by them.

Thirdly.—The condition of particular persons, reduced to distress by the deprivation of the income they had received from duties though unauthorized, being a separate consideration, unconnected with the question of right, was reserved for determination as cases might occur.

Fourthly.—The holders of lakheraj lands, or land exempted from the payment of public revenue, who had received the sanction of Government to the establishment of gunges, bazaars, and houts on their lands, or in other words, who had been authorized to exercise the privilege of collecting duties thereon, were deemed entitled to a full compensation for the resumption of such privilege, adequate to the annual profit they derived from it.

Fifthly.—The holders of malguzary land, or land assessed for the public revenue, who had been permitted to collect gunge, haut, bazaar, or other duties on their lands, were also considered entitled to a full compensation for the profits they were allowed to enjoy from such collections ; and these profits having by a general regulation been limited to one-tenth of their net receipts, an equivalent to this proportion was considered the compensation due to them.

In pursuance of the principles above stated, the Governor-general in Council had prescribed such rules, adapted to existing circumstances, as he judged necessary for the immediate guidance of the collectors and the Board of Revenue in carrying his intentions into effect, in such mode as might secure the objects intended, with the least possible injury to the individuals affected thereby. But on the collection of the sayer being committed to the officers of Government, it was found that the exactions were so numerous and complicated, and imposed on such impolitic principles, as to preclude the possibility of regulating them in such a manner as to render them productive to the state, and at the same time to prevent their operating as a burden on the internal commerce and industry of the country. It was, in consequence, determined, on the 28th July 1790, to abolish the sayer collections (with certain specified exceptions) throughout the three provinces, leaving to future consideration what internal duties or taxes should be imposed in lieu of them. The Governor-general in Council deeming it of importance that all the rules which had been passed regarding the sayer collections since their first resumption on the 11th June 1790, to the present date, should be made as generally known as possible, they were included in this Regulation ; and the several rules passed within that period were to be considered as having had operation from the date on which they were respectively passed, and to be still in force, excepting where they should have been wholly or partially modified, altered, or rescinded by subsequent rules enacted during this period, or by the present Regulation, or any other Regulation of the same date.

The above preamble was followed by the republication of the several rules which had been promulgated at different periods between the 11th June 1790 and the 1st May 1793, regarding the collections abolished or resumed by the Government, and the compensation to be made to the proprietors who had formerly received them, according to the different nature of their tenure.

The collections which were not abolished, but which for the future were to be received by the Government only, were the Government and Calcutta customs, the duties levied on pilgrims at Gya, and other places of pilgrimage, the abkary or tax on spirituous liquors, the collections in bazaars and markets within the limits of Calcutta. It was declared also that landholders were not to be considered as precluded from receiving bond fide rents for the use of land, or for houses, shops, or other buildings erected thereon, or for orchards, pasture ground, or fisheries, sometimes included in the sayer, under the denomination of phulkur, bunkur, and julkur.

The receipt of sayer collections by individuals in opposition to this Regulation was declared punishable, on complaint to the civil court; but the courts were not to have cognizance of questions of compensation, except on complaint that compensation which had been ordered by the Government to be paid, had been withheld by collectors.*

REGULATION XLIV.—1793.

Validity and Effect of Leases from Proprietors and Talookdars, &c.—Term for which they might be granted.

Reg. XLIV. 1793.

Definition of the Land Revenue.

THE preamble to this Regulation was as follows: The public demand upon estates of the proprietors of lands with whom a settlement had been or might be concluded under the original Regulations for the decennial settlement, having been declared fixed for ever, it was to be apprehended that many proprietors, either from improvidence or ignorance, or with a view to raise money, or from other causes or motives, might be induced to dispose of dependent talooks, now existing in their respective estates, at an under-rate, or let lands in farm, or grant pottahs for the cultivation of land at a reduced rent, for a long term, or in perpetuity. Such engagements, if held valid, would leave it in the power of weak, improvident, or ill-disposed proprietors, to render their property of little or no value to their heirs, promote vice and injustice, occasion a permanent diminution of the resources of Government, arising from the lands, in the event of the rent or revenue reserved by such proprietors being insufficient for the discharge of the amount of the public demand upon their estates, be an abuse of the great and lasting benefit which had been conferred upon the landholders by the possession of their lands being secured to them in perpetuity at a fixed assessment, and moreover be repugnant to the ancient and established usages of the country, according to which the dues of Government from the lands (which consist of a certain proportion of the annual produce of every begah of land, demandable according to the local custom in money or kind, unless Government had transferred its right to such proportion to individuals for a term or in perpetuity, or fixed the public demand upon the whole estate of a proprietor of land, leaving him to appropriate to his own use the difference between the value of such proportion of the produce and the sum payable to the public, so long as he continued to discharge the latter) are unalienable without its express sanction. It was at the same time essential that proprietors of land should have a discretionary power to fix the revenue payable by their dependent talookdars, and to grant leases, or fix the rents of their lands, for a term sufficient to induce their dependent talookdars, under-farmers and ryots, to extend and improve the cultivation of their lands, and that such engagements should be held inviolable in all cases, except where they might interfere with or affect in any shape the primary and indefeasible rights of Government.

Upon

* It was declared by section 9, Reg. IX. 1825, that the provisions of this Regulation should not be held applicable to any item of collection or cess levied by the receivers of revenue according to ancient custom, which should have been sanctioned by a collector or superior revenue authority, not being a tax on the transit of goods or merchandize.

Upon the above grounds, and as the proprietors of land, previously to the decennial settlement being declared perpetual, were not entitled to enter into engagements with their dependent talookdars, under-farmers or ryots, for a period extending beyond the term of their own engagements with the public, the Governor-general in Council enacted by the present Regulation, that no proprietor of land should be allowed to fix the jumma of his dependent talooks, nor to let farms or grant pottahs for a period exceeding ten years, nor to renew such engagements before the last year of the term : all engagements in breach of this rule were declared null.*

On the division of a joint estate, the apportionment of the revenue upon the divisions was to be made upon the principles prescribed in Regulation I. 1793, without regard to any engagements between the proprietors and the dependent talookdars. Those engagements, however, during the period for which they were made, were to be binding on the sharers.†

On the sale of lands on account of arrears of public revenue, all engagements of the proprietors with their dependent talookdars, farmers, or ryots were declared void, and the purchasers were to be at liberty to collect from those persons whatever might be demandable, according to the established usages and rates of the pergunnah in which the lands were situated, as if the engagements declared void had never existed.

It was to be understood, however, that this restriction was not to prevent proprietors from granting leases of any length for houses, gardens, &c. except to Europeans.

REGULATION IV.—1794.

Delivery of Pottahs or Agreements between Proprietors and Cultivators.

THIS was a Regulation having for one of its objects the suspension of the rules of Reg. IV 1794. Regulation VIII. 1793, regarding pottahs and putwarries in certain districts, where, from the body of the ryots not being able to read or write, from a prevailing custom of cultivating under verbal agreements, and from the expense of appointing putwarries, conformity to those rules had been represented as impracticable. The preamble also declared of ryots generally, that they had appeared frequently to have omitted or refused to take out pottahs, although the persons from whom they were entitled to demand them had offered to grant them in the form and on the terms prescribed in the Regulation above referred to.

The Regulation, after exempting a certain district in Behar from the operation of part of Regulation VIII. 1793, proceeded to enact generally, that a notification fixed up in the principal cutcherry of the estate, that the proprietor was ready to deliver pottahs, would be considered a legal tender of a pottah, and would entitle the proprietor to proceed to the legal recovery of his dues.

The Regulation further declared, that the required sanction of the collector was to be understood as relating only to the form, not to the terms, of pottahs ; and that if disputes should arise between proprietors and ryots regarding the rates of the pottahs, or whether the rate be payable in money or in kind, those questions should be determined in the civil court of the zillah, according to the usage in regard to lands of similar description and quality in the same pergunnah. It was also declared, that ryots were to be considered entitled to a renewal of their pottahs at the pergunnah rates when they should expire or become cancelled under Regulation XLIV. 1793.

REGULATION

* See Reg. V. 1812.

† See Reg. XVIII. 1812.

REGULATION XVII.—1805.

Management of joint undivided Estates.

Revenue Affairs.
Reg. XVII. 1805.

It had been directed in Regulation VIII. 1793, that the settlement of undivided estates possessed by two or more proprietors should be made with them jointly, but that they should jointly appoint a serberakar or manager, and that on their failing to make such appointment, the collector might nominate the manager, subject to the approbation of the Board of Revenue. If any sharers in a joint undivided estate were disqualified and had guardians, such guardians were to vote on their behalf on the appointment of the manager by the collective body. The preamble to the present Regulation stated, that proprietors had generally manifested reluctance to elect a manager as prescribed, and that it appeared to be most conducive to the convenience of Government, and most conformable to the wishes of the proprietors, that they should be left to manage their estates without any interference of the officers of Government; the Regulation accordingly enacted, that the collector or the Board of Revenue should not in future interfere in the appointment of a manager for the collection of the revenue of joint undivided estates; the revenue accounts were to be kept as those of an entire estate, and not with individual proprietors, and the estates were to be held answerable in the whole for the Government revenues.

REGULATION XIII.—1811.

Powers of single Members of the Board of Revenue.

Reg. XIII. 1811.

It having been enacted by Regulation II. 1793, that two members should be necessary to constitute a Board of Revenue, it was provided by this Regulation, that whenever necessary, one of the two members of the Board might be deputed into any part of the provinces on special duty with the sanction of Government. In such cases the member on deputation was to have all the powers of the Board, and the member remaining at the Presidency was declared competent to hold a Board alone with full authority.*

REGULATION V.—1812.

Leases and Pottahs by Landholders to their Tenants and Cultivators.

Reg. V. 1812.

THE objects of this Regulation were twofold; first, to revise the Rules regarding the grant of pottahs by proprietors to their tenants, and the rates at which persons purchasing lands at the public sales should be entitled to collect their rents; and, secondly, to amend the Rules for the recovery of arrears of rent by distraint.

The enactments of the latter part will be found under the head, "Collection of the Revenue."

The Regulation enacted that proprietors of land might grant leases† for any period which they might deem most convenient to themselves and their tenants, and most conducive to the improvement of the estates; also that they should be competent to grant leases and pottahs to their under-tenants, farmers, and ryots, and to receive corresponding engagements from them, in such form as the contracting parties might deem most convenient and most conducive to their respective interests; and such agreements were to be enforceable by the courts, provided that no arbitrary or indefinite cesses should be sanctioned by this Rule.

Under

* By Regulation XXIV. 1817, the same power of holding a Board was given to a single member, in the event of the absence of the other member on account of sickness.

† It is explained by Regulation XVIII. 1812, that this right was meant to extend even to leases in perpetuity, except where the grantor had only a restricted interest, in which case the lease could only be granted for the period of that interest.

Under the provisions of Regulation XLIV. 1793, the purchaser of lands at public sales was entitled to annul all engagements which might have been contracted between the former proprietor and his under-tenants, and to collect according to the customary rates of the pergunnah or district. By subsequent Regulations it was provided, that this power of annulment should not be exercised before the end of the year, if the sale had taken place after the expiration of the second month of the Bengal or Fuslee year, except in cases of such leases or engagements being collusive. By the present Regulation it was declared that the exception last mentioned should not have effect unless the collusion were declared by the decision of a court of judicature, on a summary suit instituted under Regulation VII. of 1799.*

In reference to the before-mentioned authority of purchasers to collect according to pergunnah or district rates, this Regulation provided, that where no established district or pergunnah rates should be known, the collections should be made according to the rate payable for land of a similar description in the places adjacent; “but if the leases and pottahs of the tenants of an estate generally, which may consist of an entire village or other local division, be liable to be cancelled under the Rules above noticed, new pottahs should be granted, and the collections made at rates not exceeding the highest rate paid for the same land in any one year within the period of the three last years antecedent to the period at which the leases might be cancelled.” In the case of dependent talookdars, a deduction of ten per cent. from the total of the rates payable by the ryots, besides a reasonable allowance for charges of collection, was to be made to the talookdar. No cultivator or tenant was to be liable to pay an enhanced rent to an auction purchaser, unless written engagements had been entered into by the parties, or unless a formal notice had been served on such cultivator at the season of cultivation, notifying the specific increase of rent to which he would be subject; if an enhanced rent were levied without such notification, the cultivator was to be entitled to a refund of the excess, with damages, on proof of the fact before a court of justice.

Zillah judges were authorized, in cases of disputes between the proprietors of joint undivided estates, to appoint a proper person to be manager; if the person so appointed should be objected to by any individual interested in the estate, the objection might be submitted to the provincial court. It was also competent to any person so interested to represent to the zillah judge the unsatisfactory conduct of a manager, and to move for his removal.

By Regulation VIII. 1819, the rule requiring the delivery of pottahs in certain forms was rescinded, and landholders and their tenants were declared competent to interchange such instruments as they should deem most conducive to their respective interests.

REGULATION XV.—1813.

Abolition of the Office of Dewan.

THE preamble to this Regulation stated, that under the previously existing Regulations, a native officer had been appointed in each district, with the official designation of Dewan, for the performance of certain specified duties, and for the purpose of aiding the collectors generally in the discharge of the public functions of their stations; that considerable inconvenience had resulted from the existence of that office, in some instances from the abuse of the power and influence possessed by the dewans, in others from disagreements between the collectors and those native functionaries, and from other causes: and that it would conduce to the public interests that the several branches of the public business in the offices of the collectors should be conducted by distinct and separate establishments, subject only to the direct and immediate control of the collectors themselves.

The

* See Reg. VII. 1799, and Reg. I. 1801.

748 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

The present Regulation was therefore enacted to abolish the office of dewan, from the 1st January 1814, throughout the territories dependent on the presidency of Fort William.

REGULATION XXIX.—1814.

Rules for the Protection of the Ghautwal Tenure in Beerbhoom.

Reg. XXIX. 1814.

This Regulation provided for a peculiar tenure in the district of Beerbhoom, held by the class of persons denominated Ghautwals, who, according to the former usages and the constitution of the country, were entitled to hold their lands, generation after generation, in perpetuity, subject to the payment of a fixed and established rent to the zemindar of Beerbhoom, and to the performance of certain duties for the maintenance of the public peace and support of the police.

The Regulation declared, that the Ghautwals and their descendants in perpetuity should be maintained in possession of the lands so long as they should pay the revenue at that time assessed upon them, and should not be liable to any enhancement of rent so long as they should punctually discharge the same, and fulfil the other obligations of their tenure; the rents were to be paid to such public officer as the Board of Revenue, with the sanction of the Governor-general in Council, should direct to receive them.

It further declared, that in the event of any of the Ghautwals failing to discharge their stipulated rents, it should be competent for the Governor-general in Council to cause the tenure of such defaulter to be sold by public sale in satisfaction of the arrears, under the same rules as lands held immediately of Government, or to transfer it by grant, assessed with the same revenue, or with an increased or reduced assessment, as to the Government should appear meet. Any increase of revenue obtained from the operation of any arrangements of the nature above described was to be paid to the zemindar of Beerbhoom, his heirs and successors.

REGULATION VIII.—1819.

Powers of Landholders to create certain Lease Tenures.

Reg. VIII. 1819.

THE preamble to this Regulation so fully detailed the origin of the peculiar tenure which the enactment legalized, that it seemed desirable to give at full length so much of it as had relation to that subject. It was as follows:

By the rules of the perpetual settlement, proprietors of estates paying revenue to Government, that is, the persons answerable to Government for the revenue then assessed on the different mahals, were declared to be entitled to make any arrangements for the leasing of their lands in talook, or otherwise, that they might deem most conducive to their interests. By the rules of Regulation XLIV. 1793, however, all such arrangements were subjected to two limitations; first, that the jumma or rent should not be fixed for a period exceeding ten years; and secondly, that in case of a sale for Government arrears, such leases or arrangements should stand cancelled from the day of sale. The provisions of section 2, Regulation XLIV. 1793, by which the period of all fixed engagements for rent was limited for ten years, have been rescinded by section 2, Regulation V. 1812; and in Regulation XVIII. of the same year it was more distinctly declared, that zemindars were at liberty to grant talooks or other leases of their lands, fixing the rent in perpetuity at their discretion, subject however to the liability of being dissolved on sale of the grantor's estate for arrears of the Government revenue, in the same manner as heretofore. In practice, the grant of talooks and other leases at a rent fixed in perpetuity, had been common with the zemindars of Bengal for some time before the passing of the two Regulations last mentioned; but notwithstanding the abrogation of the rule which declared such arrangements null and void, and the abandonment of all intention or desire to have it enforced as a security to the Government revenue in the manner originally contemplated, it was omitted to declare in the rules, Regulation V. and XVIII. of 1812, or in any other Regulation, whether tenures at the time in existence, and held under covenants or engagements entered entered into by the parties in violation of the rule of section 2, Regulation XLIV. 1793, should, if called in question, be deemed invalid and void, as heretofore. This point it had been deemed necessary to set at rest by a general declaration of the validity of any tenures that may be now in existence, notwithstanding that they may have been granted at a rent fixed in perpetuity, or for a longer term than ten years, while the rule fixing this limitation to the term of all such engagements, and declaring null and void any granted in contravention thereto, was in force.

Furthermore, in the exercise of the privilege thus conceded to zemindars under direct engagements with Government, there had been created a tenure which had its origin on the estates of the rajah of Burdwan, but had since been extended to other zemindaries; the character of which tenure is, that it is a talook created by the zemindar, to be held at a rent fixed in perpetuity by the lessee and his heirs for ever; the tenant is called upon to furnish collateral security for the rent, and for his conduct generally, or he was excused from this obligation at the zemindar's discretion; but even if the original tenant be excused, still, in case of sale for arrears, or other operation leading to the introduction of another tenant, such new incumbent had always in practice been liable to be so called upon at the option of the zemindar; by the terms also of the engagements interchanged, it was, amongst other stipulations, provided, that in case of an arrear occurring, the tenure might be brought to sale by the zemindar; and if the sale did not yield a sufficient amount to make good the balance of the rent at the time due, the remaining property of the defaulter should be further answerable for the demand. These tenures had usually been denominated putnee talooks, and it had been a common practice of the holders of them to under-let on precisely similar terms to other persons, who on taking such leases went by the name of durputnee talookdars; these again sometimes similarly under-let to seputneedars, and the conditions of all the title-deeds varied in nothing material from the original engagements executed by the first holder. In these engagements, however, it was not stipulated whether the sale thus reserved to himself by the grantor was for his own benefit or for that of the tenant; that is, whether, in the case the proceeds of sale should exceed the zemindar's demand of rent, the tenant would be entitled to such excess; neither was the manner of sale specified, nor did the usages of the country, nor the Regulations of Government, afford any distinct rules by the application of which to the specific cases the defects above alluded to could be supplied, or the points of doubt and difficulty involved in the omission be brought to determination in a consistent and uniform manner. The tenures in question had extended through several zillahs of Bengal, and the mischiefs which had arisen from the want of a consistent rule of action for the guidance of the courts of civil judicature in regard to them, had been productive of such confusion as to demand the interference of the legislature. It had accordingly been deemed necessary to regulate and define the nature of the property given and acquired on the creation of a putnee talook as above described; also to declare the legality of the practice of under-letting in the manner in which it had been exercised by putneedars and others, establishing at the same time such provisions as should be calculated to protect the under-lessee from any collusion of his immediate superior with the zemindar or other for his ruin, as well as to secure the just rights of the zemindar on the sale of any tenure under the stipulations of the original engagements entered into with him.

The Regulation then proceeded to declare, that existing leases for a specific rent granted by proprietors engaged to pay revenue to Government for a term of years or in perpetuity, and whether executed before or after the passing of Regulation V. 1812, or during the existence of the rule in Regulation XLIV. of 1793, which limited the powers of proprietors to grant leases to ten years, should be good and valid tenures, according to their terms and covenants.

The Regulation next declared putnee tenures described in the preamble to be valid, heritable, capable of transfer by sale, gift, or otherwise, answerable for debts, and subject to the process of the courts of judicature, in the same manner as other real property. The holders of putnee talooks were declared competent to under-let their tenures, as most Putnee.

Dur-putnee.
Se-putnee.

conducive to their own interests, with a reservation, however, of the right of the zemindar to hold the superior tenure answerable for arrear of rent, unencumbered with the engagements of his tenant.

In case of an arrear occurring on a putnee tenure, it was to be liable to sale by auction, and the holder of the tenure was to be entitled to any excess in the proceeds of the sale beyond the amount of the arrear for which it was sold; the interests of the several classes of grantors of under putnee talooks to the third and fourth degree, were declared to be similar, as between the parties, to those of the grantors of putnee talooks in chief. The holders of putnee talooks being at liberty to transfer their tenure to others, it was declared not competent to the zemindar or other superior to refuse to register such transfers, provided certain fees were paid. Purchasers at sales for arrear of revenue were however entitled to have their tenure registered without payment of any fee. The putnee lessor might call upon the transferee to give security to the amount of half his yearly rent, such being understood to be one of the original liabilities of the tenure: in the event of the rejection of the security tendered by a transferee, an appeal might be preferred to the Zillah Court, who, if the security were proved efficient, might enjoin the zemindar to accept it, and give effect to the transfer. In case of a putnee tenure being purchased at public sale, and of the purchaser not giving the required security, the zemindar might attach the tenure, such attachment to be considered as a trust, for the benefit and at the risk of the purchasers: any surplus of the collections to be held in deposit for the purchaser; and in the event of a deficiency, the tenure and person of the defaulter to be held responsible.

REGULATION III.—1822.

New Constitution of Boards of Revenue.

Reg. III. 1822.

THIS Regulation established three several Boards of Revenue:

One for the Lower Provinces;*

One for the Central Provinces;†

One for the Western Provinces;‡

the number of members and the station of each board to be settled by Government, who might also assign the duties and powers to one or more members of the board.

The Regulation contained rules limiting the powers of decision of single members when not concurred in by the other members, except under the special authority of Government.

REGULATION I.—1824.

For enabling the Government to obtain Lands for public Purposes.

Reg. I. 1824.

THE object of this Regulation was to enable the Government to obtain lands which might be required for important public services, on giving a just and full compensation to the persons holding an interest in the property so required; it likewise contained provisions for the adjustment of the claims of zemindars, and of the officers of Government in the salt department, relative to lands in the districts where salt was manufactured; the rules on the first part of the subject only will be here noticed.

In the event of any obstacle presenting itself to the obtaining any land required for public purposes, the collector was to notify, by public proclamation, the situation and extent of the land required, and to call for the attendance of all persons having claims upon

* Bengal, Boglepore and Pooneah.

† Southern and Northern Divisions of Bundelcund, Allahabad, Cawnpore, Behar and Benares.

‡ Ceded and Conquered Provinces, except as above.

upon it to make known the interest claimed by them, the compensation they would require, and their objections, if any, to part with the land. On all these points the collector was to make a report to Government. If the proprietor positively objected to part with the land, or required an exorbitant compensation, the Government were to direct that arbitrators should be appointed to make a proper valuation of the property; two were to be nominated on the part of the Government, and an equal number on the part of the proprietor; the arbitrators were not to be sworn, but to sign an obligation to the faithful discharge of the trust, and they were to appoint an umpire. The officers authorized by Government to appoint the arbitrators were to have the same powers over them to compel attendance, &c. as courts of justice had over witnesses, and might call upon them to give their award in a specified time, and in default thereof might refer the matter for the decision of the umpire. If the land required were lakhiraj, the arbitrators were to determine what would be a fair value for the whole property proposed to be assumed or destroyed in the execution of the public work in hand; if the land were malguzarry, the arbitrators were to declare the amount of the net rent which the proprietor received from the land, as far as they could ascertain the same, and the value of any other interest which he might possess in the land. It was then to be competent to the Government to determine what proportion of the compensation should be made in the shape of annual remission of revenue, and what should be commuted for a payment in ready money. In the event of any dispute regarding the title of a previous holder, or the respective rights of different parties claiming interests therein, the compensation money might be kept in deposit, or vested in Government securities, until such questions should have been decided. Full and particular rules were given regarding the mode of conducting the inquiry, as well as the due preservation of the rights of all parties having claims or interests in the lands proposed to be assumed.

The remaining sections of the Regulation, after the eighth, relate to lands required for the manufacture of salt.

REGULATION IX.—1825.

Extension of the Rules of Regulation VII. 1822 (enacted for the Upper Provinces) to Bengal, &c.

THE preamble to this Regulation declared, that the rules of Regulation VII. 1822, enacted for the provinces of which the revenues had not been permanently settled, appeared equally applicable to various mahals and tracts within the other provinces, the revenues of which had not been permanently settled; it was therefore deemed expedient to extend those provisions to all lands not included within the limits of estates permanently settled in conformity with Regulation VIII. 1793, and also to lands held free of assessment under special grants.

The Regulation declared accordingly the extension of the provisions of Regulation VII. 1822. It likewise declared it competent to the Governor-general in Council to vest any collector in Bengal, Behar, Orissa, or Benares,* with the powers of judicial inquiry regarding rent and disputes between landlords and tenants, their sureties and agents, on all matters connected with the land, the delivery of pottahs, violation of engagements, &c., and other similar subjects, and to notify such appointment by proclamation, after which all such suits, if entered for summary inquiry before the courts, were to be transferred to the collectors, and to be otherwise dealt with as provided in Regulation VII. 1822.

It was declared competent to collectors, in cases of failure on the part of persons who had engaged for the payment of revenue permanently assessed, to annul such engagements, instead of having recourse to a sale of the lands, and to let the lands in farm for periods

* See head "Land Revenue, Special, (A.)"

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued.

Revenue Affairs.

752 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

periods not exceeding fifteen years, or to hold them under khas management for the purpose of making a ryotwar settlement.

REGULATION XI.—1825.

Rights in Lands acquired by Alluvion, and Liability of such Lands to pay Revenue.

Reg. XI. 1825.

IN consequence of the frequent changes which took place in the channel of the principal rivers that intersect the provinces immediately subject to the presidency of Fort William, and the shifting of the sands which lie in the beds of those rivers, churs or small islands were often thrown up by alluvion in the midst of the stream, or near one of the banks, and large portions of lands were carried away by an encroachment of the river on one side, whilst accessions of land were at the same time, or in subsequent years, gained by dereliction of the water on the opposite side. Similar instances of alluvion, encroachment and dereliction also sometimes occur on the sea coast, which borders the southern and south-eastern limits of Bengal. The lands gained from the rivers or sea by the means above mentioned were a frequent source of contention and affray, and although the law and custom of the country had established rules applicable to such cases, these rules not being generally known, the courts of justice had sometimes found it difficult to determine the rights of litigant parties claiming churs or other lands gained in the manner above described. The court of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, with a view to ascertain the legal provisions of the Mahomedan and Hindoo laws on this subject, had called for reports from their law officers of each persuasion. On consideration of those reports, as well as of the decisions which had been passed by the court of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, in cases brought before them in appeal which involved the rights of claimants to lands gained by alluvion or by dereliction of rivers, or the sea, the Governor-general in Council had deemed it proper to enact the following rules for the general information of individuals as well as for the guidance of the courts of judicature.

Whenever the courts might be called upon to decide disputes between the proprietors of contiguous estates divided by a river, as to the right of possession of alluvial land, if any distinct usage should be established, such usage was to govern the decision; where no such usage should exist, the alluvial soil was to be considered as appertaining to the person to whose land it adjoined. In regard to liability to payment of revenue, such lands were to be held on the same tenure and subject to the same rules of assessment as the other lands to which they became annexed. This rule, however, was not to be held applicable to land cut off by the sudden change of the course of a river; all such land, on being clearly recognized, was to remain the property of the original owner. Islands thrown up in deep rivers or in the sea were declared to be the property of Government, but those in fordable rivers were to belong to the person to whose estate they most nearly adjoined. In shallow rivers where a right of fishery was held, any land or banks that might be thrown up were to be the property of the proprietors of the bed of the river. In all the above cases, the tenure of the acquired lands and the liability of the possessor to pay revenue were to be the same as in the lands to which they were annexed.

In all cases regarding lands acquired from waters not specifically provided for by this Regulation, the court, in adjudicating claims preferred, were to be guided by the best evidence they could obtain, and by the general principles of equity and justice.

REGULATION I.—1829.

Establishment of the Office of Commissioners of Revenue (and Circuit).

Reg. I. 1829.

This Regulation was enacted to constitute the office of Commissioner of Revenue and Circuit; a portion of the preamble which related to the Judicial department will be found in the abstract of the Judicial Regulations under the head "Court of Circuit." The grounds assigned in the preamble for the new arrangements in the Revenue department, were were that the great extent of country under each of the Boards of Revenue had operated to impede those authorities, in the execution of the duties which belonged to them, as tribunals for the determination of all questions relative to the assessment of lands under settlement, and for the judicial decision of many other important cases, which came before them as the general guardians of the fiscal interests of the state, as directors and superintendents over the executive officers in the Revenue department, and as the confidential advisers of Government. It had therefore appeared expedient to place the collectors and other executive officers under the superintendence and control of commissioners of revenue (and circuit) each vested with the charge of such a moderate tract of country as might enable them to be easy of access to the people, and frequently to visit the different parts of their respective jurisdictions, to confide to those commissioners the powers which did belong to the Boards of Revenue, which powers should be exercised under the instructions and control of a sudder or chief Board of Revenue. It had at the same time appeared quite necessary, with a view to the more speedy and effectual redress of the wrongs suffered by the people in the Western Provinces,* under the circumstances detailed in the preamble of Regulation I. 1821, to transfer to the said commissioners the authority exercised by the mofussil special commissioners under that Regulation, with certain modifications.

The Regulation constituted twenty commissioners of revenue (and circuit). The commissioners were to possess within their several districts the authority before vested in the Boards of Revenue and Court of Wards, subject to the control and direction of a sudder or head board, to be ordinarily stationed at the Presidency, unless otherwise directed by the Governor-General in Council. The stations at which the sudder board and the commissioners, when not on circuit, should reside, were to be fixed by the Government.

The office of mofussil special commissioners, under Regulation I. 1821, was abolished, and the powers vested in those officers were transferred to the commissioners of revenue (and circuit); the powers of the sudder special commission were transferred to the sudder board to be appointed under this Regulation, and they were empowered to take cognizance of any cases of the nature of those to which that Regulation referred, if the cause of action had arisen at any time before the 1st March 1829.

The Commissioners were authorized to refer cases for investigation, and report to the collectors or deputy collectors under their authority. No appeal was to lie of right to the sudder board from the decision of the commission, but a special appeal might be admitted by the sudder board, if on consideration of the petition and of the proceedings held and decree passed, they should see reason to think that justice had been denied to the party, or that the public interests had not been sufficiently attended to.

* See head " Land Revenue, Special, (B.)"

(B.)

RULES for the RECOVERY of ARREARS of REVENUE due to the GOVERNMENT, and SALES of LAND in discharge of such ARREARS, or in satisfaction of DECREES of COURTS of JUSTICE.

Regulations.

LIST.

- XIV. 1793.—Recovery of Arrears of Revenue due to Government from Proprietors and Farmers.
- XLV. 1793.—Sales of Land in satisfaction of Decrees of Court.
- III. 1794.— } Liability of Proprietors to Arrest defined; Recovery of Money from Native
- VII. 1799.— } Officers; Precedence of Revenue Suits before others.
- V. 1796.—Regulating the Sales of Land in satisfaction of Decrees, or for Arrear of Revenue.
- XII. 1796.—Amount of Deposit on purchase of Lands increased, to prevent certain Frauds.
- VII. 1799.—Improvement of the Process for Attachment and Sale of Landed Property for Arrear of Revenue.
- I. 1801.—To explain and modify the Provisions of Regulation VII. 1799.
- V. 1812.— }
- XII. 1824.— } Sales of Land not void on certain grounds—Interest chargeable on Arrears.
- VII. 1830.— }
- I. 1801.— }
- XVIII. 1814.—Facilitating the Process for the Sale of Lands for Arrear of Revenue.
- XI. 1822.—Improved Rules for the Sale of Estates for Arrear of Revenue.
- XII. 1824.—Interest on Arrears.
- VII. 1825.—Sale of Houses and Lands for Arrear and in satisfaction of Decrees.

REGULATION XIV.—1793.

Recovery of Arrears of Revenue due to Government by Proprietors and Farmers.

Reg. XIV. 1793.

THE preamble to this Regulation declared it to be necessary that collectors should be armed with power to enforce the payment of arrears of revenue without the tardy process of a suit in a court of justice, but that such power should be exercised at the personal risk and responsibility of the collector; it is stated, that as on the one hand the collectors, having the engagements of the proprietors or farmers in their own possession, could not suffer from unjust prosecutions so long as they were careful not to infringe those engagements, or the rules established for their enforcement; so, on the other hand, the proprietors or farmers could always guard against the exercise of the collector's powers by the punctual payment of their revenue.

An arrear of revenue was defined to be the whole or portion of a monthly instalment, remaining undischarged on the first of the following month. Payment of arrears of revenue was to be demanded in writing; if not paid, the collector might at his discretion cause the defaulter to be imprisoned or not; but if the arrear due on the 15th of any month, on account of any preceding month, should be equal to two-thirds of the instalment, ment, and if the arrear had been demanded and not paid,* the collector was positively enjoined to send the defaulter to the zillah gaol, where the judge, on the motion of the collector, was to order him to be detained until he should have discharged his dues, including the accruing arrears, or until the collector should apply by motion for his discharge. If a defaulter resided in a different zillah from that wherein the lands on which the arrear accrued were situated, he was to be conveyed to the gaol of the zillah in which he was resident. When a proprietor or farmer should be imprisoned for arrear, the collector was to depute an ameen to collect the rents of the lands on account of Government;† but strictly in conformity with the engagements actually subsisting between the defaulter and his dependent talookdars, under-farmers, and ryots. If the Board of Revenue should consider the non-payment of the zemindar to have been wanton, and for the purpose of otherwise applying his money than to the payment of his revenue, they were empowered to charge the defaulter with interest at the rate of twelve per cent. per annum. If a collector should believe that the arrear had been occasioned by causes not originating in any neglect or fault of the proprietor or farmer, he might suspend the confinement of the defaulter, and report the circumstances to the Board of Revenue.‡ If a defaulting proprietor or farmer should deny the justice of the demand in the whole or in part, and give security that he would within ten days institute a suit in the civil court to try the demand; or if he should pay the part he acknowledged, and give security to try the justice of the remainder, he was not to be imprisoned; but if the sum acknowledged were not paid, or the suit were not so instituted, the collector was to proceed against both defaulter and surety for the arrear with interest at twelve per cent.

Defaulters might sue collectors in the civil court for damages on account of imprisonment for an arrear not due, but not for imprisonment on account of failing to institute a suit as above provided.

If at the end of a year an arrear should remain due, the proprietor not being in gaol, nor having instituted a suit against the collector, the amount of the arrear was to be communicated to the Board of Revenue, who would order such part of the estate to be sold as would satisfy the arrear; but no sale of an estate was to take place without the consent of Government.§

In the event of the proprietor absconding or resisting the service of process, a proclamation was to be affixed in certain places, requiring his attendance to deliver himself into custody within four weeks; disobedience to this proclamation would incur the penalty of forfeiture of the estate to Government; the forfeiture was to be declared by the courts: an appeal lay to the provincial court from a judgment of forfeiture by the zillah court, and if the annual produce of the estate exceeded 1,000 rupees, a further appeal lay to the Sudder Adawlut; the decree of forfeiture, however, was in no case to be carried into execution until it had been submitted to the Governor-general in Council, to whom an option was reserved of commuting the forfeiture for a fine. In case of forfeiture also, Government might either grant the estate to the next heir, or cause it to be sold by auction; in the latter case, the proceeds of the sale were to go in liquidation of the balance. A similar course was to be pursued in respect to a defaulting farmer who should evade or resist the process issued by the collector for his apprehension, and the like option was reserved to the Government of declaring the lease forfeited, or commuting the forfeiture to a fine. Evasion or resistance of process by the surety of any proprietor or farmer was to be punished by fine, to be declared in like manner by the courts, with an option reserved to the Government of enforcing or mitigating the fine.|| If after the imprisonment of a proprietor, the revenue received by the ameen in charge should not have liquidated the balance, the estate might be put up to sale; but upon the defaulter giving security to institute a suit in the court to try the justice of the demand at any

* See Reg. III. 1794.

† See Reg. I. 1801.

‡ See Reg. III. 1794.

§ See Reg. XI. 1822.

|| See Reg. III. 1794.

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued.

Revenue Affairs.

756 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

any time previously to the day of sale, (provided the arrear had not been already adjudged due by a court of justice) the sale was to be suspended.

If an arrear was due from a farmer at the end of the year, the ameen in charge of the collections not having realized enough to pay the Government dues, the surety was to be called upon to pay, and both farmer and surety might be imprisoned, and the Government might either cancel the lease at the end of the year, or compel the farmer to perform the conditions until it should expire.

Lands of sureties wherever situated were declared liable to attachment to make good the default of their principal.

The sales of land for arrear of revenue were to take place either at the office of the collector or at the Board of Revenue, the time and place to be notified by public proclamation, which was to specify the amount of arrear for which the purchaser was to be responsible; such arrear was only to be that accruing for the year in which the sale should take place, unless otherwise declared in the conditions of sale. Several rules followed prescribing the forms of sale, the amount of deposit, the consequences of failure to pay up the purchase money, and the settlement of the account of proceeds with the defaulter.

A person confined under the process of the collector for arrears of revenue, might move the court to require the collector to show cause why he should not be released, and a summary inquiry was to take place before the judge; if the prisoner should deny the debt in toto, the judge was to leave him to prosecute the collector by regular suit; if it should appear to the judge upon inquiry that the whole had been paid, he was to release the prisoner, upon his giving security to meet an appeal if preferred by the collector; if part should have been paid, the judge might release him on his engaging to pay the amount by instalments during the course of one year after his release, and on his giving security for the fulfilment of that engagement. The Board of Revenue were to determine whether the decisions which the courts might pass were to be appealed or not.

Suits against the collectors,* defended under the orders of the Board of Revenue, were to be deemed public suits at the public expense; but suits for the recovery of revenue, alleged to have been directly or indirectly received by the collector for his own use, were to be defended at his own expense. Collectors were neither to derive advantage, nor to be at expense, on account of public suits. If a collector should have been compelled to pay costs or damages in any suit instituted under this Regulation, and it should appear to the Board of Revenue that he ought not to be made responsible for the amount, the Board were to submit the matter to the Governor-general in Council, who would determine whether or not he should be held responsible.

Sums advanced by the Government to assist landholders and promote agricultural improvements, or the repairs and extension of embankments, were to be recovered in the same way as arrears of revenue.

If the lands of a defaulting proprietor assessed with payment of revenue to Government should not be sufficient, when sold, to liquidate the public demand, his other property, real or personal, might be put up to sale to make up the deficiency.

In cases in which parties might sue for redress for acts done under the special orders of Government or the Board of Revenue; or when a defaulter should admit the demand made upon him to be conformable to the stipulations of the agreement on which it was grounded, but should deny the validity of the engagement, or otherwise object to it, the Government were to be considered the party in the suit; and if the Governor-general in Council should not think it proper to afford the redress solicited by the petitioner, he would direct the court in which the claim might be cognizable to proceed to the trial of it.

REGULATION

* See "Civil Judicature—Miscellaneous (A.)" p. 655.

REGULATION XLV.—1793.

Sales of Land in satisfaction of Decrees of Court.

THE object of this Regulation was to secure the due allotment of the public revenue on portions of estates required to be sold under the decrees of the court; and for this purpose it directed, that in all such cases the courts should transmit copies of their decree to the Board of Revenue, who would cause the sale of the lands necessary for the satisfaction of such decree to be made by the collector, and the course of procedure in the sale was to assimilate to that on the sale of lands for arrear of revenue. The courts were empowered at the same time to countermand or postpone sales at any time after they had been ordered, and before they had actually taken place. After lands had been sold under this Regulation, the collector was to cause the prescribed entries to be made in the public register. Proprietors or farmers who should not duly produce the accounts and other information necessary for the adjustment of the revenue, were to be liable to fine at the discretion of the Board of Revenue.

Revenue Affairs:
Reg. XLV. 1793.

REGULATION III.—1794.

Liability of Proprietors to Arrest defined—Recovery of Money from Native Officers—Precedence of Revenue Suits before others.

THE preamble stated, that from the earliest times a discretionary power had been exercised by the Government, of confining proprietors of land who had failed in the discharge of the public revenue, in addition to attaching and disposing of their property; but that the Governor-general in Council, considering the landed property to be of itself a sufficient security for the public dues, was solicitous to refrain from every mode of coercion not absolutely necessary for the realization of the revenue. In accordance with these views, and at the same time to provide against the undue detention of money, papers, or accounts, by native officers employed in the attachment of estates, and to expedite the decision of revenue suits, the present Regulation enacted as follows:

That proprietors of land should not be liable to be confined for arrears of revenue, or on account of advances made to them, except in the two following cases: 1st. If the whole of his lands should have been sold, and the proceeds should not have been sufficient to make good the arrears; or, 2d. If his lands should have been put up to sale and no person have offered to buy them.

The Regulation then provided, that if an arrear of one month remained unpaid on the 15th of the following month,* the collector was to demand payment in writing, with a notice that the arrear had become chargeable with interest. In default of payment according to this demand, the collector was to submit to the Board of Revenue a statement of such of the defaulter's lands as he might think it advisable to have sold to make good the amount, and the Board were to direct the sale to be notified. Before the actual sale, the sanction of Government was to be obtained. Lands advertised for sale were to be held answerable for any further arrear that might accrue between the time of attachment and of sale.

The Regulation modified some of the details of preceding enactments, and rescinded the rules of Regulation XIV. of 1793, which enabled a proprietor by a certain process to suspend payment of the arrear demanded; and it directed that the arrear should be paid in the first instance on demand, the proprietor being at liberty to sue the collector in the civil court, when, if he established his case, the amount unjustly received from him would be decreed, with interest at twelve per cent.

By

* See Reg. VII. 1799.

By the next portion of the Regulation, a course of proceeding similar to that laid down for the enforcement of demands of arrear of revenue, was prescribed for the purpose of compelling native officers who should withhold or refuse to give up any public money, accounts, or papers in their possession, when required so to do. Public servants, when imprisoned for not complying with such requisition, might obtain their release on giving security that they would prosecute the collector within fifteen days, for the purpose of bringing the question to issue.

Lastly, the Regulation enacted that the provincial and zillah courts should appropriate one or more days, as they should deem necessary, to the hearing of all revenue cases, which should be proceeded in, notwithstanding other causes not being revenue cases, had been previously filed.

REGULATION V.—1796.

Regulating the Sales of Land in satisfaction of Decrees or for Arrear of Revenue.

Reg. V. 1796.
(Rescinded by
Reg. XI. 1822.)

THE object of this Regulation was so to regulate the sale of lands, that no greater portion of an estate should be sold than was sufficient for the discharge of the amount to be levied, whether under revenue process or in satisfaction of a decree of court. It directed the division of the property into lots, or the sale in one lot, as might appear most for the advantage of the proprietor. If the amount to be levied were raised by the sale of a number of lots short of the whole number advertised, the remaining lots were not to be put up to sale.

REGULATION XII.—1796.

Amount of Deposit on purchase of Lands increased, to prevent certain Frauds.

Reg. XII. 1796.

IT had been found that defaulting proprietors whose lands were put up for sale, had in many instances, with a view to delay the sale of their property, or for other purposes, employed persons to bid for the lands in their own or in fictitious names, and then caused them to abscond before the day on which the purchase was to be completed, leaving the party on whose account the sale was ordered to have recourse to a resale. This practice was much facilitated by the smallness of the deposit required from the purchaser, which by former Regulations was only five per cent., a sum which they were not unwilling to forfeit for the attainment of the object they had in view.

It was enacted by this Regulation, that the deposit should be raised from five to fifteen per cent.

REGULATION VII.—1799.

Improvement of the Process for Attachment and Sale of Landed Property for Arrear of Revenue.

Reg. VII. 1799.
Introductory Remark.

THIS Regulation was drawn by Mr. Harington, at the time a member of the Board of Revenue. The following note respecting the circumstances which led to its enactment appears in that gentleman's work on the Laws and Regulations of Bengal :—

“ At the time when Regulation VII. 1799 (suggested and prepared by the author of the Analysis, then a member of the Board of Revenue), was enacted, the land revenues, notwithstanding frequent sales, had fallen much in arrear, as stated in the preamble and section xxi. of that Regulation. It was admitted that the want of punctuality, which had disappointed the reasonable expectations of Government under a permanent assessment, was ascribable in some instances to the insufficiency of the powers vested in the landholders and farmers to enforce payment of the rents due to them from their tenants ; and rules were accordingly passed to afford them the means of realizing their rents with greater promptitude and facility. It was further allowed that frequent and successive sales of land land within the current year' had been found productive of material ill consequences, as well towards the land proprietors and their under-tenants, as in their effect on the public interest in the fixed assessment of the land revenue; and this defect was therefore provided against by the rules passed at the same time. But, exclusive of these causes of arrear, in which no blame was imputable to the landholders (on the contrary, if any of the public sales of land in preceding years originated in such causes, they must be regretted), there was reason to believe that several of the principal zemindars (as noticed in section xxi. Regulation VII. 1799) purposely withheld the revenue payable by them; and taking advantage of the want of information in the public offices of the actual produce of their estates, from the discontinuance of former checks and securities, encouraged instead of preventing the public sale of portions of their lands, for the purpose of re-purchasing the same in fictitious names at an under-rated assessment, or of reducing the assessment upon the residue of their estates by over-rating the proportion sold."

The objects of this Regulation are thus stated in the preamble:—

The powers which the landholders and farmers of land paying revenue to Government were allowed to exercise, for enforcing payment of the rents due to them from their under-tenants, having in some cases been found insufficient, particularly where the crop, not being in the immediate possession of the under-tenants in arrear, cannot be distrained and sold under the provisions contained in Regulation XVII. 1793, and XXXV. 1795. A considerable delay having also of late occurred in the payment of the public revenue due from many of the landholders, which, though ascribable in some instances to the cause above mentioned, could in others be imputed only to a want of good faith on the part of certain of the zemindars and other landholders, who, taking advantage of the delay with which the process for disposing of their lands is unavoidably attended, have withheld payment of their instalments until the day appointed for the sale, and in many instances, there is reason to believe, have bought in their lands when sold, in fictitious names, or the names of irresponsible dependents. Moreover, the frequent and successive sales of land within the current year have been found productive of material ill consequences, as well towards the land proprietors and under-tenants, as in their effect on the public interest in the fixed assessment of the land revenue: The Vice-president in Council, with a view to obviate the above injurious consequences hereafter, and to establish a more certain and easy process for enabling landholders and farmers of land to realize their rents, and the officers of Government to enforce payment of the public revenue, without having recourse to sales of land till the close of the year, has enacted the following rules and provisions to be in force throughout the provinces of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa, from the promulgation of this Regulation respectively.

The provisions of the Regulation may be classed as follows: first, Rules to give greater power to proprietors to distrain, and otherwise enforce payment of what was due to them from their under-tenants (for which see the head "Recovery of Arrears of Rent"); second, Rules to facilitate the process of summary suit and inquiry before the judicial tribunals on questions of arrear (for which see rules under the same head); and third, Rules to improve the course of proceeding against proprietors antecedent to the sale of lands.

The portion of this Regulation which relates to the latter of these objects begins at section xxi. and is prefaced by the following remarks:—That rules having been now passed * which would enable proprietors and farmers of land to realize their rents with promptitude and facility, the utmost punctuality would consequently be expected from them in the payment of their rent to Government;—that the coercion formerly practised by confining proprietors had been discontinued, as stated in the preamble to Regulation III. 1794; and it had been hoped, that the permanent assessment on their estates, which they

* See also the other parts of this Regulation, for which see "Recovery of Arrears of Rent."

they were left to improve to the utmost, without any addition of revenue, would be paid so readily and punctually as to render it seldom necessary to have recourse to any means of coercion;—that instead of fulfilling these reasonable expectations, many of the principal zemindars had withheld their revenue, and taking the advantage of the want of information in the public offices of the actual produce of their estates, from the discontinuance of the former checks and scrutinies, had encouraged instead of prevented the public sale of portions of their lands, for the purpose of re-purchasing them in fictitious names at an under-rated assessment, or of reducing the assessment on the residue of their estates, by over-rating the proportion sold;—that with a view of remedying abuses of this nature, as well as to secure the more punctual realization of the public revenue, without the necessity of frequent sales of land in the course of the year, which had been found liable to many ill consequences, and in the hope of enhancing the value of landed property, and of promoting, as far as possible, the ease of the proprietors, by considering their property alone a sufficient security for the public dues, without subjecting them to any personal restraint, except in cases of necessity, the Government had forbore to renew the former usage of confining proprietors, whilst a hope could exist of realizing a fixed assessment on their lands, according to the stipulated periods of payment, without it.

The Regulation accordingly enacted as follows:—In Regulation III. 1794, it had been prescribed, that if a proprietor did not pay the arrear of one month before the 15th of the month ensuing, a demand was to be served upon him, after which interest at twelve per cent. was to begin, and the lands were liable to immediate sale on the authority of the Board of Revenue. The present Regulation enacted, that interest should be due on any arrear from the first of the month on which such arrear became claimable, unless the collector saw special reasons for remitting the interest; in which case he was to report to the Board of Revenue: the collector was immediately to demand the arrear, and if it was not paid, he was to attach such portion of the defaulter's lands as might appear sufficient to realize the amount. A discretionary authority was given to collectors, after the arrest of defaulting proprietors or their sureties, to keep them for a period not exceeding ten days, under the custody of peons, instead of sending them to be committed to the zillah gaol, if there seemed a prospect of adjustment within that time. The estate might also be attached and placed in charge of an ameen, but the lands were not to be sold before the end of the year; and if the arrear due should be liquidated at any time before the termination of the current revenue year, the attachment was to be immediately withdrawn, and an account of receipts rendered to the proprietor. If any arrear remained due from a proprietor at the close of the current year, the collector was to report to the Board of Revenue what lands it would be necessary to sell in order to liquidate the amount; and if the whole arrear should not be recovered by a sale of the lands, the remainder might be recoverable from any other property the defaulter might possess, or by imprisonment of his person. Lands attached were to be brought to sale as soon as possible after the close of the revenue year. Collectors holding estates in management (or khas) might proceed against under-farmers in the same manner as against proprietors, under the provisions of this Regulation. Collectors were authorized to use their discretion, as directed by Regulation XIV. 1793, in suspending the exercise of their powers in cases in which the defaulter had suffered from inundation, drought, &c., reporting to the Board of Revenue, who might suspend the enforcement, but not remit the payments altogether, without the sanction of Government.

At the time of sale of any lands attached for arrears, a clear specification was to be exhibited, for the information of the purchasers, of the value of the estates sold, and the allotment of the Government revenue upon them; the purchaser was to receive an authenticated copy of that statement, with express notification that the Government did not guarantee to the purchaser any thing beyond the right of the former possessor in the land sold; and moreover, that if the purchaser should, within one year after the purchase, discover any gross mistake or error, rendering the assessment on the land sold much much higher than it ought to have been under the rules prescribed in Regulation I. 1793, the Government would cause a new allotment to be made rectifying the error. All purchases of land at the public sales in a fictitious or substituted name would render the land so purchased liable to confiscation, or such other penalty as the Government might impose. All defaulting landholders, or others whose lands might be sold for arrear of revenue, were forbidden to be purchasers, either directly or indirectly, of their own lands; and it was declared to be the duty of collectors who should suspect such illicit purchases, to cause due inquiry to be made into them. If, after a sale, any obstruction was made to the purchaser's being put in possession of the estate, as notified in a proclamation, which was to be published at the head cutcherry of the estate sold, the purchaser was to be put in possession by the civil court, in like manner as possession was usually given by the courts, of property adjudged by their decrees. Disputes arising between the purchaser and the under-tenants were to be settled between the parties by due course of law, in like manner as they would have been between the under-tenants and the former incumbent, to whose rights the purchaser had succeeded by the terms of his purchase. Sales of land were to be conducted by the Board of Revenue, without reference to the Governor in Council, except in cases requiring special instructions.

By Regulation XIX. 1817, provision was made for arrest of a defaulting tenant who might be in a different zillah from that in which his land was situated. This was to be done by petition to the judge of that zillah, who, having caused his arrest, might transmit him to the court of the zillah in which the land might be situated, if he did not satisfy the party causing the arrest. It further contains a provision for admitting defaulters and their sureties to bail, pending a summary inquiry.

Reg. XIX. 1817.

REGULATION I.—1801.

To explain and modify the Provisions of Regulation VII. of 1799.

THE object of this Regulation was to modify and explain, in some particulars, the previous Regulations regarding the recovery of arrears of revenue from proprietors, especially Regulation VII. of 1799.

Reg. I. 1801.

It declared that collectors, in exercising the powers vested in them by Regulation VII. 1799, of attaching estates in arrear, and administering them until the termination of the year, appeared not to have availed themselves of the discretionary authority vested in them, on their ascertaining that an arrear had accrued in consequence of adverse seasons, and not by the negligence or fault of the proprietor. The Regulation therefore directed, that in no case should such attachment be made within the first three months of the revenue year without the special order of the Board of Revenue, nor afterwards, unless it were with the view and in the hope of inducing speedy payment of the arrear; or to prevent misapplication of rents receivable by the defaulter; or for the purpose of obtaining accurate information of the assets of the estate, with a view to the better distribution of the revenue on the divisions of an estate which had been sold in portions: in either of which cases, the attachment might take place after the third month of the year, and the whole estate, not a portion, was to be attached.

When estates should not be attached as above provided, a penalty at the rate of one per cent. per mensem, in addition to interest at the like rate, might be charged on arrears due by proprietors wilfully withholding their revenues. After the first three months of the year, and with the approbation of the Board of Revenue, the attachment of lands was to take place, with a view to eventual sale at the end of the year.

It was notified, that if proprietors should refuse to the collectors the accounts of the assessment and collection of the year, the Governor in Council would exercise his authority of ordering the estates to be sold within the year. A discretionary power was vested in the Board of Revenue, to authorize the distraint and sale of the personal property of defaulting proprietors, when difficulties or disproportionate expense might attend the attachment of their land.

In

In cases in which the value of an estate did not exceed 500 rupees, and also in cases in which the arrear due should fall little short of the computed value of the whole estate, it was declared competent to the Board of Revenue to direct the sale of the whole estate, instead of dividing off the portion supposed to be equivalent to the amount of the arrear. In the sale of lands, all established local divisions of known limits were as much as possible to be preserved entire.

With reference to the general rule, that on the sale of lands for arrear of revenue, the engagements between the proprietors and their tenants were to become void, it was provided, that in certain cases where the sale was unavoidably postponed till after the second month of the revenue year, such engagements might be continued in force during the remainder of the year in which the sale should take place, and then become void.

As a further check against collusive sales, collectors were empowered to compel the attendance of proprietors or purchasers, or of any other natives whose presence might be requisite, for the purpose of inquiry into the circumstances of the purchase; but they were not to require the attendance of a principal, when that of an authorized agent would be sufficient.

REGULATION V.—1812.

Sales of Land not void on certain Grounds—Interest chargeable on Arrears.

Reg. V. 1812.

By this Regulation it was declared, that it should not be competent to the courts of judicature to set aside sales of entire estates, on the ground that some of the sharers had not obtained possession of their interest in the property, nor on the ground of the proceeds having materially exceeded the arrears due.

By Regulation I. 1801, a penalty of twelve per cent. per annum, in addition to the accumulating interest, had been imposed on defaulting zemindars; this penalty was rescinded by the present Regulation, and they were declared amenable only to the payment of interest, which might also be remitted by the Board of Revenue.

This penalty was re-imposed by Regulation XII. 1824; and by Regulation VII. 1830, the penalty and interest were consolidated into one demand; and it was enacted, that it should be in all cases exacted, and that the collector should in no case reduce the amount without the special authority of the commission or Sudder Board.

REGULATION XXVIII.—1814.

Facilitating the Process for the Sale of Lands for Arrear of Revenue.

Reg. XVIII. 1814.

(Rescinded by
Reg. XI. 1822.)

It appearing that the Rule for serving written notices in all cases upon defaulters of revenue, as required by Regulations XIV. 1793 and VII. 1799, had been attended with considerable expense to such defaulters, it was enacted by this Regulation, that collectors might notify lands for sale, without the service of such previous notice, but that they were not to proceed to actual sale until the sanction of the Board of Revenue had been obtained. The Board of Revenue were also authorized to sanction the sale of lands without the previous consent of the Governor-general in Council, required by Regulation VII. 1799; with this exception, that in cases of doubt as to the propriety of a sale on the ground of political expediency or danger to the peace of the country, a previous reference was to be made to the Government.

REGULATION XI.—1822.

Improved Rules for the Sale of Estates for Arrear of Revenue.

Reg. XI. 1822.

The preamble to the Regulation declared, that the previous Rules relative to the public sales of estates for the recovery of arrears of revenue, were not sufficiently precise as to the conditions necessary to the validity of such sales, or the nature of the interest and title title conveyed to the purchasers. It stated, that experience had shown that absolute confirmation of sales, in all cases in which the prescribed conditions might have been observed, had occasionally operated injuriously, and that it appeared desirable therefore to vest the Revenue Boards with the power of annulling sales, not only if they had been irregularly conducted by the collector, but also in cases in which the defaulters might clearly appear to have been defrauded or deceived by their own agents, or in which the confirmation of the sale might from any cause appear to be a measure of excessive severity, or to be otherwise inexpedient or improper. The preamble further declared, that cases had occurred in which the revenue officers of Government had been executively employed in giving effect to orders issued by the zillah courts, which the decision of the superior courts had declared to be irregular and illegal. Government had been held responsible for the acts done by those officers in virtue of such orders, contrary to the real intent and meaning of the existing law, and it had therefore become necessary to declare that Government was not liable for any errors or irregularities in the proceedings of the courts of justice, whether the revenue officers might or might not be employed in giving effect to the proceedings or orders deemed to be erroneous or irregular.

The Regulation then proceeded to establish the following rules in modification of those before enacted: That it should be in the power of the collectors, with the sanction of the Board of Revenue, to put up for sale the lands of proprietors under engagements to Government, for any arrear or interest thereon that might be due from them at any time of the year, and whether any other revenue process should or should not have been issued; that estates under the management of the court of wards should be exempted from sale for arrears that had accrued under their superintendence; and that joint estates which might be in process of division, and estates under attachment by courts of justice, were not to be sold until the expiration of the year. It enacted that the courts of justice should not be competent to set aside any sale on the ground of irregularity, and it declared the following conditions to be essential to the validity of a sale:—

First, that the lands were bond fide responsible for the arrear, on account of which they might be sold. Secondly, that the sale had been sanctioned * by the Board of Revenue. Thirdly, that due notice had been given of the sale. Fourthly, that at the time of putting up any lot, some arrear or interest were due upon it. Fifthly, that the sale were made at the time and place stated in the advertisement with due publicity and freedom, as specifically directed in a subsequent part of this Regulation. The Regulation then laid down the detail of the communication between the collector and the Board of Revenue, relative to their sanction of the sale, the issue of the advertisement regarding the sale and its due publication, and the process to be observed in the case of the postponement of the sale.

It was declared to be the duty of the collector, or other officer holding the sale, to assure himself that an arrear was due on the lot before it was put up; no statement of payment or tender was to be allowed to stay the sale, nor be admitted as an objection to it by a court of justice, unless it were shown that it had been duly made, and in sufficient time, to the proper revenue authorities. Before knocking down a lot, the collector was to ascertain that the bidder had the means of making the prescribed deposit, that the bidder was not the defaulter or any person acting on his behalf, nor an officer of the collector's establishment, nor a person acting on his behalf, and that the person named as the purchaser was the real purchaser on his own account and risk. A bidder to whom a lot might be knocked down, who should refuse to complete his purchase, was to be fined in a sum not exceeding 100 rupees, or in default of payment was to be confined in the zillah gaol for a period not exceeding fifteen days. If a collector saw reason to believe that

* The duty of sanctioning sales, having devolved, under Regulation I. of 1820, upon the commissioners of revenue, it was declared by Regulation VII. of 1830, that the previous sanction should not be requisite to authorize a sale, but no sale was to be deemed final until confirmed by the commission or the Sudder Board. All estates in balance were to be advertised for sale one month from the arrear accruing, and be sold in one month after the date of the advertisement. Reg. VII. of 1830.

REGULATION XII.—1824.

Interest on Arrears.

Reg. XII. 1824.

THE preamble declared that many zemindars of Bengal, Behar, and Benares, notwithstanding the advantages which they derive from the permanent settlement, had withholden the public dues until their estates were put up to sale, and that it was consequently expedient to re-enact the penalty of twelve per cent. on all arrears withheld, in addition to the interest accruing at the rate of twelve per cent., and the Regulation enacted accordingly.

REGULATION VII.—1825.

Sale of Houses and Lands for Arrear, and in satisfaction of Decrees.

Reg. VII. 1825.

THIS Regulation was enacted in explanation of the rules regarding the sale of lands, especially those in satisfaction of decrees of court. It declared the competency of the judicial officers, without the intervention of the Revenue department, to sell houses, gardens or small portions of lakheraj land. Certain rules for the notification and conducting of such sales by native commissioners, or other persons employed to conduct the sale, were prescribed; and on complaint of the violation of those rules, the court were to investigate the same by summary inquiry, and might annul the sale.

When land was to be sold of a description requiring that the sale should be conducted by the Revenue department, the court were to transmit a copy of the decree to the Board of Revenue, with a statement of the lands pointed out by the person claiming the benefit of the decree. The Board were to instruct the collector what lands to sell. In the event of any adverse claim being set up to the lands proposed to be sold, the collector was to communicate to the court, who were to enter upon an immediate summary inquiry into the merits of the claim, and to issue their directions on the subject to the collector. It was declared competent to the civil courts to set aside sales made under their orders, if it should appear to them, on the result of a summary inquiry, that any material irregularity had been committed. Summary decisions of the zillah courts on these subjects were declared open to summary appeal to the provincial courts.

PART I.—LAND REVENUE—GENERAL—continued.

(C.)

RULES for the RECOVERY of ARREARS of RENT due to those who pay the REVENUE to GOVERNMENT—and regarding SUMMARY SUITS on that Account.

Regulations.

LIST.

- XVII. 1793.— } Recovery of Arrears of Rent due to Proprietors by dependent Talookdars, Under-XXXV. 1795.— } farmers and Ryots.
VIII. 1794.—For expediting the Proceedings on account of Arrear of Rent.
XXXV. 1795.— }
XL. 1793.— } Improvement of the Rules for Distrain.
VIII. 1796.— }
VII. 1799.— }
III. 1812.— } Further Improvement of the Rules for Distrain.
II. 1805.— }
V. 1812.— } Modification of the Rules for recovery of Arrears of Rent.
II. 1821.— }
XXIV. 1814.—Summary Suits declared cognizable by Registrars of their own authority in certain Cases.
XIX. 1817.—Summary Suits rendered referrible to Collectors for report.
VIII. 1819.— } Liability of the Tenure termed Putnee, to be sold for Arrear due to the
I. 1820.— } Zemindar.
XIV. 1824.—Summary Suits rendered referrible to Collectors for Adjudication.

REGULATION XVII.—1793.

Recovery of Arrears of Rent due to Proprietors by dependent Talookdars, Under Farmers and Ryots.

THE preamble recited, that the Regulations had not defined the nature and extent of the coercion which landholders and farmers of land might legally exercise over their under-farmers, ryots, and dependent talookdars, in order to enforce payments of arrears of rent or revenue; that in consequence, many landlords and farmers availing themselves of the sanction of former usage, had recourse to the most oppressive means for realizing those arrears, and frequently employed the same severities for purposes of extortion; whilst others, from fear of consequences, refrained from compulsion, and were often defrauded of their just dues. To amend these defects in the Regulation, and to enable landholders and farmers to compel payments from defaulters, without being obliged to have recourse to the courts of justice, the following rules were enacted:—

Actual proprietors and farmers, and also their dependent talookdars and other tenants, were authorized to distrain the crops, cattle, and other personal property of their respective defaulting tenants, and to cause them to be sold in discharge of such arrears; but they were not to distrain lands, houses, or other real property, nor any property or money belonging to the Company in the hands of weavers or others employed in the provision of their investment, nor the materials of any weaver or manufacturer, nor the tools of any tradesman or labourer being their tenant. If the defaulter possessed any other property, perty, his cattle and implements employed in husbandry and his seed grain were not to be distrained.

Detailed and particular rules for conducting attachments were given; and it was declared that the attachment of the property of a principal should not exonerate a surety. Power was given to a party whose property should be distrained to cause the attachment to be withdrawn, upon giving security that he would institute a suit to try the justice of the demand before the civil court. A defaulter might also tender the arrear, with the costs incurred, at any time previously to the day of sale, in which case the property attached must be restored. Several rules were laid down to guard against injury, loss, or abuse of the property seized, while in possession of the distrainer; and it was directed that the distraint should, as nearly as possible, be proportionate to the amount of the arrear. Transfers of property by a defaulter, to evade distraint, were declared invalid. Persons resisting distraint were declared liable to imprisonment until the property should be restored or the arrear liquidated. The breaking open of an outer door, and entry to the women's apartments, were forbidden; but outbuildings and the doors of an open house might be entered. When property should have been distrained, application was to be made to the kazee of the pergunnah to have it appraised and sold. The kazee was to name two competent persons to appraise the property, and the sale was to take place under his superintendence and direction. The kazee was also to examine the distrainer's statement of expenses attending the attachment and sale. Landholders and farmers were declared liable to prosecution, if they confined or inflicted punishment upon their defaulting tenants. Whenever it might be necessary to attach the property of persons employed in the provision of the Company's investment, or in the manufacture of salt, notice thereof was to be given to the commercial resident or salt agent. Principals were declared responsible for the acts of their agents in distraining property, except in regard to entering a zenana.

Persons considering themselves aggrieved by the distraint and sale of their property might obtain redress in the civil courts; and it was ordered, that all suits which might be instituted under this Regulation should be heard and determined previously to any other suits.*

REGULATION VIII.—1794.

For expediting the Proceedings on Account of Arrear of Rent.

Reg. VIII. 1794.

By the latter part of this Regulation it was enacted, that in causes concerning rent or revenue, or other matters which had been before cognizable in the courts of Mâl Adawlut, between proprietors of land, or farmers holding immediately of Government and their respective dependent talookdars, and their under-farmers or ryots; or between other persons concerned in the collection or payment of land rents or revenues, either as principals or sureties, a zillah judge might refer to the collector, for his report, any accounts the adjustment of which should be necessary towards the decision of a suit before him; on receipt of the collector's report, the judge was to pass such decision respecting the accounts as might appear to him proper. It was provided, however, that the judge should not refer to the collector any accounts relating to suits in which he or any of his public officers or private servants or the Government might be parties.

REGULATION XXXV.—1795.

Improvement of the Rules of Distraint.

Reg. XXXV. 1795.

THIS Regulation was passed to remedy inconveniences extensively complained of, which had resulted from the operation of some of the provisions of Regulation XVII. of 1793. The Preamble stated as follows:

“Government

* The suits here provided for were regular suits; a more summary process was afterwards provided by Regulation XXXV. 1795.

“ Government not admitting of any delay in the payment of the public revenue receivable from the proprietors and farmers of land, justice required that they should have the means of levying their rents and revenues with equal punctuality, and that the persons by whom they might be payable, whether under-farmers, dependent talookdars, ryots, or others, should be enabled, in like manner, to realize the rents and revenues from which their engagements with the proprietors or farmers are to be made good. Regulation XVII. 1793 was enacted with a view to enable all the above-mentioned descriptions of individuals to enforce payment of arrears of rent or revenue without application to the courts of judicature, as far as the amount might be realizable from the crops and personal property of the defaulter, leaving him to sue in the courts for redress, in the event of any sums being unjustly exacted from him. This was the leading principle of the Regulation; but to prevent so extensive a power being abused on the first delegation of it, provisions were made for obliging the distrainer to withdraw the attachment on property in the event of his demand being contested by the defaulter, and of his giving security to try the justness of it within a specific time in the court of judicature, and to pay interest on the amount with costs in case of its being decreed to be due. These provisions, however, have been found to counteract the object of the Regulation, by the delay often unavoidable in bringing suits to a conclusion, and the opportunity which they afford to defaulters of protracting the discharge of just demands. In large estates, in which extensive tracts of country were under-farmed, the under-farmers often fell in arrear to so considerable an amount, as to render the realizing of the deficiency by the distress of their personal property impracticable. In such cases the proprietors or farmers were obliged to sue the defaulter or his surety in the Dewanny Adawlut for the recovery of the arrears; but as the persons to whom the arrears might be due were not allowed any suspension in their payments to the public whilst the suit was depending, the lands of proprietors were liable to be sold, and the persons and property of farmers were subject to attachment, for deficiencies arising not from their own misconduct or mismanagement, but from breach of engagements on the part of their under-farmers. To obviate the above inconveniences the following rules were enacted.”

Those Rules of Regulation XVII. 1793, which required distrainers to withdraw the attachment of distrained property on the person from whom the arrear was demanded denying the justice of the demand, and giving security to bring that question to issue in the civil court within a certain time, were rescinded.

Some alterations relating to the detail of the sale of distrained property were introduced.

All native commissioners, appointed under Regulation XL. 1793, were empowered to sell distrained property, under the rules to be observed by kazees in that respect.

The Regulation further provided, that in cases where an arrear exceeding 500 rupees should be due, the proprietor or farmer might demand the payment of such arrear within three days, by a notice to be served upon the defaulter; and in case of his failing to comply therewith, to present a petition to the judge of the civil court, accompanied by a copy of the demand, and praying the judge to commit the defaulter to custody, until he should pay the arrear. The judge was thereupon to summon the defaulter to appear immediately before him, either in person or by an authorized vakeel of the court, and to require him to deliver in an answer to the demand, with any papers or vouchers he might have to exhibit against the demand. On the appearance of the defaulter, the judge was to peruse the answer and the engagements under which the arrear was demanded, and the vouchers for the payments made under it; and after examination of them, and such other summary investigation as he might deem necessary, if it should appear that the sum demanded was due to the party claiming the arrear, the judge was to commit the defaulter to prison until he should discharge the amount with interest, or until on a regular suit the amount claimed should be decreed not to be due.

If the judge, after summary investigation, found the amount demanded not to be due, he he was to dismiss the case, leaving the complainant to prosecute his claim by a regular suit in the civil court; and might, in certain cases, order payment of compensation to the defendant.

Persons imprisoned under this Regulation might sue the complainant against them in the civil court for damages; and so likewise persons who should, to avoid imprisonment, pay the demand, though not considering it due, might sue the complainant for the excess over-paid, and might recover damages and costs.*

REGULATION VII.—1799.

Further Improvement of the Rules for Distrain.

Reg. VII. 1799.

For the preamble to this Regulation, see "Recovery of Arrears of Revenue." It was provided by the first part of this Regulation, that the powers of distraint vested in proprietors by Regulation XVII. 1793, might be delegated to agents, under certain responsibilities attaching to such agent, besides those incurred by the principal. It shortened the time occupied by notices and other steps, in the course of distraint and sale, and authorized the seizure as well of the security's property as the principal's, provided the distress should not be excessive. A commission of one anna in the rupee was granted to kazees and other duly appointed native commissioners, as a compensation for their trouble and expense in conducting sales of distrained property, to be deducted from the proceeds. Heavier penalties were attached to resistance of process of distraint. Outer doors were permitted to be forced in certain cases, and the apartments of the women were allowed to be entered after due notice. Police officers were to attend the attachment and sales on requisition of the distrainers,† and the courts were directed to fine heavily persons who should be found to have preferred vexatious complaints regarding distraint against the persons causing the attachment, or the public officers employed on such occasions. Strict attention was enjoined to the rules prescribed to civil courts, as to hearing and determining all suits instituted under Regulation XVII. 1793, previously to any others, and as to the appropriation of one day in each week, or two or more days if necessary, for the trial of suits regarding the rent of land and the public revenue assessed thereupon, and it was directed that not only the European courts, but also the native commissioners, should carefully observe this rule.

The Regulation proceeded to state that the provisions of Regulation XXXV. 1795, which authorized a summary proceeding before the judge in cases of default of rent due to proprietors exceeding in amount five hundred rupees, had been found in some cases insufficient, inasmuch as the citation required to be sent to the defaulter often caused him to abscond. The limitation of the relief intended to be afforded by those provisions to demands exceeding five hundred rupees had been found to encourage fraudulent and evasive conduct on the part of under-tenants. The present Regulation therefore made the following additions and alterations in the law.

Proprietors who could not realize the arrear due to them by the process of distraint were allowed to present petitions for the arrest of defaulting tenants to the judge, or if he apprehended the immediate departure of the defaulter, then to the native commissioner. The commissioner was in such case to cause the party to be arrested; and if the demand was not immediately discharged, to send him within twenty-four hours to the zillah judge. The judge, on the party coming before him, was either himself to make summary inquiry

Reg. VIII. 1796.

* It was directed by Regulation VIII. 1796, that the vakeels who might be employed in the summary suits provided by this Regulation, should on the termination of the suit be entitled to a per-centage on the amount litigated equal to one-fourth of the fees in regular suits.

Reg. III. 1812.

† It was explained by section viii. Regulation III. 1812, that police darogahs were not to afford aid in such cases, unless it were deposed on oath before them that actual resistance had been made to the distrainer in the exercise of the powers legally vested in him.

into the justness of the demand, by examining the vouchers and accounts of the party, or he might refer the case to the collector of the district for adjustment and report. If, on the result of the judge's inquiry or the collector's report, any considerable portion of the demand appeared due, the defaulter was to be committed to prison until it should be paid. It was declared, that this Regulation was not meant to define or limit the actual rights of any description of landholders or tenants, which could be properly ascertained and determined by judicial investigation only; but merely to point out in what manner defaulting tenants might be proceeded against in the event of their not paying the rents due from them, leaving them to recover their own rights, if infringed, in the established courts of justice.

It was further declared, that the courts of justice would determine the rights of every description of landholder and tenant when regularly brought before them, whether the same were ascertainable by written engagements or defined by the laws and Regulations, or dependent upon general or local usage, which might be proved to have existed from time immemorial.

It was further declared, that the summary judgments which the zillah courts were authorized to pass under Section xiv. of this Regulation, should not be subject to appeal; because any person considering himself aggrieved thereby could have his remedy by a regular suit.

By Regulation II. 1805, it was declared competent to judges to refer summary suits regarding arrear of rent or possession of lands, &c. to their registrars, provided the cause of action were such as would be referrible to them in a regular suit. It was further declared, that summary cognizance was not intended to be given of demands which had been due more than twelve months before such summary proceeding should be instituted. Reg. II. 1805.

REGULATION V.—1812.

Modification of the Rules for Recovery of Arrears of Rent.

THE first part of this enactment related to the effect of the engagements between proprietors and their tenants, for which see "Assessment of Revenue." Reg. V. 1812.

By the second part were introduced the following modifications of the rules regarding distraint and sale for the recovery of arrears of rent:—No distress was to be made until the landholder had served upon the defaulter a written demand of the amount, accompanied by a statement of the total assessment, the amount (if any) received in part, and the balance undischarged. Cattle and implements used in agriculture were expressly exempted from attachment under any circumstances.

Some modification of the rules regarding the suspension of distrains, on security being given by the defaulters to institute a suit within fifteen days for the trial of the justice of the demand, were introduced in this Regulation, but they chiefly related to the detail of that process.

It was enacted that all summary suits instituted under this Regulation should be tried as summary suits under the provisions of Regulation VII. 1809; and that all such cases should be immediately referred by the zillah judge to the collector of the district for his report.*

REGULATION

* By Regulation II. 1821, it was declared that the provision for summary suits was not intended to supersede the institution of regular suits; and judges were enjoined to encourage regular suits for arrears of rent whenever they would lead to a more satisfactory termination of the points at issue. Zillah judges were authorized to refer to their registrars suits for rent or possession for whatever amount; and judges and registrars were empowered to hold their proceedings in such summary suits in any part of the zillah in which the cause of action may have arisen; but the attendance of the pleaders at a distance from the court was not to be required. Reg. II. 1821.

IV. 772 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.
 APPENDIX,
 No. 6.
 continued.

Revenue Affairs. Summary Suits declared cognizable by Registers of their own Authority, in certain Cases.
 Reg. XXIV. 1814. By this Regulation the Governor-general in Council was declared competent to invest any registrar who might be stationed under the provisions of the Regulation at a place not being the station of the zillah or city court, with original jurisdiction within local defined limits, in the trial of all cases in which a summary suit was allowed; and the registrar was declared, under such circumstances, to possess the same authority, as if the cases had been referred to him by the zillah or city judge.

Summary Suits rendered referrible to Collectors for Report.
 Reg. XIX. 1817. By this Regulation it was declared, that judges might at their discretion either refer to the collectors, or themselves try summary suits instituted under Regulation V. 1812. Registrars desirous of making reference in summary suits pending before them might do so, with the previous consent and concurrence of the judge, who would transmit the papers to the collector, and forward to the registrar the collector's report as soon as received.
 Provision was made for the service of process and the arrest of defaulting tenants in other zillahs than that in which the rent should be claimed; the proceeding in such case was to be through the court of the zillah in which the defaulter might have taken refuge, and for admitting defaulters and their sureties to bail pending a summary inquiry.

Liability of the Tenure termed Putnee to be sold for Arrear due to the Zemindar.
 Reg. VIII. 1819. THIS Regulation, the former part of which will be found abstracted under the head "Assessment of the Revenue," p. 748, provided for the recognition of certain tenures granted by zemindars to a particular description of talookdars, and by such talookdars to under-talookdars of the same description. A further object of this enactment was to fix the process by which the said tenures were to be brought to sale for arrear due to the zemindar or proprietor, and the form and manner of conducting such sale. And whereas the estates of zemindars under engagements with Government were liable to be brought to sale at any time for an arrear in the revenue, payable by monthly kists to Government, it had seemed just to allow any zemindar who might have granted tenures, with a stipulation of the right to sell for arrears, the opportunity of availing himself of this means of realizing his dues in the middle of the year, instead of only at the end of the Bengal year, as heretofore allowed by the Regulations in force. It had further been deemed equitable to extend this rule to all cases in which a right of sale might have been reserved in the engagements interchanged between the proprietor and his lessee.

The preamble concluded by stating, that it had become necessary to explain and modify some of the existing rules for the collection generally of rent in arrear, with a view to render them more efficacious, as well as to provide against certain means of evasion resorted to by defaulting tenants.

The enactments of this portion of the Regulation accordingly declared the zemindar to have a right to bring to sale for arrears, either at the end or in the middle of the revenue year, according to certain rules prescribed, the under-tenures created by him, denominated putnee talooks, free from all encumbrances or engagements formed by those under-tenants with subordinate holders, except so far as any act or engagement made by himself might have sanctioned them. The principle on which this rule rested was, that the right of a zemindar in the under-tenure which he had created being indefeasible, no transfers, mortgages, gages, or other assignments, except such as he had registered, or as had been made under express authority obtained from him, could interfere with that right; but no purchaser of a talook or other saleable tenure, intermediate between the zemindar and the actual cultivators, should be entitled to eject a koodkhast ryot (resident hereditary cultivator), nor to cancel bonâ fide engagements with such tenants made by the late incumbent or his representative, unless it should be proved in a suit in a court of justice, that a higher rate would have been demandable from the cultivator at the time the engagements were contracted. The sales of under-tenures by zemindars were to be made in the zillah court, and the responsibility for conforming to the prescribed rules was to be with the zemindars. With a view to guard the rights of under-talookdars, in the event of the sale of the superior interest for arrear, it was declared competent to the inferior holder to stay a sale, by paying in the amount of arrear, such deposit to be considered a loan to the superior holder, re-payable with interest.

The Regulation concluded with explanatory rules relative to the process of attachment for distraint. It had been supposed by many defaulters, that attachment could not issue until the written notice of demand had been duly served, in consequence of which many persons had evaded the service of that process upon them. It was now declared that such service of process was not necessary to precede and legalize attachment, nor was it necessary before instituting a summary suit for arrear, or obtaining the issue of process of arrest against the defaulter. It was further declared, that after the institution of such a suit, a zemindar or other superior holder might send, of his own authority, an officer to attach and collect the rents of the actual cultivators; and further, that when an arrear might have been adjudged due to a zemindar by the decree of a court in such summary inquiry, he "should be at liberty to cancel any lease, farm, or other limited interest, intermediate between himself and the actual cultivator, on account of which the rent might have been claimed." This rule, however, was not to extend to koodkhast ryots, or other resident cultivators of the soil, who might be proceeded against at any time during the year by distraint, or by process of arrest and summary suit under the existing rules. Proprietors, talookdars, or farmers might institute a summary suit against any koodkhast ryot, or other resident cultivator, for any arrear of rent that might be due at the end of the year; and if an arrear should be adjudged by the court to be due, and the amount were not immediately paid, the plaintiff might be authorized by the court to make such new arrangement as he might judge proper for the future management of the lands in question.

By Regulation I. 1820, it was explained that all sales of putnee talooks were to be publicly made in the zillah court; and it was provided that proprietors might apply to the registrar of the zillah court, who would conduct the sale under the Regulations. Reg. I. 1820.

REGULATION XIV.—1824.

Summary Suits rendered referrible to Collectors for Adjudication.

THE preamble to this Regulation stated that the provisions then in force, which empowered the zillah judges to refer summary suits to the collectors for report, had been found insufficient to expedite the trial and adjudication of such suits. This Regulation therefore enacted, that in future the reference from the judge to the collector should be to investigate and decide the suits so referred to them. In the trial of such suits the collector was to proceed in the same manner as the civil court would have done, and the decision which he might pass was to be notified as soon as practicable, under the collector's official seal and signature, to the judge of the court from which the suit might have been referred. The collector's decision was to be executed by the judge, as far as was consistent with the Regulations under the usual process of the civil court. Collectors might hear and determine such suits in any part of the district in which they might happen to be, provided the proceedings were held in the open cutcherry, and in the presence of the parties or their vakeels. Parties dissatisfied with the collector's judgments might prefer a regular suit in the civil court; and in such case, the proceedings held on the summary inquiry were to be filed on the record of the regular suit. Reg. XIV. 1824.

PART I.—LAND REVENUE—GENERAL—continued.

(D.)

RULES regarding the REGISTRY and DIVISION of ESTATES, and of their SUBDIVISIONS.

Regulations.

LIST.

- | | | | |
|---------|--|--|--|
| XI. | 1793.— | } | Declaration of the divisibility of Zemindaries. |
| X. | 1800.— | | |
| XXI. | 1793.— | Rules for the Preservation of the Records of the Permanent Settlement. | |
| XXV. | 1793.— | } | Rules for the Apportionment of the Assessed Revenue on the subdivided Portions of Estates. |
| XV. | 1797.— | | |
| XI. | 1811.— | | |
| XLVIII. | 1793.— | } | Rules for the formation of Quinquennial Registers of Estates, and of their Transfers and Subdivisions. |
| VIII. | 1800.— | | |
| VIII. | 1800.—Rules for the Registry of Divisions and Alienations. | | |
| I. | 1801.—Apportionment of the Revenue on divided Estates. | | |
| VI. | 1807.—Divisibility of Estates limited to Portions of a certain Value. | | |
| V. | 1810.—Facilitating the Division of Estates. | | |
| XVIII. | 1812.—Declaration of the effect of Leases on the Subdivision of Estates. | | |
| XIX. | 1814.—Consolidated and amended Rules for the Division of Estates. | | |

REGULATION XI.—1793.

Declaration of the Divisibility of Zemindaries.

Reg. XI. 1793.

THE preamble to this Regulation declared, that a custom, originating in considerations of financial convenience, had been established under the native administration, that the most extensive zemindaries should not be liable to division, but should descend entire to the eldest son or other next heir; that this custom was repugnant both to Hindoo and Mahomedan law, which annexed to primogeniture no exclusive right of succession to landed property, and had a tendency to prevent the general improvement of the country, inasmuch as the proprietors of large estates were unable to bring into cultivation the extensive tracts of waste land comprised within their limits. Rules having been now made for apportioning the revenue on subdivided estates, which rendered the practice above stated no longer necessary on financial grounds, the present Regulation enacted, that whenever an actual proprietor should die, without declaring how his landed property should devolve after his decease, if he should have left more than one heir entitled to share in the landed property, such heirs should succeed to the shares to which they might be severally entitled. If the joint successors should prefer holding the property as a joint undivided estate, they might do so; but each or all might at any time claim the separation each of his own individual share. In cases of subdivision, a distribution of the total assessment was to be made on the subdivided portions, in conformity with the Regulations in that behalf. It was, however, declared competent to proprietors to leave leave their estates by will, or otherwise, to single successors, to the exclusion of other heirs, provided such arrangements were not inconsistent with the laws or the parties respectively.*

REGULATION XXI.—1793.

Rules for the Preservation of the Records of the Permanent Settlement.

THE decennial settlement of the revenue (formed in 1789 and 1790) having been declared permanent, it became essential to the security, as well of the public revenue as of the rights of individuals, that the accounts and papers regarding that settlement, the allotment of the revenue on shares of estates which might be divided, as well as other documents relating to the public demand upon the land, should be carefully preserved; this Regulation therefore provided for the establishment of an office in each zillah for keeping all such records and papers, to be under the superintendence of two natives, who should be denominated "Keepers of the Revenue Records in the Native Languages," and who should be appointed and removed by the Governor-general in Council.

Reg. XXI. 1793.

The Regulation contained special rules as to the details of preserving and registering the several documents referred to.

REGULATION XXV.—1793.

Rules for Apportionment of the Assessed Revenue on the subdivided Portions of Estates.

PROVISION having been made by the Regulations for empowering zemindars to transfer by sale, gift, or otherwise their proprietary rights in the whole or any portions of their respective estates (Regulation I. 1793), and estates having also been declared partible on the death of proprietors (Regulation XI. 1793), the present Regulation was framed to prescribe the principles on which such subdivisions should be made, and the assessment equitably allotted on the several portions so subdivided; it was deemed expedient at the same time, to provide for the union of two or more estates, originally belonging to the same zemindary, into one estate. The Regulation accordingly enacted, that the division of zemindari paying revenue immediately to Government should be effected by the collector, on the application in writing of the parties desiring the division, the proceeding of the collector being first sanctioned by the Board of Revenue. When the division of an estate might take place under a decree, the court making the decree might command the collector to make the subdivision. If the right of a party to claim a division were denied by the other proprietors, the collector was not to make the division until the question of right should have been decided by the civil court.

Reg. XXV. 1793.

Rescinded by
Reg. XIX. 1814.

The collector was authorized, on the application of parties, and with the sanction of the Board of Revenue, to unite several estates into one, and to enter them accordingly in the revenue register.

In distributing the amount of the total assessment on the subdivision of an estate, the collector was enjoined to advert especially to the relative advantages which the respective portions might possess, in regard to soil, contiguity of markets, facility of carriage, and also in regard to the means of improving its resources; and he was to apportion the revenue on due consideration of all these circumstances. The Regulation directed how reservoirs, watercourses, and other things in which a common interest might exist, should be considered. The investigations preliminary to settling divisions were to be made by creditable ameens duly appointed and sworn, whose powers and course of proceeding were laid down in detail in this Regulation. The collector's reports, founded on the proceedings of the ameens, were to be submitted for the final sanction of the Board of Revenue.

If

The operation of this Regulation was suspended as to the Jungle Mehals by Regulation X. of 1800.

Reg. X. of 1800.

If all the parties having interests in an estate should agree together as to the particulars of the subdivision, or if all consented to submit to arbitration thereupon, the collector might proceed upon the result of such agreement, or on the award of the arbitrators chosen.

Power was reserved to the Government, on complaint made to them within three* years after any subdivision, and on proof of inequality of assessment caused by fraud or error at the time of the division, to alter the assessment so as to make it just and equitable. The interests of disqualified proprietors on the division of estates were to be duly protected by the Court of Wards; absent sharers might be represented by vakeels.†

REGULATION XLVIII.—1793.

Rules for the formation of Quinquennial Registers of Estates, and of their Transfers and Subdivisions.

Reg XLVIII.1793. THE preamble to this Regulation declared that each estate on which the amount of the public revenue had not been fixed in perpetuity, was liable, in progress of time, to be divided and formed into two or more estates, either in consequence of one or more of the proprietors requiring the separate possession of their respective shares, or from a part of the estate being transferred by gift, sale, or other private act of the proprietors, or by public sale; that the security of the public revenue depending upon the allotment of the due proportion on each separated part of an estate so divided, being made agreeably to the rules of Regulation I. 1793, it was necessary, in order to enable the officers of Government to make such apportionment, and to afford to Government the means of tracing every deviation from those rules, that there should be kept a register of all estates paying revenue to Government, exhibiting the annual revenue charged upon each estate, the names of the proprietors, the transfers of estates or portions of estates, and the allotment of the public revenue upon such portions; also the union of estates which might have originally formed parts of the same zemindary, talook, or chowdry. It was also declared requisite, both for financial purposes and for the information of the courts of judicature, that there should be a record of the transfer of all districts or lands, from the jurisdiction of one zillah to that of another. The Regulation accordingly directed, that every five years the collectors of the land revenue should prepare registers of all the estates in their respective zillahs, of whatever denomination or description, the proprietors of which paid the public revenue assessed upon their estates immediately to Government. The term "estate" was defined‡ to mean "any land subject to the payment of public revenue, for the discharge of which a separate engagement had been entered into with the Government." Detailed rules were laid down regarding the particulars which were to be recorded in the registers, and the forms according to which the entries were to be made. The first register to be prepared was to exhibit the state of all malguzary lands in the native year 1202,§ being five years after the formation of the decennial settlement (since declared permanent.) As soon as that should have been completed, a register was to be prepared, showing the state of the lands at the permanent settlement. In 1207, and at the end of every five years afterwards, a new register was to be prepared. The books into which the quinquennial register was to be entered, (of which there were to be two, one in English and one in the language of the country, transcribed by the native

Reg. XI. 1811.
Reg. XV. 1797.

* This period was exceed ten years by Regulation XI. 1811.

† Regulation XV. 1797 provided for the payment of fees to the collector for the use of Government on the registry of divisions or re-union, or transfers of estates, at the rate of one-quarter per cent. on land paying revenue, and two and-a-half per cent. on lands exempt from revenue; the rate on the first kind to be calculated on the amount of the revenue payable to Government, and of the other on the amount of rents receivable by the proprietor.

‡ By section xiii. Regulation VIII. of 1800, which prescribes certain alterations in the forms of the permanent register, this definition was extended to include all lands separately assessed with the public revenue, although the separate engagement should have been executed for it to the Government, as in the case where lands might be under attachment, and administered by an officer of Government, or by a manager for the benefit of a disqualified proprietor.

§ A. D. 1795-6.

native record-keeper) were to be paged, and each leaf to be signed by the judge of the civil court of the zillah, and on the last leaf of the book the judge was to specify in his own hand-writing the number of pages contained in it.

A separate book was to be kept, to be in like manner authenticated by the zillah judge, in which all transfers, divisions, &c. were to be entered in the intervals between the formation of the quinquennial registers, and at the end of each five years the new register was to be formed from the preceding register compared with the mutation register.

Duplicates of each quinquennial register were to be sent to the Board of Revenue to be there preserved: the original copy remaining in the collector's office.

REGULATION VIII.—1800.

Registers of Divisions and Alienations—Pergunnah Registers.

THIS Regulation was enacted in modification and extension of the rules for the preparation of quinquennial registers of lands paying revenue to Government, and of the registers of exempted lands. The quinquennial registers were required to specify the names of all the villages of each estate, and that such registers were to be in three languages, and to be copied for the use of the courts of judicature and the Board of Revenue, a detail which was found to involve immense labour. The present Regulation therefore enacted, that the collectors should prepare registers exhibiting the pergunnahs only; detailed directions regarding the entries in the pergunnah register were given in this Regulation. In addition to the pergunnah quinquennial register, intermediate mutation registers were likewise to be prepared for entering all charges, divisions, re-unions, or transfers of property. At the end of every five years a new pergunnah register was to be prepared from the old, compared with and corrected by the mutation register for that period. The office of canoongoe having been abolished, the records of the sudder or head canoongoe were to be made over and deposited in the Board of Revenue, and those of the mofussil or district canoongoes were to be made over to the collectors.

Reg. VIII. 1800.

REGULATION I.—1801.

Apportionment of the Revenue on divided Estates.

THE latter portion of this Regulation contained rules relative to the apportionment of the public revenue on divisions of estates. The principle declared in Regulation I. 1793, was, that the assessment of the divided portion should bear the same proportion to the whole assessment, as the "actual produce" of the divided portion bore to the "actual produce" of the whole estate. The present Regulation defined the term, "actual produce of an estate," to mean the net amount receivable by the proprietor, after deducting from the gross produce the actual expense of collection, and other usual charges of management, inclusive of poolbundy, or the expense of embankments, and similar incidental expenses payable by the proprietor from his gross receipts; but exclusive of his malikanah or proprietary income, and all other personal appropriations of the gross produce of his estate. In fixing the revenue on a subdivision, if the collector should have reason to think the putwarries' accounts or those furnished by proprietors to be false, or if he should have obtained from creditable sources, either while holding an estate under attachment by virtue of the power given to him for that purpose in Regulation VII. 1799, or otherwise, three years' accounts of the produce of the land, which he should deem more worthy of credit, he might with the sanction of the Board of Revenue make the assessment on such accounts, and set aside those of the putwarries or proprietors.

Reg. I. 1801.

"Produce of an Estate" defined.

It was enacted that no sale of a portion of an undivided estate to be held in coparcenary, should be made on account of arrears of revenue without the special sanction of Government.

Several rules were enacted for facilitating and expediting the process of the allotment of of the revenue on divided portions, especially where the whole lands were so divided and all the parties consented to the allotments, so that they might the more speedily be put into the possession of their respective shares: but it was declared that all new allotments of the assessment were to be subject to the final confirmation of the Board of Revenue, and in the event of any reduction of the fixed assessment, the previous sanction of Government was to be obtained. Persons causing wilful and vexatious delay in the partition of estates were to be liable to fine.

REGULATION VI.—1807.

Division of Estates limited to Portions of a certain Value.

Reg. VI. 1807.
(Rescinded by
Reg. V. 1819.)

CONSIDERABLE loss and inconvenience having been experienced in the collection of the public revenue from the too minute subdivision of landed property, the Regulation enacted that no estate, the assessment of which should be less than 1,000 rupees, should be liable to be divided, and that no division of land should be made unless each portion proposed to be divided should be liable to be assessed with a jumma of not less than 500 sicca rupees.

REGULATION V.—1810.

Facilitating the Division of Estates.

Reg. V. 1810.
(Rescinded by
Reg. XIX. 1814.)

THIS Regulation stated that the existing rules for the division of landed property paying revenue to Government were in many respects defective, inasmuch as they did not sufficiently provide against the artificial delays and impediments which were frequently thrown in the way of the process of division by one or more of the parties concerned, or (as often happened) by the officer employed in conducting the details of that process, and that these rules did not effectually secure Government from the loss resulting from fraudulent and collusive allotments of the public revenue on the shares of estates when divided. There was, moreover, reason to believe that the restriction which had been laid on the partition of small estates by Regulation VI. 1807, had been and still was the cause of considerable injury to numbers of individual sharers in such estates, inducing a sacrifice of private rights, which the degree of public inconvenience, arising from the minute division of landed property, did not appear to be of sufficient magnitude to justify or require. With a view, therefore, to remedy these defects; to expedite the division of landed property paying revenue to Government (when properly authorized, with due regard to the permanent security of the public revenue), whatever might be its amount, and to obviate the injury to which individual sharers were liable, in the case of a joint estate being brought to sale for balances which might have arisen from the default of their coparceners during the interval while the process of division was pending, the present Regulation enacted, that on application being made to a collector for the subdivision of an estate, or any part thereof, he was to make public notification that he would proceed in such division in fifteen days, unless objection were made to the right of the party claiming the division. The allowance to the ameen deputed to make the division of lands was altered from a personal monthly allowance to a per-centage on the assessment, liable to be forfeited or diminished if the partition made by him should not be confirmed by the Board of Revenue, or if he did not perform his duty within a prescribed time, in no case exceeding three months. It was directed that a register should be kept in English of all confirmed divisions; and it was further enacted, that in the event of any distinct estate being sold for arrear of revenue within three years from the date of the confirmation of the division, it was to be the duty of the collector to endeavour to ascertain, by every means in his power, whether the arrear had accrued in consequence of any fraudulent or erroneous allotment of the assessment, and in such case to make a full report to the Board, who would determine as to the necessity of a new allotment of the assessment being made on the portions respectively. In the event of an estate falling in arrear while the division into portions was under preparation, it was declared competent to to any shareholders to pay the arrear due on their own proportion of the estate, and in such case, if a sale eventually became necessary, those portions only were to be sold which appertained to the defaulting coparceners.

REGULATION XVIII.—1812.

Effect of Leases on the Subdivision of Estates.

THIS Regulation explained the intention of Regulation V. 1812.* to be, that all proprietors having a permanent interest in their estates might grant leases even to perpetuity, and that persons having restricted interest might grant them to the full extent of the duration of those interests; and it further enacted, that in the event of a division of an estate, or of the transfer of the whole or part under any circumstances, such leases should remain in full force; but they were not to be taken into consideration in affixing the portion of the public revenue on a division, but such apportionment was to be made on the principles prescribed in the Regulations in that respect.

Reg. XVIII. 1812.

REGULATION XIX.—1814.

Consolidated and amended Rules for the Division of Estates.

THE object of this Regulation was to consolidate with amendments and improvements the several Regulations regarding the partition of estates paying revenue to Government,† and it enacted as follows :

Reg. XIX. 1814.

Divisions of estates were to be made by the collectors of the land revenues; joint estates might be divided on the application of the shareholders, and on their defraying the expenses attending the process. On receipt of an application, the collector was to publish an advertisement, notifying his intention to proceed to the division in fifteen days, unless any person having an interest in the estate should deny the title of any claimant to a division, in which case such division was not to be proceeded in, until the question of right should have been decided by a court of justice. Whenever a court of justice might adjudge to any one a litigated right in a portion of an estate, they were to decree that the whole expense of the portioning and giving possession, and assessing the revenue on the portion, should be borne by the party who had withheld the right decreed, unless special reasons should exist for directing otherwise. Collectors might re-unite separated portions which had previously formed entire estates.

The new subdivisions which were to form new estates were to be as compact as possible. When a division of an estate was to be effected, an ameen was to be appointed by the collector to prepare the detail, who was to receive a commission, graduated according to the value of the estate. Such commission might be stopped by the Board of Revenue, in the event of the ameen's not discharging his duty satisfactorily. It was to be the duty of the ameen to survey the different parts of the estate in person, that he might be enabled to select the lands which should form each subdivided estate. Proprietors were required to furnish the ameens with all accounts and information necessary to the due discharge of their duty. When an ameen should have completed a division, he was to submit his detailed report to the collector, who, after having examined the documents, and received any remarks that should be offered by the sharers or their vakeels, was to draw out a paper or petition, which he was to transmit to the Board of Revenue, furnishing the sharers also with a copy of it. If all the sharers should sign a deed of consent to the partition statement, or if none should object within fifteen days from the presentation of the paper to them, the collector was to put the several parties into possession; but the allotment of the assessment was not to be deemed conclusive, until it had been sanctioned by the Board of Revenue. If any of the parties objected to the

* See Head (A.) page 762.

† Reg. XV. 1793, Reg. I. 1801, and parts of Reg. V. 1810.

the partition statements, such objections were to be submitted to the Board of Revenue; and the parties were not to be put in possession until they were determined upon. The decision of the Board of Revenue on the division statement was declared to be final, and they were authorized to fine persons making ungrounded or litigious objections to the collector's division statement; and also to fine persons withholding required accounts or information. It was declared competent to parties to make the divisions and allotments by consent among themselves, or by reference to arbitrators of their own choosing. The accounts of divisions so made were to be submitted to the ameens for their examination and approval; and for such service, the ameens were to receive one-half of the remuneration to which they would have been entitled had they made the division themselves. When an estate should have been divided into precisely equal shares, the several parties were to draw lots for the portions, unless they should agree among themselves on the shares they would respectively take. The Governor-general in Council reserved to himself the right of rectifying errors in the assessment, whether fraudulent or otherwise, if established within ten years after the allotment of it had been made on the divided shares; the interests of disqualified landholders were to be protected by the Court of Wards, and of minors by their guardians; until the division should be finally settled, the whole estate was to remain subject to the payment of the assessment. A register was to be kept in a prescribed form of all confirmed partitions. If an arrear should become due from an estate while under the process of division, any shareholder was declared at liberty to tender to the collector the proportion of the arrear due upon his share, and thereby exempt it from sale, while the remainder would be transferred by auction to a new purchaser.

PART I.—LAND REVENUE—GENERAL—continued.

(E.)

RULES relative to the RIGHT of holding LANDS free from, or at a low RATE of ASSESSMENT; and to other ALIENATIONS of the REVENUE of GOVERNMENT; and regarding MONEY PENSIONS.

Regulations.

LIST.

- | | | |
|---|--------|--|
| XIX. | 1793.— | } Investigation of Title to hold Lands exempted from Payment of Revenue on Grants not Royal. |
| LVIII. | 1795.— | |
| XXIV. | 1793.— | } Money Pensions by Sunnud or Patent. |
| XXII. | 1806.— | |
| XXXVII. 1793.—Investigation of Titles to hold Lands exempted from Payment of Revenue on Royal Grants. | | |
| XLIII. 1793.—Grants of Land in Jaghire to invalid Officers and Soldiers of the Company's Native Army. | | |
| LVI. 1795.—Extension of the Period during which Heirs of invalid Military Jaghirdars were to hold their Lands free from Assessment. | | |
| I. 1804.—Final Assessment of Military Jaghire Tenures. | | |
| XI. 1808.—Rent payable by the Heirs of invalid Jaghirdars. | | |
| XIX. 1810.—Administration of Endowments for religious and charitable Purposes to be under Control of the Revenue Authorities. | | |

II. 1811.—

- II. 1811.— } Abolition of the System of granting Lands to invalid Soldiers.
XII. 1814.— }
XI. 1813.— For the Prevention of Abuse in drawing Money Pensions.
II. 1819.— } Improved Rules regarding Lands held exempt from Public Revenue.
XIV. 1825.— }
IX. 1825.— Resumption of Lakhiraj Tenures to be adjudged by the Revenue Authorities.
XIV. 1825.— Of the Authorities competent to exempt Lands from Payment of Revenue.
III. 1828.— } Appointment of Special Commissioners to decide Appeals regarding Resump-
IV. 1829.— } tion of Lakhiraj Lands.

REGULATION XIX.—1793.*

Investigation of Title to hold Lands exempted from payment of Revenue on Grants not Royal.

THE Preamble began by asserting that, according to the ancient law of the country, the ruling power had always been entitled to a certain portion of the produce of every begah of land (demandable in money or kind, according to local custom), unless it transferred its right to the whole or a portion of such produce for a term or in perpetuity. It was stated to be a necessary consequence of this law, that if a zemindar made a grant of any part of his lands, to be held exempt from the payment of revenue, such grant must be void, because it was an alienation of the dues of Government without their sanction, and the admission of such grants would lead to the gradual diminution of the Government Revenue.

Reg. XIX. 1793.
Grants not Badshahi.

The preamble then proceed to state, that previously to the Company's accession to the Dewanny, several such grants had nevertheless been made, not only by the zemindars, but by the officers of Government appointed to the temporary superintendence of the collection of the revenue, under the pretext that the produce of the lands was to be applied to religious or charitable uses; that under this pretext, however, the real object was the personal advantage of the grantee, or in some cases of the grantor himself; that since the accession of the British Government to the Dewanny, they had at various times declared all alienations made subsequently to their accession, without their sanction, to be illegal and void; but they had adopted it as a principle, that grants anterior to the date of the Dewanny should be considered valid, to the extent of the intentions of the grantor, provided the grantees had obtained possession of what had been so granted to them. This indulgent principle had led to an abuse of considerable extent on the part of zemindars, farmers, and public officers in charge of the collections of revenue, who had made extensive grants, in many instances ante-dating them, as if issued before the Company's accession to the Dewanny, and in others, merely leaving the grantees to retain possession as they could. These abuses had been rendered practicable, in consequence of no complete register of exempted lands having been formed. The preamble proceeded to declare that it was incumbent on the Government to recover the public dues, thus alienated in opposition to the ancient and existing laws of the country, as well as to resume the revenues of all lands the grants of which should expire; with this view it had been made a rule at the time of forming the decennial settlement, that all exempted lands, whether duly or unduly so exempted, should be excluded from the assets on which that assessment was to be fixed; it was thus rendered incompetent to proprietors to receive the revenues of such lands, and the Government had reserved to itself the power of assessing such as might

* This Regulation re-enacts in the prescribed form the rules respecting lands exempted from payment of revenue, which had been promulgated by the Government under date the 1st December 1790.

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued.
Revenue Affairs.

782 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

might be deemed liable to the payment of revenue, on their being proved to be held under illegal or invalid titles. It was declared to be equally the desire of Government, that on the one hand, lands illegally exempted should be duly assessed with the public revenue, and on the other, that persons holding valid grants should be secured in their possession and enjoyment. With these views, and to obviate injustice or extortion in the inquiry into the titles of persons holding exempted lands, it had been resolved that the claims of the public on such lands should be tried in the courts of judicature only, provided the holders should have first registered their grants under the provisions of this Regulation.

The following rules were enacted for the guidance of the courts of judicature in this inquiry.

Of Grants anterior
to the Dewanny.

1st. Grants of land to be held exempt from the payment of revenue, which had been made, and of which the grantee had obtained bonâ fide possession before the 12th August 1765, and which had not been subsequently rendered subject to the payment of revenue, were declared valid.

2d. If any lands so exempted had been subsequently subjected to the payment of revenue by any officer of the Government, and if the court had doubts of the competency of the officer so to assess them, they were to refer on that point for the decision of the Government, which was to be conclusive thereupon. If the grant in question, however, were either by its express terms or by the usage of the country a life-grant only, the holder could not claim the benefit of exemption, except in cases of life-grants on which one or more successions had taken place previously to the date of the Dewanny, in which cases the Government reserved the right of determining whether such lands should or should not be assessed. Grants being by their terms or by usage only life-grants, were not to descend to the heirs of the actual holders.

Grants subsequent to the Dewanny.

All exemptions from the payment of revenue made after the 12th August 1765, and before the 1st of December 1790,* not sanctioned by the Government, or by some of its officers duly empowered, were declared invalid. Questions of doubt as to the authority of public officers to exempt were to be referred to the Governor-general in Council. The exemptions of land, the annual produce of which did not exceed 100 rupees authorized by the chiefs of the late Provincial Councils, were to be deemed valid, as well as all grants not exceeding ten begahs, granted before the Bengal year 1178,† the produce of which was bonâ fide appropriated as an endowment for temples, or to the maintenance of Brahmins or other religious or charitable purposes.

Several rules follow for determining the amount of revenue which should be assessed upon lands, resumed according to the particular circumstances and times of the previous exemption.

All grants exempting lands from the payment of revenue made subsequently to the 1st December 1790, by any other authority than that of the Governor-general in Council, were declared null and void, and the revenue thereof was declared to belong to Government; and no length of possession was to be in future considered as giving validity to any such grant.

Grants made subsequently to the 1st December 1790, whether more or less than 100 begahs, were declared null, and proprietors were to be at liberty to resume all such lands, without any increase to their assessment on that account.

The next rule referred to the trial of the validity of titles to exemption from revenue before the courts of Adawlut. The duty of prosecution was declared to belong to the collector, with the previous sanction of the Board of Revenue and the collector was to be rewarded by a commission‡ of twenty-five per cent. on the amount of the revenue which

* The date of the Rules incorporated into this Regulation.

† A.D. 1771-2.

‡ This commission is extended by Regulation LVIII. 1795, to lands resumed on account of non-registration on the report of the collector.

which might be assessed on the land, in consequence of its having been adjudged liable to payment of revenue, under a decree obtained by him. The collectors were authorized to require the production of title-deeds, and in the event of the holder refusing to produce them, the lands might be resumed, and administered by the Government officers until the decision should be passed.

The holders of grants of exemption, which might be set aside by the courts, were not to be required to pay revenue accruing before the date of the first decree adjudicating the land liable to such payment.

Grants of exemption which from their express terms or the nature of the tenure were hereditary, and which should be found valid, were declared transferable by gift, sale, or otherwise. All persons succeeding to such grants were required to register their names within six months of their succession, in the office of the collector.

The Regulation further directed the form and mode in which registers were to be severally prepared and kept of lands resumed and of lands held free in conformity with the provisions of this Regulation, specifying the effect of registry and of omission to register, the weight to be attached to the entries as evidence, and it prescribed the transmission of copies of the periodical register to the civil court of the zillah, the Board of Revenue, and the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut.

REGULATION XXIV.—1793.

Money Pensions by Sunnud or Patent.

It had been declared in Regulation VIII. of 1793, that the allowances of kazees and canoongoes, which had theretofore been paid by the landholders, as well as public pensions paid through them, should be added to the amount of the assessed revenue, and should thenceforward be paid by the collectors. The present Regulation declared the rules under which the continuance or discontinuance of such pensions* should be determined, including also pensions formerly paid out of the sayer, the landlord's right to collect which had been abolished by the same Regulation. Reg. XXIV. 1793.

The Regulation enacted that all pensions received under Sunnuds† granted previously to the Company's accession to the Dewanny, and all granted since with the sanction of Government, should be continued during the lives of the grantees. Pensions not so granted were to be discontinued, unless the pensioners were real objects of charity, or unless they had received their pensions in Bengal, Behar, and Orissa before 1772. Pensions were declared not hereditary, and only renewable under the sanction of Government. Collectors were empowered to decide on claims to pensions not exceeding fifty rupees per annum, subject to an appeal to the Board of Revenue. On all above that sum he was to report to the Board of Revenue for the orders of Government. Pensions not exceeding fifty rupees were to be paid through the kazees of the respective pergunnahs.

The Regulation contained specific rules regarding registry, the issue of certificates ascertaining identity, and other details. The civil courts were declared to have no jurisdiction in determining claims to pensions, but might take cognizance of complaints against collectors for withholding pensions duly sanctioned and certified according to the provisions of this Regulation.‡

REGULATION

* By Regulation XXII, 1806, the rules regarding the continuance of pensions were in some particulars modified, and provision was made for the commutation of pensions in all practicable cases for grants of waste land rent-free; the quantity of land in ordinary cases to be equivalent to the amount of the pension when brought into cultivation, and pecuniary assistance to be given towards the first cultivator, not exceeding the amount of one year's pension. Reg. XXII. 1806.

† Patents:

‡ See Regulation XI. 1813.

REGULATION XXXVII.—1793.

Revenue Affairs. Investigation of Titles to hold Lands exempted from Payment of Revenue on Royal Grants.

Reg. XXXVII.
1793.

THE preamble to this Regulation asserted the same principle as that declared in the opening of Regulation XIX. 1793, viz. that all alienations of the Government Revenue without the consent of the Government are null and void. The Regulation before referred to had provided for the resumption of such grants as should be decreed by the civil courts to have been made by individuals, whether officers of Government or zemindars, of their own authority. The present Regulation related to grants made by the native Governments themselves, and termed Badshahi or Royal.

The preamble stated that under the native Governments grants were occasionally made of the Government share of the produce of lands for the support of the families of persons who had performed public services, for religious or charitable purposes, for maintaining troops, and for other services; that the British Government had continued to the grantees or their heirs, such of these grants as were hereditary, if they had been made and possession had been obtained before the date of the Company's accession to the Dewanny: but it was stated, that such grants as were for life only had been invariably considered as resumable on the death of the grantees. The preamble then adverted to the duty of Government to regard equally the protection of the public revenues and the rights of individuals, and to adopt measures requisite to the support of the one consistently with the due maintenance of the other.

The Regulation proceeded to enact rules similar in principle to those of Regulation XIX. 1793, adapted to the different nature of the right conveyed by the superior authority of the grantor. After declaring all Badshahi grants with possession anterior to the 12th August 1765 to be valid; that Badshahi grants should only be resumable when pronounced to be invalid by the decree of a court of justice; and that grants which, by their express terms, or by the nature of the tenure and by usage, were only life grants, should determine on the death of the holders; it was declared that the rules of this enactment were to be considered as relating only to the Government proportion of the revenue, from lands held or claimed to be held under Badshahi grants, and to the question whether the Government was or was not entitled to resume or retain such revenue; and that they did not relate to questions of the zemindary or proprietary right to the lands included in any such grant, which questions were to be considered as of a distinct and private nature between the contending parties, open to be tried and determined between them in the civil court.

When a jaghire or other life-grant should escheat to Government, the collector was immediately to attach the revenue of the lands, and to report to the Board of Revenue, who would obtain the orders of Government regarding its final resumption. Lands included in expired or resumed Badshahi grants were to be assessed, and the revenue to be paid by the proprietor according to the principles of the decennial settlement.

The proceedings by the collectors for recovery of lands held under invalid Badshahi grants were to be the same as those directed in regard to grants not Badshahi.*

Altamgah, Ayma, and Muddud Mash grants were declared hereditary, and the holders were authorized to transfer them; but persons succeeding to such grants were to register their names in the collector's office within six months; but no transfer was to relieve the land from assessment if the original title proved invalid. Jaghires were declared to be life-tenures only, unless expressly stated to be otherwise in the grant. The remaining provisions of this Regulation corresponded with those of Regulation XIX. of 1793.

REGULATION

* See Regulation XI. 1819.

REGULATION XLIII.—1793.

Grants of Land in Jaghire to invalid Officers and Soldiers of the Company's Native Army.

UNDER date the 18th February 1789, certain resolutions had been passed by the Bengal Government, having in view to make a comfortable provision for native officers and soldiers no longer fit for service, and for their families, by substituting allotments of land for the money-pensions before paid. These resolutions prescribed the proportions of waste land to which those persons should be entitled according to their rank; the lands were to be granted either in Circar, Bahar, Shahabad, or Rotas, and in such village as each individual might point out, power being reserved to the Government of making such grants in other places. The resident at Benares, and the collectors at Bahar and Shahabad, in selecting the lands, were to have in view the facilities for cultivation and other benefits intended to be imparted to the grantees; the original grantees were to hold the lands rent-free for life; the grants for land in Benares were to be under the seal of the rajah, with a warrant of confirmation under the seal and signature of the resident; the grants in Bahar, Rotas, and Shahabad, were to be under the seals and signatures of the collectors of those districts. On the death of the original grantees, the lands were to be continued to their heirs at a permanent assessment, to be fixed in Benares by the resident, with the consent of the rajah; in the other districts by the collectors, upon an estimate of the actual net produce, after deducting one-tenth to be paid to the zemindars as malikana; the tenure thus constituted was of the kind called mocrerry or perpetual; if the original grantee died within five years from the date of his grant, the heirs were to hold the land, free of assessment, until the expiration of the five years from the date of the grant. These mocrerry leases were declared liable to sale for arrear of revenue.

Reg. XLIII. 1793.

Under date the 24th December 1790, the following declaration was added to the foregoing resolutions, with a view to obviate any objections which landholders might entertain to the allotment of waste land to invalids, namely, that the assesment payable on the lands, after the death of the original grantee, belonged to the proprietor of the village in which the lands were situated, and that no additional demand on the part of Government would be made on that account from such proprietor beyond the engagement subsisting between him and the Government previously to the time when the assesment should have become payable on those lands.

The present Regulation was enacted to establish such part of the former rules on this subject as were intended to remain in force, and were proper matter for a Regulation.

The preamble stated, that justice and policy required that the Jaghire establishment for invalids should be put upon such a footing as to render it productive of the benefits originally expected from it, viz. a comfortable retreat for worn-out native soldiers, with an ample subsistence for themselves during their lives, and decent provision for their families after their decease. That it was essential to the attainment of these objects, that the land to be allotted to them should be procured without any infringement of the rights of the zemindars; that the Governor-general in Council had, on the 25th February 1793, framed a Code of Laws for new-modelling the establishment, in which provision had been made for obtaining the lands from proprietors on lease or by purchase, and for delivering them to the invalids in such a state as to enable them to render their respective jaghires immediately productive; and that provision had been also made for withdrawing the interference of the regulating officer, on the death of the original grantee, and leaving the heirs to blend with the mass of the community, secured by the Regulation in the enjoyment of their rights.

The principal rules thus re-enacted by the present Regulation were as follows: The establishment of villages for invalids were to be in the several zillahs of Boglepore, Behar Proper, Shahabad, Tirhoot, and Sarun, and were to be under the immediate superintendence of an officer, to be denominated "regulating officer;" the waste land to be allotted allotted for the formation of a tannah or village for invalids was to be procured by the collectors on lease from the zemindar, on behalf of Government, on the following terms: that the lands should continue attached for ever to the zemindary; that the invalid grantee should hold the land, rent-free, during his life; that after his death it should devolve to his heirs, who, for the first five years after coming into possession, were to pay one-tenth of the produce as malikanah in acknowledgment of seignior; that after those five years the land was to be assessed with a net-rent equal to two-thirds of the amount paid for other lands in the district of the same description and quality; this rent not to be liable to any variation, and to be paid to the proprietor: if the invalid should die within seven years from the date of the grant, the exemption was to be continued to his heirs until the completion of the seventh year from the date of the grant; after the termination of which period the tenure of the heir was to begin on the terms on which pension lands were held on succession, namely, that the heir should for five years pay ten per cent. of the produce, and afterwards two-thirds of the usual assessment on lands of a similar value. On the arrival of the period for assessing such lands, such parts as might be found not to have been cultivated, though capable of cultivation, were to be resumed, and given back to the proprietor, who might grant pottahs for them to whomsoever he might think proper. The jaghire, when fully assessed, was to form part of the estate of the original proprietor, and the rent was to be paid to him by the jaghirdar; but until that time the rent and malikanah were to be received by the collector, and to be paid by him to the proprietor; but no increase of revenue was to be levied from a zemindar, on account of the benefit he might derive from a lease of waste lands under this Regulation. On a jaghire becoming charged with a permanent assessment, the regulating officer was to obtain for the jaghirdar a pottah from the proprietor, stating the terms on which the land was to be held, the amount of the rent and the measurement of the land; and after that, the interference of the regulating officer, in regard to that jaghire, was to cease.

The Regulation contained many other provisions relative to the interests of the invalids to whom such jaghires might be granted, and for providing for the adjustment of disputes between them, by the authority of the regulating officer, and by reference to arbitration. These rules had especially in view the ease and comfort of the invalid soldiers, for whose benefit the establishment was prepared, and whose habits of life were supposed to render them ill suited to acquire a knowledge and conform to the General Regulation and Laws of the British Government; at the conclusion of the Regulation, the original rules dated 18th February 1789 were recorded.

REGULATION LVI.—1795.

Extension of the Period during which Heirs of invalid Military Jaghirdars were to hold their Lands free from Assessment.

Reg. LVI. 1795.
(Rescinded by
Reg. I. 1804.)

THE preamble declared that the period of seven years during which land granted to invalid soldiers under Regulation XLIII. 1793, was to be held rent-free by their heirs, in the event of the grantee's death before the expiration of that time, had not been found sufficient to enable persons subject to such peculiar disadvantages as they were, from want of skill and bodily infirmity, to bring fresh lands into cultivation; and that they were consequently under the necessity of employing persons to cultivate their lands for them at a heavy expense; this Regulation therefore extended the period from seven to ten years, with the view of ensuring to the heirs the full benefits which it was intended they should derive from the grants. The Regulation also provided for leave of absence being granted to invalids by the regulating officer.

REGULATION I.—1804.

Final Assessment of Military Jaghire Tenures.

THIS Regulation consolidated the rules of Regulations XLIII. of 1793 and LVI. of 1795, with a few modifications; the most important of which were, that the proportion of the annual produce which was to constitute the final assessment payable to the zemindar, was fixed at two-fifths of the annual produce, instead of two-thirds of the rent paid for similar land in the district; and that if the heir to a jaghire held under this Regulation should, without reasonable cause, leave the land uncultivated for one year after being ordered to be put into possession, the land should be deemed forfeited, and either be transferred to another invalid or revert to the zemindar. A new scale of the quantity of lands assignable to the different ranks was fixed, and the collectors were ordered to regulate the assignments accordingly. It was also enacted, that whenever a new tannah or invalid jaghire station should be established, or any existing one be extended, the land taken in for the purpose should be completely cleared by the collector of the zillah at the expense of Government.

The Regulation further contained rules for the payment of a reduced pay to native officers and soldiers, who should prefer receiving such an allowance to being transferred to the jaghirdar establishment, and for the payment of such allowance by the collector.

REGULATION XI.—1808.

Rent payable by the Heirs of invalid Jaghirdars.

THE preamble to this Regulation stated, that the alteration effected by Regulation I. of 1804, in the rent payable by the heirs of invalid jaghirdars, was not intended to increase the rate of rent receivable by the zemindars for such lands, but was adopted on the supposition that while the method of computation would be more easy, the application of the new rule would afford nearly the same result as the provision in Regulation XLVIII. of 1793. It having however appeared, on information since submitted to Government, that such had not always been the case, the present Regulation provided that the collectors should adjust the rent of land to be paid by the heirs of invalid jaghirdars, on the principle that the zemindars should be entitled to receive a net rent equal to two-thirds of the amount paid for other lands in the district of the same description and quality: the decision of the collector to be binding on the zemindar, and to be the guide of the courts in their decisions on such questions.

REGULATION XIX.—1810.

Administration of Endowments for religious and charitable Purposes, to be under Control of the Revenue Authorities.

THE preamble recited that several endowments had been granted in land by the preceding Governments of India and by individuals, for the support of mosques, Hindoo temples, and colleges, and for other pious and beneficial purposes; and there were grounds to suppose, that the produce of such lands was in many instances misappropriated, contrary to the intentions of the donors, to the personal use of the individuals in the immediate charge and administration of such endowments. It was declared to be an important duty of every Government to provide that all such endowments be applied according to the real intent and will of the grantors. The preamble further declared the necessity of providing for the maintenance and repair of bridges, serais, and other buildings, which had been erected either at the expense of Government or of individuals, for the use and convenience of the public, and also to establish proper rules for the custody and disposal of escheated property.

To

To provide for these several objects, the Regulation accordingly enacted as follows:— That the general superintendence of all lands granted for the purposes above stated, should be vested in the Boards of Revenue, whose duty it should be to take care that the endowments were duly appropriated, and that the public edifices endowed should be duly repaired and maintained; the Board submitting, whenever necessary, estimates of the expense of repairs for the approval of Government. The superintendence of those Boards was likewise extended over all escheated property, and they were required to report to Government their opinion of the best mode of disposing of it; that local agents should be appointed in each zillah, who were to act under the directions of the Boards, making all necessary inquiries and reports, and executing the orders which they should receive; they were also to report how the persons appointed managers, trustees, or superintendents, discharged their duties; upon any vacancies occurring in those appointments, they were to report in whom the right of nomination had usually vested; if it were in the Government, the local officers were to propose for the approbation of the superior Board fit persons to succeed to the charge; the collector of the zillah was to be ex officio one of the agents, with any other persons whom the Government might see fit to appoint.

REGULATION II.—1811.

Abolition of the System of granting Lands to invalid Soldiers.

Reg. II. 1811.

THE preamble to this Regulation stated, that the assignments of land for the support of invalid native officers and soldiers had not been found productive of the benefits contemplated; that difficulties had occurred in obtaining the lands required, and when procured and rendered fit for tillage, they had often proved insalubrious from the vicinity of other lands overgrown with extensive forests. In consideration of these and other inconveniences, the present Regulation declared the provisions of the previous enactment for allotting land to have no effect in future, and directed that native officers who should be invalidated subsequently to the date of this Regulation, should receive an advance of six months' invalid pay, according to certain rates, and should be allowed to retire to any part of the Company's territories they might choose.*

REGULATION XI.—1813.

For the Prevention of Abuse in drawing Money Pensions.

Reg. XI. 1813.

THE preamble stated, that frequent abuses had been committed in the receipt of pensions, by which the Government was annually defrauded of considerable sums, and individuals derived pecuniary advantage from practices which in fact merited exemplary punishment. This Regulation, therefore, directed a temporary suspension of all pensions in the civil department, for the purpose of enabling collectors to revise the pension lists, and to require each pensioner to prove his right, in conformity with the principles of Regulation XXIV. of 1793. Provision was made for the transfer of the payment of pensions to the district most convenient to the pensioner; for the preparation of proper registers; for the due entry of all lapses and transfers; for the personal appearance of pensioners at stated periods; and otherwise for the prevention of fraud.

REGULATION II.—1819.

Improved Rules regarding Lands held exempt from Public Revenue.

Reg. II. 1819.

THE preamble to this Regulation adverted to the inadequacy of the laws regarding lands held exempted from the payment of revenue under invalid titles, (whether purporting to be

Reg. XII. 1814.

* By Regulation XII. 1814, these pensions were declared not liable to seizure or sequestration for debt, or in satisfaction of a decree of court; and no assignments of such pensions were to be deemed valid if made before the time of their becoming due.

be Badshahi or otherwise), and it stated, that although the operation of the General Regulations* on that subject had been modified as to particular districts, they were still insufficient to secure the just rights of Government.

In order to obviate all misapprehension on the part of public officers or individuals, it seemed necessary to declare generally the right of Government to assess all lands, which at the period of the decennial settlement were not included within the limits of a settled estate, with the exception of lands for which a distinct settlement had been made since that period, and of lands held under a valid title of exemption from assessment. It seemed likewise fit that the Government should formally renounce all claims to additional revenue on lands which had been actually included within the limits of estates at the time when such estates were permanently settled, whether such claim might have rested on the plea of error or of fraud, or on any other ground, with the exception, of course, of claims to mehals expressly excluded from the operation of the settlement; the present Regulation was therefore enacted, with the view of establishing, on proper principles, one uniform course of proceeding in resuming the revenue of lands liable to assessment, so that the dues of Government might be secured without infringement of the just rights of individuals.

The Regulation began by rescinding the merely local modifications of the previous laws, and likewise those rules of the original Regulations regarding the resumption of alienated lands held under invalid titles, which prescribed suits before a court of justice as necessary to decide the right of Government previously to resumption.†

The Regulation proceeded to declare, that all lands not included within the defined limits of an estate, as settled at the decennial settlement, or subsequently, if not held under a valid title of exemption, of the nature specified in the Regulations in that behalf,‡ should be considered liable to assessment in the same manner as other unsettled lands; and that the revenue to be assessed on all such lands, whether exceeding 100 begahs or otherwise, should belong to Government; but the rights of zemindars and other proprietors were reserved to the rent of lands within the limits of their respective estates, not exceeding 100 begahs if in Bengal, Behar, or Orissa, and fifty begahs if in the province of Benares, though held on invalid tenure of exemption from assessment. The principles of this declaration were to be held applicable to tracts of land brought into cultivation in the Sunderbuns,§ and generally to all islands or other lands gained by alluvion or dereliction, whether from an introcession of the sea, from an alteration of the course of rivers, or from the gradual accession of soil on their banks since the period of their decennial settlement; also to lands “which, though included at the period of the permanent settlement within the limits of talooks held by individuals under special pottahs from the collector (such as Putteetabad and Jungleboory talooks), in the districts of the Twenty-four Pergunnahs and Jessore, had not been permanently assessed at the above-mentioned period.”

The rules regarding the investigation of grants of exemption from assessment were declared applicable to mocurrery leases or other tenures limiting the demand of Government.

The Regulation then laid down the course of proceeding for trying the validity of tenures exempt from assessment, or held at an inadequate jumma. It was declared to be the duty of the collector, on the discovery of any such tenure which he might deem invalid, to report to the Board of Revenue the circumstances of the case. If the Board ordered the inquiry to proceed, the collector was to summon the party claiming the exemption

* Regulation XIX. and Regulation XXXVII. 1793.

† Regulation VIII. 1811; Regulation V. 1813; Regulation XI. 1817; and Regulation XXIII. 1817.

‡ Regulations XIX. and XXXVII. of 1793, and the corresponding Regulations in the Upper Provinces.

§ See Regulation XXIII. 1817; head “Special (A.)” p. 606.

exemption to appear before him in person or by attorney, with the proofs of his title. Special rules were laid down regarding service of the process of citation, or, if it could not be served, the issue of a proclamation; if the party summoned or proclaimed neglected or refused to attend, the examination was to proceed without him. The collector had full power to summon witnesses and to call for all necessary accounts, and penalties were attached to the disobedience or the neglect of his requisitions, and to the production of false evidence; and it was further enacted, that in the event of the claimant afterwards instituting a suit to contest the decision of the revenue authorities, the courts should not admit any evidence not produced before the collector, unless it were satisfactorily shown that good reason existed for its not having been so produced in the first instance, and that such reason was assigned to the collector. Resistance to the collector's process was to be punished by fine.

The proceedings of the collector were to be conducted on the principles of a judicial inquiry, and false evidence given before him was to incur the penalties of perjury. The decision of the collector was to be recorded in a final minute in Persian; copies of which were to be given to the parties, and the whole record of his proceedings was to be forwarded to the Board of Revenue, who, after such examination and such further inquiry as they might deem necessary, were to decide upon the liability of the land to be assessed in full. The final orders of the collector and of the Board were to record the grounds on which their decisions were passed, the names of all the witnesses, and the titles of all the exhibits read. If the Board of Revenue pronounced against the assessment, their decision was to be final, except on proof exhibited to the satisfaction of a court of judicature, that fraud or collusion had been practised in the previous inquiry. If they pronounced for the assessment, the party against whom the decision had passed might appeal to a court of justice. No appeal was to be admitted by a civil court later than one year after the decision of the revenue authorities, except on special cause being shown for the delay.

If the net annual value of the land, after deducting five per cent. for charges of management, and one-eleventh of the remainder as the allowance for malikana, did not exceed 500 rupees, the appeal was to be tried in the zillah court;* if it was above that sum, the appeal was to lie to the provincial court. An appeal from the decisions of those courts respectively was to lie to the superior court, but was to be admitted only on special grounds, excepting in cases in which the amount at issue was above £5,000,† in which cases a regular appeal was to lie to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut.

On the production of any written document purporting to be a firman of any king of Delhi, or to be a sunnud, perwannah, or other grant of any vizier, or of any nawaub, rajah, or other potentate or person formerly exercising authority in any part of the provinces subject to the British Government, the authorities before whom any such document should be produced were to ascertain its validity and authenticity by reference to the proper officers and records, and were not to receive it merely on the credit of the seal or other attestations impressed upon it; nor was any such document to be received in evidence at all, unless it had been duly registered, or unless good cause were shown for its non-registration.

The Regulation further provided, that all suits preferred in courts of judicature by proprietors claiming the revenue of any lands held free of assessment, and all suits preferred by individuals to establish claims from exemption from revenue were, immediately on their institution, to be referred for investigation to the collectors, who were to proceed in the inquiry by examination of parties and documents, and in the same manner as they are directed to do in the inquiries provided for in the former part of this Regulation.

* It was provided by Regulation XIV. 1825, that if the decision of the civil court should reverse or alter the judgment of the revenue authorities, a regular appeal was to lie to the superior civil court, whatever might be the amount.

† The amount appealable to the King in Council.

lation. The court, on receiving the report of the collector, and calling for more evidence if necessary, were to decide the case.

Collectors might also receive cases of the above description themselves, and proceed to investigate them in the same manner. From their decisions in such cases, an appeal was to lie to the zillah courts within three months from the date of the decision; and from that court's decision an appeal was to be admissible by the superior court on special grounds only, except in cases appealable to the King in Council, in which an appeal was to lie of right from the decision of the provincial court to the Sudder Adawlut.

The Regulation concluded by stating, that nothing which it contained was to be considered as affecting the rights of the proprietors of estates, for which a permanent settlement had been concluded, to the full benefit of all waste lands included within ascertained boundaries of such estates respectively, at the period of the decennial settlement, and which had since been or which might be hereafter brought into cultivation. The exclusive advantages resulting from the improvement of all such lands were guaranteed to the proprietors by the conditions of that settlement. It was left to the courts of judicature to decide in all contested cases whether lands which might be assessed under the provisions of this Regulation had or had not been included at the period of the decennial settlement, within the limits of the estates for which a settlement had been concluded in perpetuity; and they were authorized to reverse the decisions of the revenue authorities in all cases in which it should appear that lands which had actually formed, at the period referred to, a component part of such an estate, had been unjustly subjected to assessment under the provisions of this Regulation. Zemindars and other proprietors of land would therefore be enabled, by an application to the courts, to obtain immediate redress in any case in which the revenue authorities should violate or encroach on the rights secured to them by the permanent settlement.

And the Regulation finally declared and enacted, that all claims which might be set up by the revenue authorities on behalf of Government to additional revenue from lands which, at the period of the decennial settlement, had been included within the limits of estates for which a permanent settlement had been concluded, whether such claim rested on the plea of error or fraud, or on any pretext whatever (saving of course the case of lands expressly excluded from the operation of the settlement, such as lakhiraj and thannadary lands) should be and be considered wholly illegal and invalid.

REGULATION IX.—1825.

Resumption of Lakhiraj Tenures to be adjudged by the Revenue Authorities.

By this Regulation the following rules were enacted, in modification of some of the provisions of Regulation II. 1819: Reg. IX. 1825.

Whenever a collector should be visiting any portion of his district for the purposes declared in Regulation VII. 1822, it should be competent to him to extend his inquiries into the rights of persons holding lands free of assessment, or at a favourable assessment; and to require by public notification that all holders thereof should attend before him, and produce all such documents and information as he should require. He was also authorized to cause lands to be measured. If any person holding lands free of assessment, or on moccurrey tenure, should refuse to attend the collector's inquiry when duly summoned, the title to his possessions would be investigated ex parte, and if it should appear invalid, the lands would, with the sanction of the Board of Revenue, be resumed. Any documents intended to prove the claimant's title, which might not be produced by the possessors on the requisition of the revenue authorities, were not to be afterwards received in evidence by the court of judicature to whom any appeal should be preferred, unless satisfactory reasons were assigned for their non-production on the prior requisition. But lands were not to be resumed by collectors without the previous sanction of the Board of Revenue; nor were lands held by village or zemindary servants in lieu of wages to be resumed without the sanction of Government. Whenever it should appear to a collector that any tract of lands belonged to the Government, and no individual was in bond fide possession thereof, the collector might by public notification require the appearance of all persons claiming any right therein, and if, after due investigation, he should declare them to be the property of Government, and his decision should be sanctioned by the Board of Revenue, the land was to be at the disposal of Government. Such decision could only be reversed by a decree of court in a regular suit.

It was declared, that the same power of investigating claims to lakhs might be granted to any officer deputed to make local inquiries.

REGULATION XIV.—1825.

Of the Authorities competent to exempt Lands from Payment of Revenue.

Reg. XIV. 1825.

THE objects of this Regulation, as stated in the preamble, were to remove certain doubts which existed as to the extent of authority possessed by revenue officers, subordinate to the Governor-general in Council, in regard to the confirmation of lakhsraj tenures; and also as to the power of making lakhsraj grants, possessed by persons who had exercised that right in different quarters before the acquisition of the country by the British Government. A further object of the Regulation was to amend the law in regard to the appeals which might be preferred from the decisions of the zillah courts in suits brought to set aside the decisions of the Revenue Board under the Regulation of 1819.

It was declared, that no authority existed competent to exempt lands from revenue assessment, except that of the Government, or of officers or boards specially appointed by them, to declare such exemptions, or the courts of judicature deciding on such questions in conformity with the principles of the Judicial Regulations enacted by the Government.

The periods of the introduction of the British authority into different territories now subject to their rule were specified in this Regulation, and it was declared that uninterrupted possession at and subsequently to those periods should be deemed to confer a valid title, without evidence of any formal grant or recognition thereof, unless the tenure were derivative under a jaghirdar or other person, in which case, if the superior tenure should be deemed invalid, the derivative tenure would follow the same condition; the general principle being, that the Government were entitled to share in the produce of every begah of land, the proof of possession or other title lying on the claimant.

The Regulation enumerated the several potentates who, in the exercise of supreme authority, were competent to make grants exempting from payment of revenue, and declared that their authority was in all cases to be admitted. In regard to grants by officers alleged to have been duly authorised by the before-mentioned potentates, the decisions of the courts, if in favour of the grant, were to be referred for the sanction of the Government. The validity of grants by those potentates was to depend on the following conditions, namely, that they had been made while such potentates held the supreme power, and that the lands granted were situated in a territory subject to their respective jurisdictions; that the grantees had obtained actual possession, and that the grant had not been subsequently resumed. The validity of grants not made or confirmed by the supreme power was to depend on their having been made, or confirmed by some authority which the Governor-general in Council should have declared competent to make or confirm the same, and that the grantee had obtained actual possession.

In cases turning on the right of any officer to resume lands antecedently to the acquisition of the territory by the British Government, the question of authority was to be referred for the decision of Government.

Lastly, it was declared, that decisions passed by the courts of judicature before the promulgation of this Regulation, without due regard to the restricted powers of the officers officers of the revenue, as defined in this Regulation, and in opposition to the principles it contained, were to be open to revision in the courts which had made such decisions.

REGULATION III.—1828.

Appointment of Special Commissioners to decide Appeals regarding Resumption of Lakhiraj Lands.

The object of this Regulation was to enable the Government to appoint commissioners to exercise the appellate jurisdiction which had been before vested in the judicial courts in suits instituted to set aside the decision of the revenue authorities as to the resumption of lands held free of rent, or at an adequate rent under invalid tenures. It had appeared that partly from the number of cases in question, partly from the practice of the courts in treating the appeals made to them as original suits, and partly from other causes, heavy arrears of such cases had accumulated in several of the courts and boards of revenue. Reg. III. 1828.

The Regulation accordingly empowered the Governor-general in Council to appoint one or more special commissioners, as should be judged expedient, for the determination of all cases investigated by the local revenue authorities, under the rules regarding the resumption of resumed lands in Regulation II. of 1819 and IX. of 1825.* The same commissioners were also to determine all suits brought to contest the demand of the revenue officers, in being in excess of what the party was bound to pay. The special jurisdiction and powers of the commissioners were to be determined by the Governor-general in Council, and upon the appointment of such commissioners, the powers of the courts in regard to all matters cognizable by the said commissioners were to cease, and all cases pending before them of that nature were to be transferred to the commissioners. The appeals which were to lie from the decisions of the local revenue authorities to the superior boards under the Regulations before cited were thenceforward to be made to the special commissioners.

It was to be competent to the Government to vest in the special commissioners all the powers of the Board of Revenue.

Whenever a collector making the inquiries which he was authorized to institute by Regulation II. of 1819 and IX. of 1825, should judge lands to be liable to assessment, the party against whom the decision was passed might appeal to the special commissioners within two months. The collector might, notwithstanding the appeal, carry his decision for assessment into execution, reporting his proceedings to the Board, or to the commissioner, if exercising the power of the Board, who might order the suspension of the attachment. In cases in which the collector should decide against assessment, he was to report his decision to the Board, who might refer the case to the commissioner within one year after the passing of the collector's decret. In all cases appealed or referred to the commissioner, his decision was to be final, except in cases of such amount as would, if decided by the Sudder Adawlat, be appealable to the King in Council. In all such cases the appeal to the King was to be under the same rules regarding its institution, &c. as in appeals from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlat. Provision was made, if the decision of a single commissioner should be adverse to any decision passed in the same case by other authorities, that other commissioners should be appointed, so that the final award might be made by the concurrent voices of at least two special commissioners.

It was to be competent to the Government to prescribe any special rules for the guidance of the commissioners, whose powers and proceedings in general were to assimilate milate to those of the zillah judges; the decisions of the special commissioners were, when necessary, to be carried into execution by the zillah courts. Special commissioners were to take an oath of office. In cases where the jurisdiction of the courts was not barred by the provisions of this Regulation, they were to proceed to hear and determine as before, and the courts were to appropriate the first court-day in each week to the decision of such appeals. It was directed that all persons succeeding to lakhiraj or moqurrery tenures should immediately report such succession to the collectors; if they failed to do so for six months, the collector was to attach the land, which was only to be restored on proof of the goodness of the title, and on payment of a fine equal to one year's rent. All exempted lands not duly registered were to be liable to immediate resumption; and all tenures, not hereditary, were to be resumed on the death of the holder. The remainder of the Regulation referred to grants to be made of lands in the Sunderbuns, which were declared to be the property of the Government.

* It was provided by Regulation IX. 1825, that no special commissioner should have cognizance of an appeal against an act done by himself as collector, judge, or otherwise; the Governor-general in Council was in such cases to make provision for hearing the case. Reg. IV. 1829.

PART I.—LAND REVENUE—GENERAL—continued.

(F.)

POWERS and DUTIES of the BOARDS of REVENUE as COURTS of WARDS.

Regulations.

LIST.

- | | |
|--------------|--|
| X. 1793.— | } Constitution and Authority of the Courts of Wards. |
| VII. 1799.— | |
| I. 1800.— | |
| XXVI. 1793.— | Extending the Period of Minority to the end of the Eighteenth Year. |
| L. 1793.— | Provision for the Care of small Estates of disqualified Proprietors, and for permitting Women to manage their own Estates when duly qualified. |
| III. 1796.— | Declaring the proper Objects of the Jurisdiction of the Courts of Wards. |
| VII. 1796.— | Profligacy and Contumacy not to be grounds for the Interference of the Courts of Wards. |
| VI. 1822.— | Appointment of Managers by the Courts of Wards. |

REGULATION X.—1793.

Constitution and Authority of the Courts of Wards.

Reg. X. 1793.

It was declared in Regulation VIII. 1793, that proprietors of entire estates, paying revenue immediately to Government, who were females or minors, or who laboured under idiocy, or other natural defects or infirmities, should be deemed incapable of having any concern in the management of their estates, which should be transferred to persons appointed to the trust by Government.* The present Regulation re-enacted the Rules passed on the 20th August 1790 and 15th July 1791, which constituted the Board of Revenue to be a Court of Wards, with power to superintend the education of minors, to direct the conduct of the managers, and to inspect the accounts of the estates of disqualified proprietors. The application of the Rules was limited to proprietors of entire estates, because, where there should be two or more joint co-proprietors, a joint manager might act for both or all. The causes of disqualification were declared to be minority, idiocy, lunacy, or such natural defects or infirmities as unfit men for business, contumacy or notorious profligacy, and sex, except where a female should be deemed competent to transact the business of her estates. The following were the principal rules to be observed by the Court of Wards in the execution of their powers and duties.

* See Reg. III. 1790.

In taking charge of estates belonging solely to females, the Court of Wards were to report thereon to Government, who reserved to themselves the power of declaring the competency of any female proprietor to the management of her own estate.*

Female†.

In taking charge of estates of minors, if the proprietor should declare himself to be of age, such declaration being made by him or on his behalf to the civil court of the district, was to be forwarded to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, who would direct the local court to examine and certify the age of the applicant; the decision of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut was to be final, and the Government would direct the restoration of the estate, or its continuance under the Court of Wards, according to such decision.

Minors.

In cases of idiocy, lunacy, &c. the collector was to communicate the circumstances through the government vakeel to the zillah court, who were to submit the case to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut. That court would direct due inquiry to be made by the civil courts of the district, who were also to have before them the party reported to be disqualified. On the report of the court, the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut were to certify to the Governor-general in Council their opinion of the incompetency or otherwise of the proprietor, and the Government would issue final orders in conformity with that report.

Lunatics, &c.

In the same way as in the preceding cases, the grounds of disqualification were to be laid before the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut by the zillah court, and the decision of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut was to be notified to Government, who would issue orders in conformity with the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut's decision.†

Contumacious and profligate Persons.

An annual examination was to be made by the local civil court into the condition of lunatics; and whenever the court should be of opinion that the disqualification was fully removed, they were to report accordingly to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, who would state their opinion thereon to the Government, who would issue orders in conformity with such opinion.

Any one disqualified by reason of minority, lunacy, or contumacy, who should consider his disqualification to have ceased, might bring the question for the final decision of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, by representation in the first instance to the local civil court, in the mode above prescribed.

The duties of manager and guardian were declared distinct: the manager was to have the care of the estates, real and personal; the guardian the care of the person, maintenance, and education.

The manager or serberakar was to be a competent and responsible person, and was generally to be one nearly connected with the family; preference was to be given to legal heirs or other near relations;‡ female proprietors might recommend managers for their estates, and such recommendations were to receive attention. Managers were to have compensation for the discharge of their office, and were declared liable to be fined by the Court of Wards for malversation. Managers might appoint their own subordinate officers, subject to the approbation of the Court of Wards.

Managers.

Out of the receipts from the estate, the manager was to pay the assessed revenue to Government,

* See Reg. L. 1793.

† See Reg. VII. 1799.

‡ By Section xxvi., Regulation VII. 1799, it was declared that this class of persons had been found in general disregardful to the public interests, which, in consequence of estates of disqualified landholders being not liable to sale for arrears of revenue, became seriously injured by their neglect; it was therefore enacted, that the managers were to be thenceforward chosen by the collectors, and approved by the Board of Revenue, without regard to the connexion of the disqualified proprietor.

Reg. VII. 1799.

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued.
Revenue Affairs.

796 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

Guardians.

Government, and an allowance equal to ten per cent. on the revenue to the proprietor. If the collections fell short, a proportionate diminution was to be made of the revenue, and of the proprietor's allowance, and the deficiencies to be subsequently made up out of the surplus collections of future periods. A monthly account-current of receipts and disbursements was to be delivered to the collector, who was to audit it, and report on it to the Board of Revenue; the manager was also to render an annual account-current upon oath, and accompanied by his vouchers. After the prescribed payments had been made, the surplus receipts were to be disposed of in the mode most beneficial to the estate, or in the purchase of government securities.

The duties of guardians were declared to consist in the care of the person of the proprietor, and the education of such as were minors. The guardianship was in no instance to be intrusted to the legal heir, or other person interested in out-living the ward. Females were to have guardians of their own sex. The guardian was to propose the establishment of servants to act under him, subject to the approbation of the Court of Wards. He was to render accounts in the same manner as the manager. The education of boys was to begin at five years of age, after which the superintendence of female relations was to cease. The minority of Hindoos and Mahomedans was to terminate at the expiration of the fifteenth year.* In particular cases the trusts of guardian and manager might be united in the same person, provided he were one to whom inheritance could not possibly descend.

Disqualified proprietors might sue the collectors, or their guardians or managers, before the Court of Wards for fraud, by any person willing to undertake their cause, provided that person should previously give security for the payment of all costs and damages in case of being non-suited; in return for which the person so suing was to receive any fine and costs that might be adjudged against the defendant. The judgments of the Court of Wards in such cases were to be enforced by the civil court of the district, from whom an appeal was to lie to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut.

Disqualified landholders were not permitted to adopt, without the sanction of the Court of Wards.†

REGULATION XXVI.—1793.

Extending the Period of Minority to the end of the Eighteenth Year.

Reg. XXVI. 1793. THE preamble of this Regulation recited that the termination of minority had been fixed by Government (Regulation X. 1793) at the expiration of the fifteenth year, on consideration that the Mahomedan and Hindoo laws, though they prescribe no specific age, indirectly pointed out the fifteenth year as the time when persons were to be considered competent to the management of their own affairs; that experience had shown the evils resulting from the possession of estates being given to persons at so early an age. With a view, therefore, to the future welfare of minor proprietors, as well as to the protection of the country from the frequent shocks to which it would be necessarily liable from the want of education and the early corruption of morals of young proprietors, the Regulation enacted that the minority of Mahomedan and Hindoo proprietors of estates should be fixed at the end of the eighteenth year.

REGULATION L.—1793.

Provision for the Care of small Estates of disqualified Proprietors, and for permitting Women to manage their own Estates when duly qualified.

Reg. L. 1793. THIS Regulation was enacted to provide against certain inconveniences resulting from the application of the provisions of the Court of Wards' Regulation to estates of too inconsiderable

* See Reg. XXVI. 1793.

Reg. I. 1800.

† By Regulation I. of 1800, provision was made for the appointment of guardians to the persons of minor orphans proprietors of shares in undivided estates not subject to the jurisdiction of the Court of Wards, when the parents should not have left any guardians to their children by will.

siderable extent or value to bear the expense of the prescribed process, and also to authorize the superintendence of females over their own estates whenever they should be found competent to the charge by their education and habits of business.

The Regulation accordingly directed that if the produce of an estate of a disqualified proprietor should be insufficient to bear the expense of the proceedings directed in Regulation X. 1793, the Court of Wards might take such measures as should seem best suited to the exigencies of the case, to provide for the security of the revenue and maintenance of the proprietor.

The Court of Wards were also empowered to invest females with the management of their own estates, when fully satisfied of their competence to their charge, in which case such females were to execute the same engagements as other proprietors.

REGULATION III.—1796.

Declaring the proper Objects of the Jurisdiction of the Courts of Wards.

THE preamble stated that the purpose and intention of the Court of Wards' Regulation (X. 1793) had been perverted by persons who, having diminished the value of their estates by mismanagement or other causes, and rendered them inadequate to satisfy the public demands, had, by a real or fictitious transfer of them to a minor or other disqualified person, brought the lands under the management of the Court of Wards, with the view of exempting them from sale. Reg. III. 1796.

The present Regulation, therefore declared, that the ordinary jurisdiction of the Court of Wards was meant to extend only to such estates as should devolve to disqualified landholders in the regular course of inheritance. The right, however, was reserved to the Governor-general in Council of placing under the management of the Court of Wards estates which had not so devolved by inheritance, whenever good reasons appeared for so directing.

REGULATION VII.—1796.

Profligacy and Contumacy declared not to be grounds for the interference of the Courts of Wards.

THE preamble declared, that the rule in the Court of Wards' Regulation (X. 1793), which ranked among the persons whose estates were to be placed under the management of that court such as the Governor-general in Council might deem disqualified on account of contumacy or notorious profligacy of character, had been found to be liable to ill consequences, which far overbalanced the advantages intended by it. The very provisions, made with a view to guard against the abuse of this power, namely, that before a landholder should be declared incompetent on the ground of profligacy, an examination should take place before the civil court, when he might adduce evidence to relieve himself from the imputation, and that the proceedings upon the case should be submitted for the decision of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, had been found objectionable in practice. They led to the exposure of private conduct in a public court of justice, which was extremely offensive to those who were the objects of it, and might in some instances, particularly to Hindoos, prove highly injurious, than which nothing could be more foreign from the wishes and intentions of the Government. On consideration of these circumstances, the Regulation rescinded so much of the former enactments, as made contumacy or notorious profligacy of character a ground for the interference of the Court of Wards. Reg. VII. 1796.

REGULATION VI.—1822.

Appointment of Managers by the Courts of Wards.

Reg. VI. 1822.

ONE object of this Regulation was to extend the operation of the Court of Wards' Regulation to Benares, which had been omitted to be done; its further object was to modify the rules for the administration of the court in certain particulars. The original rules for the management of the estates of minors, and other disqualified persons over which the Court of Wards had jurisdiction, provided that the manager should be selected from amongst the relations, connexions, or principal servants of the minors' family, and that it should be his duty to collect the rents and otherwise manage the estate under the general authority of the Court of Wards. This system of management was early abandoned in the case of the less valuable estates, where the expense incident to the system was found to consume the profits, and the Court of Wards were authorized in such cases to adopt at their discretion any mode of management they might judge fit. Subsequently the managers had been declared to be merely ministerial officers of the collector, by whom they were directed to be chosen, under the instructions of the Board of Revenue, without any regard to their connexion with the proprietor. The revenue authorities were thus virtually vested with full powers of managing the estates of wards as might appear best; and the Court of Wards finding the charges of mofussil management by the said officers to be generally inordinate, obtained authority and instructions of Government to substitute the system of farming in all ordinary cases. This system, which had been adopted and pursued with a view to the interests of the minors, had prevailed for a period of eighteen years. Nevertheless, the terms in which the discretion of dispensing with a manager was vested in the courts by legislative enactments, had led to doubts of the legality of the practice of farming as applied to extensive or profitable estates.

The Regulation accordingly declared the Courts of Wards competent to farm estates, or to adopt any other form of management which might seem to them most expedient, for terms not exceeding ten years; it likewise vested them with a discretion of not interfering with the estates of disqualified proprietors, where such interference might appear unnecessary or inexpedient.

PART II.
LAND REVENUE—SPECIAL.

(A.)

SPECIAL REVENUE REGULATIONS, for BENARES,—and certain DISTRICTS in the LOWER PROVINCES.

LIST.

Regulations.

BENARES.

- I. 1795.—Declaring the Settlement of the Revenue permanent.
 II. 1795.—Recording the successive Systems of Revenue Administration before the Permanent Settlement.
 IV. 1795.—Resumption of the Sayer by Government.
 VI. 1795.—Rules for the Recovery of Arrears of Revenue—Powers of Tehsildars.
 XXVII. 1795.—Declaration of the Rights of Proprietors in Benares.
 XXXIV. 1795.—Provision for the Payment of Money Pensions.
 LI. 1795.—Opposition to the issue of Pottahs from Proprietors to Ryots.
 I. 1816.—
 I. 1817.—
 XXIV. 1817.— } Appointment and Jurisdiction of a Commission.
 I. 1819.—
 VII. 1828.—Jaghire Lands of Benares placed under a Revenue Superintendent.

SUNDERBUNDS.

- IX. 1816.—Appointment of a Commissioner in the Sunderbunds.
 XXIII. 1817.—
 VIII. 1811.— } Rights in Land formed by Alluvion and dereliction of Waters.

BENARES.

REGULATION I.—1795.

Declaring the Settlement of the Revenue permanent.

THE preamble to this Regulation recited, that the Governor-general in Council had determined, with the concurrence of the Rajah of Benares, to introduce into that province, as far as local circumstances would admit, the same system of interior administration as had been established in the provinces of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa. The object of the present Regulation was to declare as an essential part of that system the limitation for ever of the annual revenue upon the lands, on the principle laid down for the Lower provinces in the preamble to Regulation II. 1793. It was stated that the administration of the revenues of this this province, which from 1781, the date of the accession of Rajah Mahipnarrain, had been subject in a certain degree to the control of the resident of the British Government, had been, since 1787, more entirely under the superintendence of that officer; from that time it had been an object of the British Government to form a decennial settlement of the revenue, which might eventually be declared permanent. In 1794 the rajah relinquished the revenue administration of the province, which he had conducted as zemindar, to the British Government; who, in the exercise of the authority which in consequence devolved to them, enacted by the present Regulation, that the decennial settlement, which had received their approbation and sanction, should be permanent, and that it should be so notified by proclamation, with the following reservations and restrictions.—All persons holding pottahs as zemindars or as farmers, were to be bound to conform to all such Regulations as should be duly published and promulgated by the British Government. The succession to zemindaries was to take place according to the established laws, rules, and customs of the country. On the death of any farmer holding a pottah for lands, or of his pottah otherwise becoming void, any zemindar who had been dispossessed of those lands before the cession of the province to the British Government in 1775, might recover possession on agreeing to pay a fixed assessment in conformity to the Regulations. Zemindars who had been in possession subsequently to 1775, but whose lands had been let to farm at the conclusion of the decennial settlement, in consequence of their not having agreed to the assessment proposed, might recover possession on proving their right in the civil court, and on paying such compensation as the court might decree to the farmer.

It was provided, that no Regulation of the British Government should be considered as extending to Benares, unless so specially declared at its promulgation, or by subsequent extension.

REGULATION II.—1795.

Recording the successive Systems of Revenue Administration before the Permanent Settlement.

Reg. II. 1795.

THIS Regulation enacted and promulgated in the prescribed form, and with certain modifications and amendments, the rules which had from time to time been passed; and recorded the successive measures which had been adopted regarding the settlement and collection of the revenue from the beginning of the revenue year 1195 (which began in September 1787), under the superintendence of the British resident. The preamble stated, that on the accession of Rajah Mahipnarrain, in 1781, the collection of the revenues on behalf of the rajah was made by certain native collectors or farmers of the revenue called Amils. These persons received the rents from the village zemindars, who were described as landholders, generally paying the revenues of their lands to Government, jointly with one or more parceners. In some cases certain of the parceners had had their shares separated from the rest, but the major part held their shares in common; the names of the head men of the coparcenery being usually inserted in the engagements for the public revenue.

At the conclusion of the first settlement which had been made for one year, beginning in September 1787, new agreements were taken in the name of the rajah from the amils, who stipulated to pay the revenue for which they had engaged, inclusive of certain cesses levied from the landholders, but exclusive of lands exempted from the payment of revenue, pensions, and charitable and other allowances charged on the public revenue; and the amils further engaged, that if they made undue collections beyond the funds or assets assigned to them, they should be liable to pay a fine to Government, equal to three times the amount. In June 1788; several special rules were passed to prevent abuses in the collection of the revenue, by prescribing the mode of measuring the land, of estimating the value of crops, and of computing the share of the Government proportion of the crop into money, prohibiting the imposition of new cesses, and abolishing several of the old ones. These rules were approved by the Government as preparatory to the establishment of a more regular system of assessing the collection of the revenue; and with a view to the introduction of a system, a system, the resident was authorized to take upon himself the entire formation of the settlement for Fusly 1196 (A. D. 1788-9), which was done on full examination of the reports of the canoongoes, and the estimates of actual produce, after making deductions and remissions. New forms of engagements were taken from the amils, who bound themselves to abide by their engagements, and not to demand from the cultivators any unauthorized payments or cesses; on these principles, the general settlement of the zemindary was made on leases for one year in about one-third of the zemindary, and five years on the other two-thirds of the zemindary; the amils being directed to let the lands to the hereditary landholders, and not to mere farmers, unless the zemindars refused to engage. This settlement was approved by the Government, who directed the resident to endeavour to introduce into Benares the system proposed for the permanent settlement of Behar, which had for its object the ascertaining and limiting the demand of Government, and securing to its subjects in perpetuity the quiet enjoyment of the fruits of their industry. The resident accordingly instructed the amils and canoongoes to proceed in the settlement, subject to his revision on estimate of the revenue funds, after the sowing of the second crop. On communication of these preparatory measures by the resident, the Government resolved that a settlement should be made for ten years on the principle of that effected in Behar. Accordingly the resident and his assistants proceeded on different circuits through the four circars of the zemindary of Benares, to revise the assessment and correct errors, whether as to the persons engaged with, or the allotment of the jumma. In this manner and with the assistance of the accounts of the preceding ten years, and such other local information as could be obtained, the revenue settlement, which was to be eventually rendered permanent, was framed under the superintendence of the resident, and the engagements entered into by the village zemindars and farmers on the formation of the permanent settlement bound them to the observance of the following articles:

1st,—That in case of failing in the punctual payment of the revenue, their property, real and personal, should be sold to make good the deficiency.

2d,—That they would not attach without the sanction of Government any lands which had been held by individuals exempt from the payment of revenue, up to the end of the revenue year 1195, A. D. 1787-8; and that they would not make any grants exempting lands from revenue, on pain of such lands being confiscated to Government.

3d and 4th,—That they would collect from the ryots according to the previous Regulations, and grant receipts for the payments.

5th,—That they would support the canoongoes in the execution of their functions.

6th,—That they would not levy nor receive any of the articles of abolished sayar, house-tax or abkarry.

7th, 8th, and 9th,—That they would be responsible subordinately to the amil for the maintenance of the peace, and the apprehension of robbers, murderers, &c., and make good the property stolen within their limits, and obey all orders of Government.

On the conclusion of the permanent settlement, new engagements were entered into with the amils, by which it was declared that they were officers charged with the duties of "hakim," or magistrate, and "tehseldar," or collector. In the latter capacity they were to collect the sums payable as revenue by the village zemindars, as ascertained by their pottahs. They were not to levy cesses on their own account, nor to collect tolls or duties, under pain of fine. They were also to be responsible to the Government in the first instance for the maintenance of peace, and for thefts and robberies; with a right to have recourse for their own indemnification to the landholder and farmer within whose limits the robbery might have occurred.

In their capacity of magistrates they were to apprehend criminals and disturbers of the peace, to decide revenue disputes between zemindars, farmers, and ryots; also to refer, with consent of parties, disputes of a civil nature to arbitration. Parties not consenting to arbitration were to be left to sue in the civil court established at Benares. The amils were required to yield prompt obedience to all orders and decrees issued by the civil courts, or by the rajah or by the resident.

Powers of the Amils.

It

It appearing that the amils had been in the habit of obtaining conveyances to themselves of the lands of revenue defaulters, an order had been issued in September 1794, prohibiting all such transfers; and it was now further declared that all persons who had so disposed of their lands, or the heirs or partners of such persons, might sue for the recovery of their lands at any time from the date of such conveyances within five years, and were to be considered entitled to have the conveyances annulled on repaying the purchase-money with simple interest.

Several rules were passed to protect the rights of different classes of persons, and to meet the peculiar circumstances of certain districts or divisions. It was explained in reference to disputed claims between sharers in the same village, that the new pottahs were meant only to fix the rental, and in nowise to constitute a bar to the recovery of any proprietary right in land for which suits might be instituted in the courts of justice, in the same manner as if no such pottahs had been granted.

It was declared, that in consideration of the habits prevalent among the newly restored body of zemindars, it seemed advisable to continue them for a period under the superintendency of the amils, both in respect to the police and to the payment of revenue; but it was stated that any person holding a Government pottah, who might prove his amil to have been guilty of oppression, should thereupon have the option of paying his revenue directly to the public treasurer, without the intermediate agency of the amil in any way.

REGULATION IV.—1795.

Resumption of the Sayer by Government.

Reg. IV. 1795.

THE Regulation enacted, in the prescribed form of a Regulation, the rules before published, prohibiting the zemindars and farmers from collecting duties and customs; and it was made imperative on the darogahs to transmit immediate information to the collectors of the establishment of any unauthorized chokies, or the exaction of any tolls, or other duties on traffic or bazars.

REGULATION VI.—1795.

Recovery of Arrears of Revenue.—Powers of Tehseeldars.

Reg. VI. 1795.

THIS Regulation adopted the rules for the recovery of arrears of revenue to the peculiar circumstances of the provinces of Benares. The amils, to whom the collection of the revenue of a large portion of the province was at that time intrusted, were in this Regulation styled "tehseldars," and the canoongoes were called "serrishtahdars." The tehseldars were authorized to place watchmen over the crops of those payers of revenue who had not given security for the regular payment of their rents. When instalments or periodical payments became due and were not promptly paid, process was to be issued, and a payment of a daily allowance for the officer serving it was to be continued until the arrear should be discharged, operating as a fine on the defaulter. It was declared, that in consideration of the liberal rate of commission continued to the amils or tehseldars, they were to be responsible to Government for the lands within their tehseldaries the revenue of which was not paid immediately to the collector, as well as for the annually ascertained revenue funds of those lands that might remain amany; and they were declared liable to make good to Government from their own property whatever deficiencies in the collection of the said ascertained funds might be proved to have arisen, either from their wilful neglect or inattention, or from direct embezzlement; to which purport engagements were to be taken from them by the collector. The tehseldars were also declared liable to be removed from their offices by the collector, with the sanction of the Board of Revenue, and to be prosecuted on the ground of their said engagements, either during the course or at the end of the year. In the case of village zemindars paying direct to the collector's treasury, it was left to discretion whether the share of a defaulting partner should not be made over to the other parties on their making good the arrear.

arrears. On the failure of a farmer, the zemindars who had been formerly superseded might be re-admitted to the possession and management of their lands on agreeing to the revenue assessed.

REGULATION XXVII.—1795.

Rights of Proprietors in Benares.

THIS Regulation declared the reservations made by Government and the rights of the proprietors, extending in those respects certain rules of Regulations I. and VIII. of 1793. It concluded with declaring that the term "proprietor," in regard to Benares, must be held to designate the person with whom a contract has been entered into with the Government for payment directly to the treasury of the revenue, for the lands mentioned in their engagements, whether such persons possessed the entire proprietary right in such lands, or were only the principal amongst other shareholders, and that such contract did not affect or prejudice the rights distinct or common of any other sharers where such might exist, and that all such rights in cases of dispute were to be determined by the courts of justice, according to the laws, customs, and usages of the district.

Reg. XXVII. 1795.

REGULATION XXXIV.—1795.

Money Pensions.

THIS enactment regulated the payment of pensions receivable from the Government and from the provincial territories in Benares. The pensions in question were of seven classes:—

Reg. XXXIV.
1795.

1st. Such as had been originally granted, either wholly or in part, as indemnifications for lands reserved under the native government. This class was declared not resumable on the death of the pensioner, but was to be considered as property, heritable and liable to be sued for in the same manner as other property.

2d. This class consisted of allowances granted in 1781 by the Governor-general to certain persons who represented themselves to have been landholders in the zemindary of Benares; these pensions were not to be continued to the heirs without the special sanction of Government.

3d and 4th. These classes included special pensions, formerly paid by the amils in their several pergunnahs, or partly by Government, and partly from the district treasuries, and all dependent upon certain conditions. None of these were to be continued beyond the life of the pensioner without the special orders of Government, on the report of the Board of Revenue.

5th. This class consisted of payments for dresses of honour to the kazee and mufti of Benares, at two annual Mahomedan festivals.

6th. This class consisted of pensions granted to persons helpless from indigence or age, in lieu of pensions formerly received from the sayer. These were declared to be only life pensions.

7th. This class consisted of charitable allowances, defrayable from the religious offerings made at a certain temple at Mirzapore. This distribution was to be continued as formerly, but under the orders of the Board of Revenue and the Governor-general in Council. Any persons interested in this fund, who should deem themselves aggrieved by the orders of the collector, might submit a representation to the judge of the civil court, who would forward the same to the Governor-general in Council.

REGULATION LI.—1795.

Revenue Affairs.

Opposition to the Issue of Pottahs from Proprietors to Ryots.

Reg. LI. 1795.

THE preamble to this Regulation recited, that in order to prevent undue demands being made upon the cultivators, by the persons entitled to levy from them the Government proportion of the produce, ameens had been deputed by the resident of Benares in February 1795, to cause pottahs to be granted to the ryots, agreeably to certain forms by which their payments were to be regulated. The instructions issued in this respect were detailed in the Regulation, and the form of the pottah with which the ameens had been furnished was given at length. The Regulation proceeded to state, that the progress of the ameens was viewed with a considerable degree of jealousy by the zemindars and farmers; and a report having been made to the Government of the difficulties encountered by the ameens, the Governor in Council observed, that similar difficulties had been experienced in enforcing the Regulation regarding pottahs in the other three provinces. That in many places the ryots had omitted to take out pottahs, or objected to receive those tendered to them, agreeably to the Regulation; and that owing to the variation in the rates in different districts, and to other local circumstances, disputes had been occasioned, where both the proprietor and the cultivator of the lands had been before satisfied with the rates of assessment mutually agreed upon between them. That the rules regarding pottahs, contained in Regulation IV. 1794, for Bengal, Behar, and Orissa, had in consequence been passed, under which, if any dispute arose between a proprietor and a ryot, regarding the rates of pottahs, the latter, by application to a court of judicature, could always obtain a pottah at the ancient and established rates of the district; and that where no such dispute existed, the interference of Government was of course unnecessary. Under these considerations the ameens had been recalled, and it was resolved that rules similar to those of Regulation IV. 1794, should be adopted in Benares, it being presumed that the operation of them would gradually lead to the fixing of the rates for land in different places, where any dispute might subsist, without incurring the inconvenience likely to result from attempting to effect this object at once by the deputation of ameens. The remainder of the Regulation accordingly enacted provisions similar in principle to those of Regulation IV. 1794.

BENARES and Part of BAHAR,
viz. Zillahs Bahar, Shahabad, Sarun, and Tirhoot.

REGULATION I. 1816.—I. and XXIV. 1817.—I. 1819.

Appointment and Jurisdiction of a Commission.

Reg. I. 1816.
(Rescinded by
Reg. I. 1829.)

By this Regulation a local commissioner was appointed for the superintendence of the revenue of the province of Benares, and a part of the province of Bahar,* who was to perform the duties and exercise the power and authority of the Board of Revenue and Board of Commissioners in those districts respectively.

Reg. I. 1817.
(Rescinded by
Reg. III. 1822.)
Reg. XXIV. 1817.

The authority of the commissioner was extended over the districts of Ramgur, Boglepore, and Pooneah, by Regulation I. 1817.

By Regulation XXIV. 1817, two members were appointed to perform the duties of this commission, and its authority was extended to the districts of Dinagepore and Rungpore, in the province of Bengal. Single members of the commission were declared to have the same powers as single members of the Board of Revenue were vested with by Regulation XIII. 1811.

* Viz. Zillahs Bahar, Shahabad, Sarun, and Tirhoot.

By Regulation I. 1819, Dinagepoor and Rungpoor were again placed under the Board of Revenue.

Revenue Affairs.
Reg. I. 1819.

REGULATION VII.—1828.

Jaghire Lands of Benares placed under a Revenue Superintendent.

THE preamble to this Regulation referred to an arrangement which had been entered into with the Rajah, by which the administration of justice, so far as related to matters connected with revenue was intrusted to the Rajah within his own zemindary, to be conducted, however, in concert with and under the advice of the collector, and with an appeal direct to the Governor-general in Council. This arrangement, it was stated, was obviously intended to secure to the population the same principles of administration, and the same recognition of rights, to which the Government had engaged to adhere in its dealings with the rest of its subjects throughout the province. Inconveniences, however, having been experienced from the absence of specific rules for the guidance of the Rajah in the exercise of the privileges thus conferred upon him, and the system having in other respects failed to accomplish the objects intended by it, the Regulation proceeded to enact as follows:

A superintendent of the jaghire mehals (that is, the districts settled as a personal jaghire on the Rajah) was to be appointed by the Governor-general in Council. The judicial administration was to continue with the Rajah, but the reservation of this privilege to him was not to divest the population of any of their rights and interests in the land which had immemorially belonged to them, and were enjoyed by similar classes throughout the rest of the province. The settlement of the land revenue was to be made through the Rajah, in conformity with the general rules in force in the province of Benares; but it was directed that in making the settlement, preference was to be given by him to such persons as, under the Regulations of 1795, would have been considered zemindars; those persons were to be recorded under the designation of raees, and their tenure was to be considered heritable and transferable. Where there were no raees, the Rajah might at his option either let the lands in farm, or conclude a ryotwar settlement for them. The assessment on the land was not to be raised above what the usage of the province authorized. The admission of particular parties to engagements for the revenue was declared to convey no rights over co-sharers or under-tenants which were not previously possessed by them, except in so far as might be specially authorized by the revenue Regulations. It was declared to be the duty of the Rajah, when making or revising revenue settlements, to ascertain and record all material points connected with the rights, interests, and privileges of the various classes of his tenantry; and to cause all lakhiraj tenures to be carefully registered, as well as the amount and nature of the allowances assigned to putwarrees and village watchmen. When individuals of a village coparcenary might be selected to enter into the revenue engagement with the Government on behalf of the whole coparcenary, the non-engaging parceners were only to be held answerable for the portion of rent or revenue demandable from them respectively; the rights of the several sharers, whether distinct or separate, were not to be prejudiced by such engagements, and disputes between them were to be determined according to their respective rights, conformably to the laws and customs of the province. All transfers of land by proprietors, if conformable to the law of the parties, were declared valid, provided they were duly notified to the Rajah, who, in regard to such notification and the recognition thereof, was to be governed by the same rules as collectors in other parts of the province, subject to the orders of the superintendent, whose authority in this respect was declared similar to that of the Board of Revenue over the collector. The superintendent was also to exercise a like control in the revision of the revenue settlements.

In the collection of the revenue, the Rajah was declared to possess the powers of a zemindar over his under-tenants, and those of collector as defined in the Regulations. Sales of land for arrear of revenue, or in satisfaction of judicial decrees, were to be held in presence of the Rajah or his deputy, and the course of proceeding was to conform to the rules of Regulation XI. 1822. The powers of the Board of Revenue, in regard to sales, were declared to be vested in the superintendent, from whose orders thereupon no appeal was to lie, except to the Governor-general in Council. Complaints against the Rajah or his officer for the breach of these rules, or for unnecessary severity in the execution of them, were to be preferred to the superintendent, who was to cause justice to be rendered to the parties; but if the offence was such as would require a criminal prosecution, it was to be referred to the magistrate, to proceed thereon under the ordinary Regulations. Torture and every description of corporal punishment to enforce payment of revenue was strictly forbidden.

SUNDERBUNS.

REGULATION IX.—1816.

Appointment of a Commissioner in the Sunderbuns.

Reg. IX. 1816.

By this Regulation provision was made for the appointment of a revenue officer, to be vested generally with the powers and duties of a collector, who should be denominated the "Commissioner of the Sunderbuns."* His jurisdiction was to extend over such portions of the Twenty-four Pergunnahs and adjacent districts as the Governor-general in Council should fix.

The commissioner was to be under the control of the Board of Revenue.

REGULATION XXIII.—1817.

Rights in Land formed by Alluvion, and dereliction of Waters.

Reg. XXIII. 1817.

(Rescinded by
Reg. II. 1819.
Sec Head E. p. 788.)

THE preamble to this Regulation stated, that there was reason to believe that extensive tracts of land within the Sunderbuns, which, at the period of the formation of the permanent settlement, were entirely waste, and were not included within the limits of any settled estate, had been brought into cultivation, and were occupied without payment of revenue, and that large tracts of alluvial lands formed since that period were similarly circumstanced. The right of Government was asserted to share in the produce of all such lands; but it was stated that the holders were deemed likely to avail themselves of the rule which prohibited the resumption of lands not paying revenue otherwise than under a decree of the courts of judicature. The principle of those rules not being intended to apply to cases such as those here referred to, the present Regulation was enacted to explain the principle upon which the revenue authorities were to proceed in assessing such lands. It accordingly declared that the rules for trying by regular process, before the judicial courts, the validity of titles to hold lands free of assessment, should not be deemed applicable to lands in the Sunderbuns; and in lieu thereof it applied to them the rules enacted for Cuttack by Regulation V. 1818,† which vested the collectors with authority, under the final orders of the Board of Revenue, to examine and pass judgment upon such titles. The Regulation further declared, that all lands which at the time of the decennial settlement were not included in the limits of any pergunnah, or other division of estates for which a settlement had been made with the proprietor, and which were not held under a valid and legal title of exemption, should be held liable to assessment, and that the revenue, which might be assessed upon all such lands, whether exceeding 100 begahs or otherwise, appertained of right to Government. The same principle was applied to all alluvial lands formed since the decennial settlement, and also

* Lands in the Delta of the Ganges, including parts of the districts of the Twenty-four Pergunnahs, Nudda, Jessore, Dacca, Jelapore, and Backergunge.

† That Regulation extended to Cuttack the rules enacted for the investigation of rent-free tenures, which will be found under the head "Special"—Revenue (B.)—Reg. VIII. 1811.

also to lands held under special pottahs from the collector; but in the last-mentioned cases the pottahs were to continue in force, according to their conditions, within the specified limits, "if in the possession of the original pottah-holder or his legal representative."

The Regulation then proceeded to lay down rules respecting the investigation to be made by the commissioner or collector in regard to such lands, and the powers to be exercised by him for the purpose of obtaining the production of deeds and other evidence, and the attendance of witnesses. The result of the inquiry was to be submitted to the Board of Revenue, who would decide whether the land reported upon should be deemed liable to assessment or otherwise. It was declared, that after the decision of the question by the revenue authorities, it should not be competent to the Government to disturb the title of the occupant, except on proof in a court of judicature of fraud or collusion in the inquiry. Persons considering themselves aggrieved by any decision of the revenue authorities under this Regulation, might institute a suit in a civil court against the Government within six months from the date of the decision complained of. It was finally declared, that the provisions of this Regulation were not intended to affect the right of proprietors of estates for which a permanent settlement had been concluded, to the full benefit of all waste lands within the ascertained boundaries of their estates at the period of the decennial settlement, which had been since brought into cultivation; the exclusive benefit resulting from all such improvements being guaranteed to the proprietors by the conditions of the permanent settlement.

PART II.—LAND REVENUE—SPECIAL—continued.

(B.)

SPECIAL REVENUE REGULATIONS for the CEDED and CONQUERED PROVINCES, BUNDLECUND, and KUMAON.

Regulations.

LIST.

- XXV. 1803.—Principles of the Settlement of the Ceded Provinces in Oude, as proclaimed in 1820.
- XXVII. 1803.—
 XXI. 1806.—
 V. 1805.—
 V. 1808.—
 } Special Rules for the Collection of the Revenue, and of Arrears thereof.
- IX. 1805.—Revenue Rules for the Administration of the Conquered Provinces in the Doab and Bundlecund.
- X. 1807.—Appointment of Commissioners for the Formation of the ensuing Settlement in the Ceded and Conquered Provinces.
- I. 1809.—Permanent Establishment of the Board of Commissioners for the Western Provinces.
- VIII. 1811.—
 V. 1813.—
 XI. 1817.—
 } Investigation of Tenures held free of Assessment to be made by the Revenue Collector.
- IX. 1811.—Providing Facilities for the Division of Putteedarry Estates or Village Tenures held in Coparcenary.
- IX. 1812.—Settlement of the Revenue of the Ceded Provinces in Oude, after Fusly 1219.
- X. 1812.—Settlement of the Revenue in the Conquered Provinces on the Jumna and in Cuttack.

808 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

Regulations.

- I. 1815.—Provision for the Continuance of Life Tenures at a fixed favourable Assessment, under Grants from the Native Governments.
- XVI. 1816.—Settlement of the Revenue in the Ceded Provinces of Oude.
- II. 1818.—Settlement of the new Territories annexed to Bundelcund.
- IX. 1818.—Settlement of the Revenue of the Conquered Provinces on the Doab.
- I. 1821.—} Appointment of a Special Commission to afford Redress in Cases of illegal
- XVIII. 1829.—} Transfer and Appropriation of Lands in the Ceded and Conquered Provinces.
- VII. 1822.—} Declaring the Principles on which the future Settlements of the Revenue
- IX. 1824.—} should be made in the Ceded and Conquered Provinces; Extension of the
- IX. 1825.—} Revenue, and Judicial Powers of Collectors.
- IV. 1828.—}
- I. 1823.—Explanatory of the Powers of the Special Commission under Regulation I. of 1821.
- IX. 1824.—Settlement of the Conquered Provinces and Bundelcund.
- II. 1826.—Settlement of the Ceded Provinces in Oude.
- VI. 1831.—Revenue Administration of the Conquered Provinces in the Doab and Bundelcund.
- X. 1831.—A Board established at Allahabad by Deputation from the Sudder Board of the Presidency.

REGULATION XXV.—1803.

Principles of the Settlement as proclaimed in 1802.

Reg. XXV. 1803.

THE Judicial system of 1793 had been introduced into the provinces ceded to the East-India Company by the Nawaub Vizier, by the first and following Regulations of 1803. It was recited in the preamble of Regulation XXV. 1803, that it was essential for the security of the rights and interests of the zemindars, and other landholders in the said provinces, that the right of property possessed by them in their respective estates, under the terms and conditions of the settlement of the land revenue contained in the proclamation issued by the Lieutenant-governor* and the Board of Commissioners, under date the 14th July 1802, should be publicly acknowledged and declared. That proclamation notified the intention of the British Government to adopt, at the expiration of the then current Fusly (1209), such a plan for the settlement of the land revenue, as might be most conducive to the prosperity of the country and the happiness of the inhabitants.

The nature and terms of the settlement were declared to be, that at the commencement of Fusly year 1210, the sayer of every description should be separated from the land revenue, and a settlement for the latter only be concluded in all practicable cases with the zemindars or other actual proprietors of the soil for three years, at a fixed equal annual jumma; such zemindars as should pay their revenue immediately to the collector were to be responsible for the police of their respective zemindaries.

At the expiration of the three years, another settlement was to be made with the same persons, if willing to engage for three years, formed on the principle of taking the difference between the annual amount of the first lease and the actual yearly produce of the land at the time of its expiration, and adding two-thirds of such difference to the annual rent of the first lease.†

* See Fifth Report of the Select Committee 1812, page 48 et seq.

Reg. V. 1805.

† By Regulation V. 1805, it was enacted, that in consideration of a severe drought which had generally prevailed in the Ceded Provinces in the Fusly year 1211, and which had subjected the landholders and cultivators to heavy losses, the settlement for three years in succession to the first settlement should be made at the same jumma as the preceding one.

At the expiration of the sixth year, a new settlement was to be made with the same persons, if willing to engage, for a further period of four years, by adding to the annual rent of the second three years, three-fourths of the net increase of revenue during any one year of that period. It was notified, that at the end of ten years, a permanent settlement would be concluded with the same persons if willing to engage, and if no others who had a better claim should come forward, for such lands as might be in a sufficiently improved state of cultivation to warrant the measure, on such terms as the Government should deem fair and equitable. Zemindars declining the proffered engagements, and those whose offers should be rejected by the Government, were to continue to be allowed the same nancar as they had before received from the Nawab Vizier. For the lands which had no proprietors, or of which the proprietors declined entering into engagements, a village settlement was to be made for three years, and a preference was to be given to the moeuddims, purdhauns, or other respectable ryots of the several villages. All persons entering into engagements for the settlement were to bind themselves to grant pottahs to their ryots and under-renters.

The Regulation, besides the republication of the proclamation, contained rules for the discharge of the same revenue duties by collectors in those as in the Lower Provinces, and in like manner under the superintendence of the Board of Revenue. It notified some few alterations in the details of the settlement, which had been issued by the commissioners subsequently to the date of the proclamation; not, however, infringing on the general principles of the proclamation: and it likewise declared the rules for apportioning the revenue on portions of estates when divided for sale, or at the desire of joint proprietors.

REGULATION XXVII.—1803.

Collection of the Revenue and of Arrears.

It was provided that tehseldars or native collectors should be appointed by the European Reg. XXVII. 1803. collectors, to act under their orders in collecting the public dues from those lands, for the revenues of which settlements might not have been concluded with the zemindars. The amount of revenue to be collected by each tehseldar was not to be less than two lacs of rupees nor more than three lacs of rupees per annum, except under the special permission of Government; they were to be allowed eleven and a-half per cent. on their gross collections, from which they were to defray all charges and cover all risk and expenses, to make good all balances which might accrue in their respective jurisdictions, and to maintain an efficient police in their respective jurisdictions; they were also to make advances to the cultivators, taking bonds bearing interest at twelve per cent. per annum; and all engagements concluded by them were to be in the name and on the behalf of Government.* The tehseldars were authorized to place watchmen over the crops, unless the ryots to whom they belonged should give security for the revenue.

The same rules for the recovery of arrears of revenue which were given in this Regulation, though generally conforming to the principles of the Regulations of 1793, were adapted to the state of proprietorship found to exist there in village zemindars holding in shares the property of the soil, and paying their revenues as a collective body, through one or more of the partners whose names were inserted in the engagements of the Government. The Regulation directed that when sequestration was necessary for the recovery of arrear, such sequestration should extend to the profits of all putteedars who should be parties to the Government engagement, without infringing the rights of the inferior sharers; and when at the expiration of the year an arrear should appear due, if the deficiency should have proceeded from embezzlement or misappropriation of the funds, the collector might be authorized by the Board of Revenue to transfer the rights of the defaulter to such other of the partners as should be willing, in consideration of such transfer, to pay up the balance due to Government.

* By Regulation XXI. 1806, the Government were empowered, on the death or removal of the existing tehseldars, to fix anew the amount of personal allowances to be granted to their successors, on consideration of the duties and responsibility with which they might be severally charged. Reg. XXI. 1806.

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued.

Revenue Affairs.

810 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

ment. The defaulter was in such case to retain such portion of the lands as the sharers who should succeed him might be willing to allow.

It was finally provided by this Regulation, that the three years' lease to be concluded by the collectors might at their discretion be made at an increasing instead of a fixed annual jumma; and detailed rules for the formation of such a settlement, and for the security to be taken for its fulfilment, formed part of this Regulation.*

REGULATION IX.—1805.

Revenue Administration of the Conquered Provinces in the Doab and Bundelcund.

Reg. IX. 1805.

THIS enactment republished, in the form of a Regulation, the articles of proclamation issued to the landholders in the Conquered Provinces† within the Doab, ceded by Dowlut Rao Seindiah, and the territory in Bundelcund, ceded by the Peishwa. The proclamation notified that a settlement would be made of the land revenue, separated from the sayer, for three years, from the commencement of Fusly 1213, to be followed, first, by another settlement for the same period, and subsequently by one for four years; and that at the end of the ten years expiring with Fusly 1222, a permanent settlement would be concluded with the same persons, if willing to engage, and if duly approved, for such lands as should be in a sufficiently improved state of cultivation, on such terms as Government should deem fair and equitable. The general principles of the settlement, and the rules for the preservation of right, were similar to those before enacted for the Ceded Provinces of Oude.

REGULATION X.—1807.

Appointment of Commissioners for the formation of the ensuing Settlement in the Ceded and Conquered Provinces.

Reg. X. 1807.

A COMMISSION was appointed by this Regulation for the superintendence of the next ensuing settlements, and for the general control of the collectors in the discharge of that and other duties in the Ceded and Conquered Provinces, with the exception of the Delhi jaghire lands and the zillah of Cuttack. The commission was to consist of two members, who were charged with all the duties and authority of the Board of Revenue, and were to visit the different districts as might appear necessary. The Regulation notified that the jumma which should be assessed in the last year of the settlement immediately ensuing the one then about to be made in the Ceded and Conquered Provinces should remain fixed for ever, if the zemindars should be willing to engage for the payment of the public revenue on those terms in perpetuity, and if the arrangement should receive the sanction of the Court of Directors. The same principle was also declared applicable to Cuttack.

REGULATION I.—1809.

Permanent Establishment of the Board of Commissioners.

Reg. I. 1809.

By this Regulation the Board of Commissioners in the Upper Provinces was declared to be permanent.

REGULATION

Reg. V. 1808.

* Some misapprehensions having existed in regard to the admissibility under certain circumstances, at the end of the first lease of persons claiming to be zemindars, who had been excluded at its commencement, Regulation V. 1808, was enacted to remove such difficulties, and to explain the intentions of Government in that respect.

† These provinces, though obtained in 1803, were not brought under the Regulations until the passing of this enactment, after which the legislative provisions regarding them were united with those for the provinces ceded by the Nawab Vizier.

IV.—JUDICIAL.

811

IV.
APPENDIX.
No. 6.
continued.

REGULATION VIII.*—1811.

Investigation of Tenures held free of Assessment to be made by the Revenue Collector.

IT was stated in the preamble to this Regulation, that there was reason to believe that individuals had unduly availed themselves of the difficulties experienced by public officers in establishing the claims of Government, to the resumption of the revenue lands which had been held free of assessment under invalid tenures, and that as such claims under the existing rules were only cognizable in the courts of judicature, many persons speculating on the chance of their not being enforced, had appropriated to themselves the revenue of lands properly appertaining to the state. The present Regulation enacted, that in those parts of the Ceded and Conquered Provinces which had been declared subject to the authority of the Board of Commissioners, the former rules respecting lands exempted from revenue should be rescinded; and that collectors should report to the Board of Commissioners regarding all lands within those districts, which they might believe to be held so exempt from assessment under invalid tenures, and the Board might direct the collector to investigate the claim and examine the title; and on consideration of his proceedings, they were to decide whether or not the land should be deemed liable to the public assessment. Persons considering themselves aggrieved by the decision of the Board might institute a suit in the courts of judicature against the Government, within six months after the date of the Board's decision. Persons succeeding to tenures free of assessment, whether by gift, purchase, or other transfer, were to notify their succession to the collector within six months, under the penalty of a fine not exceeding a tenth part of the annual produce of the lands.

Revenue Affairs.
Reg. VIII. 1811.
(Rescinded by
Reg. II. 1819.)

REGULATION IX.—1811.

Providing facilities for the Division of Puttecdary Estates or Village Tenures held in Coparcenary.

THIS Regulation was enacted to facilitate the operation of the rules of Regulation V. 1810, and to provide more effectually for the subdivision of puttecdary estates in the village zemindaries in the districts subject to the control of the Board of Commissioners. It declared that any puttecdar or sharer of a joint undivided estate, having a right to one or more distinct village or villages in such estate, might apply to have the same separated; and the same privilege was declared to belong to any sharer holding any fractional part of such estate. The proceedings to be adopted by the collector in the measurement of the portion to be divided, and in investigating questions that might arise in the course of such proceedings were laid down, and it was declared that after the separation had taken place, no separated portion was to be held answerable for any arrears of revenue which might accrue on the other parts of the estate.

Reg. IX. 1811.

The Board of Commissioners were further empowered, in cases of default in the payment of the revenue by any joint sharer, to authorize a conditional transfer of the share of such defaulting proprietor, by way of mortgage, to the proprietor of any other share of the same general estate; possession to be restored to the defaulting proprietor on payment of the consideration for which it had been transferred, at any time within five years from the date of the transfer. If payment of the principal and interest should not be tendered within five years, the share was to become the bonâ fide property of the mortgagee.

REGULATION IX.—1812.

Settlement of the Revenue of the Ceded Provinces in Oude after Fusly 1219.

THIS Regulation, referring to the declaration in Regulation X. 1807, that the jumma assessed upon the estates in the Ceded Provinces in the last year of the quartennial settlement,

Reg. IX. 1812.

* This Regulation was extended to Cuttack by Regulation V. of 1813, and to Bahar and Benares by Regulation XI. 1817.

812 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

ment, terminating with the Fusly year 1219, should remain fixed for ever, provided the arrangement should receive the sanction of the Honourable Court of Directors, notified that the said Honourable Court had not deemed it advisable to sanction that arrangement; it therefore rescinded the provisional clause referred to, but declared that the rule which notified that a permanent settlement would be concluded for such lands as might be in a sufficiently improved state of cultivation to warrant the measure, on such terms as the Government should deem fair and equitable, was to be considered in full force and effect. This Regulation accordingly directed, that the Board of Commissioners should ascertain and report to the Government what estates were in such condition; and that in all such cases a revision should be made of the jumma assessed upon those estates, on the principle of leaving to the proprietors a net income of ten per cent. on the jumma, exclusive of charges of collection; the jumma to be so assessed, when confirmed by Government, was to remain fixed for ever. The Board of Commissioners were likewise to report to Government the condition of estates not so improved, and the Government would determine the settlement of such estates should be made for three, five, or any other term of years.

REGULATION X.—1812.

Settlement of the Revenue in the Conquered Provinces on the Jumna, and in Cuttack.

Reg. X. 1812.

THIS Regulation (referring to the Regulations IX. and XII. 1805, and X. 1807, and to the declaration that the settlements to which they respectively referred in the Conquered Provinces, and on the right and left banks of the Jumna and in Cuttack, would be made permanent, at the amount of the settlement of the last year of that period, in the event of that arrangement receiving the sanction of the Court of Directors) notified, that the Court had not deemed it advisable to confirm that arrangement. It was however declared that the same course would be adopted in regard to lands in a sufficiently advanced state of cultivation to admit of the assessment being fixed, as was provided in regard to the Oude provinces by Regulation IX. 1812.

REGULATION I.—1815.

Life Tenures at a fixed favourable Assessment, under Grants from the Native Government.

Reg. I. 1815.

THE preamble noticed the permission granted by the British Government to the occupants of land in the Ceded and Conquered Provinces and in Bundelcund, held at a fixed favourable jumma, under recognized grants of the native governments, to hold the same according to the terms of the grants during life; and in order to obviate every doubt respecting the right of the British Government to impose an adequate assessment on such lands on the death of the life tenants, the Regulation declared it to be the duty of the collectors, on the death of any such grantee, to fix an adequate assessment on the lands, subject to the final orders of the Board of Commissioners and the Government.

REGULATION XVI.—1816.

Settlement of the Revenue in the Ceded Provinces of Oude till Fusly 1229.

Reg. XVI. 1816.

A SETTLEMENT having been made in these provinces (under the provision in the latter part of Regulation IX. 1812) which would expire in Fusly 1224, this Regulation declared that the extension of that settlement for a further period was calculated to promote the interests of the landholders, whilst it would afford due time to the public officers to collect the materials indispensably necessary as the basis of any ulterior proceeding. It accordingly declared, that the then existing settlement should continue in force until the expiration of the Fusly year 1229, under certain detailed provisions.

IV.—JUDICIAL.

813

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued

REGULATION II.—1818.

Settlement of the new Territories annexed to Bundelcund.

CERTAIN districts ceded to the East-India Company by Nana* Govind Rao having been annexed to the zillah of Bundelcund, power was reserved to the Government to fix at their pleasure the periods for the formation of the revenue settlements of these districts.

The revenue authorities were directed to ascertain and record the customary rights, usages, and privileges of the several proprietors and occupants of land in these districts, in which it was understood that many of the estates were held by numerous proprietors in joint tenancy.

Revenue Affairs.
Reg. II. 1818.

REGULATION IX.—1818.

Settlement of the Revenue in the Conquered Provinces after Fusly 1227.

THE settlement formed under the provisions of Regulation X. 1812, in the Conquered Provinces on the Jumna, and in the Peishwa's cessions in Bundelcund, being to expire with the Fusly year 1227, it was provided that the same settlement should continue for five years more with the actual proprietors of the soil. From this arrangement, however, was excluded the southern division of Saharimpore, of which the settlement had been formed on very insufficient data, and in which a new settlement was to be made for a term of five years.

Reg. IX. 1818.

REGULATION I.—1821.

Appointment of a Special Commission to afford Redress in Cases of illegal Transfer and Appropriation of Lands in the Ceded and Conquered Provinces.

THE preamble to this Regulation stated, that during the first seven or eight years after the acquisition of the Ceded Provinces, the native officers of the Government, and persons connected with them, had contrived by various fraudulent practices to possess themselves of extensive estates in those provinces, wrongfully depriving the ancient landholders of their just rights. The means chiefly resorted to, in furtherance of these iniquitous practices, were the abuse and perversion of the rules for the sale of lands on account of arrears of revenue. Such sales, it was observed, were meant by the law to be had recourse to in cases of embezzlement, contumacy, or fraud; whereas it appeared, that in the prosecution of the fraudulent schemes above noticed, many estates had been sold on which a trifling balance only was due, which had accrued without either embezzlement or wilful default on the part of the person who had engaged to pay the revenue. In some cases, the prescribed forms had been observed; in others, the liability of the proprietors had not been ascertained, as where the parties who had become responsible for the revenue had only a very limited interest, or no fixed right, in the mehals sold, but had been recorded as proprietors on the faith of fraudulent statements; in other cases, the tehseeldars themselves had been the real managers of the estates, having substituted creatures of their own, or even fictitious names, as the ostensible payers of the revenue; under such circumstances the tehseeldars, in collusion with the persons fraudulently recorded as proprietors, had procured sales to be effected for the purpose of acquiring thereby an ostensible title for themselves or their agents. In other cases, the persons fraudulently recorded as sole proprietors of mehals, in which they held a limited or no interest, had been induced to execute deeds of sale in favour of the public officers or their connexions, purporting to convey the exclusive property of the lands comprised in the mehal, of which they were the ostensible proprietors, and on the faith of such deeds the purchasers had been recorded as sole proprietors. The consequences were an extensive usurpation of private rights, and the annihilation of institutions by which the village communities had immemorially been regulated. It was further stated, that in many cases of sales which had been legally and

Reg. I. 1830.

* Of Kalpee, a dependant on the Peishwa's government, and jaghirdar or manager of Saugur on the frontier of Bundelcund.

and correctly effected, the purchasers had claimed to possess the whole of the land comprised in the mehals sold, without regard to the private rights of village zemindars, puttecdars, and other proprietors, whose tenures were independent of the revenue engagements of the defaulter; the only change in reality effected by the sale, as regarded such persons, being a transfer of their obligations (viz. to pay their quota of revenue) from the defaulter to the purchaser; whereas by the irregularities above noticed, such puttecdars and others had been deprived of their just rights, and either ousted from their lands or reduced to the condition of tenants at will. Independently of the before-mentioned cases of abusive alienation, much serious injury appeared to have accrued to the village proprietors from the insufficiencies, errors, and defects of the public records, in relation to the various rights and interests of individuals and communities in the land, whereby persons justly entitled to engage in chief for the revenues of the lands occupied by them, had been excluded in favour of others erroneously recorded as proprietors. The parties who had suffered these wrongs were prevented from obtaining redress by their poverty and ignorance of the forms of judicial proceedings; while those by whose acts they had been injured, possessed extensive influence and authority as public officers of Government, and had a thorough acquaintance with all the prescribed forms of procedure.

The preamble proceeded to set forth the grounds on which it appeared that the regular courts of judicature were not competent to afford the extensive relief which the cases referred to required. It was stated, that much delay and expense necessarily attended judicial proceeding; that in order to render substantial justice in such cases, a thorough research into voluminous and complicated revenue accounts, minute local inquiries, and a free and constant communication with the parties concerned, and with the local officers, such as the constitution of the established courts would not admit of their pursuing, must necessarily be resorted to; that in the adjustment of doubtful claims, an extensive discretion must be exercised by the deciding authority, inconsistent with the practice of the regular judicial tribunals; and that finally, if all these and other obstructions to the course of regular judicial proceeding could be removed, so great a portion of time could not be bestowed by the courts as would be requisite for the due investigation of such cases, without serious injury to the interests of the other suitors. In consideration of the above circumstances, it had appeared to the Governor-general in Council to be essentially necessary to the ends of justice, that a special commission, with large discretionary powers, and with full authority to regulate its proceedings according to the exigencies of the cases brought before it, should be constituted for the purpose of restoring to their just rights the zemindars and other proprietors who had been wrongfully dispossessed, and defining and fixing the real nature and extent of the interests and titles conveyed to the purchasers, in cases in which sales might be upheld; of restoring proprietors whose estates might, in consequence of the errors in the administration above noticed, have been transferred to others, on account of a trifling balance, or for inadequate consideration; of granting redress to persons who might have lost the possession or management of their estates without just cause, under the operation of a public sale, or through any act of a revenue officer, or who might have been wrongfully excluded from engagements with Government; and of making an equitable adjustment of doubtful claims, including the relinquishment, upon due compensation, of rights acquired or held under the strict operation of the law, by means inconsistent with equity and justice, or involving excessive hardship to the sufferers.

In furtherance of the views above detailed, the Regulation provided for the appointment of a special commission, to consist of one or more members, as the Governor-general in Council should determine, to be denominated the "Mofussil Special Commission under Regulation I. of 1821," who should receive, investigate, and determine all claims to recover possession of land lying within such limits as the Governor-general in Council might from time to time appoint, which had been lost by sales or transfers under the undue influence of public officers, from the period of the cession or conquest of the province.

The commissioners were authorized to annul public sales, in cases in which it should appear to them that no balance, or a very trifling balance, was due when the sale was made, or that the the sale had been irregular in any important point, or that the purchase had been made by a public officer or a dependent of his, or in a fictitious name; and they were to direct the restoration of the property to the proprietors who had lost possession under the operation of the sale. They were also authorized to annul private transfers effected by violence, extortion, or undue influence of the officers of Government; and on like grounds to determine mortgages and trusts, and other limited or conditional assignments. They were authorized to try and decide upon claims for the recovery of lands belonging to any mehal which had been lost to the claimant by an invalid sale; or though the sale were valid, by illegal consequences resulting from the effects of that sale. And they were to investigate all claims of persons admitted to engage in chief with Government whose proprietary right had been unduly set aside. They were to record on their proceedings clear definitions of all rights and interests ascertained and decided by them. In cases in which relief might appear to be due according to equity, but not under any Regulation, the commission might use its authority to induce the parties to compromise; and failing that endeavour, they might make such award as equity and good conscience should require. And where a title had been acquired under any order or act of the revenue authorities of Government, the commission might award compensation to the party deprived, provided that in cases of compensation exceeding 1,000 rupees, the sanction of Government should be first obtained for the disbursement. The jurisdiction of the commission was to extend to all cases of the nature of those before described, even to the annulling of previous decisions of the courts of judicature, and within such local limits as the Governor-general in Council should notify by proclamation, which would likewise specify the period for which the commission should be appointed. The commission were empowered, either on the application of parties, or of their own motion, to call up pending cases from the courts in which they have been instituted. On the removal of any suit from a court to be tried by the commission, stamp fees were to be repaid to the parties. The commission were vested generally with the same powers in the execution of their duties as were possessed by the civil court; and they were to exercise the same authority over canoongoes, putwarries, and other officers of account in the provinces as the collectors and courts were authorized to exercise.

Provision was next made for the appointment of a superior or chief special commission, to be denominated the "Sudder Special Commission," who should have authority to superintend and review the decisions passed by the Mofussil Commission: it was to consist of two or more such officers as the Government might appoint, and was to exercise generally over the Mofussil Commission the same authority as the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut exercised over civil tribunals. The decisions of the Mofussil Commission, unless revised and altered by the Sudder Commission, or appealed to them within the period of six months from the date of the decree appealed against, were to be final. In cases which, if decided by the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, would have been appealable to the King in Council, such appeal was to lie from the decisions of the Sudder Commission, and under the same rules and regulations; but the decisions of the Sudder Commission were to be immediately executed, notwithstanding the institution of the appeal to his Majesty in Council. No exceptions were to be taken to the decisions of either of the commissions on the ground of want of jurisdiction, except by the Sudder Commission in cases appealed to them from the Mofussil Commission, or by his Majesty in Council; and no courts of judicature were to stay the proceedings of the commission.

The commissioners were to be guided generally by the rules prescribed for the courts of civil judicature, and were to decide according to the principles and spirit of the Regulations, and according to equity and good conscience. They were also authorized to submit to Government new Regulations, or modifications of existing ones. The commissioners were to take an oath of office.*

REGULATION

* It was provided by Regulation XVIII. 1829, that in cases which were depending in the courts of justice, and which were declared cognizable by the Commissioners of Revenue (and Circuit), succeeding to the powers of the Mofussil Special Commissioners, the parties should be required by the courts to state whether it was their wish that their suits should be transferred to the said commissioners. If either party desired the transfer, the proceedings and documents in the case were to be made over by the court to the commissioners; but if neither party desired the transfer, the court were to proceed to adjudication.

REGULATION VII.—1822.

Revenue Affairs.

Declaring the Principles on which the future Settlements of the Revenue should be made in the Ceded and Conquered Provinces.—Extension of the Revenue and Judicial powers of Collectors.

Reg. VII. 1822.

THIS Regulation, framed at the expiration of the settlements of the revenue in the Ceded and Conquered Provinces and Cuttack, and contemplating the early termination of those in other portions of the provinces, was intended to lay down the principles on which the demand of the state was thenceforward to be regulated, and the manner in which future settlements and revisions were to be conducted. It declared that the efforts of the revenue officers should be directed chiefly, not to any general enhancement of the assessment, but to the equalization of the public burdens, and the ascertaining, settling, and recording the rights, interests, privileges, and properties of all persons and classes owning, occupying, managing, or cultivating the land, or gathering or disposing of its produce, or collecting or appropriating the rent or revenue payable on account of land or the produce of land, or paying or receiving any cesses, contributions, or perquisites to or from any persons resident in, or owning, occupying, or holding parcel of any village or mehal. With these views and intentions, the Government had deemed it proper to continue, with certain exceptions, the existing assessment, where it had been formed with the zemindars or other persons acknowledged as proprietors, or possessors of a permanent interest in the mehal for which they had engaged, until a new settlement could be made after a deliberate investigation, not only of the facts by which the amount of the Government assessment ought to be determined, but also of the rights and interests of all classes connected with the land.

It was stated to be the desire of the Government, that while collectors were engaged in these inquiries, they should be empowered to adjudge and determine upon all demands, claims, and suits regarding lands and revenue which might come before them, and that such adjudications should be held good unless they should be declared erroneous or incomplete by a regular suit in a court of justice. For this purpose it was necessary to define the power and authority to be exercised by collectors in these respects. It was further declared expedient to state the views of Government relative to the rights of all sudder malguzars, i.e. persons who engaged for the payment of the Government revenue into the public treasury; and relative to the rights of jaghirdars and other owners or managers of lands not paying any portion of their produce to the public treasury. Another object was declared to be to protect the interests of the coparceners in joint tenures, such as those known by the name of putteedaree or byecharee, from the encroachments of the parceners who should have engaged with the Government for the payment of the revenue on all the shares; and on the other hand, to secure the engaging parceners from the consequences of embezzlement, or misappropriation by their coparcener, of the funds from which the Government revenue ought to be discharged.

With the views so announced in the preamble, the Regulation began by declaring that the settlement in the Ceded Provinces and Cuttack was to be continued for five years, till the expiration of the revenue year 1234, provision being made for particular divisions, in which the custom of an annual settlement had obtained.

With respect to lands which had been let in farm, it was declared that at the expiration of the leases a settlement might be made with the zemindars, or others possessing a permanent property in the mehals; or in case of their declining to engage, they might again be let in farm, but for periods not exceeding twelve years.

It was distinctly declared, that in admitting particular parties to engage with the Government for the revenue of any lands, it was in no degree the intention of Government to compromise any private rights or privileges possessed by under-tenants or original payers of revenue; that, on the contrary, it was the bounden duty of the officers of Government to protect all such rights, and that the stipulations of the existing settlements should not be construed construed to prevent the revenue officers, duly empowered in that behalf, from interfering to adjust the relative rights of the sudder malguzars and the under-tenants.

Rules were laid down for the adjustment of the malikanah to be received by proprietors whose estates should be let to farm or held khas, such malikanah not to be less than five or more than ten per cent., to be apportioned to the several coparceners in joint estates, and to be subject to deductions in case of any actual profits drawn from their estates by the proprietors, and also admitting increase at the pleasure of the Government for any special duties that might be performed by such proprietors.

The Regulation next provided, that during the period for which the settlements were to be renewed or continued under the present Regulation, it should be competent to the revenue officers to institute full and particular investigations into the extent and produce of the lands, and the due amount of the assessment to which they should be subject; and also into the rights, privileges, interests, and properties of the agricultural community; but no increase of the existing assessment was to be made during the period of the existing leases, except on the discovery of land fraudulently concealed; and on such land it was to be competent to the collector to impose a proper assessment under the authority of the Board of Commissioners. It was provided, that after the investigation directed by this enactment had been completed, engagements might be entered into with proprietors willing so to engage for such periods beyond the time of the then existing engagements, as the Government might determine; but no increase of the revenue was to take place, unless it should clearly appear that the net profits to be derived from the land by the zemindars would exceed one-fifth of the previous assessment; and in the event of such increase being made, the assessment was to be so regulated as to leave to the zemindars a net profit of twenty per cent. on the jumma.

In cases of extensive waste lands belonging to any mehal greatly exceeding the quantity required for pasturage or other useful purposes, it was declared competent to Government to grant leases for portions thereof in perpetuity or for long periods, assigning in such case to zemindars or others, who might establish a right of property in the waste lands so granted, an allowance equivalent to ten per cent. on the assessments, in lieu and bar of all rights, privileges, and perquisites therein.

The Regulation next proceeded to specify the details of the investigation to be made by collectors in regard to the tenures, rights, and privileges of the various classes of the agricultural community. It was directed that their proceedings should embrace the formation of as accurate a record as possible of local usages connected with landed tenures; a specification of the persons enjoying the possession or having any heritable or transferable interest in the lands or the rents of it; in cases of villages or the like held in coparcenary, the record was to contain a register of every person who occupied lands or disposed of its produce or received rents, with a detailed statement of the interior arrangements adopted by the brotherhood or coparcenary for the distribution of profits, and for determining the respective contributions of each parcener to the Government assessment or the village expenses. A record was also to be formed of the rates demandable from all the different classes of cultivators, and the number and allowances of all putwarrees or village registrars and village watchmen; and also a specification of the nature of all lakhiraj tenures. The information to be collected was to be arranged and recorded so as to admit of an immediate reference to it by the courts of judicature; and these records were to be considered evidence of the facts to which they related, until set aside by a judicial inquiry. All collections not taken into account in making the Government engagements were to be held illegal. It was declared competent to collectors to grant to village zemindars and ryots pottahs specifying the amount to be paid by them and all the conditions of their tenure, and all such pottahs were to be recorded in the collectors' proceedings.

Provision was next made for admitting the different classes of persons having joint or separate interests in villages or mehals to engage with the Government according to their several rights; the nature of the responsibility of those members of a coparcenary, or a community who should engage on behalf of their brethren, and the relation in which the other sharers sharers, or proprietors should be considered to stand towards them were defined; it was also provided, that when engagements for the revenues of lands in which such rights existed should be made with an intermediate agent, a record of the rights of the proprietors or hereditary officers of the soil should be endorsed upon or incorporated with the engagements taken from the sudder malguzar. It was left to the discretion of Government to determine in what cases the engagements for lands held in joint tenancy should be made with the whole body collectively, or with one parcener on behalf of the whole, or with each individual for his own share. In making the record above directed, collectors were to record the authority on which their entries rested. They were also to rectify all errors or omissions of former settlements, holding in such cases an official proceeding explanatory of the grounds on which they acted.

Revenue Affairs.

The collectors were authorized to give effect to the custom in regard to lands held in joint tenancy, of distributing the payments according to the shares, or of causing fresh partitions of the land according to the rights of the several joint proprietors. It was declared competent, however, to any such proprietors who might dispute the existence of the custom under which such distribution might be made, to institute a suit for setting aside the collector's decision on that point; but if the existence of the disputed custom was established by such suits, it was not to be competent to the court to question the accuracy of the partition of the land, or the adjustment of the payments.

The Regulation next empowered collectors to decide in the first instance on questions of right of occupancy, which should come before them while making or revising settlements. In disputes of this nature, they were empowered to declare the nature of the tenure of any persons occupying the soil, and the extent of the interest belonging to any sharer in a village, and to enforce their decisions in the first instance, leaving the party who might deem himself aggrieved to seek redress in a regular suit in the Adawlut; provided that collectors should in no case take cognizance of any claim to hold a larger portion or a more extensive property than was alleged to have been before possessed by the claimant. Collectors were also authorized to take cognizance of questions of dispossession, and to award possession, if the party complaining of being dispossessed had held the litigated property during the year before the complaint.

In the settlement of lands resumed, as having been held free of the assessment without a valid title, it was declared competent to collectors to investigate all claims to property in such land, and to give possession to, and conclude a settlement with the party who should appear to have the best title, and this decision, subject to the orders of the superior Revenue Board, was not to be set aside except on a regular suit and judgment by a court of justice.

The Governor-general in Council might give to collectors making or revising the settlement of any mehal, whether before held free of assessment or subject thereto, power to take cognizance of claims to the property or possession of the lands lying within such mehal, or the rent or produce thereof, the grant of such special power being notified by proclamation.

Collectors were empowered, while making or revising the settlement of any district, to hear and determine claims to right of property in lands held free from Government assessment on valid tenures, and if satisfied that the claimants possessed an hereditary and transferable property in the land or its produce, then to conclude a settlement with such persons on behalf of the person enjoying the revenue, for such period as the Governor-general in Council should direct; they might grant to the persons who had established the right of property in the land, pottahs declaratory of their tenure; and they might further fix the amount of proprietary allowance, which the receivers of the revenue should be bound to make to them in the event of their being removed from the occupancy and management of the lands. Persons dissatisfied with the collector's decision might appeal to the civil courts on the question of right of property, but not as to the terms of settlement for the amount of proprietary allowance; the courts were not to disturb the possession given by the collector except on the decision of a regular suit.

Full powers were granted to the collectors to summon and examine witnesses, and to require the production of accounts; and penalties were declared for resistance of process or refusal to give evidence, and for false testimony on oath.

It was declared competent to the Governor-general in Council to restrict the powers to be exercised in the matters before stated, by collectors engaged in revising or making settlements; and also to vest all such powers in collectors, though not engaged in making or revising settlements; and to vest in any collectors, whenever he might think proper, authority to hear and determine by summary process all suits between receivers and payers of revenue in all matters connected with land, its rents and produce, the delivery of pottahs, the violation of engagements, and generally all disputes between persons who pay the revenue to Government and those from whom they receive; the grant of such powers to be notified by proclamation; in which cases all suits of the above descriptions pending in the courts were to be immediately transferred to the primary cognizance of the collector, provided the plaint or application should have been preferred within one year after the cause of action arose.

The powers and proceedings of collectors in the conduct of these suits were to be similar to those exercised by the zillah courts; and it was declared that their cutcherry or office should for the time being be deemed to be a court of civil judicature. The decisions of the collectors were only to be set aside by regular suits, which might be brought in order to contest decisions passed by collectors under the judicial powers granted by this Regulation. Such suits were to be in the nature of appeals to the court in its regular jurisdiction from a summary award. The collectors were to execute the awards they might make for the payment of any sums of money, by levying the same by the process in use for the recovery of arrears of revenue. In regard to real property adjudged, the collectors were to put the parties into possession, but were not to sell any real property in satisfaction of any judgment on a summary investigation.

Collectors making or revising settlements might appoint native officers to make investigations, examine accounts, and measure lands; and resistance to their measures in these respects was declared punishable.

In summary suits before collectors under this Regulation, parties might employ any vakeels they chose, and the collectors might award to them a fit remuneration. The pleadings, which were to consist only of plaint and answer, and the final decree, were to be written on stamp-paper of the value of half a rupee, and no other fees or expenses were to be incurred. The collector might hold his court in any part of the district, but the suits must be heard in public, and in the presence of the parties or their vakeels.

A petition of appeal against any decision of a collector under this Regulation might be presented to the superior Revenue Board, written on stamp-paper of two rupees within three months from the date of the decision; no other pleading was to be required; the parties, who were to receive notice of the appeal, were not required to be present, the Board would decide on consideration of the collector's proceedings. Parties dissatisfied with the decision of the Board might prefer a regular suit in the civil court, but the summary judgment of the collector, if not reversed or stayed by the Board, was to be carried into effect, notwithstanding the institution of a regular suit.

In regular suits instituted in the civil court to set aside the decision of a collector, the proceedings held upon his summary inquiry were to be called for by the court, and to form part of the record of the case; and no such suit was to be cognizable by or referred to a registrar or native commissioner.

Collectors were to furnish the superior Boards with periodical reports of their decisions.

Power was given to collectors to refer to arbitration, with the consent of the parties, all such questions as they were enabled themselves to determine by this Regulation, and to carry the award into execution; the pergunnah canoongoes and tehseeldars might be appointed arbitrators in such cases.

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued.
Revenue Affairs.

820 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

In cases in which disputes might exist in regard to rights or possession, likely to produce breaches of the peace, it was declared competent to the collectors to require the attendance of the parties, and to decide the case as if it had been brought before him by complaint of one of the parties; collectors might also give possession, or retain the lands under the management of a public officer, subject in all cases to the orders of the superior Board. When any case similar to the above might come under the cognizance of a magistrate, he was to refer the question of right for the examination and decision of the collector.*

REGULATION I.—1823.

Explanatory of the Powers of the Special Commission under Regulation I. of 1821.

Reg. I. 1823.

THIS Regulation was enacted to remove a doubt which had existed as to the power of the special commission to annul sales of land under any other circumstances than those of such sales having been effected by the undue influence of public officers; and it was declared that they had authority to entertain and decide suits for annulment of any sales, by which an unjust transfer of rights had been effected, though there might be no proof that such undue influence had been exercised; and it was further provided, in regard to any cases which such commissioners might have dismissed, under the erroneous views before mentioned, that they might rehear the same, and pass judgment thereupon.

REGULATION IX.—1824.

Settlement of the Conquered Provinces and Bundelcund.

Reg. IX. 1824.

THE preamble to this Regulation recited that the then existing settlement of the Conquered Provinces and Bundelcund would expire with the ensuing Fusly 1232 (A. D. 1824-5), but that it was expedient to continue it for a further period, until a careful revision could be completed, and that it was desirable to make further provision for securing the improvement of the country. The Regulation accordingly provided for the renewal of the existing settlement for five years, from Fusly 1233 to 1237 inclusive, with power to the collector, subject to the orders of the Board of Revenue, to make a resettlement, in regard to any particular mehals in which a revision had taken place, under the rules of Regulation VII. 1822. It was further enacted, that at the expiration of the five years of the settlement thus renewed, the same engagements should continue in force until a detailed revision, as prescribed by Regulation VII. 1822, or otherwise specially authorized by Government, should have been made, and until due notice should have been given to the landholder of a new assessment by the Board of Revenue. Estates which had been let on farm were to be resettled, and zemindars to be admitted to a preference of settlement. Power was reserved to the Board of Revenue, with the sanction of Government, to renew farm leases, or to keep the lands which had been farmed under khas management.

REGULATION II.—1826.

Settlement of the Ceded Provinces in Oude.

Reg. II. 1826.

THE settlement of the Ceded Provinces in Oude being about to expire in Fusly 1234, it was provided by this Regulation, that the same should be extended for a further term of five years, with the persons recorded as proprietors or possessors of a permanent interest in the lands.

Reg. IX. 1825.

* By Regulation IX. 1825, this Regulation was extended to the other provinces under the Bengal Government; see Revenue (A.)

Reg. IV. 1828.

By Regulation IV. 1828, collectors were declared competent, while engaged in revising settlements under Regulation VII. 1822, to hear, try, and determine all claims to property within the limits of their revenue jurisdiction under that Regulation, and to set aside all summary decisions of magistrates passed under Regulation XV. 1824. The decision of the registrar was not to be disturbed, except by order of the superior Board, or by a judgment upon a regular suit. The Regulation specified the period during which a collector should be held to possess the special authority vested in him by Regulation VII. 1822, viz. from the date on which the first orders should be issued, of which intimation was to be given to the magistrate, until the date when the revenue settlement in which he was engaged should be finally sanctioned by Government.

lands, and should continue until a careful revision of the settlement should have been effected. In cases in which such revision might have been already effected, new engagements and settlements might be entered into. At the expiration of existing farm leases, new settlements might be made with the zemindars, if willing to engage. If they were unwilling to engage, the lands might again be let on farm leases for periods not exceeding twelve years. Zemindars who had wilfully deteriorated their estates were to be excluded from settlement, and their lands might be let on farm leases for fifteen years.

REGULATION VI.—1831.

*Revenue Administration of the Conquered Provinces in the Doab and Bundelcund.

By this Regulation the judicial powers exercised by the resident at Delhi were to cease, and the police and criminal authority exercised by British officers under the instructions of the Government in the Saugor and Nerbudda territories were also to cease. On the promulgation of this Regulation the commissioner who was to have authority in those territories was to exercise the duties of commissioner of circuit in the trial of criminal cases, but without referring his proceedings for the futwa of a Mahomedan law officer. In cases in which the commissioner was not competent to pass sentence himself, he was to refer the case to the final decision of the Nizamut Adawlut for the Western Provinces, accompanied with an explanation of any special customs, the knowledge of which might be necessary to the proper understanding of the proceedings; and the Nizamut Adawlut for the Western Provinces, upon the receipt of such referred trial, were to pass a final judgment without referring the proceedings to their law officers. The commissioner in the Saugor and Nerbudda territories was to be guided generally by the existing Regulations; but it was declared competent to the Governor-general in Council to issue from time to time, under the official signature of a secretary to Government, any special rules that might be deemed necessary for regulating the process before trial, or the form of trial to be observed by such commissioner.

Reg. VI. 1831.

REGULATION X.—1831.

A Board established at Allahabad, by Deputation from the Sudder Board at the Presidency.

THE preamble declared it to be requisite, in order to the efficient superintendence of the revenue settlements in progress in the Western Provinces, and generally of the revenue arrangements in those remote dependencies, to provide for the temporary deputation of one or more members from the Sudder Board to be ordinarily stationed at Allahabad, and to possess exclusive control in those matters over the tracts of country placed under their management. The Regulation accordingly authorized the Governor-general in Council to depute one or more members of the Sudder Board to exercise such authority at Allahabad. The authority of the Sudder Board at the Presidency was to cease in the districts placed under the Sudder Board on deputation, whose jurisdiction was to embrace the province of Kumaon and the Saugor and Nerbudda territories. The Board on deputation were declared to be vested with all the powers of the Sudder Board of the Presidency, and were to be guided by the same rules and regulations. Whenever the number of members present with the Board on deputation should be reduced to one-half, or if two should be present, and a difference of opinion should arise between them on a subject requiring the concurrence of two voices, the question was to be referred for determination to the Sudder Board at the Presidency. Similar references might be made from the Sudder Board at the Presidency to the Board on deputation. It was declared competent, however, to the Governor-general in Council to vest a single member with the whole powers of the Board whenever he should deem such measure expedient. He might also fix the station of the Board on deputation at any place he might see fit.

Reg. X. 1831.

* See Special Judicial Regulations (B.) page 617.

PART II.—LAND REVENUE—SPECIAL—continued.

(C.)

SPECIAL REVENUE REGULATIONS for CUTTACK.

Regulations.

LIST.

- XII. 1805.—Principles of the Revenue Settlement.
- X. 1807.—Settlement of the Revenue.
- VI. 1808.—Appointment of a Commission for Cuttack.
- IV. 1810.—Abolition of the Cuttack Commission.
- X. 1812.—Settlement of the Revenue.
- I. 1813.—Ditto ditto.
- III. 1815.—Ditto ditto.
- VI. 1816.—Ditto ditto.
- XIII. 1818.—Ditto ditto.

REGULATION XII.—1805.

Principles of the Revenue Settlement.

Reg. XII. 1805.

THIS Regulation recited the proclamation relative to the settlement of the land revenue in the territory called "Mogulbundy," being that part of the zillah of Cuttack in which, according to established usage, as in Bengal, the land itself was responsible for the public revenue. The proclamation dated the 15th September 1804 notified, that at the commencement of the Umlee year 1212, the land revenue would be separated from the sayor, and a settlement would be made for the former in all practicable cases with the zemindars for one year; that at the end of that year a settlement for three years would be concluded; then one for four years; and finally, one for three years more; at the end of which a permanent settlement would be concluded with the same persons, if having the best claim and being willing to engage, for such lands as should be in a sufficiently improved state of cultivation, on such terms as the Government should deem fair. All sayor duties were declared to be abolished, with the exception of those on spirituous liquors and the duties levied from pilgrims at Juggernath. The same provisions were made in this as in the other proclamations in newly conquered provinces for the preservation of the existing rights which might be in abeyance. The Regulation extended the provisions of the principal Revenue Regulations enacted in previous years, adapting them in particular instances to the circumstances of the province of Cuttack.

REGULATION X.—1807.

Settlement of the Revenue.

Reg. X. 1807.

IT was declared by this Regulation, that the jumma which should be assessed on the estates of the zemindars in the last year of the settlement immediately ensuing the one then existing should remain fixed for ever, if the zemindars should be willing to engage for the payment of the public revenue on those terms in perpetuity, and if the arrangement should receive the sanction of the Court of Directors.

REGULATION

IV.—JUDICIAL.

828

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued.

REGULATION VI.—1808.

Appointment of a Commission for Cuttack.

Revenue Affairs.

By this Regulation a commission of one or more members, as the Governor-general should direct, was appointed for the formation of the ensuing settlement, and for the general superintendence of the revenue affairs, with the powers of the Board of Revenue; and it was notified, that an assessment for one year (Umlee 1216) would be made, after which a settlement for three years; and that the jumma which should be assessed on the lands in the Umlee year 1219 should remain fixed for ever, if the zemindars were willing to engage for the payment of the public revenue on those terms, and if the arrangement should receive the sanction of the Court of Directors. Reg. VI. 1808.

REGULATION IV.—1810.

Abolition of the Cuttack Commission.

THE office of commissioner in Cuttack was abolished in 1810, the objects for which it was established having been accomplished; and the revenue affairs of the province were retransferred to the superintendence of the Board of Revenue. Reg. IV. 1810.

REGULATION X.—1812.

Settlement of the Revenue.

THIS Regulation notified that the Honourable Court of Directors had not deemed it expedient to confirm the arrangements which had been conditionally notified in Regulation X. 1807, and VI. of 1808. It was however declared, that at the expiration of the Fusly 1222, a permanent settlement would be concluded with the proprietors (if willing so to engage) of such estates as should be in a sufficiently improved state of cultivation to warrant that measure. In all such cases a revision would be made of the jumma, on the principle of leaving to the proprietors a net income of ten per cent. thereon, exclusive of the charges of collection. Reg. X. 1812.

REGULATION I.—1813.

Settlement of the Revenue.

IT was declared in this Regulation, that the unavoidable delays which had occurred in carrying into effect the intended arrangements declared in Regulation X. 1812, had rendered it inexpedient that a settlement should be formed for so long a period as three years; the Regulation therefore enacted, that a settlement should be made for one year, viz. 1220 Umlee, and on the expiration of that year a settlement for two years, viz. 1221 and 1222 Umlee; and that at the end of Umlee 1822, the Board of Revenue would conform to the provisions of Regulation X. 1812. Reg. I. 1813.

REGULATION III.—1815.

Settlement of the Revenue.

THE settlements about to expire with the Umlee year 1222 were directed to continue for one year longer. Reg. III. 1815.

IV.
APPENDIX,
No. 6.
continued.

Revenue Affairs.

824 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

REGULATION VI.—1816.

Settlement of the Revenue.

Reg. VI. 1816.

THIS Regulation declared that the information which had up to that time been acquired by the revenue authorities, and by the Government, respecting the limits and produce of the several estates comprised within the said district, was too imperfect, with reference to the rights either of the Government or of the proprietors, to afford grounds for the proper adjustment of an assessment which should remain fixed in perpetuity. It was therefore declared that the then existing settlement should continue in force until the expiration of the Umlee year 1226.

REGULATION XIII.—1818.

Settlement of the Revenue of Cuttack.

Reg. XIII. 1818.

By this Regulation the settlement which was to expire with the Umlee year 1226, was ordered to continue in force until the expiration of 1229, with all proprietors who might choose to continue their engagements for that period. In the cases of zemindars not choosing to renew their engagements, or where no proprietors were forthcoming, the lands might be let to farm for a period not exceeding ten years, and the zemindars were to be entitled to their malikanah. Provision was likewise made in certain cases for the management of lands under the collector.

PART III.

LAND REVENUE.—MISCELLANEOUS.

Miscellaneous Rules in the Revenue Department.

LIST.

Regulations.

XXXIII. 1793. —Repair of Public Works—Advances of Money for Private Works.

- | | | |
|-----|---------|--|
| VI. | 1806. — | } For the more efficient Superintendence and Improvement of Embankments and Works of Irrigation. |
| XI. | 1829. — | |

RULES relative to the Offices of Canoongoe and Putwarry.

- | | | |
|-------|---------|--------------|
| IV. | 1808. — | } Canoongoe. |
| I. | 1819. — | |
| XIII. | 1825. — | |

- | | | |
|------|---------|-------------|
| XII. | 1817. — | } Putwarry. |
| I. | 1819. — | |

TAX on PILGRIMS resorting to Juggernath and Allahabad.

- | | | |
|-----|---------|---------------|
| IV. | 1806. — | } Juggernath. |
| V. | 1806. — | |
| IV. | 1809. — | |
| XI. | 1810. — | |

XVIII. 1810. —Allahabad.

REGULATION XXXIII.—1793.

Repair of Public Works.—Advances of Money for Private Works.

THIS Regulation enacted, in the prescribed form, certain rules passed in 1791, regarding embankments. The purposes of the enactment, as stated in the preamble, were two. 1st. To provide for the annual repair of certain embankments which, from their magnitude and their importance in preventing the ravages of extensive inundations, had been considered always public works, and had been kept in repair at the expense of Government. 2d. To encourage proprietors, farmers, and cultivators of land to improve the embankments, reservoirs, and watercourses in their several estates, and to construct new works of the same nature where necessary and practicable, in the hope of preserving in seasons of drought or inundation a sufficient portion of the crop for the subsistence of the body of the people, and consequently preventing the recurrence of the miseries which the country had so often suffered from famine. In conformity with these views, the Regulation enacted, that the superintendence of public works of irrigation should be vested in the collectors under the orders of the Board of Revenue, and that when necessary, engineer officers or other professional persons might be employed, under certain restrictive rules, for ascertaining the progress of the works, and for checking and controlling the expenditure. That advances of money might be be made to proprietors, to under-farmers, or to ryots for works of embankment, irrigation, &c. on their own estates, on their presenting a specification of the intended work to the collector, for transmission to the Board of Revenue, and on the Board being satisfied of the utility of the work. The amount advanced was to be repaid with interest at twelve per cent. Persons not proprietors were to give security. Of proprietors the lands were to be held answerable for the repayment. Parties not fulfilling the terms of their engagement were to be liable to fine.

Reg. XXXIII.
1793.

REGULATION VI.—1806.

For the more efficient Superintendence and Improvement of Embankments and Works of Irrigation.

Reg. VI. 1806.

THE objects of this Regulation were, first, to provide for the more efficient superintendence of the embankments maintained at the public expense; and, secondly, to remedy evils arising from the neglect of zemindars to keep in proper order such embankments as were to be repaired at their own expense.

With a view to the first object, it was enacted that the superintendence of the public embankments and water-works in each district should be vested in a committee, to consist of the magistrate, the collector, the commercial resident, and such other public officers residing there, as the Governor-general in Council might appoint for that duty; the committee were to prepare annual estimates, which were to be submitted through the civil auditor, accompanied by his observations upon them, and for the sanction of Government. The accounts of expenditure were to be submitted to the civil auditor. A deputation of the committee were from time to time personally to examine the state of the embankments, and the execution of works in progress.

With regard to zemindars' embankments it was enacted, that no interference should take place so long as the requisite works should be effectually and properly performed, but in the event of neglect on the part of the zemindar, he was to be called upon by the committee to make the necessary repairs, and if he failed to obey their injunction, the requisite repairs were to be estimated and performed by the Government officers and charged to the zemindar.

It was forbidden to make cuts and watercourses through embankments, without the permission of the public officers and under special rules.*

RULES relative to the OFFICES of CANOONGOE and PUTWARRY.

Office of Canoongoe.

IT is stated in Mr. Harington's Analysis of the Bengal Regulations,† that the abolition of the office of canoongoe in the provinces of Bengal, Bahar, and Orissa, had been declared to be expedient by the Marquis of Cornwallis, in a minute recorded by him on the following grounds:—That the “public assessment on the lands having been fixed,” (by the Regulations of 1793) “its details stood recorded both in the landholders' engagements and in the records of the public department; that the rights of the landholders and cultivators of the soil, whether founded on ancient custom or on the Regulations of the British Government, had been reduced to writing, and that canoongoes were no longer necessary to explain the former, and were wholly unacquainted with the latter; that the courts of justice would have their codes of regulations to guide them in their decisions respecting the rights and property of the people; that suits regarding the revenue would be decided according to subsisting

Reg. XI. 1829.

* By Regulation XI. 1829, the appointment of Committees of Embankments was abolished, and it was left to the Governor-general in Council to make provision for the discharge of the duties prescribed in this Regulation by such officers as he might see fit to appoint for that purpose.

† Vol. ii. page 145.

subsisting engagements; and that if any local custom were required to be ascertained, better evidence regarding it would always be obtainable from inhabitants of the district of a respectable character, than could be procured from the mofussil canoongoes, whose official attestations and declarations had long since fallen into contempt and disregard in the eyes of the people, from having been invariably made the cloak to every species of fraud and abuse."

In conformity with the principles of the foregoing quotation, the office of canoongoe, both sudder (or chief) and mofussil (or district), was abolished in the Lower Provinces; and it was directed by Regulation VIII. of 1800, that the records of the former should be transferred to the custody of the Board of Revenue, and those of the latter to the collectors.

By Regulation IV. 1808, it was declared that the office of canoongoe, having been found of great utility under the former government of the Conquered and Ceded Provinces, and being calculated to render much public benefit in those provinces, and in the province of Benares, under proper rules and restrictions, it was resolved to establish the office in those countries, and that two canoongoes should be appointed in each pergunnah thereof. The selection was to be made from the number of former canoongoes, subject to the approbation of the superior Board, by whose order only they were to be removable; the office was declared not hereditary, though, in all practicable cases, collectors were to nominate for the succession the best qualified persons in the family of the preceding occupant. Canoongoes were to be paid by salary, and the revenues of the official lands formerly held by them were declared liable to resumption by the Government. The duties of the canoongoes were declared to be, to keep registers of the collections of the revenue, of lands under rent-free tenures, of pottahs granted by the landholders to their under-tenants, of permanent or temporary transfers of estates, of the produce and rent of villages, estates, and pergunnahs, and of their rules and customs; to keep lists of the village accountants, to assist and record measurements of land, to report the death of payers of revenue, and to keep registers of successors of land.

Reg. IV. 1808.
Ceded and Conquered Provinces and Benares.

The provisions of the foregoing Regulation were subsequently extended to the several districts of Bahar and Cuttack, and to the Twenty-four Pergunnahs.*

By Regulation I. 1819, the appointment of canoongoes was ordered throughout the province of Bengal, to be made in the same manner and for the performance of the same duties as those above specified, with power, however, reserved to the Governor-general in Council, to suspend the operation of those rules in any particular district, and with authority likewise to the Board of Revenue to make any alterations in the special duties of canoongoes as local circumstances should suggest.

Reg. I. 1819.

REGULATION XIII.—1825.

Canoongoes.

It had been enacted by the Regulations which re-established the office of canoongoe in the Ceded and Conquered Provinces,† in parts of Bahar‡ and in Cuttack,§ that those officers should be remunerated by salaries in lieu of all other claims, and that the official lands held by them should be liable to be resumed by Government, whether the holders should be continued in the office, or be discharged from the public service.

Reg. XIII. 1825.

It appears from the preamble to this Regulation, that various resumptions of such lands had taken place, and the parties to whom the zemindary|| interest in the same appeared to belong had been admitted to engage for the Government revenue. The Governor-general

in

* Reg. II. and V. 1816; Reg. II. and XII. 1817; and Reg. I. 1818.

† See Reg. IV. 1828.

‡ See Reg. II. 1816.

§ See Reg. V. 1816.

|| The interest here referred to appears to be that of property in the soil, not in the revenue; but the zemindar under the permanent settlement was the proprietor of the revenue, and in that sense the zemindary interest would be that possessed by the canoongoe.

in Council had since deemed it improper wholly to deprive the canoongoes or their representatives of the advantages formerly derived from such lands, and enjoyed by them for a long course of years. It had therefore been resolved to replace those persons in possession of such lands, and to make a settlement with them for a payment equal to half of the annual produce, according to the rates of similar land in the same district.

With a view to the equitable adjustment of such claims, in cases where the lakhiraj tenure and the right of property in the land were vested in distinct parties, it was declared competent to the Governor-general in Council to continue such official holders in possession, subject to such assessment as he should think it proper to direct; and the persons possessing the proprietary right in such mehals were declared not entitled to any profit beyond what they had enjoyed before the resumption, or what they would have been entitled to receive if the Government had confirmed the tenure in perpetuity free of assessment. Proprietors who had received malikanah during the existence of the lakhiraj tenure were to continue to receive the same.

The official tenures referred to in this Regulation were declared hereditary and transferable. In the event of their escheating to Government, an engagement would be entered into with the persons possessing the proprietary right in the lands.

The same principle was extended to the cases of other persons whose lakhiraj tenures had been subjected to assessment under the provisions of Regulation XIX. 1793, but whom it might appear equitable to restore to possession, at an assessment not exceeding a moiety of the annual net produce. The principle was likewise extended to lakhiraj tenures under badshahi grants.

REGULATION XII.—1817.

Office of Putwarry.

The general duties of the officers denominated putwarries or village revenue registrars and accountants, were set forth in Regulation VIII. 1793; and those rules were successively extended to Benares* and Oude.†

Reg. XII. 1817.

The preamble to Regulation XII. of 1817, declared that the previous Regulations regarding the office of putwarry had been found in many respects defective, and that great difficulties and delays had consequently been experienced in the adjustment of the revenue, in the investigation of summary and other suits regarding rents or boundaries, and in the execution of decrees respecting possession and property in the land. The reform of the office, therefore, appeared to be an object of the highest importance; but as the co-operation of the canoongoes appeared necessary to give full effect to the proposed measures, it had been found advisable to confine the operation of the rules about to be enacted to those districts where the office of canoongoe had been or was about to be revived.

The present Regulation enacted that every village should have a separate putwarry, and that every zemindar should report the names of the putwarries within his estate, and that collectors should prepare and keep registers of the putwarries. Special permission might be given by the Board of Revenue for a village to have more than one putwarry, or for one putwarry to keep the accounts of more than one village; the nomination to the office was to be in the zemindar, subject to objection on the part of the collector, on which the superior Board was to determine. Zemindars failing to appoint were declared liable to a daily fine until they had nominated. They were not to remove putwarries without the sanction of the collector, on pain of being fined. On the petition of village putteedars or ryots, the collector might, if he saw fit, require the zemindar to remove a putwarry. The duties of the putwarries were declared to be, to keep the customary village registers and accounts, and such others as the revenue controlling authorities might direct, and to deliver copies of such accounts.

* Reg. XXVII. 1795.

† Reg. XXIX. 1803.

accounts half-yearly to the canoongoes, and to perform all other customary duties. The collectors were to prepare accounts of the mode in which the several putwarries were paid, whether in money, grain, or land; and it was declared competent to the revenue controlling authority, with the sanction of Government, to alter such rate or mode of payment. Power was given to the collectors to compel the payment of the customary dues, if withheld from the putwarry. Such complaints were to be decided according to local usage, to be certified by the pergunnah canoongoe. Collectors were declared competent to summon any putwarries of their districts, whose attendance might be necessary on any matter connected with the duties of their office, to require them to produce all accounts, and to examine them on oath. If a putwarry refused to obey the collector's orders in these respects, the collector might cause him to be apprehended, and send him to the zillah judge, with a statement of his fault, and the judge was to commit him until the collector should apply for his release. Putwarries were declared alike bound, under a similar penalty, to give all necessary information to the courts when required. Putwarries were to attend officers who might be deputed by the collector to make local investigations. False evidence given on oath by putwarries was declared punishable as perjury, and the falsification of accounts by them as forgery. Their attendance might be required by collectors, as well as the attendance of all descriptions of native agents employed by the proprietors, when estates were to be sold or subdivided. The controlling revenue authorities were authorized to suspend the operation of this Regulation in particular places, such as estates consisting chiefly of hills and forests on the south-west frontier, and in very small mehals, of which the accounts were kept by the proprietors themselves. The courts of judicature were precluded from taking cognizance of the complaints of putwarries against persons for refusing to remunerate their labours, or of complaints against collectors on account of any decisions passed by them under this Regulation. Such decisions were to be reported by the collectors to the superintending revenue authorities, who might reverse or alter them at any time within six months after they had been passed. All fines levied under this Regulation were to be carried to the account of Government.

The foregoing rules were extended to the Lower Provinces of Bengal by Regulation I. Reg. I. 1819, which had also extended the rules regarding the office of canoongoe to those districts.

TAX ON PILGRIMS resorting to JUGGERNATH and ALLAHABAD.

REGULATION IV.—1806.

Juggernath.

THE continuance of the tax on pilgrims resorting to Juggernath, having been provided by Regulation XII. 1805, the present Regulation was enacted for the protection of the pilgrims from undue exactions on the part of the officers of the temple or of Government, and also for the preservation of order, tranquillity, and regularity in the town of Juggernath Pooree and its dependencies, and for the trial of petty civil suits within those limits. The Regulation provided, that a tax should be levied on the part of the British Government, as had been done under the previous Mahratta Government, on pilgrims resorting to the temple. It was to be collected by a covenanted servant of the Company, with the official designation of Collector of the Tax on Pilgrims at Juggernath. The general superintendence of the collection, and the control of the officers employed therein, was vested in the Board of Revenue at Calcutta; the Regulation specified the rate of tax on the different classes of pilgrims, the persons entitled to receive fees, and the places where the tax was to be collected; and it was declared that any of the officers of the temple making demands beyond the regulated amount should be dismissed from employment. Certain persons were declared exempt from the payment of tax and fees.

The superintendence of the temple and its interior economy, the conduct and management of its affairs, and the entire control over the priests and servants attached to the idol and to the

IV.

APPENDIX,
No. 6.continued.

Revenue Affairs.

830 APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

the temple, were declared to be vested in an assembly of pundits or learned Brahmins, who were to be guided by the recorded rules and institutions of the temple, or by long and established usage. The pundits were to be appointed by the Governor-general in Council, on the recommendation of the collector through the Board of Revenue; and it was directed, that in the selection of the pundits, the collector should consult the opinion of the most respectable Hindoos, and otherwise ascertain their character and qualifications. Authority was given to the assembly of pundits to inflict a fine for misconduct on the persons subject to their control, not exceeding one month's salary, or to suspend them from office, reporting such punishments to the collector. Persons subject to the authority of the pundits, who should be guilty of criminal offences, were to be delivered over by them to the officers of police, to be proceeded against according to the General Regulations. The salaries of the pundits were to be paid out of the funds of the temple, and were to be fixed by the Governor-general in Council. The collector was empowered to fine to the amount of one month's pay, subject to an appeal to the Board of Revenue. The collector of the tax was declared to be vested with the powers of an assistant magistrate. The town of Juggernath Pooree and its environs was declared to be a police jurisdiction under the superintendence of one or more of certain officers of the temple, denominated Head Purchas, as the Governor-general in Council should direct. The Sudder Dewanny Adawlut were to appoint some of the head purchas to be commissioners for the trial of civil suits to a limited amount, and to prescribe rules for the conduct of the commissioners.

Reg. V. 1806.

(Rescinded by
Reg. IV. 1809.)

Reg. IV. 1809.

Some further rules were enacted by Regulation V. 1806, to prevent the evasion of the higher rate of tax by persons assuming a character inferior to that which belonged to them; and also to exempt a particular class of mendicants from the payment of the tax.

By Regulation IV. 1809, the rules enacted in the former Regulation having been found both inconvenient and inefficient, those two enactments were rescinded, and the following provisions were enacted in their stead. The superintendence of the temple and its interior economy, the conduct and management of its affairs, and the control over the priests, officers, and servants attached to the temple, were vested in the Rajah of Khoordah, to be held during good conduct; and he was authorized to impose fines to the extent of one month's salary, and to remove from office any of the officers of the temple, with the exception of the three head purchas; those officers were to be appointed by the collector of Cuttack, and not to be removable without the sanction of Government; they were to execute their functions under the directions of the rajah. An account was to be rendered to the collector of all offerings and presents made to the idol; the collector of the tax was declared subject to the authority of the collector of Cuttack. The Regulation provided for the classification of the pilgrims and the amount of the tax which they were severally to pay; it prescribed the time during which they might be allowed to visit the temple, and the form of certificates to be given, stating the amount of payment and the privileges obtained thereby; and it provided that such certificates should be procurable, on payment of the fixed tax, at the offices of the secretaries to the Board of Commissioners and the Board of Revenue, and of the collectors of Cuttack and Ganjam respectively, as well as on the spot. The collector of the tax was authorized to punish darogahs who should unnecessarily delay pilgrims holding proper certificates, and the darogahs might for such offence be dismissed from office. Rules were prescribed as well for removing all impediments to the due access of the pilgrims to the temple, as to prevent their remaining beyond the time to which their license should extend. The collector might order the darogahs to expel persons who should continue to reside in the town after the expiration of their license, reporting to the magistrate on all such occasions what he might have done. Power was given to the collector to extend the period for persons remaining in the town after the expiration of their license to visit the temple. Persons resorting to the town of Juggernath Pooree for trade, and for other purpose, except pilgrimage, were declared admissible into the town at all times, except for twelve days from the commencement of the chariot festival, without payment of tax. The collector was required to give every attention to the religious opinions of the Hindoos and the institutions of the temple, consistently with the General Regulations.

the maintenance of peace and good order. He was not to suffer his ministerial officers to enter the precincts of the temple.

Some modifications of the rules of exemption, admitting in some instances and excluding in others, were enacted in Regulation XI. 1810.

Revenue Affairs.
Reg. XI. 1810.

REGULATION XVIII.—1810.

Tax on Pilgrims to Allahabad.

THIS Regulation was enacted to establish specific rules for the collection of the duties on pilgrims resorting to the confluence of the rivers Ganges and Jumna, at Allahabad. The Regulation enacted the continuance of the tax previously collected, and specified the rate at which it was to be levied, and the mode of admission to the banks of the river. The collection of the duty was placed under the direction of the collector of revenue at Allahabad. Reg. XVIII. 1810.

TABLE OF THE REGULATIONS.

TABLE showing where each of the REGULATIONS in the preceding SUMMARY is to be found.

General Division and Sub-division.	Note to	General Division and Sub-division.	Note to	General Division and Sub-division.	Note to
REGULATIONS of 1793:		REGULATIONS of 1794:		REGULATIONS of 1796:
1. Revenue (A.)		3. Revenue (B.)		1. Criminal Judicial, } (A.)
2. Revenue (A.)		4. Revenue (A.)		Special } (A.)
3. Civil Judicial (A.)		5. Civil Judicial (B.)	5. 1793	2. Criminal Judicial..... (A.)
4. Civil Judicial (A.)		7. Criminal Judicial..... (B.)		3. Revenue (F.)
5. Civil Judicial (B.)		8. { Civil Judicial (A.)		4. Civil Judicial (A.)
6. Civil Judicial (C.)		{ Revenue (C.)		5. Revenue (B.)
7. Civil Judicial (E.)				6. Criminal Judicial..... (D.)
8. { Revenue (A.)	1. 1793	REGULATIONS of 1795:		7. Revenue (F.)
{ Revenue (A.)		1. Benares, Revenue } (A.)		8. Revenue (C.)	35-1
9. Criminal { (A.) (B.) (C.)		Special Legislation } (A.)		9. Criminal Judicial..... (A.)
Judicial { and (D.)		2. Benares, } (A.)		10. Legislation.
10. { Revenue (A.)	1. 1793	Special Revenue } (A.)		11. Criminal Judicial..... (A.)
{ Revenue (F.)		4. Benares, } (A.)		12. Revenue (B.)
11. Revenue (D.)		Special Revenue } (A.)		13. Civil Judicial (A.)
12. Civil Judicial (A.)		6. Benares, } (A.)		REGULATIONS of 1797:
13. Civil Judicial (A.)		Special Revenue } (A.)		2. Benares, Special (A.)	17-1
14. Revenue..... (B.)		7. Civil Judicial, } (A.)		3. Criminal Judicial..... (B.)
15. Civil Judicial (A.)		Special } (A.)		4. Criminal } (B.) (D.)
16. Civil Judicial (A.)		8. Civil Judicial, } (A.)		Judicial ... } and (E.)
17. Revenue..... (C.)		Special } (A.)		5. Criminal Judicial..... (F.)
18. Civil Judicial (A.)		9. Civil Judicial, } (A.)		6. { Civil Judicial (G.)
19. Revenue (E.)		Special } (A.)		{ Criminal Judicial ... (E.)
20. Legislation.		10. Civil Judicial, } (A.)		8. Civil Judicial (E.)	7-1
21. Revenue..... (D.)		Special } (A.)		10. Civil Judicial (G.)
22. { Criminal Judicial (A.)	9. 1793	15. Civil Judicial, } (A.)		12. Civil Judicial (B.)
{ Criminal Judicial (E.)		Special } (A.)		13. Criminal Judicial..... (A.)
23. Criminal Judicial (E.)		16. Criminal Judicial, } (A.)		14. Criminal Judicial (D.)
24. Revenue (E.)		Special } (A.)		15. Revenue (D.)	25-1
25. Revenue (D.)		17. Criminal Judicial, } (A.)		16. Civil Judicial (D.)
26. Revenue (F.)		Special } (A.)		17. Criminal Judicial..... (D.)
27. Revenue (A.)		21. Criminal Judicial..... (F.)		18. Civil Judicial (F.)
28. Civil Miscellaneous ... (B.)		22. Civil Judicial, } (A.)		REGULATIONS of 1799:
33. Revenue—Miscellaneous.		Special } (A.)		1. Civil Judicial
36. Civil Judicial (A.)		27. Revenue, Special..... (A.)	40. 1793	2. Civil Judicial
37. Revenue..... (E.)		33. Civil Miscellaneous... (B.)	17. 1793	3. Civil Judicial
38. Civil Miscel- } (A.) and (B.)		34. Revenue, Special..... (A.)
aneous. }		Civil Judicial (F.)
39. Civil Judicial (A.)		Revenue (C.)
Civil Judicial..... (F.)	35. 1795	36. Civil Judicial (A.)
40. Revenue..... (C.)		37. Civil Judicial (A.)
41. Legislation.		38. Civil Judicial (G.)
43. Revenue..... (E.)		51. Revenue, Special ... (A.)
44. Revenue..... (A.)		56. Revenue (E.)	19. 1793
45. Revenue..... (B.)		58. Revenue (E.)
46. Civil Judicial..... (A.)
47. Civil Judicial..... (B.)
48. Revenue..... (D.)
49. Civil Judicial..... (A.)
50. Revenue..... (F.)

IV.—JUDICIAL.

883

TABLE showing where each of the REGULATIONS in the preceding SUMMARY is to be found—continued.

General Division and Sub-division.	Note to	General Division and Sub-division.	Note to	General Division and Sub-division.	Note to
REGULATIONS of 1799 :		REGULATIONS of 1805 :		REGULATIONS of 1808 :
4. Criminal Judicial (F.)		2. { Civil Judicial (A.)		4. Revenue—Miscellaneous.
5. Civil Judicial (A.)		2. { Revenue (C.)	7. 1799	5. Special Revenue (B.)	27. 1803
7. { Revenue (B.)	3. 1794	3. Criminal Judicial (D.)		6. Special Revenue (C.)
7. { Revenue (B.)	40. 1793	5. { Revenue (C.)	27. 1803	8. Criminal Judicial (D.)
8. Criminal Judicial (D.)		5. { Special Revenue (B.)	9. 1804	9. Criminal Judicial (A.) (B.) & (E.)
REGULATIONS of 1800 :		8. Special Judicial (B.)		10. Criminal Judicial (E.)
1. { Civil Judicial (A.)		9. Special Revenue (B.)		11. Revenue (E.)
1. { Revenue (F.)	10. 1793	10. Civil Judicial (C.)		13. Civil Judicial ... (A.) & (B.)
3. Civil Judicial (A.)		12. Special Revenue (C.)		REGULATIONS of 1809 :
7. Civil Judicial (G.)		13. Special Judicial (C.)		1. Special Revenue (B.)
8. { Revenue (D.)	48. 1793	14. Special Judicial (C.)		3. Criminal Judicial (F.)
10. Revenue (D.)	11. 1793	15. Civil Judicial (F.)		4. Revenue—Miscellaneous.
REGULATIONS of 1801 :		17. Revenue (A.)		5. Criminal Judicial (A.)
1. { Revenue (B.) & (D.)	8. 1793	18. { Special Judicial (A.)		7. Criminal Judicial (D.)	13. 1806
1. { Revenue (A.)	5. 1812	18. { Criminal Judicial (E.)		8. Miscellaneous Judicial (C.)
2. { Civil Judicial (C.)	9. 1793	REGULATIONS of 1806 :		REGULATIONS of 1810 :
3. Civil Judicial (A.)		1. Criminal Judicial (B.)		1. Criminal Judicial (B.)
8. Criminal Judicial (D.)		2. Civil Judicial (A.)		4. Special Revenue (C.)
REGULATIONS of 1802 :		4. Revenue—Miscellaneous.		5. Revenue (D.)
3. Civil Judicial (A.)		5. Revenue—Miscellaneous.		6. Criminal Judicial (E.)
6. Criminal Judicial (F.)		6. Revenue—Miscellaneous.		8. Criminal Judicial (E.)
REGULATIONS of 1803 :		7. Special Judicial, Local (A.)		11. Revenue—Miscellaneous.
1. {		8. Miscellaneous Judicial (A.)		12. Criminal Judicial (D.)	13. 1806
2. {		10. Miscellaneous Judicial (A.)		13. { Civil Judicial ... (B.) & (C.)
4. {		11. Criminal Judicial (E.)		13. { Civil Judicial (F.)	23. 1814
5. { Oude, Special Judicial (B.)		13. Criminal Judicial (D.)		14. Criminal Judicial (D.)
6. {		14. Special Local Judicial (B.)	9. 1804	16. Criminal Judicial (A.) & (E.)
7. {		15. Criminal Judicial (A.)		18. Revenue—Miscellaneous.
8. {		21. Special Revenue (B.)	21. 1803	19. Revenue (E.)
25. Special Revenue (B.)		22. Revenue (E.)	24. 1793	20. Criminal Judicial (F.)	3. 1809
27. Special Revenue (B.)		REGULATIONS of 1807 :		(continued)
43. Civil Judicial (C.)		1. Civil Judicial (B.)
49. Civil Judicial ... (A.) & (F.)		2. Criminal Judicial (D.)
54. Oude, Special Judicial (B.)		6. Revenue (D.)
53. Criminal Judicial (D.)		8. Criminal Judicial (D.)	13. 1806
REGULATIONS of 1804 :		9. Criminal Judicial { (A.) (B.) & (E.)
1. Revenue (E.)		10. Special Revenue (B.) & (C.)
4. Special Judicial (C.)		12. Criminal Judicial (E.)
5. Civil Judicial (C.)		15. Civil Judicial (C.)
9. Special Judicial (B.)
10. Criminal Judicial (F.)

TABLE showing where each of the REGULATIONS in the preceding SUMMARY is to be found—continued.

General Division and Sub-division.	Note to	General Division and Sub-division.	Note to	General Division and Sub-division.	Note to
REGULATIONS of 1811 :		REGULATIONS of 1814 :		REGULATIONS of 1817 :
1. Criminal Judicial } (A.) (D.) and (E.)		1. Civil Judicial (G.)		1. Special Revenue (A.)	1. 1816
2. Revenue (E.)		2. Miscellaneous Judicial (A.)		3. Civil Judicial (G.)
6. Revenue (A.)	27. 1793	3. Criminal Judicial (E.)	13. 1813	4. Special Local Judicial (B.)
7. Criminal Judicial (E.)		5. { Civil Judicial (B.)		8. Miscellaneous Judicial (A.)
8. Special Revenue { (B.)	23. 1817	5. { Criminal Judicial (B.)		11. Special Local Judicial (B.)
9. Special Revenue (B.)		8. Criminal Judicial (E.)	13. 1813	11. Special Revenue (B.)	8. 1811
10. Criminal Judicial (F.)		9. Criminal Judicial (E.)		12. Revenue—Miscellaneous.
11. Revenue (D.)	25. 1793	11. Criminal Judicial (D.)	2. 1811	17. Criminal Judicial (D.)
12. Civil Judicial (C.)		12. Revenue (E.)		18. Civil Judicial (A.)
13. Revenue (A.)		13. Criminal Judicial (E.)		19. { Civil Judicial (A.) and (F.)	26. 1814
14. Criminal Judicial (D.)		15. Criminal Judicial (D.)	13. 1813	19. { Civil Judicial (A.)
		16. Criminal Judicial (E.)		Revenue (C.)
		18. Revenue (B.)		20. Criminal Judicial (E.)
		19. Revenue (D.)		22. Special Local Judicial (C.)
		21. Miscellaneous Judicial (A.)		23. Special Revenue (A.)
		23. Civil Judicial (F.)		24. Revenue (A.)	13. 1811
REGULATIONS of 1812 :		24. { Civil Judicial (A.)		Special Revenue (A.)	1. 1816
3. { Criminal Judicial (A.) & (E.)	7. 1799	24. { Revenue (C.)		REGULATIONS of 1819 :
4. Civil Judicial (A.)		25. { Civil Judicial (B.) and (C.)		2. { Special Local Judicial (B.)
5. Revenue (A.) (B.) and (C.)		25. { Criminal Judicial (B.)		{ Special Revenue (B.)
9. Special Revenue (B.)		26. Civil Judicial (A.)		3. Criminal Judicial (F.)
10. Special Revenue (B.) and (C.)		27. Civil Judicial (E.)		4. Special Local Judicial (B.)
11. Criminal Judicial (F.)		28. Civil Judicial (A.)		5. Special Local Judicial (C.)
16. Special Judicial (A.)	7. 1806	29. Revenue (A.)		6. Criminal Judicial (A.) & (B.)
18. Revenue (A.) and (D.)	5. 1812			8. Criminal Judicial (A.)
20. Miscellaneous Judicial (B.)		REGULATIONS of 1815 :		9. Special Revenue (B.)
21. Criminal Judicial (E.)		1. Special Revenue (B.)		12. Criminal Judicial (A.) & (E.)
		2. Civil Judicial (A.)	24. 1814	13. Special Revenue (C.)
		3. Special Revenue (C.)		REGULATIONS of 1819 :
REGULATIONS of 1813 :				1. { Special Revenue (A.)	1. 1816
1. Special Revenue (C.)		REGULATIONS of 1816 :		1. { Revenue—Miscellaneous	4. 1808
2. { Criminal Judicial (D.)	5. 1804	1. Special Revenue (A.)		Revenue—Miscellaneous
{ Miscellaneous Judicial (C.)		4. Civil Judicial (A.)		2. Revenue (E.)
3. Civil Judicial (A.)	8. 1811	6. Special Revenue (C.)		3. Criminal Judicial (A.)	8. 1818
5. Special Revenue (B.)		8. Civil Judicial (A.)		6. Criminal Judicial (E.)
6. Civil Judicial (A.)	5. 1809	9. Special Revenue (A.)		7. Criminal Judicial (A.)
8. Criminal Judicial (A.)		11. Special Local Judicial (C.)		8. { Revenue (A.) and (C.)	5. 1812
9. Criminal Judicial (D.)		14. Criminal Judicial (A.)		Revenue (A.)
11. Revenue (E.)		15. Civil Judicial (A.)		9. Civil Judicial (A.)
13. Criminal Judicial (E.)		16. Special Revenue (B.)		REGULATIONS of 1820 :
15. Revenue (A.)		17. Criminal Judicial (E.)		1. Revenue (C.)	8. 1819
17. Miscellaneous Judicial (A.)		22. Criminal Judicial (E.)		3. Criminal Judicial (A.)
				4. Criminal Judicial (A.) & (B.)
				7. Criminal Judicial (D.)

TABLE showing where each of the REGULATIONS in the preceding SUMMARY is to be found—continued.

General Division and Sub-division.	Note to	General Division and Sub-division.	Note to	General Division and Sub-Division.	Note to
REGULATIONS of 1821 :		REGULATIONS of 1825 :		REGULATIONS of 1829 :
1. Special Revenue..... (B.)		2. Civil Judicial (A.)		1. { Revenue (A.)
2. { Civil Judicial...(A.) and (F.)		3. Criminal Judicial..... (D.)		1. { Criminal Judicial ... (B.)
2. { Revenue..... (C.)	5. 1812	4. Criminal Judicial..... (A.)		2. Criminal Judicial..... (B.)
3. Criminal Judicial (A.) & (E.)		5. Civil Judicial (A.)		3. Civil Judicial (A.) and (B.)
4. Criminal Judicial (A.)		6. Criminal Judicial..... (E.)	11. 1806	4. Revenue (E.)	3. 1828
		7. Revenue (B.)		5. Special Local Judicial (B.)	4. 1817
		8. { Miscellaneous } Judicial ... (A.)		6. Criminal Judicial..... (A.)	6. 1824
REGULATIONS of 1822 :		9. { Miscellaneous } Judicial ... (A.)	17. 1813	7. { Civil Judicial (A.)
1. Criminal Judicial (A.)		9. { Revenue..... (A.) and (E.)		7. { Criminal Judicial ... (B.)
3. Revenue (A.)		9. { Revenue (A.)	27. 1793	8. Criminal Judicial..... (A.)	5. 1809
4. Criminal Judicial (D.)		9. { Special Revenue..... (B.)	7. 1822	10. Civil Judicial (G.)
5. Criminal Judicial (E.)		11. Revenue (A.)		11. Revenue—Miscellaneous	6. 1806
6. Revenue (F.)		12. Criminal Judicial..... (D.)		12. Criminal Judicial..... (D.)
7. { Special Revenue (B.)		13. Revenue—Miscellaneous	4. 1808	13. Civil Judicial (A.)
7. { Criminal Judicial (A.)	15. 1824	14. { Revenue (E.)	2. 1819	17. Criminal Judicial..... (F.)
8. Criminal Judicial (A.)		14. { Revenue (E.)		18. Special Revenue (B.)	1. 1821
9. Criminal Judicial (A.)	5. 1809	16. Criminal Judicial..... (B.)
10. Special Local Judicial (B.)		20. Criminal Judicial..... (F.)
11. Revenue (B.)		21. Special Local Judicial (B.)	4. 1817
				REGULATIONS of 1830 :
REGULATIONS of 1823 :		REGULATIONS of 1826 :		1. Criminal Judicial..... (B.)	1. 1829
1. Special Revenue..... (B.)		1. Civil Judicial (B.)	5. 1814	4. Criminal Judicial..... (B.)	1. 1829
2. Criminal Judicial (D.)		2. Special Revenue (B.)		5. Miscellaneous Judicial (B.)
4. Criminal Judicial (B.)		3. Civil Judicial (A.)	4. 1816	6. Civil Judicial..... (A.)	4. 1816
6. Miscellaneous Judicial (B.)		11. Civil Judicial (A.) and (E.)		7. Revenue (B.)	5. 1812
7. Miscellaneous Judicial (A.)		12. Civil Judicial (G.)		8. Criminal Judicial..... (A.)
REGULATIONS of 1824 :		REGULATIONS of 1827 :		REGULATIONS of 1831 :
1. Revenue (A.)		1. Criminal Judicial } Special (A.)		2. Criminal Judicial..... (B.)	1. 1829
3. Civil Judicial ... (A.) and (F.)		3. Civil Judicial (A.)	13. 1793	5. Civil Judicial (F.)
4. Civil Judicial (A.)	36. 1793	4. Civil Judicial (F.)		6. { Special Revenue..... (B.)
5. Miscellaneous Judicial (B.)	6. 1823			6. { Special Local } Judicial ... (B.)
6. Criminal Judicial (A.)		REGULATIONS of 1828 :		7. Criminal Judicial..... (B.)
9. { Special (B.)	7. 1822	1. Criminal Judicial..... (A.)		7. { Civil Judicial (C.) and (E.)	27. 1814
9. { Revenue..... (B.)		3. Revenue (E.)		9. { Criminal Judicial..... (B.)	9. 1807
10. Criminal Judicial (A.)		4. { Criminal (A.)	15. 1824	9. { Criminal Judicial..... (C.)
11. Civil Judicial (A.)		4. { Special Revenue..... (B.)	7. 1822	10. Special Revenue (B.)
12. { Revenue..... (B.)		5. Criminal Judicial..... (F.)	3. 1809	11. Special Local } Judicial..... (B.)
12. { Revenue..... (B.)	5. 1812	6. Criminal Judicial..... (D.)
14. Revenue (C.)		7. { Special Judicial (A.)
15. Criminal Judicial (A.)		7. { Special Revenue..... (A.)
16. Civil Judicial (G.)		8. Criminal Judicial..... (A.)	1. 1822

IV.

Judicial.

I N D E X

TO THE REPORT,

THE

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE,

AND

APPENDIX.

INDEX

TO

IV.—Judicial.

N.B.—In the following Index, Rep. refers to the Report: the Figures following the names, to the questions in the Evidence; p. to page of the Evidence; App. p. to page of Appendix, and par. to paragraphs.

A.

ABDUCTION. See 'Misdemeanors.'

Abkare Mehal. Settlement of the Abkare Mehal to be made under the orders of the local Commissioners, but when concluded to be reported to the Board; no farms for more than one year to be granted without the authority of the Board. App. p. 268.

Abusive Language. See 'Petty Offences.'

Accessaries. See 'Pardons.'

Accomplices. See 'Pardons.'

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE:

I. Generally:

Advantage of uniting the judicial systems with difficulties in the way of its accomplishment, particularly with regard to Europeans, Hill 286—293—Administration of justice in Madras better than in Bengal, Hill 322—325—Control of Government over, how far it is and should be exercised, Hill 343—353—Justice should be administered by natives themselves, Hill 397—Suggestions for the improvement of the system of judicature in India, Hill 414—Opinion upon the administration of civil and criminal justice in India, Melville 625—Changes in contemplation in the administration of civil justice, Hamilton 739—752—Opinion upon the administration of civil justice in Bengal, and proposed amendments therein, in minute, recorded in November 1829, Bayley 882—Evils of there being two systems of judicial administration in India, Mill 1035—Suggestions for one uniform system of administration of justice in India, Johnston 1118—Memorandum drawn up by Sir Alexander Johnston for the late Marquis of Londonderry, of some alterations advisable in the system of administering justice in India, Johnston p. 214.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

1. Generally:

Evils of alterations in India in the administration of justice without previous reference home, App. p. 46—Letters addressed by the Court of Directors to the Indian Governments, reviewing the operations of the civil and criminal courts at the three presidencies, App. p. 1—Selection of papers containing discussion relative to measures recommended by the Home Authorities in 1814, and the modifications introduced into the Indian codes, App. p. 64—Correspondence relating to the appointment of Commissioners sioners of Revenue and Circuit, App. p. 260—Statement showing the various tribunals established in the provinces of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay, for the administration of justice under the regulations as they stood in the years 1813 and 1829, after the appointment of Commissioners of Revenue and Circuit, together with a summary of the jurisdiction exercised by the different classes of tribunals, App. p. 454.

2. Relative to Bengal.

Letter from the Court of Directors to the Bengal Government, dated 8th December 1824, App. p. 1—The like, dated 23d July 1828, App. p. 9—The like, dated 30th March 1831, App. p. 16—The like, dated 11th January 1832, App. p. 28—The like, dated 1st February 1832, App. p. 31.

Letter from the Bengal Government to the Court of Directors, dated 22d February 1827, App. p. 64—The like, dated 15th June 1830, with its enclosures, App. p. 125.

Letter from the Bengal Government to the Court of Directors, dated 22d February 1827, in reply to a despatch of the Court of 9th November 1814, reviewing the judicial institutions at Bengal, and suggesting modifications in the system then in force for the administration of civil and criminal justice, and for management of the police, App. p. 64.

Letter from the Bengal Government (Revenue department) to the Court of Directors, dated 10th December 1828, with its enclosures, App. p. 260.

Memorandum prepared in the office of the Judicial Secretary at Calcutta, with two notes in continuation on the expense and operation of the Judicial establishment, App. p. 572.

Regulations respecting constitution and jurisdiction of the zillah and city courts, and general rules of practice in the zillah and other civil courts, App. p. 594—Regulation IV. 1793, upon the practice of civil courts in the admission and trial of suits, App. p. 597—Regulation XII. 1793, Appointment of law officers in courts of judicature, App. p. 598—Regulation XIII. 1793, and III. 1827, Appointment and duties of ministerial officers of courts of judicature, App. p. 598—Regulation II. 1805, Limitation of time for institution of suits, App. p. 607—Regulation II. 1806, Process of citation and attachment, App. p. 608—Regulation XXVI. 1814, and XIX. 1817, Amending the course of proceeding and practice in the civil courts of original and appellate jurisdiction, App. p. 611.

3. Relative to Madras.

Letter from the Court of Directors to the Madras Government, dated 12th October 1831, App. p. 37—The like, dated 21st December 1831, App. p. 48—The like, dated 11th April 1826, App. p. 214.

Letter from the Madras Government to the Court of Directors, dated 27th April 1827, with its enclosures, App. p. 229.

Letter from Secretary to Government Madras to Secretary of Government Bengal, enclosing letter from register of Sudder Adawlut explaining causes of delay in preparing report by that court respecting practical operation of changes in the system for administration of justice and police at Madras, App. p. 129—Enclosed letter from G. J. Casamajor, register of Sudder Adawlut, App. p. 129—Letter from Henry Chamier, secretary to Government, Judicial department, Madras, enclosing letter from register of Sudder and Foudaree Adawlut, with accompaniments and extract Government proceedings thereupon, App. p. 130—Enclosed letter from A. D. Campbell, register of Sudder and Foudaree Adawlut, with statements therein referred to, App. p. 130.

Extract from proceedings of court of Sudder Adawlut, under date 23d April 1829, App. p. 130.

Extract from the minutes of consultation of Madras Presidency, under date 9th February 1830, App. p. 212.

Letter from the Court of Directors to the Madras Government, dated 11th April 1830, communicating communicating sentiments on the subject of the abolition of the zillah courts, the employment of district and village moonsiffs, and the conduct and control of the police, App. p. 214—229—Answer by the Madras Government thereto, dated 27th April 1827, with its enclosures, App. p. 229.

Extract Fort St. George Judicial consultations, dated 30th January 1827, upon the above subjects, App. 233—260.

4. Relative to Bombay.

Letter from the Court of Directors to the Bombay Government, dated 15th February 1832, commenting upon the number of suits instituted and depending in the different courts, and generally upon the delay and causes thereof in the administration of justice in the old Provinces and the Deccan, App. p. 52—Another letter from same to same, dated 28th March 1832, commenting upon the state of criminal justice and police; the number of cases before the different tribunals, and upon the administration of criminal justice generally, App. p. 61.

See also 'Benares,' 'Bombay, Old Provinces,' 'Courts of Justice,' 'Crime,' 'Criminal Laws,' 'Cuttack,' 'Deccan,' 'Fees,' 'Natives,' 'Stamp Duties.'

Adultery. Cases of adultery and fornication rarely brought forward as criminal cases by natives, they are more generally cognizable by punchayets or heads of caste, App. p. 114, 115, par. 223, 224.

Advertisements. See 'Sales.'

Affrays. Powers granted to magistrates by Regulation I. of 1822, in cases of affrays, unattended by homicide or other aggravating circumstances, and extent of imprisonment and fine in such cases, App. p. 116, par. 234.

Agents. Mooktars or agents, though acting as solicitors, are not recognized by the courts, Mackenzie 470—472.

Ages. Age of servants coming out and being qualified for office, Clarke 16, 17—Age they should leave this country for India, Mackenzie 175; Hill 328—334, 401; Oldham 551, 560, 565; Bayley 908; Empson 1108, 1109.

Agra. Proposed distribution of the country into divisions, to be placed under separate revenue commissioners, each to have a covenanted assistant; number of districts; amount of assessment, and general remarks, App. p. 270—Proposed distribution of the country into divisions, each to be placed under two commissioners exercising the powers of judges of the provincial court of appeal and circuit with those of revenue commissioners, each commissioner being responsible for the affairs of a distinct portion of the division; number of districts; amount of assessment; district officers proposed; number of officers; allowances; number at present employed and their allowances, App. p. 275.

See also 'Goberdhun.'

Allahabad. Statement by Sir Henry Strachey, that in cases of punchayets the members of the village courts united in their own persons the characters of prosecutor, magistrate, judge, jury, and executioner, App. p. 75, par. 60—Proposed distribution of the country into divisions, to be placed under separate revenue commissioners, each to have a covenanted assistant; number of districts and amount of assessment, App. p. 270—Proposed distribution of the country into divisions, each to be placed under two commissioners exercising the powers of judges of the provincial court of appeal and circuit with those of revenue commissioners, each commissioner being responsible for the affairs of a distinct portion of the division; number of districts; amount of assessment; district officers proposed; number of officers; allowances; number at present employed and their allowances, App. p. 276.

Statement from the acting collector at Allahabad relative to the collection of the revenue therein; number and names of divisions; number of villages; reputed ruckba; supposed number of zemindars; number of persons under engagements or managing as mocuddums; mocuddums; present assessment; balance outstanding for past five years; expense of fixed mofussil establishment; number of dustuks issued in the three past years; number of persons employed in serving the same; amount of dustukana chargeable during the same period; number of cases in which shahenas have been placed over the crops during the same period; number of shahenas employed during the same; amount chargeable for shahenas; number of persons confined in gaol during the same time for arrears of land revenue; period of imprisonment, App. p. 310, 311—Statement regarding the several tehseeldars employed in the district of Allahabad; name of pergunnahs; assessment; name of tehseeldar; salary; period of service of the revenue officer in the British Government; age, religion, and tribe; birth-place; period of employment in present situation; remarks, App. p. 314, 315.

Ameens. See 'Peons.' 'Sudder Ameens.'

Anderson, Mr. His opinion upon the disadvantages attending the removal of the stamp tax from suits under Rs. 100 value, on the ground of pressure upon courts of justice in consequence thereof, and opinion of Court of Directors in favour of its removal, App. p. 54.

Anglo-Indians. Mixed race should be admitted to all situations to which natives may be admitted. Mackenzie 165, 166.

APPEALS:

1. Generally.

To whom appeals lie from the court of moonsiffs and the sudder ameens, Clarke 71—73—Appeals give greater security for the pure administration of justice and check the conduct of the native judges, Clarke 75—77—Particulars of an appeal to England through different decisions by the Sudder Adawlut and Supreme Court, Clarke 111, 112—Evils of arrears of appeals, Mackenzie 145—Only two appeals allowed in the inferior courts, their nature and proportion from each court, Mackenzie 192—198—Defects in the system of appeals, and suggestions for improvement therein, Hall 398—400—Cost of parties in a court of appeal, Mackenzie 421, p. 42—Examination upon appeals to the Nizamut Adawlut, Hamilton 757—775—Evils of the present system of appeals, Mill 1043—1045—Suggested improvements, Mill 1048—Appeal should be to the Sudder Adawlut direct, Mill 1048—1050.

Courts in India being made as perfect as possible, appeals to England may be safely done away with, Mill 1065, 1066—Suggestions for establishing a high court of appeal in England, under the superintendence of both Houses of Parliament, Johnston 1118—Suggestions for relieving parties from long standing appeals before the Privy Council, Johnston 1144—Advantage of a court of appeal being established in England instead of in India, and of whom it should consist, Johnston 1145—Evil of giving up the right of appeal to England, Johnston 1145, 1146—Paper relative to the appellate jurisdiction of the King in Council in Indian appeals, Johnston p. 219—Letter from the Right Hon. C. Grant to Sir Alexander Johnston, requesting his opinion, and that of Sir Edward Hyde East and Sir James Mackintosh, on the subject of Indian appeals, dated 29th March 1832, Johnston p. 225—Answer of Sir A. Johnston, dated 30th March 1832, Johnston p. 225—Copy, joint opinion of the above gentlemen, Johnston p. 226—Letter from Sir A. Johnston to the Right Hon. C. Grant, dated 7th May 1832, enclosing suggestions relative thereto, Johnston p. 227.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

1. Relating to Bengal.

Observations respecting appeals between different courts in India, App. p. 15, 16—No class of native officers should be vested with powers of final adjudication; cause thereof, and whether the restraint may at some future period be dispensed with; principle upon which the right of appeal was regulated by rules enacted in 1814; power of admitting a special appeal granted in 1819; increase of business therefrom, and necessity to revert to former principles ; not advisable to confine the right of appeal within narrower bounds than at present ; regret at the necessity of withdrawing from the superior courts the authority for admission of special appeals, App. p. 79, 80, par. 93—98—Regulation XXXVI. 1795, relative to appeals from registers and native commissioners, App. p. 602—Regulation XLIX. 1803, allowing special appeals in certain cases, App. p. 606—Regulation IX. 1819, relative to the admission of special appeals. App. p. 614—Regulation XVI. 1797, as to the course of proceeding in cases of appeals to the King in Council, App. p. 624.

2. Relating to Madras.

Number of appeals instituted, decided, and depending before the different courts of justice, 1827—1829, App. p. 49—Rate of delay in disposal thereof, App. p. 50—Differences in the number of appeals, as compared with the number of decisions in the original suits, do not indicate corresponding differences in the quality of the judicature of the lower courts ; they depend chiefly on the nature of the suits, and on the different degrees of facility with which appeals are admitted, App. p. 50—Statement, showing the number of appeal causes from the decision of district moonsiffs, disposed of by the several zillah courts, from 1825—1827 inclusive, App. p. 166—Statement, showing the number of appeals exceeding Rs. 200, from the decisions of district moonsiffs, depending in the zillah courts, on the 1st January 1825 and 1828, respectively, App. p. 167—Statement, showing the particulars of the number of appeal causes from the decision of district moonsiffs, disposed of by the several zillah courts, from 1825—1827 inclusive, App. p. 168, 169.

Number of original causes depending and disposed of, and number of appeals depending and disposed of by sudder ameens, 1817—1827, App. p. 174, 175—Statement, showing the years in which the original suits and appeals depending before the sudder ameens on the 1st January 1828, were filed, App. p. 176, 177—Statement showing the number of regular and special appeals from the decisions of the sudder ameens, preferred to and disposed of by the several zillah courts for 1825, 1826 and 1827 inclusive ; and also the manner in which they were disposed of, App. p. 178, 179—Abstract of causes and appeals decided in the provincial courts during the year 1815, compared with 1825, App. p. 184, 185—Number of appeals instituted in 1825 from district moonsiffs' decrees ; number of appeals decreed on merits (affirmed and reversed) ; number dismissed for default ; number adjusted by razeenamahs ; total number of appeals disposed of by judges, registers, and sudder ameens in 1825, from the decrees of the district moonsiffs, App. p. 245—Number of appeals instituted in 1825 from the zillah judges' decrees to the provincial courts ; number of appeals decreed on merits, affirmed or reversed ; number dismissed for default ; number adjusted by razeemanahs ; number of appeals from decrees of zillah judges disposed of in 1825, App. p. 245.

3. Relating to Bombay.

Number of appeals preferred from the decision of the registers and assistant judges and native tribunals ; number decided and remaining in the old provinces and in the Deccan, 1825—1829, App. p. 57—Appeals from decisions of native commissioners upon a certain amount to the judge or senior assistant, and appeal from decision on appeal from decisions of native commissioners to the Sudder Adawlut, granted by Regulation II. of 1830 at Bombay, App. p. 60, par. 41, 42—Regulations V. and VI. of 1830 as to powers of sub-collectors, collectors, and komavisdars, with regard to appeals and special appeal to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, App. p. 60, par. 43, 44.

See also 'Burdwan.' 'Courts of Justice.' 'Decrees.' 'Fees.' 'Law-Suits.' 'Provincial Courts.' 'Sales of Estates.' 'Stamp Duties.'

Appointments. See 'Patronage.'

Arbitration. Regulation XVI. 1793, relative to the reference of suits to arbitration, App. p. 599

p. 599—Regulation VI. 1813, providing for reference to arbitration of suits regarding title to and possession of land crops, &c., App. p. 610.

See also 'Razeenamah.'

Aristocracy. See 'Divisions of Land.'

Armstrong, James, Esq. Letter from James Armstrong, Esq., collector of Goruckpoor, to Holt Mackenzie, Esq., secretary to Government, dated 2d April 1828, containing statement relative to the collection of the revenue, amount of assessment and balances, &c. in the district of Goruckpoor, App. p. 316—Another letter, dated 3d April 1828, from same to same, containing statement regarding the tehsildars in the district of Goruckpoor, App. p. 324.

Army, Native. They are recruited from a more respectable class of men than the English armies, Melville 701; Hamilton 755.

Arracan. Provision made for the superintendence and control of officers employed in Arracan, the revenue administration therein not being satisfactory; same officer to superintend Chittagong and the adjacent country east of the Megna, App. p. 261, par. 8.

ARREARS of CAUSES:

1. Generally.

Excessive arrears in European courts, Mackenzie 145—Cause of arrears, Bayley 886—Causes of arrears in courts and methods of prevention, Fortescue 987, 988.

2. Papers laid before the Committee.

Different statements shewing arrears and causes thereof, App. p. 1—16—Observations upon the necessity of reducing them, App. p. 29—Evils of arrears in the Sudder Court at Bombay, correspondence with Government as to the cause thereof, and necessity for some distinct course being peremptorily enforced to prevent the accumulation of causes, App. p. 58.

Heavy arrears of regular civil suits depending before the several judicial tribunals a proof of inefficiency of existing provisions for administration of civil justice in the Bengal territories, App. p. 65, par. 7; App. p. 263.

See also 'Administration of Justice.' 'Burdwan.' 'Courts of Justice.' 'Delays.' 'Law-Suits.' 'Moonsiffs.' 'Sudder Ameens.' 'Sudder Dewanny.'

Arrears of Rent. See 'Rent.'

Arrears of Revenue. Regulation XIV. 1793, Recovery of arrears of revenue due to Government from proprietors and farmers, App. p. 754—Regulation XLV. 1793, Sales of land in satisfaction of decrees of court, App. p. 757—Regulations III. 1794, and VII. 1799, Liability of proprietors to arrest defined; recovery of money from native officers; precedence of revenue suits before others, App. p. 757—Regulation V. 1796, Regulating the sales of land in satisfaction of decrees or for arrear of revenue, App. p. 758—Regulation XII. 1796, Amount of deposit on purchase of lands increased to prevent certain frauds, App. p. 758—Regulation VII. 1799, Improvement of the process for attachment and sale of landed property for arrear of revenue, App. p. 758—Regulation I. 1801, To explain and modify the provisions of Regulation VII. 1799, App. p. 761—Regulations V. 1812, XII. 1824, VII. 1830, and I. 1801, Sales of land not void on certain grounds; interest chargeable on arrears, App. p. 762—Regulation XVIII. 1814, Facilitating the process for the sale of lands for arrear of revenue, App. p. 762—Regulation XI. 1822, Improved rules for the sale of estates for arrear of revenue, App. p. 762—Regulation XII. 1824, Interest on arrears, App. p. 766—Regulation VII. 1825, Sale of houses and lands for arrear and in satisfaction of decrees, App. p. 766.

See also 'Rent.' 'Revenue Department.' 'Revenue Suits.' 'Sales of Estates.'
Arrest. See 'Arrears of Revenue.' 'Mesne Process.' 'Ryots.' 'Zemindars.'

Arson.

Arson, Madras, number of crimes committed; number of offenders not discovered; and number apprehended and punished, 1826—1829, App. p. 38.

Assam. See 'Sylhet.'

Assaults. See 'Petty Offences.'

Assessments. See 'Agra.' 'Allahabad.' 'Benares.' 'Bengal, north-east and south-east frontier.' 'Calcutta.' 'Cuttack.' 'Delhi.' 'Dooab.' 'Furruckabad.' 'Patna.' 'Rohilcund.' 'Settlements.'

Assessors. Whether there should be a change of persons as assessors, or whether they should be selected from a limited number, Hill 314, 315—Manner in which natives might be employed, Melville 703.

Assistant to Magistrates. Duties of assistant to magistrate, Hamilton 832—856—His salary, Hamilton 878—881—Extent of his power of punishment, Bayley p. 92.

Assizes. Period of assizes and gaol delivery, Melville 660—664.

Attachment. Regulation II. 1806, amending the law as to attachments, App. p. 608.

See also 'Sales of Estates.'

Austria. State of crime, number of sentences, and proportion to the population, Bayley p. 140.

See also 'Population.'

B.

Baitool. Statement by Captain Love, the assistant, upon the want of confidence and partiality of natives for punchayets; preference for the decision of the European assistant; questions usually referred to punchayets, App. p. 74, 75, par. 55, 56.

Banishment. Nature thereof, Melville 669—Is more feared by the natives than death, Mill 1052, 1053—Number of persons sentenced to banishment by the courts of circuit at Madras 1825—1827, App. p. 208, 209.

Bar, English. See 'Judges.'

Barristers. Profits of barristers in the Supreme and Sudder Courts, Mackenzie 187.

Bayley, William Butterworth. (Analysis of his Evidence.)—Opinion upon the administration of civil justice in Bengal, and proposed amendments therein, in Minute recorded in November 1829, 882—Objections to the union of the functions of collectors and magistrates, 883, 884—Objections to the union of Judicial and Revenue departments, 885—Advantage of gradually increasing the powers of native judges, eventually leaving the duties of European officers to be those only of superintendence and appeal, 886—888—Delays in suits and means of expediting proceedings, 886, 890, 892—Necessity of obtaining accurate records and regulations, defining proprietary rights to land, and method to be adopted for establishing an efficient Code of Hindoo and Mahomedan law, 892, 893—Confidence of natives in European courts, 894—Natives may be employed as magistrates under strict European superintendence, 895, 896—Amendment necessary in usury laws, 897—899—Method of raising the qualification of native judges, 900, 901—Also that of European judges, 902, 903—No material improvement from education at Haileybury, and means of obtaining a better selection therefrom, 904:

Advantage of the service being military, and selections made therefrom for civil and judicial offices, 904—907—Proposed extension of education of civil servants in this country, 908, 909—Advantage of present regulations of the Calcutta College, 910—Native languages better acquired in India, 911—914—Beneficial administration of criminal justice in the interior of Bengal, 915—Language in which evidence taken down, 916—Changes in the law necessary on settlement of Europeans, and number and description of Europeans likely to avail themselves of the privilege, 917—922—Power of deportation not necessary if power of removal from interior to the presidency allowed, 923, 924—Europeans should not be subjected to trial before native judges, without superintendence of European judge, 925—930—Native judges properly remunerated, will receive confidence from their countrymen, 931—Costs of suit in country courts in Bengal, 932, 933—Advantages of punchayets, 934.

Table intended to show the operation of the criminal laws, and the state of crime in Bengal, p. 126—Tables referring to statements of crimes reported, p. 130—Tables referring to the operation of the criminal courts, p. 130—Tables referring to the number of persons sentenced and their punishments, p. 130.

(A.) Number of heinous crimes in the Lower and Western Provinces of Bengal, as reported by the superintendents of police, 1818—1828, p. 131.

(B.) Abstract of the chief parts of table (A.), p. 133.

(C.) Total number and yearly averages of Table (B.), showing the number of offences in a period of nine years, 1818—1828, compared with those in the years 1827 and 1828, p. 133.

(D.) Comparative Statement of sentences for offences against property, and those against the person, and other crimes, passed by the courts of circuit in Bengal, 1816—1826, p. 134.

(E.) Comparative Statement of sentences for offences against property and those against the person, and other crimes, passed by the magistrates in the Lower and Western Provinces of Bengal, 1826 and 1827, p. 135.

(No. 1.) List of persons sentenced by the criminal courts in Bengal to death, transportation, or imprisonment, 1816—1827, p. 136.

(No. 2.) List of persons sentenced to temporary imprisonment, arranged according to the sentences extracted from Table (1.), p. 137.

(No. 3.) Extract from Tables ordered by the House of Commons to be printed 23d February 1829, showing the number of persons in England and Wales sentenced to death, transportation or imprisonment, in seven years, 1822—1828, p. 137.

(No. 4.) Summary of the numbers in Table (3.), arranged under heads to correspond nearly with those of Tables (1.) and (2.), p. 138.

(No. 5.) Summary of the numbers of Table (1.) for four years, viz. of those referring to the Nizamut Adawlut and magistrates, 1824—1827, and of those referring to the courts of circuit, 1823—1826, p. 138.

(No. 6.) Total of the numbers in Table (3.) for four years, 1825—1828, and of those in Table (5.) for four years, 1823—1826, and 1824—1827, compared, p. 139.

(No. 7.) Yearly averages of the numbers in Table (6.) and the same proportion to the population of the two countries, supposing England and Wales to contain thirteen millions of inhabitants, and the Bengal Provinces sixty millions, p. 139—In Ireland, p. 140—State of crime, sentences, and averages to population in France and Austria, p. 140—Statement of offences which have formed the subject of judicial proceedings in Spain during the year 1826, p. 140.

(No. 8.) Sentences to death or to transportation or imprisonment for life, in the Lower and Western Provinces of Bengal compared, p. 141.

(No. 9.) Sentences to death and transportation or imprisonment for life, in six years ending 1827, and executions in the same period in England and Wales, and in the Lower and Western Provinces of Bengal compared; also the yearly averages and the same in proportion to the population, supposing the Lower Provinces of Bengal to contain forty millions, and the Western twenty millions of inhabitants, p. 142.

Bayley, W. B., Esq. Minute by W. B. Bayley, Esq., on the subject of the report of the territorial territorial secretary; and concurring in the expediency of substituting revenue commissioners for existing Boards, and containing suggestions for better administration of justice, App. p. 291—Another Minute dated 10th December 1828, upon the defective arrangement under which the business of the Western Board of Revenue is conducted, and suggesting measures for the improvement thereof, App. p. 298—Another Minute dated 5th November 1829, respecting alterations of the judicial system, which have recently been made or are in contemplation, App. p. 352.

Behar. See 'Mortgages.'

Bellary. Number of persons charged with criminal offences, and number acquitted and punished in 1829, App. p. 41.

Benares. State of crime therein 1818—1826, and in 1827 and 1828, App. p. 23—Population thereof, and proportion of crime thereto, 1818—1828, App. p. 23.

Civil Regulations VII. VIII. IX. X. XV. XXII. 1795, Introducing the judicial system into the province of Benares, App. p. 642, 643—Regulation VII. 1828, Power of the Rajah in revenue suits limited, App. p. 644—Criminal Regulations, XVI. 1795, Administration of criminal justice in Benares, App. p. 644—Regulation XVII. 1795, Benares police Regulation, App. p. 644—Revenue Regulations, I. 1795, Declaring the settlement of the revenue permanent, App. p. 799; II. 1795, recording the successive systems of revenue administration before the permanent settlement, App. p. 800—Regulation IV. 1795, Resumption of the Sayer by Government, App. p. 802—Regulation VI. 1795, Rules for the recovery of arrears of revenue; power of tehsildars, App. p. 802—Regulation XXVII. 1795, Declaration of the rights of proprietors in Benares, App. p. 802—Regulation XXXIV. 1795, Provision for the payment of money pensions, App. p. 803—Regulation LI. 1795, Opposition to the issue of pottahs from proprietors to ryots, App. p. 804—Regulations I. 1816, I. 1817, XXIV. 1817, and I. 1819, Appointment and jurisdiction of a commission, App. p. 804—Regulation VII. 1828, Jaghire lands of Benares placed under a revenue superintendent, App. p. 805.

Proposed distribution of the country into divisions to be placed under separate revenue commissioners, each to have a covenanted assistant; number of districts, amount of assessment and general remarks, App. p. 270—Proposed distribution of the country into divisions, each to be placed under two commissioners exercising the powers of judges of the provincial court of appeal and circuit with those of revenue commissioners; each commissioner being responsible for the affairs of a distinct portion of the division; number of districts; amount of assessment; district officers proposed; number of officers; allowances; number at present employed, and their allowances, App. p. 275.

See also 'Population.'

Bengal. See 'Courts I.' 'Crime.' 'Population.'

Bengal, North, East, and South-east frontiers. Proposed distribution of the country into divisions, to be placed under separate revenue commissioners, each to have a covenanted assistant; number of districts, amount of assessment, &c. App. p. 271.

Bengallee Language. Extent of population by whom it is spoken, Melville 654, 655.

Bentinck, Lord William, Minute by, relative to defective state of executive revenue officers, and upon his directing the secretary to Government in the territorial department to report fully on the subject; success of the plan adopted at Madras of a principal with subordinate collectors; evils of the arrears of civil courts, particularly with regard to appeals; defective state of the administration of civil and criminal justice demands serious attention of Government, App. p. 263—Minute by, dated 24th January 1831, upon the necessity of a Board of Revenue for the regulation of the settlement of the Upper Provinces; no objection to the substitution of a single commissioner for the Board of Salt and Opium, and to transferring the duties of that Board to the Military Board, App. p. 416.

Best, J. R. Letter from J. R. Best, officiating secretary to the Sudder commission, to George Warde, Esq., member of the Mofussil special commission, containing directions to the Mofussil commission for their guidance in the adjudication of certain cases, App. p. 286.

Bird, W. W. Letter from W. W. Bird, Esq., to Mr. Secretary Mackenzie, dated 16th April 1828, respecting number of cases at Allahabad, being thrown out in consequence of possession being lost; also respecting a petition from Maharajgunge, App. p. 281—Letter from same to E. Molony, Esq., secretary to the Sudder commission, dated 5th July 1826, relative to the re-hearing of certain cases dismissed by the Mofussil special commission, on the ground of lost possession, App. p. 284—Another letter, dated 6th September 1826, stating that one of the parties had petitioned for a re-hearing, and requesting determination of the Sudder court, App. p. 285—Letter from same, dated 10th April 1828, enclosing proposed regulation for extending the powers of the Mofussil commission, and stating necessity for such extended powers, App. p. 287.

Blunt, Mr. Minute by, dated 24th March 1831, upon necessity of employing well-qualified native agency under European superintendence; stating objections to proposed changes in the judicial administration; cause of failure of the system to be ascribed to the union of the functions of circuit judge and revenue commissioner; evil of delay attending gaol deliveries; punishment recommended for gang robbery; state of the police; opinion upon the scheme for the civil administration suggested by the late finance committee, and containing suggestions relative to the judicial and revenue administration, App. p. 417.

Bodily Injury. Method of punishing offenders doing bodily injury, and particularly as to allowing retaliation according to the Mahomedan law, App. p. 672.

Boglepore. Regulation I. 1796, and I. 1827, Administration of criminal justice in Boglepore, App. p. 645, 646.

Bombay, Old Provinces. Number of original suits instituted, decided, and depending, 1825—1829, App. p. 52, 53—Number of suits decreed, wholly or in part, and adjusted, and number dismissed, and dismissed for default, 1827—1829, App. p. 55—Number of appeals preferred, decided, and remaining, 1825—1829, App. p. 57—Number of complaints preferred to the several authorities in the Old Provinces, 1825—1828; number acquitted and punished, App. p. 61, 62.

Bond Debts. Process in cases of, might be simplified, Bayley 899.

Books. List of works which since the year 1817 have been encouraged or patronized by the Bengal Government for the disseminating knowledge among natives, App. p. 122.

Boundaries. Powers of magistrates with regard to disputed boundaries, granted by Regulation XV. of 1824, leaving parties, if dissatisfied, to institute a civil action for final determination of their rights, App. p. 117, par. 237.

See also 'Juries, Native.'

Bribery. See 'Courts of Justice.'

Buller, Mr. Opinion of Mr. Buller, member of the Board of Revenue of the Lower Provinces upon the subject of transferring magisterial duties to collectors, App. p. 108, par. 190.

Bundelcund. Established system of punchayet under the superintendence of heads of villages, never had existence in the province of Bundelcund; punchayet or arbitration generally resorted to for settlement of disputes under former Government, but there is no reason to regret the disuse of the system; manner in which the system led to violent disputes and affrays, disorder, and bloodshed; inefficacy of the system from the futility of the award from frequent inability to enforce it, App. p. 71, par. 41—Special judicial regulations, civil and criminal, introduced into the province of Bundelcund, App. p. 647—Regulation II. 1818, Annexation of territory to Bundelcund, App. p. 648.

Burton.

- Burdwan, Zillah of. Table showing the number of suits decided in the courts of the zillah judges, registers, sudder ameens and moonsiffs in the zillah of Burdwan, and number depending at the end of the year, with average delay of judicature in all the courts, App. p. 6—Arrars of appeals from the sudder ameens, App. p. 13.
- Burglary. Extension of the powers granted to magistrates by Regulation XII. of 1818, in trial and sentence of prisoners in cases of breaking into habitations or warehouses with intent to steal, App. p. 115, par. 230—Cases of Burglary punished by the courts of circuit, 1817—1823, App. p. 117, par. 239.
- Butwarrahs. They should be made under orders of the local commissioners, periodical reports being furnished to the Board, the whole matter of these partitions requires revision, App. p. 268.
- Bye-bil-wuffa. See 'Mortgages.'

C.

- Calcutta. Proposed distribution of the country into divisions, to be placed under separate revenue commissioners, each to have a covenanted assistant; amount of assessment, &c. App. p. 271.
- See also 'Moorshedabad.'
- Calcutta College. Laws studied therein till its abolition, Clarke 27—29; Mackenzie 129—Allowances granted to students with prospect of their ceasing, Mackenzie 133—Advantage of the present regulations of the Calcutta College, Bayley 910.
- Calumny. See 'Petty Offences.'
- Cameron, C. H. Extract from Report of C. H. Cameron, Esq., one of his Majesty's Commissioners of Inquiry, to Lord Viscount Goderich, dated 31st January 1832, relative to jury trial in Ceylon, Johnston 1161, p. 199.
- Campbell, Alexander Duncan. (Analysis of his evidence.)—Situations held by witness under the Madras presidency, 989, 990—Examination upon two letters from the Madras Government in the judicial department to the Court of Directors, dated 27th April 1827, and 2d November 1830, on the subject of amendments therein, 991—995—Advantage of juries, 995—Reasons for punchayets not being oftener resorted to, 997—999—Nature and advantages of punchayets, 1000—1010—Instances of torture to obtain confessions and evidence, 1011—1014.
- [Second Examination.]—Description of the kittee or hand torture, and other tortures formerly made use of, 1016—Advantage of employing natives as justices of the peace, first at the Presidency, 1017—1026—Advantage of the settlement of Europeans in India, 1027—1032.
- Campbell, A. D. Letter from, to the acting secretary of Government, judicial department, transmitting extract of proceedings of Sudder Adawlut, Madras, dated 23d April 1829, App. p. 130.
- Canara. Cases of gang-robbery therein, also state of crime, App. p. 39—Cause of arrears of suits therein, App. p. 51.
- Canooogoe Establishments. Anxiety of the Court of Directors that the putwaras and canooogoe establishments throughout the provinces, should be placed upon the most efficient footing, App. p. 86, par. 119—Regulation IV. 1808 and I. 1819, Office of canooogoe abolished in the Lower Provinces, and reasons assigned; establishment of, in the Ceded and Conquered Provinces and in Benares; their duties, and method of paying them; their appointment throughout the provinces of Bengal, with similar powers; and power of suspension reserved to the Governor-general; and power of alteration of duties duties reserved to the Board of Revenue, App. p. 809—Regulation XIII. 1825, Resumption of lands by Government, formerly held by canoongoes, and tanures, under which they should be allowed to hold them, App. p. 810.

See also 'Putwarry Office of.'

Capital. Whether any obstructions to the introduction of British capital into India, Hill 368—370—If restrictions on European settlement removed, capital would remain in India instead of being remitted to England, Bayley 920—Advantages of the introduction of capital by Europeans, Campbell 1030.

See also 'Indigo.'

Capital Charges. Number of capital charges, and difficulty in convicting, Hamilton 777—780—Decrease in the number of capital sentences; statement of number, 1816—1818, 1820—1823, 1824—1827, App. p. 27—Proportion of, to population in England and Wales and France, App. p. 28—Capital sentences passed by the Foujdarry Adawlut 1803—1818, App. p. 41—Number of capital punishments by the criminal judges and superior courts in the Bombay Old Provinces and the Deccan, 1825—1828, App. p. 62.

See also 'Crime.' 'Provincial Court.'

Casamajor, G. J. Letter from, to secretary of Government, judicial department, explaining causes of delay in preparing report from court of Sudder and Foujdaree Adawlut, upon practical operation of changes in administration of justice and police at Madras, App. p. 129.

Castes. Prejudices as to caste prevent natives sitting on juries for the trial of natives, Hamilton 754.

CATHOLICS:

1. Generally.

Respectability and loyalty of Catholics, when properly superintended, Johnston 1150.

Letter from the Abbé Dubois to Sir Alexander Johnston, giving him an account of the present condition of the native Catholics throughout India, dated 21st May 1831, Johnston p. 232.

2. In Ceylon.

Emancipation of, in the island of Ceylon, Johnston 1115—Number of, in Ceylon, and excellent character and conduct of them, Johnston 1150.

Cattle Stealing. Powers vested in magistrates on trial of persons charged with cattle stealing to a certain amount, App. p. 116, par. 232.

Cauzeys. From what families they are derived, Clarke 68.

See also 'Kazees.'

Cawnpore. Correspondence between the Mofussil special commission and the Sudder commission relative to the re-hearing of certain cases dismissed by the former commission on the ground of lost possession, and showing reasons for their being re-heard, App. p. 284—288.

CEDED and CONQUERED PROVINCES.

I. Generally.

Few Europeans therein except the Company's officers, Oldham 586—No European indigo planters therein, Oldham 587.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

1. Generally.

State of crime therein, 1818—1826, and in 1827 and 1828, App. p. 22—Population therein, and average crime thereto, 1818—1828, App. p. 22—Proposed Regulation regulation for extending the powers of the special commission in the Ceded and Conquered Provinces acting under the provisions of Regulation I. 1821, App. p. 288.

2. Judicial Regulations.

Special judicial regulations, civil and criminal, for the Ceded and Conquered Provinces, Bundelcund and Kumaon, App. p. 647—Regulations I. II. IV. V. VI. VII. VIII. LI. 1808, Introduction of the Code of Regulations into the Ceded Provinces of Oude, App. p. 647, 648—Regulations IX. 1804, VIII. 1805, XIV. 1806, Introduction of the judicial system into the Conquered Provinces in the Dooab, App. p. 648—Regulations IV. 1817, XXI. 1825, V. 1829, Administration of criminal justice in Deyra Doon, App. p. 648—Regulation X. 1817, Administration of criminal justice in Kumaon, App. p. 649—Regulation II. 1818, Annexation of territory to Bundelcund, App. p. 649—Regulation IV. 1818, Re-establishment of zillah North Saharunpore, App. p. 649—Regulation X. 1822, Administration of criminal justice in the Garrow Hills, App. p. 650—Regulation VI. 1831, Establishment of a Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut for the Western Provinces, App. p. 650—Regulation XI. 1831, Police of the Ceded and Conquered Provinces, App. p. 651.

3. Revenue Regulations.

Special revenue regulations for the Ceded and Conquered Provinces, Bundelcund and Kumaon, App. p. 807—Regulation XXV. 1803, Principles of the settlement of the Ceded Provinces in Oude as proclaimed in 1802, App. p. 808—Regulation XXVII. 1803, XXI. 1806, V. 1805, and V. 1808, Special rules for the collection of the revenue and of arrears thereof, App. p. 809—Regulation IX. 1805, Revenue rules for the administration of the Conquered Provinces in the Dooab and Bundelcund, App. p. 810—Regulation X. 1807, Appointment of commissioners for the formation of the ensuing settlement in the Ceded and Conquered Provinces, App. p. 810—Regulation I. 1809, Permanent establishment of the Board of Commissioners for the Western Provinces, App. p. 810—Regulation VIII. 1811, V. 1813, and XI. 1817, Investigation of tenures held free of assessment to be made by the revenue collector, App. p. 811—Regulation IX. 1811, Providing facilities for the division of putteedary estates or village tenures held in coparcenary, App. p. 811—Regulation IX. 1812, Settlement of the revenue of the Ceded Provinces of Oude after Fusly 1219, App. p. 811—Regulation X. 1812, Settlement of the revenue in the Conquered Provinces on the Jumna and in Cuttack, App. p. 812—Regulation I. 1815, Provision for the continuance of life tenures at a fixed favourable assessment, under grants from native governments, App. p. 812—Regulation XVI. 1816, Settlement of the revenue in the Ceded Provinces of Oude, App. p. 812—Regulation II. 1818, Settlement of the new territories annexed to Bundelcund, App. p. 813—Regulation IX. 1818, Settlement of the revenue of the Conquered Provinces in the Dooab, App. p. 813—Regulations I. 1821, and XVIII. 1829, Appointment of a special commission to afford redress in cases of illegal transfer and appropriation of lands in the Ceded and Conquered Provinces, App. p. 813, 816—Regulations VII. 1822, IX. 1824, IX. 1825, and IV. 1828, Declaring the principle on which the future settlements of the revenue should be made in the Ceded and Conquered Provinces; extension of the revenue and judicial powers of the collectors, App. p. 816—Regulation I. 1823, Explanatory of the powers of the special commission under Regulation I. of 1821, App. p. 820—Regulation IX. 1824, Settlement of the Conquered Provinces and Bundelcund, App. p. 820—Regulation II. 1826, Settlement of the Ceded Provinces in Oude, App. p. 820—Regulation VI. 1831, Revenue administration of the Conquered Provinces in the Dooab and Bundelcund, App. p. 821—Regulation X. 1831, A board established at Allahabad by deputation from the Sudder Board of the Presidency, App. p. 821.

See also 'Courts of Justice.' 'Population.'

Ceylon, Island of. Reference to documents showing measures introduced into Ceylon by wilkes, and their results upon the interests of the island, Johnston 1116.

See also 'Catholics.' 'Europeans.' 'Juries.' 'Land.' 'Natives.' 'Slavery.'

Chamier,

Chamier, Henry. Letter from, to Secretary to Government, Fort William, enclosing letter from register of Sudder Adawlut, with accompaniments, relative to administration of justice, and extract from proceedings of Government thereupon, App. p. 130.

Charges. See 'Contingent Charges.'

Chittagong. See 'Arracan.'

Chowkeedary Police. Observations relative to the Chowkeedary system, and extract from Minute by the Marquis of Hastings relative thereto, App. p. 93, par. 164; p. 95, par. 174.

Christian, H. G. Letter from, dated 10th April 1828, as one of the commissioners of the Mofussil special commission, containing proposed regulation for the extension of the powers of the commission, and grounds of necessity for that purpose, App. p. 287.

CIRCUIT COURTS and COMMISSIONERS :

I. Generally :

By whom circuit duties at present performed, and how to be provided for under new arrangement, Mackenzie 156—158; Campbell 992—Advantages of judges of circuit over resident commissioners, Melvill 625; Mill 1042—Qualification and duties of commissioners of circuit, Hamilton 802—808, 864—868, 872—874—Their salaries, Hamilton 878—881—Constitution and duties of the court of circuit before the changes in 1829, Bayley p. 127—Method of performing duties under the present arrangement, extent of punishment, and appeal to the Nizamut Adawlut, Bayley p. 127, 128—Comparative statement of sentences for offences against property, and against the person, and other crimes passed by the courts of circuit in Bengal, 1816—1826, Bayley p. 134, App. p. 26, 27.

II. Papers laid before the Committee :

1. Generally :

Observations upon the appointment of commissioners of revenue and circuit, App. p. 18—Papers relating to the appointment of commissioners of revenue and circuit, App. p. 260—Advantages of the appointment of commissioners of revenue and circuit, App. p. 260, 261, par. 1—4.

2. Bengal.

Letter from the Bengal Government (Revenue department) to the Court of Directors, dated 10th December 1828, with its enclosures, App. p. 260—Cases of burglary punished by the court of circuit, 1817—1823; App. p. 117, par. 239—Regulations that have been made, 1814—1825, for better defining and extending the powers of judges of circuit, App. p. 117, par. 241—243—Proposed distribution of the country into divisions to be placed under separate revenue commissioners, each to have a covenanted assistant, App. p. 270—Expense of plan and present charges, showing ultimate saving, App. p. 272—Proposed distribution of the Western Provinces into divisions each to be placed under two commissioners exercising the powers of judges of the provincial court of appeal and circuit, along with those of revenue commissioners, each commissioner to be specially responsible for the affairs of a distinct portion of the division, App. p. 275.

Regulation V. 1814, and I. 1826, increasing the number of judges of the circuit courts, App. p. 620—Regulations upon the constitution and jurisdiction of the courts of circuit, and commissioners of circuit, App. p. 692—Regulation IX. 1793, Constitution and jurisdiction of the courts of circuit, App. p. 692—Regulation VII. 1794, Turn of judges to go on circuits and hold sessions, App. p. 693—Regulation III. 1797, Succession and number of circuits, App. p. 693—Regulation IV. 1797, Circuit reports to be made by the judges on their return to the chief station, App. p. 693—Regulation I. 1806, Order of circuits and sessions, App. p. 694—Regulation IX. 1807, and IX. 1808, Powers of the court of circuit, App. p. 694—Regulation IX. 1808, Punishment of proclaimed decoits, App. p. 694—Regulation I. 1810, Futwas of law officers dispositive with occasionally, App. p. 694—Regulation V. 1814, Constitution of the court of circuit, App. p. 695—Regulation XXV. 1814, Powers of single judges of courts of circuit, App. p. 695—Regulation VI. 1818 and IV. 1820, Powers of the courts of circuit over magistrates, App. p. 695—Regulation IV. 1823, Futwas judges of circuit, App. p. 695—Regulation XVI. 1825, Increase of powers of courts of circuit, App. p. 696—Regulations I. 1829, I. and IV. 1830, and II. 1831, Establishing commissioners of circuit, App. p. 696, 697—Regulation II. 1829, Appeals to commissioners of circuit from magistrates, App. p. 697—Regulation VII. 1829, Empowering the Nizamut Adawlut to issue instructions regarding reports from inferior judicatories, App. p. 697—Regulation VII. 1831, Appointment of zillah judges to hold sessions, App. p. 697.

3. Madras.

Acquittals and punishments before, periodically between 1817—1819, App. p. 40—Returns of dates of trials before, to be periodically submitted to the superior court, App. p. 45—Observations upon the proposed reduction of judges therein, App. p. 46—Number of cases of murder, robbery and murder, robbery, housebreaking and theft; and number acquitted and convicted by the circuit court in certain years, viz. 1813, App. p. 188; 1814, App. p. 190; 1815, App. p. 192; 1825, App. p. 196; 1826, App. p. 198; 1827, App. p. 200—Abstract of the whole, App. p. 202—Statement showing the number of persons apprehended, released, and punished, together with the nature of all punishments inflicted by the courts of circuit, 1825—1827, App. p. 208, 209.

4. Bombay.

Animadversion by the Court of Directors on the irregular supply home of the circuit reports, and desiring greater regularity, App. p. 61.

See also 'Delays.' 'Law-Suits.' 'Trials.'

Citation. Regulation II. 1806, relative to amendments in the law as to citation, App. p. 608.

Civil Justice. See 'Administration of Justice.'

CIVIL SERVANTS.

I. Generally.

Should be sent up the country on arrival, and not remain at Calcutta, Oldham 537, 547, 548—Advantages of young men being at first employed in revenue matters, Hill 326—Variation in the rules as to the period of remaining in India before appointment to office, Hill 339, 340—How young men should be disposed of on arrival in India, Oldham 537, 547, 548—Young men should choose their line of employment after their arrival in India, Hamilton 823—825—Disadvantages of their attending courts for the purpose of gaining legal knowledge, Hamilton 846—848—Writers should select their employment in England, Empson 1085.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

Necessity for admission to the service in the first instance being made the reward of talents, industry, and good conduct; necessity for particularly attending to the principle of selection on first admission, App. p. 121, pars. 270—273.

See also 'Ages.' 'Education.' 'Embarrassment.' 'European Functionaries.' 'Extravagance.' 'Qualification.'

Clarke, Richard. (Analysis of his Evidence.)—Witness's situations, and correspondence carried on by him with the different civil courts of justice in India, 1—7—Course of education of writers in the Madras College, 8—No difference made in the course of education, with reference to future employment, 9, 10—Selection to office and qualifications rests entirely with the Governor-general; there is no rule prescribing any course of education, or of promotion for judicial offices, 11—14, 36—41—Sir Thomas Munro placed civil servants in the revenue department first, as the best qualified to obtain knowledge, 15—Age at which writers usually leave the College, 16—Length of service service in the revenue department previous to obtaining the office of registrar, 17—19

—They are not required to study any books for obtaining information in the Hindoo and Mahomedan laws, 20—26—Laws were studied previous to the abolition of the college at Calcutta; institution of the Madras College, its objects, and means of prevention of the contracting debts by the students, 27—29—Writers can execute the duties of magistrates immediately upon leaving college; extent of their power of punishment, 30—32—Extent of punishment exercised by the zillah judge, 33, 34.

Functions of the provincial court, 34—Capital cases must be confirmed by Sudder Foujdarry Adawlut before being carried into execution, 34—Service of civil servants previous to their appointments as zillah judges and judges of the provincial court, 35—Extent to which character in inferior judicial situations would entitle advancement, 36, 37—Appointment to judicial offices not always by degree, 38, 41—High situations with high salaries cannot be held by a junior servant, 40—Revenue the most lucrative line of promotion, 42—Nothing in the emolument or rank of judge that would induce the accepting the office in preference to others, 42, 43—Necessity for instructions in the law of those servants intended to fill judicial situations, 44—46—How far European judges are dependant upon native law officers in the administration of justice, 45—48—Judges at Madras are not sufficiently acquainted with Hindoo law to exercise a check over the opinions of the Hindoo lawyers, 49—Appointment of Hindoo law officers, their qualifications, and how ascertained, 50—52—Appointment of vakeels or native pleaders, their qualifications, 53, 54—Pleadings and motions are in writing, 55—Regulations with regard to their fees, 56, 60—Generally good lawyers, and transact their business well, 57, 58.

Further examination and certificate of higher qualification, before promoted to be a pundit, 59—Institution of vakeels has been of utility in the administration of justice, and they are latterly improved in practical knowledge, 61—Nature of the pleadings, and judges' decrees, 62—66—Decrees are on stamps, 67—Families of the pundits, moolivees, and cauzeys, 68—Appointment of district moonsiffs; jurisdiction of the sudder ameens, 69—Mahomedan and Hindoo law officers sit separately, 70—Distinction between the sudder ameens and the court of moonsiffs, and to whom appeals lie, 71—73—Appointment of native judges has answered sufficiently to justify further employment, 74—Appeals give greater security for the pure administration of justice, and check the conduct of the native judges, 75—77—To what extent the decree of district moonsiffs is final, 78—Few complaints of those decrees, the judges being liable to be sued civilly, and prosecuted criminally, 79—Period at which the authority of district moonsiffs was increased to its present extent, 80.

[Second Examination.]—Manner in which the Company's servants to be employed in judicial situations, may be best qualified for the discharge of their duties, 81—Inconvenience arising from the want of previous instruction in the judges; manner in which the proceedings of the Sudder Adawlut should be conducted, to train the junior servants for the practical administration of justice, during their course of service in India, 81, 106, 109—Manner in which the proceedings of the lower courts are made known to the Sudder Adawlut, for the purpose of reviewing them, 82, 83—Rudimental instruction at Haileybury is beneficial in giving general principles of equity and justice, 84—Native witness gives his evidence more with regard to his own interest than the truth, 85—Judges and counsel in the King's Courts arrive at the truth better than native juries and punchayets, 86—88—Cause of the failure of the employment of punchayets, at Madras, 89—91—Use of native agency might be extended by employing them jointly with Europeans, 92, 102—105—General want of morality in the natives, 93—97—Punishment of perjury, 94, 95—Which does not act as a stain upon them in society, 96, 97—In the event of the settlement of Europeans, the law should be equally administered between both Europeans and natives; and power of removal should be vested either in the executive government or in courts of justice, 98, 99.

Necessity for the Hindoo and Mahomedan laws of succession and inheritance, existing separately.

separately, 100—Laws of contract might be more easily assimilated, than those of succession, 101—Confidence in the integrity of the Company's judges, but not always in their skill, 106—Further obstacles to the preparation of a sufficient number of persons to fill judicial situations, 106—Plan for the instruction of judicial servants, and from whom selections for judges to be made, 107—109—Necessity for an English lawyer on the bench of the Sudder Adawlut, 110—Particulars of an appeal to this country, in consequence of opposite decisions having been come to by the Sudder Adawlut and the Supreme Court on the same rights, supported by the same evidence, 111, 112—Opinion as to the judges of the Supreme Court forming part of the Legislative Council, 113—115—Imperfections of English statutes regarding India, 113—More constant and regular acquaintance with the course of Indian administration should be kept up by Parliament and the public authorities, 113—Natives should be freely consulted upon the subject of legislation, and reasons why they should not be allowed a vote in a legislative assembly, 116—118.

COLLECTORS:

Papers laid before the Committee.

1. Bengal.

Observations upon rules made for investing collectors with powers regarding rights and tenures of land, App. p. 86, par. 122—Impracticability of transferring, as a general measure, the duties of magistrate to the collector, App. p. 91, par. 146; App. p. 105, par. 185—195—It may in some instances be done with advantage; particular places in which the junction of the duties has taken place, App. p. 109, par. 193—Further observations upon the same subject, more particularly as regards the Madras Presidency, App. p. 127, par. 12—Suggestions by Territorial Secretary respecting alterations in the method of conducting office of collector, App. p. 265—Local commissioners to have equal power with the Board in regard to native officers of collector's appointment; changes to be periodically reported to the Board; collectors to be prevented carrying with them favourite officers from one district to another, App. p. 268—Local commissioners will not often have occasion to interfere in the internal management of collector's office, but when they do their orders should be at once obeyed; authority of local commissioners should suffice for disbursements ordered by a regular decree of court, quarterly statements being sent to the Board, App. p. 268—Regulation V. 1825, Provision for the occasional union of the offices of judge and collector, App. p. 616.

2. Madras.

Extract from Report by the Sudder Adawlut at Madras, upon the practical operation of transferring the duties of zillah magistrate to the collectors, App. p. 143—Whether the transfer of the duties of police to the collectors has been beneficial or otherwise, App. p. 148—Statement showing the number of causes brought before the collectors in the several divisions, under section iv., Regulation XII. of 1816, and section xviii., Regulation V. of 1822, and referred by them to punchayets, 1816—1828, App. p. 210, 211.

3. Bombay.

Considerable number of suits cognizable by Europeans, have been decided by the collectors, to whose jurisdiction, under ch. 8 Regulation XVII. of 1827, belong suits relating to land, its rent and produce; statement of these suits including those referred to ramavisdars and other officers, should be included in the general reports on administration of civil justice, App. p. 58, par. 29—By Regulation V. of 1830, sub-collectors vested with the same powers as collectors in the decision of suits and appeals; by Regulation VI. collectors and sub-collectors are authorized to refer certain suits to the komavisdars; appeals from the decisions of the assistant collectors and komavisdars open to the collectors or sub-collectors, and further appeal to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, App. p. 60, par. 43, 44.

- See also 'Dharwar.' 'Magistrates.' 'Rent.'
- Columbo.* See 'Slavery.'
- Combaconum, Zillah.* Number of suits, to the extent of twenty rupees and upwards, instituted in the district munsiff's court; number of such suits settled by tasnamah; number decided on merits; and number decided and appealed to the zillah courts, App. p. 236, 249.
- Commissioners.* See 'Native Commissioners.'
- Commissioners of Revenue and Circuit.* See 'Circuit.'
- Commissions, Special.* Letter from the mofussil special commission to E. Malony, Esq., secretary to the Sudder commission, dated 5th July 1826, relative to seventeen cases belonging to Cawnpore, which were dismissed without investigation under certain instructions, and requesting authority to re-hear them; stating certain doubts respecting the loss of possession and grounds for their being re-heard, App. p. 284—Letter from E. P. Smith, Esq., officiating secretary Sudder special commission, to the Mofussil special commission, dated 21st July 1826, in answer to the above, and stating reasons for the cases not being re-heard, App. p. 285—Letter from the Mofussil special commission to the secretary to the Sudder special commission, dated 6th September 1826, enclosing petition of certain parties for re-hearing of one case, and requesting final determination of the Sudder commission, App. p. 285—Letter from J. R. Best, Esq., officiating secretary to the Sudder commission, containing directions upon the subject, and also directing the case for which petition received to be reviewed, App. p. 286—Letter from the Mofussil special commission to the Sudder special commission, submitting the draft of a regulation for extending the powers of the commission relative to certain claims, and showing necessity for such an extension, App. p. 287—Copy proposed regulation, App. p. 288.
- Compensation.* Crimes for which compensation or the price of blood (Deyut) is declared to be due by the Mahomedan law, App. p. 669.
- Competition.* Appointment of civil servants should be by competition, Mackenzie 175, 179, 180.
- Contempts of Court.* Possibility of contempts of court being committed by Europeans, Fortescue 960—962.
- Contingent Charges.* Those not exceeding one hundred rupees to be sanctioned by local commissioners, statements being sent to the Board; the Board to be empowered to pay charges to the amount of five hundred rupees, sending statements to Government, App. p. 268.
- Contract.* The laws of contract might be more easily assimilated than those of succession, Clarke 101—Principle upon which the laws of contract are administered, Mill 10.
- Corah.* Regulation by which the use of the corah, as an instrument of punishment, has been discontinued in all cases, App. p. 117, par. 245.
- Cornwallis, Lord.* Defects in the machinery of his system for the administration of civil justice, Bayley 882—Contemplated increasing the number of local jurisdictions when the state of the finances would admit of it, App. p. 77, par. 77.
- Corporeal Punishment.* Magistrates precluded from inflicting corporeal punishment in cases of affrays, unattended with homicide or aggravating circumstances, App. p. 116, par. 235—Regulation by which criminal courts have been prohibited from adjudging corporeal punishment by stripes in cases of affray and contempts of court, App. p. 117, par. 245—Statement showing the number of persons sentenced to flogging by the several heads of district police, magistrates, criminal judges, courts of circuit and fadawlat, 1825—1827, App. p. 208, 209.
- Costs.* See 'Law Suits.'

COURTS OF JUSTICE.

I. Generally.

They have not the means of settling the rights of the ryots, Fortesque 485, 486, 508, 509, 513, 515.—Number and names of courts in a district, with their jurisdictions, Mackenzie 121; Mill 1042.—Courts that should be open for judges of all classes, Mackenzie 166, 167.—Distance suitors have to travel would not be an inconvenience but for the delay in the courts arising from arrears of causes, Mackenzie 220—223.—Advantage of uniting the Judicial systems, with difficulties in the way of its accomplishment, particularly with regard to Europeans, Hill 286—293.—Administration of justice in Madras better than in Bengal, Hill 322—325.—Confidence of natives in European courts, Bayley 894; App. p. 70, par. 35.—Suggestion for abolishing the distinction between the King's and Company's courts, Johnston 1118.

II. Native.

Expense to suitors of the native courts, Mackenzie 189—191.—Corruption and bribery of officers of native courts, and how far from appointments being vested in the judges, Mackenzie 199—202.—As at present constituted, are not calculated for the trial of Europeans, Hamilton 728.—Contemplated method of re-modelling native courts, Hamilton 739, 746—752.—Suggestions for raising the civil jurisdiction of native judicatures, Campbell 992.

See also 'Moonsiffs.' 'Pleadings.' 'Sudder Ameens.'

III. Country.

Improvements in country courts should consist in transferring judicial duties to the natives, Hill 298.—Difficulty of excluding cases of a serious nature from their jurisdiction with regard to Europeans, Hill 299.—Defects in country courts as at present established, Mill 1042, 1043, 1046, 1047.—Necessity for increasing the number of local jurisdictions, and of the officers exercising the functions of judge and magistrate, App. p. 77, par. 76, 77.

IV. Papers laid before the Committee:

1. Generally.

Letters addressed by the Court of Directors to the Indian Governments, reviewing the operations of the civil and criminal courts at the three Presidencies, App. p. 1.—Selection of papers, containing discussion relative to measures recommended by the home authorities in 1814, and the modifications introduced into the Indian codes, App. p. 64.—Increase of business in courts since the establishment of the permanent settlement, and the date of the acquisition of the Ceded and Conquered Provinces, App. p. 77, par. 77.—Statement showing the various tribunals established in the provinces of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay, for the administration of justice under the Regulations as they stood in the years 1813 and 1829, after the appointment of the commissioners of revenue and circuit; together with a summary of the jurisdiction exercised by the different classes of tribunals, App. p. 454.

2. European.

Manner in which the higher European tribunals have been relieved from a considerable portion of their business, by the extended jurisdiction granted to magistrates and sudder ameens, App. p. 118, 119, par. 250, 251.—Statement of causes decided by the European tribunals in the different zillahs at Madras during the year 1815, and of causes depending on 1st January 1816, App. p. 180, 181.—Statement of causes decided by the European tribunals in the different zillahs at Madras during the year 1825, and of causes depending on 1st January 1826, App. p. 182, 183.

See also 'Law-Suits.'

3. Bengal

3. Bengal.

Letter from the Court of Directors to the Bengal Government, dated 8th December 1824, App. p. 1—The like, dated 23d July 1828, App. p. 9—The like, dated 30th March 1831, App. p. 16—The like, dated 11th January 1832, App. p. 28—The like, dated 1st February 1832, App. p. 31—Letter from the Bengal Government to the Court of Directors, dated 22d February 1827, App. p. 64—The like, dated 15th June 1830, with its inclosures, App. p. 125—Letter from the Bengal Government (Revenue Department) to the Court of Directors, dated 10th December 1828, with its inclosures, App. p. 260—Regulations respecting constitution and jurisdiction of the zillah and city courts, and general rules of practice in the zillah and other civil courts, App. p. 594—Regulation IV. 1793, upon the practice of civil courts in the admission and trial of suits, App. p. 597—Regulation XII. 1793, Appointment of law officers in courts of judicature, App. p. 598—Regulation XIII. 1793, and III. 1827, Appointment and duties of ministerial officers of courts of judicature, App. p. 598, 599—Regulation II. 1805, Limitation of time for institution of suits, App. p. 607—Regulation II. 1806, Process of citation and attachment, App. p. 608—Regulation XXVI. 1814 and XIX. 1817, Amending the course of proceeding and practice in the civil courts of original and appellate jurisdictions, App. p. 611, 612.

4. Madras.

Letter from the Court of Directors to the Madras Government, dated 12th October 1831, App. p. 37—The like, dated 21st December 1831, App. p. 48—Letter from the Court of Directors to the Madras Government, dated 11th April 1826, App. p. 214—Letter from the Madras Government to the Court of Directors, dated 27th April 1827, with its enclosures, App. p. 229.

5. Bombay.

Letter from the Court of Directors to the Bombay Government, dated 15th February 1832, App. p. 52—The like, dated 28th March 1832, App. p. 61.

See also 'Administration of Justice.' 'Arrears.' 'Delays.' 'Law-Suits.'

Courts Martial, Native. Nature thereof, and difficulties in the way of obtaining justice, Melville 700—Are generally superintended by European officer, Hamilton 755.

Court of Wards. See 'Wards, Court of.'

Creditors. Regulation XXI. 1814, Public officers forbidden to appoint their creditors to situations under them, App. p. 657.

CRIME:

I. Generally.

State of, in Bengal, Bayley p. 126—Difficulty of ascertaining the correct state, Bayley p. 128.

(A.) Number of heinous crimes in the Lower and Western Provinces of Bengal, as reported by the Superintendents of Police, 1818—1828, Bayley p. 131.

(B.) Abstract of the chief parts of Table (A.), Bayley p. 133.

(C.) Total Number and yearly Averages of Table (B.), showing the Number of Offences in a period of nine years, 1818—1828, compared with those in the years 1827 and 1828, Bayley p. 133.

(D.) Comparative Statement of Sentences for Offences against Property and against the Person, and other Crimes, passed by the Courts of Circuit in Bengal, 1816—1826, Bayley p. 134.

(E.) Comparative Statement of Sentences for Offences against Property and against the Person, and other Crimes, passed by the Magistrates in the Lower and Western Provinces of Bengal, 1826 and 1827, Bayley p. 135.

(No. 1.) List of Persons sentenced by Criminal Courts in Bengal to Death, Transportation, or Imprisonment, 1818—1827, Bayley p. 136.

(No. 2.) List of Persons sentenced to Temporary Imprisonment, arranged according to the Sentences extracted from Table (1.), Bayley p. 137.

(No. 3.) Extract from the Statements ordered by the House of Commons to be printed, 23d February 1829, shewing the Number of Persons in England and Wales sentenced to Death, Transportation, or Imprisonment in seven years, 1822—1828, Bayley p. 137, App. p. 27.

(No. 4.) Summary of the Numbers in Table (3.) arranged under Heads to correspond nearly with those of Tables (1.) and (2.), Bayley p. 138.

(No. 5.) Summary of the Numbers in, of Table (1.) for four years, viz. of those referring to the Nizamut Adawlut and Magistrates, 1824—1827; and of those referring to the Courts of Circuit, 1823—1826, Bayley p. 138.

(No. 6.) Total of the Numbers in Table (3.) for four years, 1825—1828, and of those in Table (5.) for four years, 1823—1826, and 1824—1827 compared, Bayley p. 139.

(No. 7.) Yearly Averages of the Numbers in Table (6.) and the same in proportion to the Population of the two Countries, supposing England and Wales to contain thirteen millions of inhabitants and the Bengal Provinces sixty millions, Bayley p. 139—In Ireland, Bayley p. 140.

State of Crime, Sentences and Averages to Population in France and Austria, Bayley p. 140—In Spain, Bayley p. 141.

(No. 8.) Sentences to Death or Imprisonment for Life in the Lower and Western Provinces of Bengal, compared, Bayley p. 141.

(No. 9.) Sentences to Death and Transportation or Imprisonment for Life in six years, ending 1827; and Executions in the same period in England and Wales, and in the Lower and Western Provinces of Bengal, compared; also the Yearly Averages, and the same in proportion to the Population, supposing the Lower Provinces to contain forty millions and the Western Provinces twenty millions of inhabitants, Bayley p. 142.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

1. Bengal.

State of crime in the Lower and Western Provinces of Bengal, and observations thereupon, 1825-6 and 1827-8, App. p. 17—1818—1828, App. p. 20—28—Statement of proceedings of criminal courts, showing number of persons convicted, offences for which convicted, and sentences passed, App. p. 25—28—Statement of crimes ascertained to have been committed in the several zillahs; the number of persons supposed to have been concerned; and the computed amount of property stolen and recovered in the year 1813; also the number of persons concerned in those crimes, who were apprehended and brought to trial in the Western Provinces, App. p. 506.

A similar statement as to the Lower Provinces for the year 1828, including the number apprehended and brought to trial; also the extent of the zillahs in square miles, and their population in 1822, App. p. 508—A similar statement as to the Western Provinces for 1828, except that neither the number of persons supposed to have been concerned, nor the number apprehended and brought to trial is stated; the extent of each zillah is added, and the amount of the population of the Western Provinces, App. p. 510—Statement of the number of persons committed for trial before the courts of circuit, and the number convicted; also of the number apprehended and punished by the magistrates for minor offences in the several zillahs of the Lower Provinces in 1828; the offences are specified in this statement, App. p. 512—A similar statement as to the Western Provinces, App. p. 514.

Statement of the number of foudjarry cases referred under Regulation III. 1821, to the law law officers and sudder ameens of the several zillahs in the Western Provinces and decided by them in 1827 and 1828, App. p. 516—Statement of the number of persons convicted before the Nizamut Adawlut (specifying their crimes) and the sentences passed by that court in each year, 1816—1827 inclusive, App. p. 518—Abstract of the returns of persons sentenced to punishment by the court of circuit, without reference to the Nizamut Adawlut, in each year, 1816—1826 inclusive, App. p. 520.

Abstract of the returns of persons punished without reference by the zillah magistrates and joint magistrates and their assistants, 1824—1827 inclusive, App. p. 522—Statement of the number of prisoners in each of the zillah and city gaols on 31st December 1828, and of the causes of their confinement; also a comparative statement of the number of prisoners within each division on 31st December 1827 and 31st December 1828, App. p. 524—Statement of the number of prisoners in the Lower Provinces employed in private labour, agreeably to the orders of the Nizamut Adawlut; showing the amount gained by their labour and the proportion paid to the prisoners, App. p. 528—Memorandum prepared in the office of the judicial secretary at Calcutta on the state of the police and administration of criminal justice, App. p. 572.

2. Madras.

Number of persons apprehended, acquitted, and punished by magistrates and district police officers, 1826—1829, App. p. 37—State of crime therein, App. p. 38—Number of cases of murder, robbery and murder, robbery, housebreaking and theft, and number acquitted and convicted by the circuit court and Foujdarry Adawlut in certain years; viz. 1813, App. p. 188, 189; 1814, App. p. 190, 191; 1815, App. p. 192, 193; 1825, App. p. 196, 197; 1826, App. p. 198, 199; 1827, App. p. 200, 201; Abstract of the whole, App. p. 338—Statement showing the number of prisoners under examination before the criminal judges on 1st January 1825—1827, App. p. 203—General Statement of the number of persons punished, released, and sent to the criminal judge by the magistracy in 1825, and of persons in custody under examination by the magistracy on 1st January 1826, App. p. 204, 205.

Statement, showing the number of persons apprehended and delivered over to the criminal judges, 1825—1827, App. p. 206, 207—Statement, showing the number of persons apprehended, released, and punished, together with the nature of all punishments inflicted by the several heads of district police, magistrates, criminal judges, and courts of circuit, and by the Foujdarry Adawlut, 1825—1827, App. p. 208, 209—Statement of the number of trials in which, and of prisoners on whom sentence was passed by the Foujdarry Adawlut in 1815, and the nature of the sentences, App. p. 543—Abstract of the proceedings of the criminal courts and police in the year 1817; also the extent and population (in 1822) of the districts, App. p. 544—A similar statement for 1826, App. p. 546.

Statement of the operations of the Foujdarry Adawlut, from 1st January to 30th June 1829, App. p. 548—Statement of the operations of the courts of circuit in the same period, showing the number of acquittals, punishments of different kinds, and reference to the Foujdarry Adawlut in each of the four divisions, App. p. 550—A similar Statement exhibiting the acquittals, punishments, &c. for each crime or misdemeanour, App. p. 552—Statement of the operations of the criminal courts in each of the zillahs during the same period, App. p. 554.

Statement of the operations of the criminal courts during the same period, exhibiting the acquittals, punishments, &c. for each crime and misdemeanour, App. p. 556—Statement of the proceedings of the village police, district police, and magistracy of each zillah, 1st January to 30th June 1829, in reference to petty offences, App. p. 558—A similar Statement, distinguishing the offences but not the districts, App. p. 560—Statement of the proceedings of the district police and magistracy in each zillah in reference to crimes and misdemeanours, App. p. 562—A similar Statement, distinguishing the offences but not the districts, App. p. 564.

3. Bombay.

Number of complaints preferred to the several authorities in the Old Provinces and the Deccan; persons apprehended, acquitted, and punished, App. p. 61, 62—Observations upon comparing apprehensions and punishments in the Old Provinces and the Deccan, App. p. 63—Local officers to furnish periodical reports of crime committed in their several districts, similar to Bengal, the forms from which Presidency to be procured and adopted, with appropriate alterations; the returns to be transmitted by the magistrate through the zillah judge to the Sudder Foujdarry Adawlut, App. p. 63, par. 11—Abstract of the proceedings of the several criminal courts and the police under the Presidency of Bombay, in the year 1829, App. p. 570.

See also 'Bombay, Old Provinces.' 'Deccan.'

Criminal Judges, Madras. Acquittals and punishments before the criminal courts, periodically between 1819—1829, App. p. 40—Statement showing the number of prisoners under examination before the criminal judges on 1st January 1825—1827, App. p. 203—General statement of the number of persons punished, released, and sent to the criminal judge, by the magistracy in 1825; and of persons in custody under examination by the magistracy on 1st January 1826, App. p. 204, 205—Statement showing the number of persons apprehended and delivered over to the criminal judges 1825—1827, App. p. 206, 207—Statement showing the number of persons apprehended, released, and punished, together with the nature of all punishments inflicted by criminal judges, 1825—1827, App. p. 208, 209.

Criminal Justice. See 'Criminal Law.'

CRIMINAL LAW.

1. Generally.

Administration of criminal law to Hindoos, and Mahomedans' assistance made use of by the judge on trials; nature of his judgment, Hill, 306—313—Criminal law more satisfactorily administered than civil, Oldham 625—Criminal law in India is the Mahomedan law modified, Melvill 672—678—Change in the administration of criminal law, Hamilton 749, Campbell 992—Forms of law in criminal cases sufficient for securing the life and liberty of the natives, Hamilton 776, Bayley, p. 127—Beneficial administration of criminal justice in the interior of Bengal, Bayley 915—Tables intended to show the operation of the criminal law, and state of crime in Bengal, Bayley, p. 126.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

Observations by the Bengal Government upon the administration of criminal justice in India, App. p. 113, par 215—Abstract of the Regulations of the Bengal Government for the administration of criminal justice, arranged under appropriate heads, App. p. 665—General rules for the administration of criminal justice, App. p. 700—Regulation IX. 1793, Rules for the trial of criminals, App. p. 700—Regulation VI. 1796, Power to pardon, or grant mitigation of punishment, App. p. 701—Regulation IV. 1797, Modification of the Mahomedan law of retaliation, App. p. 701—Regulation XIV. 1797, Relief of persons suffering indefinite imprisonment for fines unpaid, App. p. 702—Regulation XVII. 1797, Punishment for perjury, App. p. 702—Regulation VIII. 1799, Modification of the Mahomedan law of retaliation, App. p. 703.

Regulation VIII. 1801, Modification of the Mahomedan law of retaliation of death and of bodily injury, App. p. 703—Regulation LIII. 1803, Modification of the Mahomedan law regarding discretionary punishment, App. p. 703—Regulation III. 1805, For the more effectual punishment of gang-robbery, App. p. 705—Regulation XIII. 1806, VII. 1807, VII. 1809, XII. 1810, Rules for the prevention and punishment, of the issue of stamps, and of the unauthorized sale of them, App. p. 706—Regulation I. 1807, Rules for the more effectual punishment of perjury and forgery, App. p. 706—Regulation VIII. 1808, Rules for the more exemplary punishment of gang-robbery, robbery, App. p. 706—Regulation XIV. 1810, Powers of the Sudder Nizamut Adawlut to pardon and mitigate punishment, App. p. 707—Regulation I. 1811, Punishment for housebreaking, App. p. 707.

Regulation XIV. 1811, Transportation abolished, App. p. 708—Regulation II. 1813, Punishment for misappropriation of public money, App. p. 708—Regulation IX. 1813, Transportation re-established, App. p. 708—Regulation XI. 1814, Punishment for housebreaking, App. p. 708—Regulation XV. 1814, Aggregate penalties for several offences, App. p. 709—Regulation XVII. 1817, Amendments of the Mahomedan law in regard to punishments and evidence, App. p. 709—Regulation VII. 1820, Punishment for Dhurna, App. p. 710.

Regulation IV. 1822, Amendments of the Mahomedan law in cases of murder and insanity, App. p. 711—Regulation II. 1823, Punishment for violent affrays, App. p. 711—Regulation VI. 1828, Explaining the nature of the affrays referred to in the foregoing enactment, App. p. 712—Regulation III. 1825, Punishment of gang-robbery, App. p. 712—Regulation XII. 1825, Modification of the powers of courts in regard to punishment, App. p. 712—Regulation XII. 1829, Punishment for wounding with intent to commit murder, App. p. 712.

See also 'Administration of Justice.' 'Benares.' 'Capital Charges.' 'Cuttack.' 'Deyra Doon.' 'Jungle Mehals.' 'Kumaon.' 'Garrow Hills.' 'Mahomedan Law.' 'Rajmahal.'

Cuddapah. Number of persons charged with petty offences, and number acquitted and punished in 1829, App. p. 42—Number of suits of twenty rupees and upwards, instituted in the district moonsiffs' courts; number of such suits settled by razeenamah; number decided on merits; and number decided and appealed to the zillah courts, 1825 and 1826, App. p. 236, 249.

See also 'Vailpond Moonsiff.'

Custom. 'Uniformity in the customs of India, which are in fact its laws, Mill 1060.

CUTTACK.

I. Generally.

Proposed distribution of the country into divisions, to be placed under separate revenue commissioners, each to have a covenanted assistant, number of districts and amount of assessment, App. p. 270.

II. Judicial Regulations.

Special Judicial Regulations, civil and criminal, for Cuttack, App. p. 652—Regulation IV. 1804, Date of cession; provision for the administration of criminal justice, App. p. 652—Regulation XIII. 1805, System of police for Cuttack, App. p. 653—Regulation XIV. 1805, Provision for the administration of civil justice, App. p. 653—Regulation XI. 1816, Civil suits regarding inheritance arising in the tributary mahals of Cuttack, App. p. 653—Regulation XXII. 1817, Special powers vested in the judge and magistrate of Cuttack, App. p. 654—Regulation V. 1818, Appointment of a commission in Cuttack, App. p. 654.

III. Revenue Regulations.

Special Revenue Regulations for Cuttack, App. p. 822—Regulation XII. 1805, Principles of the revenue settlement, App. p. 822—Regulation VI. 1809, Appointment of a commission for Cuttack, App. p. 823—Regulation IV. 1810, Abolition of the Cuttack commission, App. p. 823—Regulations X. 1807, X. 1812, I. 1813, III. 1816, XIII. 1818, Settlement of the Revenue, App. p. 823, 824.

D.

Darogahs or Police Stations. Number thereof, and extent of territory under their jurisdiction in each zillah in the Lower and Western Provinces of Bengal, Bayley, p. 126—They are under the superintendence of the magistrate; their duties; particular crimes they are prohibited taking cognizance of, Bayley, p. 126.

DEATH, Punishment of.I. Generally.

Punishment of, more rarely awarded in India than in England, Melville 665—The punishment of, should be abolished, Mill 1052—Hard labour and banishment more feared by the natives than death, Mill 1052, 1053—Persons sentenced by the criminal courts in Bengal to death 1816—1827, Bayley p. 136—142—Persons sentenced to death in England and Wales 1822—1828, Bayley p. 137—142.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

Persons sentenced to death in the Lower and Western Provinces by the Nizamut Adawlut, 1816—1827, App. p. 27—Regulation by which it has been rendered necessary that two judges of the Nizamut Adawlut must concur in all sentences of death passed by that court, App. p. 117, par. 245—Number of persons sentenced to, by the Foujdarry Adawlut at Madras 1819—1829, App. p. 41—1825—1827, App. p. 209.

Death, retaliation for. Requisites necessary to support a claim for retaliation of death, according to the Mahomedan law, App. p. 671.

Debts. Provision making land saleable for debts should be rescinded, and measures that should be introduced, Hill 244—246—Change might be made agreeable to the feelings of the natives, Hill 247—Possessions at present liable to debts and Government revenues, how far so formerly, Hill 254—257—Law preventing the sale of estates for payment of debts would prevent their being contracted, Hill 277—280.

See also 'Divisions of Land.' 'Madras College.'

Deccan. Number of suits instituted, decided, and depending, 1825—1829, App. p. 51—53—Number of suits decreed wholly or in part, and adjusted, and number dismissed, and dismissed for default, 1827—1829, App. p. 55—Number of appeals preferred, decided, and remaining, 1825—1829, App. p. 57—Number of complaints preferred to the several authorities in the Deccan, 1825—28; number acquitted and punished, App. p. 61, 62—Returns as to state of crime therein, from 1819, to be furnished the Court of Directors, App. p. 62.

DECOITTEE.I. Generally.

Crime of decoittee has decreased, Hamilton 791, 792—Statement respecting the crime of, in the Lower and Western Provinces, Bayley, p. 96, 97.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

Observations upon the causes of the crime and decrease thereof, App. p. 18—Yearly average number of decoities, 1803—1828, App. p. 19—State of, at Madras, App. p. 38, 39.

Decrees. Nature of Judge's decrees, Clarke 62—68—Decrees are on stamps, Clarke 67—Provision made by Regulation VII. of 1825, for facilitating the execution of decrees, and to enable judges of civil courts to obtain aid of collectors in enforcing decrees relative relative to the proprietary rights, or possession of land, App. p. 92, par. 156—Regulation XIII. 1796, regarding the execution of decrees pending appeals, App. p. 603.

See also 'Interest.' 'Moonsiffs.' 'Provincial Courts.'

Deeds. See 'Registry Offices.'

Defaulters. Orders of local commissioners should be final in respect to the issue of process against the persons of revenue defaulters, and their release from gaol; periodical statements of prisoners being sent to the Board to which should belong the power of special interference, App. p. 268.

Dehlee. See 'Delhi.'

Delays. Delays in suits and means of expediting proceedings, Mackenzie 145, Bayley 886, 890—892, Fortescue 988—Necessity for attending to and reducing delays caused by courts of circuit and Foudarry Adawlut; App. p. 45, par. 38—Causes of delay in judicial tribunals in India which cannot be mitigated or remedied by modification of judicial institutions, App. p. 65, par. 7—12.

See also 'Arrears.' 'Burdwan.' 'Moonsiffs.' 'Sudder Ameens.' 'Sudder Dewanny.'

Delhi. Extract letter from the Delhi commissioner, upon the inefficacy of the punchayet from want of confidence which one native has in the discernment and just motives of another, and from greater reliance being placed in the justice of European officers, App. p. 72, par. 42—Description of the provisions made for the superintendence of the revenue and judicial offices of the Delhi territory; affording means to the resident to assume the general superintendence of districts in the Doab, in the immediate vicinity of Dehlee, App. p. 262, par. 10.

Number of districts this division of the country should be divided into, to be placed under separate revenue commissioners, each to have a covenanted assistant; amount of assessment and general remarks, App. p. 270—Proposed distribution of the country into divisions, each to be placed under two commissioners exercising the powers of judges of the provincial court of appeal and circuit, with those of revenue commissioners, each commissioner being responsible for the affairs of a distinct portion of the division; number of districts; amount of assessment; district officers proposed; number of officers; allowances; number at present employed and their allowances, App. p. 275.

Deportation. See 'Expulsion.'

Descent. See 'Inheritance.'

Detainers. Objection to the detention of parties in prison on suspicion of guilt, App. p. 45, par. 40—Regulations by which measures have been taken to guard against prolonged detention of prisoners under examination; and for limiting and defining powers of magistrates and courts of circuit in requiring security for good behaviour of persons of suspicious livelihood or of bad character, App. p. 118, par. 247—Abstract statement of prisoners in confinement under requisition of security on 1st January 1826, in the Lower and Western provinces, App. p. 118.

See also 'Magistrates.' 'Police.'

Deyra Doon. Regulation IV. 1817, XXI. 1825, V. 1829, Administration of criminal justice in Deyra Doon, App. p. 648.

Deyut. See 'Compensation.'

Dharwar. Suits instituted and depending, 1827 and 1828; Dharwar constituted a district zillah; proposition for appointing a separate judge and session judge at Dharwar not carried into effect; letters received by the governor from the collector, in his minutes; disapproval of the plan, the communication being unofficial; report of state of the district and business should have been furnished by the collector.

visiting judge of the Sudder Adawlut; report by one of the judges of the Sudder Adawlut, exhibiting a view of the state of the district different from that of the collector; union of powers held by the collector of Dharwar not to be continued longer than necessity requires; separate judicial officer to be appointed as in other zillahs, App. p. 58, 59, par. 31—33.

Discretionary Punishments. Nature of discretionary punishments inflicted under the third class of judicial retribution, according to the Mahomedan law, App. p. 676.

Disputes. See 'Supreme Court.'

District Police. See 'Police.'

DIVISIONS OF LAND.

1. Generally.

Disadvantages of the subdivision of property in destroying the aristocracy of the country, Hill 264—268—Partition of estates caused by the private debts of the zemindars, Hill 276—Great evils thereof, Bayley 894.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

Subdivision of zemindary property from the sales of land tends to augment litigation, App. p. 65, par. 8—Regulation XI. 1793, and X. 1800, Declaration of the divisibility of zemindaries, App. p. 774—Regulation XXI. 1793, Rules for the preservation of the records of the permanent settlement, App. p. 775—Regulations XXV. 1793, XV. 1797, and XI. 1811, Rules for the apportionment of the assessed revenue on the subdivided portions of estates, App. p. 775, 776—Regulation XLVIII. 1793, and VIII. 1800, Rules for the formation of quinquennial registers of estates, and of their transfers and subdivisions, App. p. 776, 777.

Regulation VIII. 1800, Rules for the registry of divisions and alienations, App. p. 777—Regulation I. 1801, Apportionment of the revenue on divided estates, App. p. 777—Regulation VI. 1807, Divisibility of estates limited to portions of a certain value, App. p. 778—Regulation V. 1810, Facilitating the division of estates, App. p. 778—Regulation XVIII. 1812, Declaration of the effect of leases on the subdivision of estates, App. p. 779—Regulation XIX. 1814, Consolidated and amended rules for the division of estates, App. p. 779.

Doab, Provinces of the. Regulations IX. 1804, VIII. 1805, XIV. 1806, Introduction of the judicial system into the Conquered Provinces in the Doab, App. p. 648—Proposed distribution of the country into divisions, to be placed under separate Revenue Commissioners, each to have a covenanted assistant; number of districts; amount of assessment and general remarks, App. p. 270—Proposed distribution of the country into divisions, each to be placed under two commissioners exercising the powers of judges of the provincial court of appeal and circuit, with those of Revenue Commissioners, each commissioner being responsible for the affairs of a distinct portion of the division; number of districts; amount of assessment; district officers proposed; number of officers; allowances; number at present employed and their allowances, App. p. 275.

See also 'Delhi.'

Drunkenness (Shoorb). Definition of the crime according to the Mahomedan law, and nature of the punishment for it, App. p. 674.

Dubois, Abbé. Reference to letter from, relative to Catholics in India, Johnston 1149—Letter from, to Sir Alexander Johnston, giving him an account of the present condition of the native Catholics throughout India, dated 21st May 1831, Johnston, p. 232.

Dunsmure, John, Esq. Letter from John Dunsmure, Esq., acting collector at Allahabad, dated 15th February 1828, to Holt Mackenzie, Esq., secretary to Government, containing statement respecting the collection of revenue, and amount of balances in the district of Allahabad, App. p. 806—Another letter from same to same, dated 5th March 1828, enclosing enclosing statement regarding the several tehseldars in the district of Allahabad, App. p. 312.

E.

East, Sir Edward Hyde. 'See Appeals.'

East-Indians. Paper containing copies of a letter from Mr. Rickets, agent of East-Indians, to Sir Alexander Johnston, on 6th May 1830; and Sir Alexander Johnston's answer, explaining the line of policy he would advise the British Government to adopt with respect to all East-Indians in British India, Johnston, p. 248.

EDUCATION.

I. Of Europeans.

Inquiry by the Committee into the system of education employed for preparing the civil servants of the Company to discharge the duties devolving upon them, more especially those of a judicial nature; the investigation embraced the studies at the college at Haileybury, and particularly that portion of them dedicated to the acquisition of the principles of general and particular law, and was extended to the system of instruction prescribed to writers on their arrival in India. Rep. p. 100—No difference in the course of, with regard to future employment, Clarke 9, 14, 36—41—Manner of paying teachers and appointing students, Mackenzie 130—134—Little diversity of system between private teaching and the public institutions, Mackenzie 135—Education civil servants should receive, Mackenzie 175.

Theoretical knowledge to be acquired in England, and practical knowledge in India. Mackenzie 181—Education of young men for the judicial department, would not be advantageous, Hill 402—404—Nature of education to be attained by young men in England, Hill 412, 413—Best method of education for judicial offices in India, and England, Oldham 547—565, Bayley 908—910—Education in the principles of law sufficiently attained at Haileybury, Hamilton 816—822—Progress of education has been very rapid in India, Bayley 915—Examination upon the present and proposed mode of educating young men intended for the judicial department, Mill 1067—1072—Necessity for study of the law for judicial departments, Empson 1086—1089—Improvements suggested in legal education, Empson 1090.

II. Of Natives.

Necessity for the higher class of native officers employed in the civil administration being properly qualified by education and habits for their trusts; anxiety of the Government to promote that object, App. p. 121, 122, par. 274—276—List of those which since the year 1817 have been encouraged or patronized by the Government, App. p. 122.

See also 'Judges, Native.' 'Laws.' 'Qualification.'

Elphinstone, Mr. Recommendation by Mr. Elphinstone for exempting suits under Rs. 100 value from stamp tax, and making up deficiency in the revenue therefrom, by duties on articles of commerce, App. p. 53, par. 6.

Embarrassment. Great necessity for civil servants commencing their public career free from embarrassments; and hope the Calcutta college is taking means to promote that object, App. p. 121, par. 272, 273.

Emoluments. See 'Salaries.'

Empson, William. (Analysis of his Evidence). Professor of law at Haileybury, 1073—Course of lectures and study of the law of students at Haileybury, 1073, 1081, 1082—Test of proficiency too low, 1078—Time occupied in other studies, vents the due acquirement of the law, 1079, 1080—Difficulty of adapting the instruction at Haileybury to the functions likely to be exercised in India, 1083—Hindoo and Mahomedan law difficult to be taught in England, but first principles of law are better acquired than in India, 1084—Writers should select their employment in England, 1085—Necessity for study of the law for judicial departments, 1086—1089—Improvements suggested in legal education, 1090—Comparison between Haileybury and the Universities as to legal instruction, 1090, 1091—No difficulty in getting a competent measure of qualification through a proper test, 1092, 1093.

Necessity of some secondary punishment, by a lower grade in the service being held out as a terror to the second rate students, 1093—1098—Disadvantage of public feeling against the college in the event of their withdrawing appointment for want of qualification, 1094—1096—Standard of qualification at Haileybury as high as practicable considering difficulties, 1097—Advantages of Haileybury College over the Board of Examiners, in qualifying young men for India, 1099—How qualification might be improved, 1100, 1101—Difficulties in the way of appropriating the College to general instruction, 1021, 1103—Difficulties in the way of legal instruction at Haileybury, if the College appropriated to general purposes, 1104, 1105—Extent of knowledge of Oriental languages necessary to be attained in this country, 1106, 1107—Ages at which young men should go out, 1108, 1109—Manner in which an open system might best secure the maximum of qualification, 1110.

England and Wales. See: Crime. Population.

English Language. If courts united proceedings to be in English, Mackenzie 188—Its substitution for the Persian in courts advisable, Melville 631—No chance of its being introduced generally, or becoming a substitute for the Persian, Bayley 915.

English Law. Means taken to promote the knowledge of the English laws, Bayley 915—Circumstances calling for English law have gone by, Mill 1035.

Escape from Custody. Powers of magistrates with regard to trial and sentence of convicts or prisoners confined for security, or under examination, who may effect their escape without committing any acts of previous personal violence, App. p. 116, par. 233.

EUROPEANS.

Generally.

Law should be equally administered between both Europeans and natives, Clarke 98, 99—Difficulty in the way of native judges adjudicating in case of European settlement might be easily removed, Mackenzie 147—149—Extent to which Europeans are subject to the Company's courts in the interior, Mackenzie 231, 232—Difficulties in administering the law in case of European settlement, Hill 294, 295—Limited number of Europeans at present prevents the difficulties being felt in a great degree, Hill 296, 297—Disadvantages of Europeans settling in India, Hill 367—No necessity for greater facilities being given to Europeans in India, than they at present enjoy, Hill 371—374—Europeans would hold situations now held by natives, though the land must still be cultivated by Natives, Hill 376.

In the event of European settlement, European judges and justices must be increased; increased expense thereby, Oldham 562—590—Europeans, if admitted, to be subject to the provincial courts, Melville 670, 671, 679, 689—Europeans should be tried by native judges under the superintendence of a European judge, Melville 705, 706, Bayley 925, 930, or Disadvantages of Europeans being subject to native tribunals, Oldham 585, 590; Hamilton 716—738—Changes in the law necessary on settlement of Europeans, and number and description of Europeans likely to avail themselves of the privilege, Bayley 917—922; Fortescue 958—960, 968—Low class of Europeans at present in India, Fortescue 963—966—How far the settlement of Europeans would be advantageous, Fortescue 966, 967; Campbell 1027—1032—Method

Method to be adopted with regard to the trial of Europeans, Campbell 1017, 1018; Mell 1055—1057—Restrictions against their settlement in Ceylon removed, Johnston 1115—Advantage of admitting Europeans of capital, or of skill and talent, to settle and hold offices in India, Johnston 1155—1158.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

Regulations relative to Europeans not in the public service, App. p. 659—Regulation XXVIII. 1793, European British subjects not to reside more than ten miles from Calcutta, App. p. 659—Regulation XXXVIII. 1793, Forbidding European British subjects from holding land in the provinces, without the special sanction of Government, App. p. 659—Regulation XXXIII. 1795, Rules relative to the rent of lands; the cultivation and manufacture of indigo by European British subjects, App. p. 660—Regulation XX. 1812, Allowing the registry of indigo contracts, App. p. 661—Regulation VI. 1823, For the enforcement of indigo contracts, App. p. 661—Regulation V. 1830, Breach of indigo contracts punishable by magistrates, App. p. 662.

See also 'Capital.' 'Ceded and Conquered Provinces.' 'Civil Servants.' 'Contempts of Court.' 'Courts of Justice, I. II. III.' 'Indigo.' 'Judges.' 'Judicial Officers.' 'Juries.' 'Law-Suits.' 'Legislation.' 'Magistrates.'

European Functionaries. Manner in which the administration of civil justice is impeded by the insufficient number of European functionaries employed in the judicial department; consequent necessity for their being increased, App. p. 121, par. 268—Rules relative to European public officers of Government, App. p. 655—Regulation XXXVIII. 1793, Company's European servants forbidden to lend money to natives, App. p. 655—Regulations VIII. and X. 1806, Relative to the prosecution and defence of suits against European public officers of the Government, App. p. 655—Regulation XVII. 1813, and VIII. 1825, Modification of course prescribed by previous regulations for the investigation of charges against European public officers, App. p. 656.

Regulation II. 1814, Further modification of the preceding rules, App. p. 657—Regulation XXI. 1814, Public officers forbidden to appoint their creditors to situations under them, App. p. 657—Regulation VIII. 1817, Further modification of the rules for proceedings against European public officers, App. p. 657—Regulation VII. 1823, The Company's European public servants prohibited from borrowing money from natives under their authority, App. p. 658—Regulation VIII. 1825, European public officers of Government forbidden to employ their private servants in public duties, or public servants in private duties, App. p. 658.

See also 'Civil Servants.'

Evidence. How far given in the presence of the judge, Melvill 647—Examination upon the Mahomedan law of evidence, and difficulty in some cases of obtaining sufficient evidence, Hamilton 781—790—Evidence necessary to the infliction of penalties under the first head of judicial retribution according to the Mahomedan law, App. p. 673.

See also 'Intimidation.' 'Languages.' 'Persian Language.' 'Torture.' 'Witnesses.'

Examination of Prisoners. See 'Criminal Judges.'

Example. Nature of punishments, for example (Seasut) under the third class of judicial retribution, according to the Mahomedan law, App. p. 676.

Exemptions. See 'Privileged Persons.'

Executions. Number of persons executed according to sentence of death in England and Wales 1822—1828, Bayley p. 101, App. p. 28—In England and Wales and Bengal compared, Bayley p. 138, 139, App. p. 28.

Expense of Suits. See 'Courts of Justice, II.' 'Law-Suits.'

Expulsion.

Expulsion from India. Power of removal should be vested either in the executive government or in courts of justice, Clarke 98, 99—Power of deportation not necessary, if power of removal from interior to the presidency allowed, Bayley 923, 924.

Extravagance. Habits of extravagance should be made a disqualification for the service, Bayley 909.

F.

False Imprisonment. Evils thereof, and necessity for regulation for its prevention, App. p. 45.

Farms. See 'Abkarree Mehal.'

FEES:

I. Generally.

Regulations with regard to the fees of native pleaders, Clarke 56—60—Officers of the courts are paid in fees; but those paid during suits are levied in the form of stamp duties, and are all regulated, Mackenzie 122, 123.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

Disadvantages of paying native judges by fees, and necessity for revision of Regulations with respect to that part of the judicial system, App. p. 56, par. 22—Fees on the institution of suits and appeals and stamp duties, as affecting the administration of justice, App. p. 635—Regulation XXXVIII. 1795, Establishment of fees on the institution of civil suits, App. p. 635—Regulation III. 1817, diminishing rate of fees on petty suits, App. p. 640.

See also 'Stamp Duties.'

Females. Regulation by which females convicted of criminal offences have been altogether exempted from corporeal punishment by stripes, App. p. 117, par. 245.

Fictitious Names. Necessity for guarding against them in the transfer of land, Bayley 892.

Finance Committee, Bengal. Reference to a letter from the finance committee in Bengal to the Governor-general, containing suggestions for the improvement of the inferior judicial system, Mackenzie 145, 146.

FINES:

I. Bengal.

Rules regarding fines imposed by revenue authorities should be revised, local commissioners in the mean time exercising the powers now belonging to the Board, subject to appeal thereto; also reporting to the Board all fines requiring the sanction of Government for realization, which the Board should be authorized to remit without reference, when they may think the penalty improperly imposed, App. p. 268.

II. Madras.

Statement showing the number of persons fined by the district police officers, by magistrates, by criminal judges, and by courts of circuit 1825—1827, App. p. 208, 209.

III. Bombay.

Number of persons fined by the criminal judges and superior courts in the Bombay Old Provinces and the Deccan 1825—1828, App. p. 62.

See also 'Forfeitures.' 'Penalties.'

IV.
INDEX.
—
FLO—FUR.

870 INDEX TO REPORT FROM SELECT COMMITTEE.

Flogging. See 'Corporeal Punishment.'

Forfeitures. Should not be enforced without orders from Government, to which the disposal of the property forfeited belongs, App. p. 268.

Forgery. Regulations by which the punishment in cases of forgery have been limited, and the powers to be respectively exercised by the courts of Circuit and Nizamat Adawlut more clearly defined, App. p. 117, par. 242.

Forms. See 'Criminal Law.' 'Pleadings.'

Fornication. See 'Adultery.'

Fortescue, Thomas. (Analysis of his Evidence.)—Situations held by witnesses in the Revenue and Judicial departments in Bengal, 473—477—Rights of ryots and zamindars, 477, 478, 482—493, 496—533.—Intermediate class between ryots and governments under the Mogul Government, their rights and powers, 479, 480.

[Second Examination.]—Expediency of employing natives; their breaches of duty and want of character being through want of proper remuneration, 942—948, 955.—Their capacity for office, 949—951, 971.—They might be employed as justices of the peace, but not over Europeans, 952—954.—Zemindars and natives of power would not prevent impartiality in native judicial officers, 955.—Alterations necessary in the system of judicial administration in the event of settlement of Europeans, 958—960, 963.—Possibility of contempts of court being committed by Europeans, 960—962.—Advantages of Europeans at present in India, and how employed, 963—966.—How far the settlement of Europeans would be advantageous, 966, 967.—Code of law might be framed to embrace Europeans and natives, 970, 971.—How far European settlers would be able to embrace Europeans and natives, 970, 971.—Effect of Europeans not being allowed to hold land, 979—982.—Cause of venality among native officers of courts, 982.—Possibility of forming a common system of judicature for the Presidencies and the interior, of whom a legislative body should be formed, 986.—Causes of delay in trials, and methods of prevention, 987, 988.

Fox, Mr. See 'Government of India.'

France. State of crime therein; number of sentences and proportion to population, App. p. 140.

See also 'Population.'

Fraser, Mr. W. His employment of the punchayet system in settling boundaries in Delhi, Mackenzie 212.

Fullerton, Mr. His opinion that the real advantage of the punchayet system was that at the time it prevailed there existed no other, and that if a man had no punchayet in his cause he obtained no settlement, App. p. 71, par. 38.

Furruckabad. Proposed distribution of the country into divisions, to be placed under separate Revenue Commissioners, each to have a covenanted assistant; number of districts and amount of assessment, App. p. 270.—Proposed distribution of the country into divisions, each to be placed under two commissioners, exercising the powers of judges of the provincial court of appeal and circuit, with those of Revenue Commissioners, each commissioner being responsible for the affairs of a district in the division; number of districts, amount of assessment, number of officers, App. p. 275.

G.

Gaols. Attention paid to the health and comfort of prisoners therein, Bayley 915—Necessity for the enlargement of gaols, Fortescue 958, 959—Regulations requiring judges of circuit to visit civil gaols at each sessions; civil gaols placed under the control of magistrates, and rules in force for the management of criminal gaols as are applicable to civil gaols, have been transferred to them, App. p. 91, par. 148—Regulations IV. 1816, III. 1826, and VI. 1830, Extending to civil gaols and prisoners the rules in force regarding criminal prisons, App. p. 613.

Gaol Delivery. Period of gaol delivery, Melvill 660—664; Hamilton 793—801—Commissioners of circuit are assisted in that duty, Hamilton 800.

Garrow Hills. Regulation X. 1822, Administration of criminal justice in the Garrow Hills, App. p. 650.

Gifford, Sir Harding. Extract from the charge delivered by Sir Harding Gifford, chief justice, and first member of Council in Ceylon 1820, on taking possession of office, relative to the benefits of jury trial, Johnston 1161, p. 198.

Governor-General, Pargunah. Report by Mr. Macsween, judge and magistrate of Agrah, upon the administration of civil justice and abuse of the punchayet system, App. p. 71, par. 20—Goberdhan, a place held in particular sanctity by the Hindoo; description of its population, it has been for a considerable period subject to the Hindoo government of Benares, App. p. 71, par. 40.

Government of India. Defects of all systems of administration according to the present tenure of India, Hul 414—Reference to documents containing suggestions for the improvement of the government of India, Johnston 1117, 1118—Examination upon papers delivered in by witness, marked (A.) to (E.), containing suggestions upon the improvement of India, Johnston 1141, 1142—Paper sent by Sir Alexander Johnston in 1826 to Mr. Fox, containing suggestions for the better government of India, Johnston 901.

See also. Administration of Justice. Legislation. Supreme Court.

Governor-General. He should have a casting voice in any legislative council, Fortescue 986.

See also. Law Officers.

Grand Jury. See Natives.

Grave, Right Honourable C. See Appeals.

See also. Appeals.

See also. Appeals.

See also. Appeals.

See also. Appeals.

Haileybury College. Instruction in the rudiments of law therein, and how far beneficial, Clark 81—84; Hamilton 816—822; Mill 1067—Elementary instruction in law therein but of slight use, Mackenzie 178—System of education in the college has been found to answer, Hul 392—No material improvement from education at Haileybury, and means of obtaining a better selection therefrom, Bayley 904—Course of lectures and study of the law at Haileybury, Empson 1075—1077, 1081, 1082—Test of proficiency too low, Empson 1078—Time occupied in other studies prevents the due acquirement of the law, Empson 1079, 1080—Difficulty of adapting the instruction at Haileybury to the functions likely to be exercised in India, Empson 1083—Comparison between Haileybury and the universities, as to legal instruction, Empson 1090, 1091—No difficulty culty in getting a competent measure of qualification through a proper test, Empson 1092, 1093.

Necessity for some secondary punishment, by some lower grade in the service being held out as a terror to the second-rate students, Empson 1093, 1098.—Disadvantages of public feeling against the college, in the event of their withdrawing appointments for want of qualification, Empson 1094—1096.—Standard of qualification at Haileybury as high as practicable, considering difficulties, Empson 1097.—How qualification might be improved, Empson 1100, 1101.—Advantages of Haileybury over the Board of Examiners in qualifying young men for India, Empson 1099.—Difficulties in the way of appropriating the college to general instruction, Empson 1102, 1103.—Difficulties in the way of legal instruction at Haileybury, if the college appropriated to general purposes, Empson 1104, 1105.—How far the college might be made of use in educating young men for judicial situations, Johnston 1129.

See also Education.

Half Castes. They should be put on a footing with natives, Mackenzie 165, 166; Hill 375.—Hardship of their situation; they are disliked by both natives and Europeans, Fortescue 976.—They should be eligible to situations now held by converted subjects, Johnston 1119—1122.—They should be admitted to the same situations as Europeans and natives, Johnston 1159.

Hamilton, Robert North Collic. (Analysis of his Evidence).—Disadvantages of Europeans being subject to native tribunals, 716—738.—Contemplated method of reforming native courts, 739, 746—752.—Increased salaries of native judges, 740—743.—Difficulties of native juries, 753—756.—Powers of judges and native law officers, and subsequent appeals to the Nizamut Adawlut, 757—775.—Forms of law in criminal cases sufficient for securing the life and liberty of the native, 776.—Number of capital charges, and difficulty in convicting, 777—780.—Examination upon the Mahomedan law of evidence, and difficulty in some cases of obtaining sufficient, 781—790.—Rate of decoitee decreased, 791, 792.

Gaols delivered twice a year, 793—801.—Qualification and duties of commissioners of circuit and magistrates, 802—808, 864—868, 872—874.—Disadvantages of blending the Revenue and Judicial departments, 802—806, 825—830, 864—868, 872—874, 877.—Disadvantage of employing natives as magistrates, 809—815.—Education is the principles of law sufficiently attained at Haileybury, 816—822.—Young men should choose their line of employment after their arrival in India, 823—825.—Present scale of promotion in the Revenue and Judicial departments with salaries attached, and disadvantages of the present system, 825—830.—Duties of assistant to magistrate, 832—838.—Method of obtaining the necessary qualification in Persian and in judicial knowledge, 857—863, 869—871.—Promotion of zillah judge, 875—877.—Salaries of commissioners of circuit, zillah judge, magistrate, and assistant, 878—891.

Hard Labour. Is more feared by the natives than death, Moffatt 1062, 1063.

Hardy, Captain. See 'Huttee.'

Harrington, Mr. Statement of the principal objects contemplated in the draft of the regulation proposed by Mr. Harrington for more fully securing the rights of Khudkas ryots, and other permanent under-tenants of lands, App. p. 66, 67, par. 17—19.

Hastings, Marquis of. Extract from his minute on the judicial administration, dated 22 October 1815, in favour of establishing a separate court of Sadder Dewany and Nizamut Adawlut in the Western Provinces, App. p. 83, par. 111.—Another extract from his minute relative to the general system of the police establishments, App. p. 86, par. 27.

Highway Robbery. Definition of the crime of highway robbery, or Surikah-i-Robba, according to the Mahomedan law, and method of punishment for it, App. p. 676, note 7.

Hill, David. (Analysis of his Evidence).—Opinion of Sir Thomas Munro on the advantages of estates descending entire in the line of primogeniture, with particulars of the system of the country in that respect, 235—243—Provision making lands saleable for debts should be rescinded, and measures that should be introduced, 244—246—Change might be made agreeable to the feelings of the natives, 247—Powers and possessions of zemindars, and laws of descent, 248—253—Possessions at present liable to debts and Government revenue, how far so formerly, 254—257—Whether any exception from the Hindoo law of descent in Madras, 258—263—Disadvantages of the subdivision of property in destroying the aristocracy of the country, 264—268—Reluctance of Government to sell ancient zemindaries in Madras, and in cases of arrears have taken the zemindars' affairs into their own possession, 269—275.

Partition of estates caused by the private debts of the zemindars, 276—Law preventing the sale of estates for payment of debts would prevent their being contracted, 277—280—Sequestration has answered better than sale, 281—No fear of loss to the revenue if power of sale for arrears removed, 282—285—Advantages of uniting the judicial systems with difficulties in the way of its accomplishment, particularly with regard to Europeans, 286—293—Difficulties in administering the law in case of European settlement, 294, 295—Limited number of Europeans at present prevents the difficulties being felt in a great degree, 296—297—Improvements in country courts should consist in transferring judicial duties to the natives, 298—Difficulty of excluding cases of a serious nature from their jurisdiction with regard to Europeans, 299—Advantages of a good system of jury trial for Europeans, and influence of judges thereupon, 300, 301—How far desirable that natives should be employed as justices of the peace, and feeling of the natives with regard to it, 302—305.

Administration of criminal law to Hindoos and Mahomedans; assistance made use of by the judge on trials, nature of his judgment, 306—313—Whether there should be a change of persons as assessors, or whether they should be selected from a limited number, 314—315—Whether officers could be better selected for judicial duties than at present, in order to embrace trial of Europeans, 316—321—Administration of justice in Madras better than in Bengal; training of judicial officers in Bengal, 322—325—Advantages of young men being at first employed in revenue matters, 326—How far advantageous that the Company's service should be made altogether military, and selections for offices made therefrom, 327—Advantages of young men going out to India at an early age, 328—334—Sufficient knowledge of native languages not to be attained in this country, 335—336—Variation in the rules as to period of remaining in India before appointment to office, 339, 340—Disadvantages of educating more men for service in India than would be wanted, 341.

Second Examination.—Difficulties in the way of legislation in India, particularly in the interest of European settlement, 342—Control of Government over the administration of justice, how far it is and should be exercised, 343—353—Proposed constitution of a legislative council, 354—356—Whether advantageous to invest the judges with legislative functions, 357—358, 365, 366—Advantages of a legislative council, particularly in saving references to Parliament, 359, 360—Parts of India in which notice was attracted of disputes between Government and the judges at Bombay, 361, 362—Feeling of the natives with regard to the supreme court, 363, 364—Disadvantages of Europeans settling in India, 367—Whether any obstructions to the introduction of British capital into India, 368—370—No necessity for greater facilities being given to Europeans in India than they at present enjoy, 371—374—Half-castes should be put on a footing with natives, 375—Europeans would hold situations now held by natives, though the land must still be cultivated by natives, 376—Capital of indigo-planters accumulated in India, 377—Benefits arising from indigo cultivation, and to what attributed, 378—382, 395.

Cotton and sugar could not be so successfully cultivated as indigo, 383—386—No advantage would arise from Europeans holding land, 387, 388—Mischiefs that would arise therefrom, 389, 390—Causes of disputes between indigo planters and natives, 391—394

394—Natives feel the zillah courts irksome, 396—Justice should be administered by natives themselves, 397—Defect in the systems of appeals, and suggestions for improvement therein, 398—400—Education of young men for the judicial department would not be an advantage; functions of judges should be transferred to natives, 402—404—Reduction of European judges by employing natives, 405—408—Should not be carried into effect if European settlement allowed, 409, 410—Natural education to be attained by young men in England, 412, 413—Suggestions for the improvement of the system of judicature in India, 414—Defects of all systems of administration according to the present tenure of India, 414—How far giving the natives greater power would weaken the security of the empire, 415—417—Improvement in the character and intellectual acquirements of the natives, 418—420.

Hindoo Law. See 'Inheritance.' 'Judicial Offices.'

Homicide. Regulations by which the punishment of culpable homicide has been limited and the powers to be respectively exercised by the courts of circuit and Nizamut Adawlut more clearly defined, App. p. 117, par. 242—Manner in which retaliation is declared to be due for homicide by the Mahomedan law, App. p. 669—Cases in which homicide is declared to be justifiable by the Mahomedan law, App. p. 669—Cases in which homicide is declared culpable by the Mahomedan law, App. p. 670.

Housebreaking, Madras. Number of crimes of, ascertained to have been committed, number of offenders who have not been discovered, and number apprehended and punished, 1826—1829, App. p. 37—Number of cases of housebreaking, and number acquitted and convicted by the circuit court and by the Foudarry Adawlut in certain years, 1813, 1814, 1815, 1825, 1826, and 1827, App. p. 188—201—Abstract of the same, App. p. 202—Statement of the number of persons apprehended and delivered over to the criminal judges, 1825—1827, charged with housebreaking, App. p. 206, 207.

Hudd. See 'Penalties.'

Huttee. Statement by Capt. Hardy, the assistant, that for the administration of criminal justice recourse has not in any instance been had to the punchayet; cases that are referred to the head man of the village and are satisfactorily settled by him; number of appointing punchayets and conducting their proceedings; advantages and disadvantages of the punchayet system, App. p. 73, 74, par. 53, 54.

IMPRISONMENT:

I. Bengal.

List of persons sentenced by the criminal courts in Bengal to imprisonment, 1816—1827, Bayley p. 136—139, App. p. 25, 26—List of persons sentenced to temporary imprisonment, arranged according to the sentences, Bayley p. 136—139—Persons sentenced to imprisonment in England and Wales, 1822—1828, Bayley p. 137—139—Persons sentenced to imprisonment in the Lower and Western Provinces by the Nizamut Adawlut, 1816—1827, App. p. 27.

II. Madras.

Number of persons sentenced thereto by the Foudarry Adawlut, 1819—1827, App. p. 40—Number of persons sentenced thereto by district police officers, by magistrates, by criminal judges, by courts of circuit, and by Foudarry Adawlut, 1825—1827, App. p. 208, 209.

III. Bombay.

Number of punishments by imprisonment, and for what terms, by the criminal courts.

and superior courts in the Bombay Old Provinces and the Deccan, 1825—1828, App. p. 62.

Indian Administration. See 'Government of India.' 'Legislation.'

Indian Seas. See 'Maritime Code.'

Indigo: Cultivation of, and Planters. Capital of indigo-planters accumulated in India, Hill 377—Benefits arising from indigo cultivation, and to what attributed, Hill 378—382, 385—Cotton and sugar could not be so successfully cultivated as indigo, Hill 388—389—Causes of disputes between indigo-planters and natives, Hill 391—394—Provision made by Regulation VI. of 1823, for the summary adjustment of disputes and more summary enforcement of contracts between indigo manufacturers and cultivators of the plant, App. p. 92, par. 155—Regulation XXXIII. 1795, Relative to the cultivation and manufacture of indigo by European British subjects, App. p. 660—Regulation XX. 1812, Allowing the registry of indigo contracts, App. p. 661—Regulation VI. 1823 and V. 1824, For the enforcement of indigo contracts, App. p. 661, 662—Regulation V. 1830, Breach of indigo contracts declared punishable by magistrates, App. p. 662.

See also 'Ceded and Conquered Provinces.'

Inheritance and Succession. Necessity for the Hindoo and Mahomedan laws of succession and inheritance existing separately, Clarke 100—Laws of contract might be more easily assimilated than those of succession, Clarke 101—Opinion of Sir Thomas Munro on the advantages of estates descending entire in the line of primogeniture with partition of the ancient usage of the country in that respect, Hill 235—243—Whether any exception from the Hindoo law of descent in Madras, Hill 253—263—Principle upon which the law of inheritance administered, Mill 1041—Necessity for the law of inheritance as to land being that of the natives, the same as with respect to chattels, Mill 1061—Extended operation of the Hindoo and Mahomedan laws of inheritance likely to augment litigation, App. p. 65, par. 8—Regulation XI. 1816, Relative to civil suits regarding inheritance arising in the tributary mahals of Cuttack, App. p. 653.

See also 'Zemindars.'

Insolvent Debtors. Regulation II. 1806, Relative to the relief of insolvent debtors upon giving up their property, App. p. 608.

Institution Fees. How value of land estimated to fix the institution fee, Mackenzie 467.

See also 'Stamps.'

Intermediate Proprietors. See 'Middle Men.'

Interest. Low rate of, allowed by courts causes litigation, Mackenzie 145—Amendment that should be made in the laws relative thereto, Bayley 897—899—Regulation XV. 1793, Relative to rates of interest to be allowed by the courts in their decrees, App. p. 599.

Intestacy. Regulation V. 1799, Containing provision for the care of estates of natives dying intestate, App. p. 604.

Intimidation. In what parts of India difficulty arises in obtaining evidence from parties being intimidated, Hamilton 790.

Ireland. See 'Crime.' 'Population.'

J.

Jageerdars. Bombay Regulation XIII. 1830, Granting powers to jageerdars of deciding civil suits according to law furnished by Government; extent of their jurisdiction; suits that that are excepted therefrom; how far their decisions final or appealable; their decrees not to be set aside for want of form; they are to execute their own decrees, App. p. 60, par. 46.

Jessore, Zillah. Suits decided by natives therein, 1798—1812, App. p. 4.

Johnston, Sir Alexander. (Analysis of his Evidence.)—Chief justice of Ceylon, first member of the High Court of Appeal, and president of the Council, 1111—Suggestions by witness in 1806, for admitting natives to a share in government, and allowing them to administer justice, and how far carried into effect, 1115—Reference to documents showing measures introduced into Ceylon by witness, and their results upon the interests of the island, 1116—Reference to documents containing suggestions for the improvement of government of India, 1117, 1118—Half-castes to be eligible to situations now held by covenanted subjects, 1119—1122—Saving of expense under witness's plan, from employment of native judges, 1123—1125—Qualifications necessary for judicial situations, and how test to be applied, 1126—1129—Advantage of legislative councils in India and necessity for admitting natives thereto, 1130, 1131, 1138, 1139—Advantages of employing natives, and manner in which it would support the British Government, 1132—1136—How far judges at the presidencies should be members of the legislative council, 1137.

[Second Examination.]—Examination upon papers delivered in by witness marked (A) to (E.) containing suggestions upon the improvement of India, 1141, 1142—Suggestions for relieving parties from long standing appeals before Privy Council, 1144—Advantage of a court of appeal being established in England instead of in India, and of whom it should consist, 1145—Evils of giving up the right of appeal to England, 1145, 1146—Method of promulgating any code of laws formed for India, 1147, 1148—Respectability and loyalty of Catholics when properly superintended, 1150—Plan formed by witness for a maritime code for persons navigating the Indian seas, 1151—Suggestions relative to slavery in the East-Indies, 1152, 1153—Steps taken in Ceylon for facilitating the holding of lands by Europeans, 1154—Advantage of admitting Europeans of capital, or of skill and talent, to settle and hold offices in India, 1155—1158—Half-castes should be admitted to the same situations as Europeans and natives, 1159—Advantage of the Jury Bill lately passed the Commons, 1160—Success of jury trials in Ceylon, 1161.

Extract from the charge delivered by Sir Harding Gifford, the chief justice, and first member of his Majesty's Council in Ceylon in 1820, on his taking possession of his office after the resignation of Sir Alexander Johnston, relative to the benefits of jury trial, 1161, p. 198.

Extract from a Report of C. H. Cameron, Esq., one of his Majesty's Commissioners of Inquiry, to Lord Viscount Goderich, dated 31st January 1832, 1161, p. 199—Jury system might be successfully tried in India, and advantages thereof, 1162—1164.

Papers presented by Sir Alexander Johnston, and referred to in his Evidence.

(A.) Paper sent by Sir Alexander Johnston in 1806, to Mr. Fox, containing suggestions for the better government of India, p. 201.

(B.) Account of the measures adopted by Sir Alexander Johnston for the introduction of trial by jury, and the abolition of domestic slavery on the island of Ceylon, p. 206.

(C.) Memorandum drawn up by Sir Alexander Johnston for the late Marquis of Londonderry, of some alterations advisable in the system of administering justice in India, p. 214.

(D.) Paper relative to the appellate jurisdiction of the King in Council, in Indian appeals, p. 219.

(E.) Paper containing plan adopted by Sir Alexander Johnston in Ceylon, for collecting materials for framing a Hindoo and Mahomedan code, for the use of the Hindoo and Mahomedan natives of that island, p. 224.

(F.) Letter

(F.) Letter from the Right Honourable C. Grant to Sir Alexander Johnston, requesting his opinion, and that of Sir Edward Hyde East and Sir James Mackintosh, on the subject of Indian appeals, dated 29th March 1832, p. 225—Answer of Sir A. Johnston, dated 30th March 1832, p. 226—Copy joint opinion of the above gentlemen, p. 227—Letter from Sir A. Johnston to the Right Honourable Charles Grant, dated 7th May 1832, enclosing suggestions relative thereto, p. 228.

(G.) Letter from the Abbé Dubois to Sir Alexander Johnston, giving him an account of the present condition of the native Catholics throughout India, dated 21st May 1831, p. 232.

(H.) Plan for framing a maritime code for the use of all the different natives of Asia, who navigate the Indian seas, and who trade with the several British possessions in India, p. 235.

(I.) Paper containing extracts from the Eleventh Report of the Directors of the African Institution, and from the appendix, and giving a detailed account of the circumstances connected with the resolution passed on the 15th July 1816, by proprietors of domestic slaves in Ceylon, declaring free all children born of their slaves after 12th August 1816, p. 238.

Extract letter from Sir Alexander Johnston, dated 22d July 1816, p. 239—Letter from same to the Dutch special jurymen of the province of Columbo, dated 10th July 1816, p. 239—Their answer, dated 14th July 1816, p. 240—Resolutions of Dutch special jurymen, at a meeting held at Columbo on 15th July 1816, for the eventual emancipation of the children born of slaves, p. 241—Answer of Sir A. Johnston, dated 21st July 1816, to address of Dutch special jurymen, p. 242—Answer of Sir A. Johnston, dated 22d July 1816, to address by the jurymen of the different castes of natives at Columbo, p. 242.

(K.) Paper containing an account of the different circumstances connected with the repeal in 1810 of all the restrictions which were previously in force on the island of Ceylon against Europeans acquiring or holding lands in perpetuity, p. 243—Government advertisements of 4th December 1810 and 21st July 1812 relative thereto, p. 244.

(L.) Paper containing copies of a Letter from Mr. Ricketts, agent of East-Indians, to Sir A. Johnston on 6th May 1830, and Sir A.'s answer, explaining the line of policy he would advise the British Government to adopt with respect to all East-Indians in British India, p. 248.

Joint Tenancy. Regulation I. 1800, relative to administration of portions of estates in joint tenancy being provided for by the Courts, App. p. 605.

Joint. Sir William. Disadvantages of his plan of framing a code of Indian laws, Bayley 892.

Journies. Evils of the extent of journies by prosecutors and witnesses, and necessity for preventing their repetition, App. p. 45.

JUDGES.

I. Generally.
Observations upon increasing their numbers to get rid of present arrears, App. p. 29—
Regulation IV. 1796, containing provision for the absence of judges from their courts, App. p. 603.

II. Assistant.
Regulation XLIX. 1803, providing for the appointment of assistant judges, App. p. 606.

III. Country.
Advantage of an English bar for the selection of country judges, Mackenzie 173.

IV. European.

Length of service previous to appointment as zillah or provincial judges, Clarke 35—
Emolument or rank of judge not sufficient to cause preference for the office, Clarke 42, 43 —Necessity for their understanding native languages, Clarke 45—How far European judges are dependant upon native law officers in the administration of justice, Clarke
45—49—Inconvenience arising from the want of previous instruction in the judges, Clarke 81—Confidence in the integrity of the Company's judges, but not always in their skill, Clarke 106—Extent to which European judges might be reduced, Mackenzie 151, 152—English judges of the zillah, city, and sudder courts, should be deputed from England, Mackenzie 166, 167—English judges high in reputation for honesty among the natives; delay occasioned by the junction with the police; their qualifications, Mac- kenzie 168, 169—Importance of the presence of a European judge in checking native judges, Oldham 591, 592; Melville 707—Extent of the powers of judges, Oldham 599
—610; Hamilton 757—775—How far they act as commissioners of revenue and circuit, Melville 644, 645—Their duties should be only those of superintendence and appeal, Bayley 886—888; Mill 1048—Method of raising their qualification, Bayley 899, 902, 903—They are under the necessity of personally discharging many functions which, in English courts, are performed by experienced lawyers, and various ministerial officers liberally rewarded, well educated, and possessed of talents and integrity which qualify them for their respective duties, App. p. 81, par. 103, 104

See also 'Criminal Law.' 'Europeans.' 'Legislation.' 'Supreme Court.'

V. Native.

Appointment of native judges has answered sufficiently to justify further employment,
Clarke 74—Character, qualifications, and jurisdiction of native judges, Mackenzie 119, 120—Means taken of facilitating the education of native judges, and how it might be further extended, Mackenzie 128—Present means of education, and upon what qualifications they are appointed, Mackenzie 129—Increase of pay of native judges, necessary for improving the efficiency of the law by adding to the respectability of the judges, Mackenzie 136—Particular modes of appointment of native judges, Mackenzie 137, 138—Saving, and better test of qualification, that would take place by native judges being selected with due qualification from among native pleaders, Mackenzie 139 —Manner in which justice would be more efficiently dispensed, and great expense saved, by increasing native judges and reducing European, Mackenzie 144, 145; Mill 1048—Feelings of natives generally with regard to increasing the powers or numbers of native judges, Mackenzie 159—161; Oldham 575—Promotion according to merit among native judges, little acted upon, Mackenzie 164—Salaries of native judges, and expenses they have to pay, Mackenzie 119, 225—228—Functions of judges should be transferred to natives, Hill 402—404—Reduction of European judges by employing natives, Hill 405—408—Could not be carried into effect, if European settlement allowed, Hill 412, 413—Increased powers of native judges in civil causes, Melville 704; Hamilton 739—745—They should be properly remunerated, Melville 708, 709; For- tescue 944—Treatment of native judges by European judges, Melville 710—713; Fortescue 956, 957—Increased salaries of native judges, Hamilton 740—743.

Favourable testimony of their talents and assiduity, Bayley 882—Advantage of gradually increasing the powers of native judges, Bayley 886—888; Mill 1061—Method of raising the qualification of native judges, Bayley 899, 901—If properly remunerated they will receive confidence from their countrymen, Bayley 931—Suggestions for the appointment of native judges, and how to be controlled, Campbell 992—Advantage of their having power in criminal as well as civil cases; execution above moderate punishment being stayed for review by the Sudder Adawlut, Mill 1052, 1054—Saving of expense under witness's plan, from employment of native judges, Johnston 1129—1125
—The mode of paying native judges by fees instead of salary is objectionable, and necessity for revising that part of the judicial system, App. p. 66

See also 'Courts, II.' 'Europeans.' 'Law-Suits.' 'Moonsiffs.' 'Native Commissioners.' 'Rent.' 'Sudder Ameens.' 'Zillah Judges.'

Judicial Department. Proposed amendment of the inferior judicial system, Mackenzie 145—Examination upon two letters from the Madras Government in the Judicial department to the Court of Directors, dated 27th April 1827, and 2d November 1830, on the subject of amendments therein, Campbell 991—995—Proposed change in the judicial establishment, and form of procedure, Mill 1041—Present system of, and proposed amendments, Bayley 882, p. 111—List of works in this department which, since the year 1817, have been encouraged or patronized by Government for the education of natives, App. p. 122.

See also 'Courts of Justice, I.' 'Finance Committee.' 'Revenue Department.'

Judicial Officers. Whether officers could be better selected for judicial duties than at present, in order to embrace trial of Europeans, Hill 316—321—Training of judicial officers in Bengal, Hill 322—325—Corruption and bribery of officers of native courts, and how far from appointments being vested in the judges, Mackenzie 199—202—Cause of venality among native officers of courts, Fortescue 984—Selection for judicial offices should be made exclusively in India, Bayley 908—Regulation II. 1821, increasing the powers of subordinate judicial authorities, App. p. 615—Regulation XI. 1821, authorizing judicial officers to make local investigations. App. p. 615.

See also 'Civil Servants.' 'Education.' 'Judges, IV.' 'Laws.' 'Mahomedans.' 'Promotion.' 'Qualifications.' 'Salaries.'

Judgments. Manner in which they are delivered, and in what languages written, Melville 638—642—Scale showing the manner in which judgments of inferior courts are revised by the Nizamut Adawlut, Bayley, p. 128—Regulation II. 1798, containing provision for review of judgment, App. p. 604—Regulation III. 1813, extending above Regulation to appealable cases, App. p. 610—Regulation II. 1825, containing farther provisions respecting review of judgment, App. p. 616.

Jungle Mehals. Zillah of. Number of suits depending at the end of each year 1818—1825, before the judge, register, and sudder ameens, App. p. 12—Arrears, appeals, and state of judicature therein, App. p. 12, 13—Regulation XVIII. 1805, administration of criminal justice in the Jungle Mehals, App. 646.

Juries. Advantages of a good system of jury-trial for Europeans, and influence of judges thereupon, Hill 300, 301; Campbell 995—Jury system might be successfully tried in India, and advantages thereof, Johnston 1162—1164—Introduction of trial by jury in the island of Ceylon, Johnston 1115—Success thereof, Johnston 1161—Advantage of the jury-bill lately passed the Commons, Johnston 1160—Extract from the charge delivered by Sir Harding Gifford, the chief justice, and first member of His Majesty's council in Ceylon in 1820, on his taking possession of his office after the resignation of Sir Alexander Johnston, relative to the benefits of jury trial, Johnston 1161, p. 198—Extract from Report of C. H. Cameron, Esquire, one of his Majesty's Commissioners of Inquiry, to Lord Viscount Goderich, dated 31st January 1832, Johnston 1161, p. 199—Account of measures adopted by Sir Alexander Johnston, for the introduction of trial by jury in the island of Ceylon, Johnston, p. 206.

Native Judges and counsel in the King's Courts arrive at the truth better than native juries and punchayets, Clarke 86—88—Cause of the failure of the employment of punchayets at Madras, Clarke 89—91—Native juries in country courts desirable, Mackenzie 203—Failure of the punchayet system, and from what causes, Mackenzie 204—206—Punchayets more arbitrators than juries, their method of appointment and functions, Mackenzie 207—210—Validity of their decisions, Mackenzie 211—Punchayet system used by Revenue officers; plan adopted in a particular instance for settling boundaries, Mackenzie 212—215—Influence of zemindars in preventing impartiality in native juries, Oldham 598—599—Substitution of native juries would be a failure, Melville 700—Difficulties of native juries, Hamilton 753—756—Advantages of punchayets, chayets, Bayley 934; Campbell 1800—1810—Reasons for punchayets not being oftener resorted to, Campbell 977—979—Right of sitting on juries extended to natives within the jurisdiction of the supreme courts of the Presidencies, Johnston 1116.

See also 'Natives.' 'Punchayets.'

Justices of the Peace. See 'Magistrates.'

Justice. See 'Administration of Justice.' 'Courts of Justice.' 'Criminal Law.' 'Law-Suits.'

K.

Kazees. Regulation XXXIX. 1793, relative to the appointment and duties of kazees, App. p. 601.

Khas Estates. Accounts of all khas estates to be examined and audited by the local commissioners, furnishing such statements as may be required by the court, App. p. 268.

Khloodcasht Ryots. Statement of the principal objects contemplated in the draft regulation proposed by Mr. Harrington for more fully securing the rights of khloodcasht ryots and other permanent under-tenants of lands, App. 66, 67, pars. 17—19.

Kumaoon. Special Judicial Regulations, civil and criminal, for Kumaoon, App. p. 647, —Regulation X. 1817, Administration of criminal justice in Kumaoon, App. 649.

L.

LAND.

I. Generally.

No advantage would arise from Europeans holding land, Hill 387, 388—Mischief that would arise therefrom, Hill 389, 390—Necessity of obtaining accurate records and regulations defining proprietary rights to land, Bayley 892, 893, App. 65, 66, par. 12—14—Effect of Europeans not being allowed to hold land, Fortescue 979—983—Restrictions against Europeans holding land in Ceylon removed, Johnston 1115—Steps taken in Ceylon for facilitating the holding of lands by Europeans, Johnston 1154—Paper containing an account of the different circumstances connected with the repeal in 1810 of all the restrictions which were previously in force on the island of Ceylon against Europeans acquiring or holding lands in perpetuity, Johnston, p. 243—Government advertisements of 4th December 1810 and 21st July 1812, relative thereto, Johnston p. 244.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

Regulation XXXVIII. 1793, Forbidding European British subjects from holding land in the provinces without the special sanction of Government, App. p. 659—Regulations XIX. 1793 and LVIII. 1795, Investigation of title to hold lands exempted from payment of Revenue on grants not royal, App. 781, 782—Regulations XXIV. 1793, and XXII. 1806, Money pensions by sunnud or patent, App. p. 783—Regulation XXXVII. 1793, Investigation of titles to hold lands exempted from payment of revenue on royal grants, App. p. 784—Regulation XLIII. 1793, Grants of land in jaghirs to invalid officers and soldiers of the Company's native army, App. p. 785—Regulation LVI. 1795, Extension of the period during which the heirs of invalid military jaghirdars were to hold their land free from assessment, App. p. 786—Regulation I. 1804, Real assessment of military jaghire tenures, App. p. 787.

Regulation

Regulation XI. 1808, Rent payable by the heirs of invalid jaghirdars, App. p. 787—Regulation XIX. 1810, Administration of endowments for religious and charitable purposes to be under control of the revenue authorities, App. p. 787—Regulation II. 1811 and XII. 1814, Abolition of the system of granting lands to invalid soldiers, App. p. 788—Regulation XI. 1813, For the prevention of abuse in drawing money-pensions, App. p. 788—Regulation II. 1819, XIV. 1825, Improved rules regarding lands held exempt from public revenue, App. p. 788—790—Regulation IX. 1825, Resumption of lakhiraj tenures to be adjudged by the revenue authorities, App. p. 791—Regulation XIV. 1825, Of the authorities competent to exempt lands from payment of revenue, App. p. 792—Regulation III. 1828, IV. 1829, Appointment of special commissioners to decide appeals regarding resumption of lakhiraj lands, App. p. 793.

See also 'Decrees.' 'Fictitious Names.' 'Institution Fees.' 'Registry Offices.'

Landholders. See 'Possession.' 'Zemindars.'

Land Rent. See 'Rent.' 'Revenue Suits.' 'Summary Suits.'

Land Revenue. Regulations I. VIII. X. 1793, The permanency of the assessment declared, App. p. 734, 735—Regulation II. 1793, Abolition of the Revenue Courts; powers and duties of collectors; powers and duties of the Board of Revenue, App. p. 736—Regulations VII. 1793, and I. 1808, Principles on which the permanent assessment was formed; the classes of persons with whom the Government engaged, and their relation to others holding interests deemed subordinate, App. p. 738—Regulations XXVII. 1793, VI. 1811, and IX. 1825, Resumption by the Government of the sayer collections formerly made by proprietors and grant of compensation to those persons, App. p. 742—Regulation XLIV. 1793, Validity and effect of leases from proprietors and talookdars, &c.; term for which they might be granted, App. p. 744—Regulation IV. 1794, Delivery of pottahs or agreements between proprietors and cultivators, App. p. 745—Regulation XVII. 1825, Management of joint undivided estates, App. p. 746.

Regulations XIII. 1811, and XXIV. 1817, Powers of single members of the Board of Revenue, App. p. 746—Regulations V. and XVIII. 1812, and VIII. 1819, Leases and pottahs by landholders to their tenants and cultivators, App. p. 746—Regulation XV. 1813, Abolition of the office of Dewan, App. p. 747—Regulation XXIX. 1814—Rules for the protection of the Ghaulwal tenure in Beerbhoom, App. p. 748—Regulation VIII. 1819, Powers of landholders to create certain lease tenures called Putnee, App. p. 748—Regulation III. 1822, New constitution of Boards of Revenue, App. p. 750—Regulation I. 1824, For enabling the Government to obtain lands for public purposes, App. p. 750—Regulation IX. 1825, Extension of the rules of Regulation VII. 1822 (enacted for the Upper Provinces) to Bengal, &c. App. p. 751—Regulation XI. 1825, Rights in lands acquired by alluvion, and liability of such lands to pay revenue, App. p. 752—Regulation I. 1829, Establishment of the office of commissioners of revenue and circuit, App. p. 752.

See also 'Rent.' 'Revenue Department.'

Languages. Languages acquired at Madras College, Clarke 8—Sufficient knowledge of native languages not to be attained in this country, Hill 335—338; Bayley 908, 911—914—Languages are better acquired before the age of twenty, Oldham 564, 565—Language in which the pleadings and proceedings in courts are taken, and opinion thereupon, Metcill 629—643—Language in which evidence taken down, Bayley 916—Extent of knowledge of Oriental languages necessary to be attained in this country, Empson 1106, 1107.

See also 'Judges.' 'Persian Language.'

Larceny. Definition of the crime of surikan-i-sograh, or secret larceny by stealth, according to the Mahomedan law, and nature of the punishment for it, App. 675.

Laws. Writers are not required to study Hindoo and Mahomedan laws, Clarke 20—26, 81—Laws were studied previous to the abolition of the college at Calcutta, Clarke 27—29

27—29.—Necessity for instructions in the law, of judicial servants, Clarke 44—46—
Necessity for an intelligible exposition of the Hindoo and Mahomedan laws, Bayley 892 —Means taken to promote the knowledge of English laws, Bayley 915—Hindoo and Mahomedan law difficult to be taught in England, but first principles of law are better acquired in India, Empson 1084.

Law Expenses. See 'Law-Suits.' 'Legislation in India.'

Law Lectures. 'See Lectures.'

LAW OFFICERS :

I. Generally.

Appointment of Hindoo law officers, their qualifications, and how ascertained, Clarke
50—52; Muckenzie 125, 126—Mahomedan and Hindoo law officers sit separately,
Clarke 70—Duties and stations of Mahomedan law officers, Oldham 543—546;
Melville 680—685—Jurisdiction of law officers, Oldham 599—610; Hamilton 757
—775—Power of the Governor-general to dispense with the sitting of the Mahomedan law officer in court, Melville 686—688—Extent of their power of punishment, Bayley, p. 126.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

Mahomedan and Hindoo law officers should be disallowed in the zillahs, attaching two of the former to the circuit, and one of the latter to the appeal court, appointing the others to the sudder ameens, Leycester, App. p. 360—Regulation XII. 1793, Relative to appointment of law officers in the courts of judicature, App. p. 598—Regulations XIII. 1793 and III. 1827, Relative to the appointment and duties of the ministerial officers of the courts of judicature, App. p. 598—Regulation XVIII. 1817, Substituting declaration for oath, by native ministerial officers, App. p. 614—Regulation XI. 1826, Respecting qualification of law officers, App. p. 616—Regulation III. 1829, Abolition of the offices of Mahomedan and Hindoo law officers in the provincial courts, App.
p. 616—Regulation XV. 1805, Law officers declared to be ex officio sudder ameens,
App. p. 631.

See also 'Oaths.'

LAW-SUITS.

I. Generally.

Paper containing particulars of the cost and defence of suits in the zillah provincial and sudder courts, Mackenzie 421, pp. 41—44—Manner of selecting the different items of the above account, Mackenzie 422—425—Other expenses of suits besides those authorized by Regulation, Mackenzie 456—462—Costs of suits in country courts
Bengal, Bayley 932, 933.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

1. Bengal.

Number of suits instituted in the several courts 1814—1820, App. p. 2; 1821—1824,
App. p. 9; 1825—1827, App. p. 28—Comparison of suits instituted 1814 and 1815—
1817, App. p. 2—Suits instituted 1797—1813, App. p. 3—Suits decided 1814—
1820, App. p. 3; 1797—1813, App. p. 4; 1821—1824, App. p. 9; 1825—1827, App. p.
28—Suits depending at the beginning of 1815—1821, App. p. 5; 1821—1824, App.
p. 9; 1825—1827, App. p. 28—Suits disposed of by summary process 1815—1820,
App. p. 8—Comparison of suits instituted and decided 1817—1820 and 1821—1824,
App. p. 9, 10.

Causes assigned for the existing mass of litigation, and for the daily increasing number of applications to courts, App. p. 65, par. 10—Observations upon stamp duties and fees of pleaders, as affecting the usual costs of suit, App. p. 82, par. 106—Statement of claims preferred on the grounds of error in the record, which were dismissed without an investigation of the merits, under instructions communicated in a letter from the secretary to the sudder special commission, dated 22d December 1821, in consequence of possession having been lost subsequently to the period specified in clause 1. sec. iii. Reg. I. 1821, App. p. 282—Manner in which increasing the powers of moonsiffs and sudder ameen will provide for the disposal by native agency of the whole of the original suits regularly cognizable by the zillah and city courts up to 5,000 rupees, App. 355.

Number of original suits instituted in the Lower and Western Provinces in 1828, and sketch of the sunnud supposed to be brought for trial under proposed arrangement, Ross, App. p. 374, 375—Statement of the number of civil suits depending at the beginning and end of the year 1813, and instituted, decided, or adjusted during that year before the judges and other officers of the zillah and city courts in the Lower Provinces, App. p. 474—A similar statement as to the Western Provinces, App. p. 476—General summary of the number of civil suits depending at the beginning and ending of 1813, and instituted, decided, or adjusted during that year in the Sudder Dewanny and the provincial and zillah courts, App. p. 478—Abstract of the total number of regular civil suits (including appeals) depending at the beginning and end of 1828, and disposed of during that year in each of the zillah and city courts, the provincial courts, and the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, App. p. 480—Statement of the number of regular suits depending at the beginning and end of 1828, and disposed of during that year before the judges and other officers of the zillah and city courts in the Lower Provinces, App. p. 484—A similar statement as to the Western Provinces, App. p. 486.

Statement of appeals regular and special, depending and disposed of before the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut in 1828, with the amount of the property in question, App. p. 486—Statement showing the total value or amount of the regular suits (original and in appeal) depending in the several civil courts on the 1st January 1829, App. p. 488—Statement of the number of regular suits depending on the 1st January 1828 and 1829, and disposed of in 1828, in the several classes of courts in the Western and Lower Provinces, App. p. 491—Statement of the number of regular suits (original and in appeal) depending, admitted, and disposed of in the several provincial courts in each year since they have consisted of four judges, viz. 1815—1828 inclusive, App. p. 492—Comparative statement of the number of regular suits depending in the several courts on 1st January 1815 and 1st January 1829, App. p. 495.

Statement showing the time which would elapse before the decision of the regular suits depending on 1st January 1829, if calculated according to the number disposed of in the several courts during the year 1828, App. p. 500—A similar statement, calculated according to the average number of decisions during the five years 1824—1828, both inclusive, App. p. 496, 497—Statement of the number of summary suits depending at the beginning and end of 1828, and disposed of during that year in the several provincial and district courts, App. p. 498—Statement of summary suits under reference to collectors for adjudication, and disposed of by them in 1828, App. p. 502—Table showing the number of suits instituted, decided, and depending in the several classes of courts, and the average delay in each in 1810, 1815, 1820, and 1825, App. p. 504.

Statement of the total number of regular suits and appeals depending before the several courts both in the Lower and Western Provinces on 1st January 1815, compared with the number depending on the 1st January 1819, App. p. 576—Memorandum of the total number of regular civil suits, whether original or in appeal, depending in the Western and Lower Provinces on the 1st January 1815—1819, App. p. 576—Statement showing the total number of regular suits and appeals depending on 1st January 1819, and the number disposed of in the several courts during the whole year 1819, App. p. 576.

Statement showing the total number of regular suits and appeals depending before the several courts both in the Lower and Western Provinces on 1st January 1815, 1819, and 1826, 1826, App. p. 582—Memorandum of the total number of regular suits, whether original or in appeal, depending in the Western and Lower Provinces on 1st January 1820—1826, App. p. 583—Statement showing the total number of regular suits and appeals disposed of in the several courts during the years 1818 and 1825, App. p. 583—Statement showing the total number of regular suits and appeals depending before the several courts of the Lower and Western Provinces on 1st January 1815—1829, App. p. 587—Memorandum of the total number of regular suits, whether original or in appeal, depending in the Lower and Western Provinces on 1st January 1826—1829, App. p. 587—Statement showing the number of regular suits and appeals disposed of in the several courts during the years 1818, 1825, and 1828, App. p. 588.

Regulation IV. 1793, Upon the practice of the civil courts in the admission and trial of suits, App. p. 597—Regulation II. 1805, As to limitation of time for institution of suits, App. p. 607—Regulations VIII. and X. 1806, Relative to the prosecution and defence of suits against European public officers of the Government, App. p. 655—Regulations XVII. 1813 and VIII. 1825, Modification of the course prescribed by previous Regulations for the investigation of charges against European public officers, App. p. 656—Regulation II. 1814, Further modification of the preceding rules, App. p. 657—Regulation VIII. 1817, Further modification of the rules for proceedings against European public officers, App. p. 657.

2. Madras.

Number of suits instituted in the several courts, 1827—1829, App. p. 48—Number of suits decided, 1827—1829, App. p. 48—Number depending at the end of the period, 1827—1829, App. p. 48—Average delay, App. p. 49—Number of suits instituted in the Madras European courts, 1816 and 1826, and causes of the decrease therein, App. p. 127—Extract from report of Sudder Adawlut, containing statement of civil suits determined by or adjusted before the European courts, viz. those of the zillah judges and registers, the provincial courts and court of Sudder Adawlut in the year 1825, and number of suits depending in each of those courts on 1st January 1826, with comparative statement for 1815, 1816, App. p. 143.

Number of causes depending and disposed of before village moonsiffs, 1817—1827, App. p. 156—Statement showing the number of suits disposed of by the village moonsiffs, in the several zillahs, from 1825 to 1827 inclusive, App. p. 157—Statement showing the number of suits disposed of by the district moonsiffs in the several zillahs, from 1825—1827 inclusive, App. p. 158, 159; in 1825, App. p. 245—Statement showing the particulars of suits from 200 to 500 rupees, disposed of by the district moonsiffs in the several zillahs, in 1825, 1826, and 1827 respectively, App. p. 160, 161—Number of causes depending and disposed of before district moonsiffs, 1817—1827, App. p. 164—Statement showing the number of suits depending before the district moonsiffs on 1st January 1828, and the years in which they were instituted, App. p. 165—Number of causes depending and disposed of before village and district punchayets, 1817—1827, App. p. 170, 171—Statement, showing the number of suits depending on 1st January 1827, before the district and village punchayets, as also the years in which those suits were instituted, 1818—1827, App. p. 172.

Number of original causes depending and disposed of, and number of appeals depending and disposed of by sudder ameens, App. p. 174, 175—Statement, showing the years in which the original suits and appeals depending before the sudder ameens on the 1st January 1828, were filed, App. p. 176, 177—Statement of causes decided by the European tribunals in the different zillahs during the year 1815, and of causes depending on 1st January 1816, App. p. 180, 181—Statement of causes decided by the European tribunals in the different zillahs, during the year 1825, and of causes depending on 1st January 1826, App. p. 182, 183—Abstract of causes decided in the provincial courts during the year 1816, compared with 1825, App. p. 184, 185—General statement, showing the number of original suits for an amount or value under 500 rupees and above above ten rupees, and for an amount or value of ten rupees and under, decided by the zillah judges, registers, and sudder ameens in 1825, App. p. 186, 187—Number of suits disposed of by the zillah judges in 1825, App. p. 245—Statement of the number of causes brought before the collectors in the several divisions under section iv, Regulation XII. of 1816, and section xviii, of Regulation V. of 1822, and referred by them to punchayets, 1816—1828, App. p. 210, 211.

Statement of the number of original suits and of appeals depending at the beginning and end of 1815, and disposed of during that year, in each of the zillah and subordinate courts under the presidency of Madras; also the amount of property in litigation, App. p. 530—Statement to the same effect for the year 1828, App. p. 532—Statement of original suits and appeals depending at the beginning and end of 1815, and decided during that year in the Sudder Adawlut and provincial courts, App. p. 530—Statement to the same effect for the year 1828, App. p. 536—Statement of the amount of property in litigation in the suits depending in the several zillah courts, 1st January 1828 and 1829, and in suits disposed of during that year, App. p. 537—Statement of the number of appeals from decrees of assistant judges, registrars, and native officers depending at the beginning and end of 1828, and preferred and disposed of during that year in each of the zillah courts, App. p. 538—Abstract statement of the number of appeals depending at the beginning and end of 1828, and disposed of during that year in the zillah courts, App. p. 542, 543—Table showing the number of suits instituted and decided in the years 1810, 1815, 1820, and 1825, and depending at the end of each of those years in the Sudder Adawlut, in the provincial courts, and in the courts of the zillah judges, registers, sudder ameens, and moonsiffs, and the average delay of judicature in each class of courts, App. p. 542, 543.

3. Bombay.

Number of original suits instituted, decided, and depending, 1825—1829, in the Old Provinces and in the Deccan, App. p. 52, 53—Number of suits decreed wholly or in part; number adjusted and number dismissed, and dismissed for default in the Old Provinces and in the Deccan, 1827—1829, App. p. 55—Number of original suits disposed of by Europeans and natives, 1827 and 1828, App. p. 57, 58—Statement of the number of original suits depending at the beginning and end of 1829, and instituted and disposed of during that year in each of the zillah courts; showing by which of the functionaries they were disposed of, and the amount of property in litigation in them; also extent and population of the zillahs, App. p. 567—A similar statement with respect to appeals from the decrees of assistant judges, collectors, and native functionaries (but not stating the value of the property in litigation), App. p. 568—Statement of the number of appeals on the file of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, and of the provincial court of Guzerat (since abolished) at the beginning and end of 1829, and disposed of by those courts within that year; also the pecuniary amount of appeals decided, App. p. 569.

See also 'Arrears.' 'Bombay, Old Provinces.' 'Burdwan.' 'Deccan.' 'Delays.' 'Fees.' 'Jessore.' 'Jungle Mehals.' 'Property.' 'Stamp Duties.' 'Sudder Dewanny.'

Leases. Ryots object to take leases though the Regulations hold out advantages for them to do so, Fortescue 490—492, 503—Substituting the measure of attachment properly enforced for that of public sale, would remove the only reason for not rescinding the Regulation which renders leases liable to be annulled by the default of the proprietors who grant them; operation of this law prevents men of capital entering into farming speculations, being one of the greatest evils resulting from the liability of the lands to public sale; expediency of rescinding such regulation; manner in which the revenue might be secured against injury from collusive leases being granted in anticipation of a sale, Ross, App. p. 369—In the event of periodical settlements in the Western Provinces being continued, manner in which landholders engaging with Government should be competent to grant leases for twenty-five years, which leases, although extending beyond beyond the term of the Government settlement during which they might be granted, should not be annulled at the formation of the new settlement on certain conditions, Ross, App. p. 370, par. 28.

Lectures. Importance of law lectures, and advantages derived from them, Empson 1077 —Nature of those given at the London University, Empson 1091.

Legal Affairs. See 'Superintendent of Legal Affairs.'

Legal Qualification. See 'Schools, Public.'

LEGISLATION IN INDIA.

I. Generally.

Imperfections of the English statutes regarding India, Clarke 113—Necessity for better acquaintance with Indian administration by Parliament and the public authorities, Clarke 113—No difficulty in giving to India a code of laws to be administered equally by native and English judges, Mackenzie 183, 184—Difficulties in the way of legislation in India, particularly in the event of European settlement, Hill 342—Legislation on the subject should belong to the local Government, and not be reserved to the authorities in this country, Melville 679—Method to be adopted for establishing an efficient code of Hindoo and Mahomedan law, Bayley 892, 893—Code of laws might be formed to embrace Europeans and natives, Fortescue 970, 971—Possibility of forming a common system of judicature for the presidencies and the interior, Fortescue 985—Advantage of framing a code of laws founded on the customs of India, Mill 1060—Suggestion for formation of a code of laws for India, Johnston 1118—Method of promulgating any code of laws formed for India, Johnston 1147, 1148—Paper containing plan adopted by Sir Alexander Johnston in Ceylon for collecting materials for framing a Hindoo and Mahomedan code, for the use of the Hindoo and Mahomedan natives of that island, Johnston p. 224.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

Selection of papers containing discussions relative to measures recommended by the home authorities in 1814, and the modifications introduced into the Indian codes, App. p. 64—Regulation XX. 1793, relative to proposed regulations, how to be submitted to Government, App. p. 592—Regulation XLI. 1793, relative to the principles and authority of the code of Regulations; form in which the enactments were to be drawn, App. p. 593—Regulation X. 1796, relative to interpretation of Regulations and provision for remedying defects in them, App. p. 594.

See also 'Maritime Code.' 'Natives.' 'Regulations.'

Legislative Council. Opinion as to judges forming part of, Clarke 113—115; Hill 357, 358, 365, 366; Melville 691, 693; Johnston 1137—Advantages of a legislative council, particularly in saving references to Parliament, Hill 359, 360—Opinion upon the formation of a legislative council, Melville 690—694, 698, 699, 714—Advantage of admixture of gentlemen of the Scotch bar in the formation of a legislative council, Melville 714—Of whom a legislative body should be formed, Fortescue 986—Advantage of legislative councils in India, and necessity for admitting natives thereto, Johnston 1130, 1131, 1138, 1139.

Leycester, W. Minute by W. Leycester, Esq., one of the judges of the Sudder Adawlut, in reference to Mr. Bayley's minute; beneficial effects of Lord Cornwallis's system, and causes of any imperfections therein; objection to the abolition of the provincial courts, and reasons therefore; impossibility of the duties being properly performed if transferred to a second Sudder Adawlut, and with fewer judges; necessity for a court of last resort at the seat of Government; necessity for salaries of moonsiffs and sudder ameens being fixed; disadvantage of a secondary class of sudder ameens; Mahomedan and Hindoo law-officers to be disallowed to the zillahs; two of the former to be attached to the circuit court, and one of the latter to the appeal court; the others to be sudder ameens; and that that they should sign their own processes, use a public seal, and no witness should be examined except in their presence; evils of Regulation XV. 1824, and necessity for its being abolished; evils of the union of magisterial powers with those of collector, App. p. 359—364.

Loans. Regulation XXXVIII. 1793, Company's European servants forbidden to lend money to natives, App. p. 655—Regulation VII. 1823, The Company's European public servants prohibited from borrowing money from natives under their authority, App. p. 658.

Local Jurisdictions. See 'Courts of Justice; (Moonsiffs.)' 'Provincial Courts.' 'Zillah Courts.'

London University. See 'Lectures.'

Londonderry, Marquis of. See 'Administration of Justice.'

Lowe, Captain. See 'Baitool.'

M.

Mackenzie, Holt. (Analysis of his Evidence.)—Character, qualifications, and jurisdiction of native judges, 119, 120—Number and names of courts in a district, with their jurisdictions, 121—Officers of the courts are paid in fees, but those paid during suits are levied in the form of stamp duties, 122,—and are all regulated, 123—How the vakeels or native pleaders are remunerated, 122—Sudder ameens are generally men of talent and judicial knowledge, principles upon which their decisions are guided, 124—126—How far the talent and judicial qualifications of moonsiffs would be improved by increasing their emoluments, 127—Means taken of facilitating the education of native judges, and how it might be further extended, 128—Present means of education of native judges, and upon what qualifications appointed, 129.

Manner of paying teachers and supporting students, 130—134—Little diversity of system between private teaching and the public institutions, 135—Increase of pay of native judges necessary for improving the efficiency of the law, by adding to the respectability of the judges, 136—Particular modes of appointment of native judges, 137, 138—Saving and better test of qualification that would take place, by native judges being selected with due qualification from among the native pleaders, 139—Situation of vakeel in the inferior courts not considered respectable, 140—They are paid by a percentage on the value of the causes, 141—143—Manner in which justice would be more efficiently dispensed by increasing native judges and reducing European, 144—Reference to a letter from the Finance Committee in Bengal to the Governor-general, containing suggestions for the improvement of the inferior judicial system, 145, 146.

Difficulty in the way of native judges adjudicating in case of European settlement, might be easily removed, 147—149—Provincial courts might be done away with, 150—Extent to which European judges might be reduced, 151, 152—Manner of appointing vakeels, 153—Rank of both moonsiffs and vakeels of various degrees, 154, 155—By whom circuit duties at present performed, and how to be provided for under new arrangement, 156—158—Feeling of natives generally with regard to increasing the powers or numbers of native judges, 159—161—Extent of national feeling among the natives, 161—163—Promotion according to merit among native judges little acted upon, 164.

Mixed race should be admitted to all situations to which natives may be admitted, 165, 166—English judges in the zillah, city, and sudder courts, should be deputed from England; other courts to be open to all classes, 166, 167—English judges high in reputation for honesty among the natives; delay occasioned by the junction with the police ; their qualifications, 168, 169—Proposed plan for a supreme court in the place of the King's court, and of the Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut, 170—172—Advantage of an English bar for the selection of country judges, 173—Necessity for greater care in the qualification of Europeans for country judges, 174—Age they should leave this country for India ; education they should receive ; appointment should be by competition, 175—Advantage of Mr. Wynn's plan in giving appointments to public schools and universities, 175—177.

Elementary instruction in law at Haileybury but of slight use, 178—Advantages of general competition for appointments in India, 179, 180—Theoretical knowledge to be acquired in England, and practical knowledge in India, 181—Improvement by joining the sudder and supreme courts, 182, 183—Law of real property not to be extended to India ; no difficulty in giving to India a code of laws to be administered equally by native and English judges, 183, 184—If writers selected from the public schools required legal qualification, might be obtained by private study, 185, 186—Profits of barristers in the supreme and sudder courts, 187—If courts united, proceedings to be in English, 188—Expense to suitors of the native courts, 189—191—Only two appeals allowed in the inferior courts, their nature and proportions from each court, 192—198—Corruption and bribery of officers of native courts, and how far from appointments being vested in the judges, 199—202.

Native juries in country courts desirable, 203—Failure of the punchayet system, and from what causes, 204—206—Punchayets more arbitrators than juries, their method of appointment and functions, 207—210—Validity of their decisions, 211—Punchayet system used by revenue officers ; plan adopted in a particular instance for settling boundaries, 212—215—How far natives sit upon juries in the presidencies ; they should be admitted upon the grand jury, 216—219—Distance suitors have to travel ; would not be an inconvenience but for the delay in the courts arising from arrear of causes, 220—223—Necessity for a freer admission of natives to situations of public trust and importance, 224—Salaries of native judges, and expenses they have to pay, 225—228—Forms of native courts are simple, 229—Laws that are followed in cases of parties being of different faiths, 230—Extent to which Europeans are subject to the Company's courts in the interior, 231—232.

[Second Examination.]—Paper containing particulars of the cost and defence of suits in the zillah, provincial, and sudder courts, 421, pp. 41—44—Manner of selecting the different items of the above account, 422—425—Nature of institution, and miscellaneous stamps, 426, 427—Method of paying peons and ameens, 428, 429—Regulation of vakeels' fees, 430—Detailed examination as to stamp duties and vakeels' fees, 431—447—How far plaintiff can sue for less than his full demand, and recover the remainder afterwards, 448—455—Other expenses of a suit, besides those authorized by regulation, 456—462—Duty of the sheristadar, 463—466—How value of land estimated to fix the institution fee, 467—Duties of vakeels, and how instructed, 468, 469—Mookhtars or agents though acting as solicitors, are not recognized by the courts, 470—472.

Mackenzie, Holt. Report by him relative to changes in the Revenue and Judicial departments, App. p. 263—Memorandum by him relative to sales for arrears of revenue, particularly in district Meerut, App. p. 327.

Mackintosh, Sir James. See 'Appeals.'

Macleod, J. M. Letter from J. M. Macleod, secretary to Government, Madras, to H. Shakespear, secretary to Government, Fort William, enclosing letter from register of Sudder Adawlut, explaining causes of delay in furnishing report by that court upon practical operation of changes of system in administration of justice and police at Madras, App. p. 129.

Macswen, Mr. See 'Goberdhun.'

Macnaghten

acnaghten, W. H. Letter from, as secretary to the Governor-general, to the deputy secretary to the Bengal Government, dated 26th January 1831, containing opinions of Governor-general upon the subject of Mr. Mackenzie's minute; his lordship disposed to concur in the opinion of Mr. Mackenzie upon the impolicy of any arbitrary separation in the Revenue and Judicial departments; disagreement by the Governor-general in the suggestion for the Government superintending the supreme court, there being no necessity for it, and very great disadvantages attending it; approval by the Governor-general of the proposition for uniting the powers of magistrates and collectors in the provinces, whenever practicable to do so with reference to the present state of business, and will instruct the Sudder Board to take measures for ascertaining in what districts the union can immediately be effected, App. p. 408, 410, pars. 1—12.

Judges should be kept distinct, they and the collectors being placed under a common superior, and should be trained by service in the revenue line; propriety of uniting the offices of tehsildar and thannadar in those districts where offices of collector and magistrate united; qualifications of thannadars for the office of tehsildar; vice president to consider the best means of improving the condition of the thannadars; necessity for increasing salaries of native head officers in collectors' establishments; injustice of excluding natives from offices of trust and emolument; proposed salaries of natives, and manner in which they may be well paid at a less expense than Europeans; advantages of Boards over individual agency; and containing observations generally on Mr. Mackenzie's minute, and directing the papers to be forwarded to the Court of Directors for their sanction, App. p. 410, 416, pars. 13—54.

Madras. See 'Courts, I.' 'Inheritance.'

Madras College. Course of education therein, Clarke 8—Age at which writers generally leave the college, Clarke 16—Institution of the Madras College, its object, and means of checking the contracting debts by students, Clarke 27—29.

Madura. Observation by Mr. Peter, collector at Madura, that few of the village moonsiffs can read or write, and that few causes are decided by them, the parties preferring the district moonsiffs, App. p. 132.

MAGISTRATES.

I. Generally.

Writers can execute the duties of magistrates immediately upon leaving college, Clarke 30—32—Extent of their power of punishment, Clarke 30—32; Hamilton 830—How far desirable that natives should be employed as justices of the peace, and feeling of the natives with regard to it, Hill 302—305—Disadvantages of employing natives as magistrates, Oldham 579; Hamilton 809—815—Qualification and duties of magistrates, Hamilton 802—808, 864—868, 872—874—Their salaries, Hamilton 878—881—Objection to the union of functions of collectors and magistrates, Bayley 883, 884—Observations thereupon, App. p. 29, 34—Natives may be employed as magistrates under strict European superintendence, Bayley 895, 896—Natives may be employed as justices of the peace, but not over Europeans, Fortescue 952—954—How far Europeans would be fit for magisterial duties, Fortescue 972—975—Advantage of employing natives as justices of the peace, but first at the presidency, Campbell 1017—1026—Their duties with regard to examination of witnesses and evidence, McIlvill 647—Their duties with regard to punishment of criminal offenders, Bayley, p. 126—Number of stations of magistrates and joint magistrates in the Lower and Western Provinces, including Cutlack, Bayley, p. 127.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

I. Generally.

Comparative statement of sentences for offences against property and against the person, and other crimes passed by the magistrates in the Lower and Western Provinces of Bengal, 1826

1826 and 1827, Bayley, p. 135, App. p. 25, 26—Necessity for separating the offices of judge and magistrate, and particular reasons for that course being adopted, App. p. 109, par. 201—Enlarged powers granted to magistrates by certain regulations relative to certain crimes and misdemeanors, App. p. 115—117, par. 229—238—Magistrates should be relieved from the necessity of recording their proceedings in detail in every petty case that comes before them, App. p. 127, par. 15—Observations relative to the office of magistrate, and disadvantage of its being joined with the office of collector or judge, from the inability of one individual to discharge with effect the various duties necessarily attached to such an office, Bayley, App. p. 358; Leycester, App. p. 363; Turnbull, App. p. 398; Sealy, App. p. 402.

Evils of the new system of revenue administration from creation of discussions and dissensions between commissioners and magistrates; it cannot be expected that magistrates or the public will have the same respect for an individual they had for a body, among whom by discussion caused by differences of opinion many errors were avoided, Leycester, App. p. 362, par. 30—Observations upon magistrates proceeding to adjudicate in cases where the evidence is not taken before them but by native officers at a distance from the place where the crime committed, Ross, App. p. 388—Approval by the Governor-general of Mr. Mackenzie's proposition of uniting the powers of magistrates and collectors, whenever practicable to do so with reference to the state of public business, and will instruct the Sudder Board to take measures for ascertaining in what districts the union can immediately be effected, App. p. 410.

Regulations upon the appointment, powers, and duties of magistrates in the apprehension and committal of offenders, and in punishing certain offences, App. p. 678—Regulations IX. and XXII. 1793, Review of former systems of administration, powers, and duties of magistrates, App. p. 679, 681—Regulation II. 1796, Zillah magistrates to be justices of the peace, App. p. 681—Regulation IX. 1796, Attendance of witnesses, App. p. 682—Regulation XI. 1796, Resistance of magistrate's process, App. p. 682—Regulation XIII. 1797, Duties of assistants to magistrates, App. p. 682—Regulation XV. 1806, Committal of European British subjects for trial before the supreme court, App. p. 682—Regulation IX. 1807, Modifications of the proceedings of magistrates, App. p. 682—Regulation IX. 1808, Proceedings to be held on the proclamation of gang-robbers, App. p. 684—Regulations V. 1809, VIII. 1829, VIII. 1813, IX. 1822, Relative to trial of British subjects for offences committed in foreign states, App. p. 684—Regulation XVI. 1810, Power to appoint magistrates not being civil judges, App. p. 684—Regulation I. 1811, Prevention and punishment of housebreaking, App. p. 685—Regulation III. 1812, Provision for checking litigious and vexatious complaints, App. p. 685—Regulation XIV. 1816, Superintendence of gaols, App. p. 685.

Regulation VI. 1818, Rules regarding cases not ready for trial, App. p. 685—Regulations VIII. 1818, III. 1819, Security for good conduct, App. p. 686—Regulation XII. 1818, Extension of the powers of magistrates to punish, App. p. 687—Regulation VII. 1819, Power of magistrates to punish particular offences, App. p. 687—Regulation III. 1820, Pressing natives as coolies or bearers, forbidden, and declared penal, App. p. 688—Regulation IV. 1820, Execution of sentences of courts-martial, App. p. 688—Regulation III. 1821, Powers of assistants to magistrates, App. p. 688—Regulation IV. 1821, Union of the powers of collectors and magistrates, App. p. 689—Regulations I. 1822 and VIII. 1828, Cognizance to be taken by magistrates of affrays originating in revenue questions, App. p. 689—Regulation VIII. 1822, Prescribing the place of trial of criminals, App. p. 689—Regulations VI. 1824 and VI. 1829, Extension of powers of magistrates to punish, App. p. 689, 690—Regulation X. 1824, Conditional pardons to be offered by magistrates, App. p. 690—Regulations XV. 1824, VII. 1822, and IV. 1828, Primary cognizance of disputes regarding possession of land crops or water, vested in magistrates, App. p. 690—Regulation IV. 1825, Recognizance to keep the peace, App. p. 691—Regulation I. 1828, Allepore gaol; transportation portation, App. p. 691—Regulation VIII. 1830, Grounds of committal for trial, App. p. 691.

2. Relating to Madras.

Number of persons apprehended, punished, and acquitted by, 1826—1829, App. p. 37—Observations upon their mode of exercising their duties, App. p. 44—General statement of the number of persons punished, released, and sent to the criminal judge by the magistrates in 1825, and of persons in custody under examination by the magistracy on 1st January 1826, App. p. 204, 205—Statement showing the number of persons apprehended, released, and punished, together with the nature of all punishments inflicted by the magistrates 1825—1827, App. p. 208, 209.

See also 'Courts of Justice.' 'Europeans.' 'Zillah Judges.'

Mahomedans. How far they might be selected for judicial offices, Oldham 566—581.

Mahomedan Law. Rights of ryots under, particulars thereof, Fortescue 478—Observations upon its abolition in the court of circuit, App. p. 46—Regulations by which various defects in the Mahomedan rules of evidence and the Mahomedan criminal law which operated to defeat the ends of justice, have been remedied, App. p. 117, par. 244—Sketch of the general principles of the Mahomedan criminal law, App. p. 666—General rules for the modification of the Mahomedan law, App. p. 699.

See also 'Criminal Law.' 'Inheritance.' 'Judicial Offices.'

Maiming and Wounding. Number of crimes of, committed in Madras; offenders undiscovered, and number apprehended and punished, 1826—1829, App. p. 38.

Malabar. State of gang-robbery, and of crime generally therein, App. p. 39.

Malcolm, Sir John. Extract of a minute by Sir John Malcolm, governor of Bombay, dated 10th November 1830; code of regulations proposed to the governor by the Sudder Adawlut at Surat, making alterations in the code established in 1827, considered as inexpedient, and grounds for such opinion; proceedings with regard to the removal of the Sudder Adawlut from Surat to Bombay; proceedings in the case of Omiah, a rebellious Ramosee chief, who, upon submitting himself to Government, and furnishing evidence leading to the conviction of one of the principal public servants under the collector of Poonah, on charges of corruption and treason, was employed by Government; case of Nujuf Ali Khan, a Persian prince who sought refuge at Bombay; particulars as to his trial and final disposal by supreme Government on a charge of murder, App. p. 444, 445, par. 107—111.

Proposed reductions and modifications in the civil administration; proceedings adopted in the southern Mahratta country, and necessity for no further change taking place till the opinion of the Directors is known; advantages that have taken place from the transfer of civil suits to natives; advantage of the nomination of special judicial commissioners in Guzerat and the Deccan, and regulations under which they act; evils attendant upon the incorrectness of the translation of the Regulations, and necessity for their being early revised and corrected; judicial administration in the provinces of the Bombay presidency is as purely and efficiently administered as any code can be; great advantages, particularly in its simplicity, of the Bombay code of 1827, App. p. 446, 447, par. 112—122.

Advantage of the gradual introduction of trial by jury, and necessity for the code of Regulations remaining unaltered; evils of the introduction of English law into India; attention that has been paid to the improvement of gaols and prison discipline at Bombay; pains taken to render prisons healthy and give work to prisoners; advantages to be derived from the establishment of a dépôt gaol at Tannah; advantages of magisterial duties being combined with territorial; good state of the police in the territories under the Bombay presidency; the village system should be strictly maintained or restored where decayed; importance in the establishment of a good provincial police, of the employment of natives to the exclusion of strangers; inefficiency of horse police; proposal posals for granting magisterial power to military officers to a certain extent, App. p. 447—453, par. 122—214.

Maritime Code. Plan formed by witness for a maritime code for persons navigating the Indian seas, Johnston 1151—Particulars of plan, Johnston, p. 235.

Masulipatam. State of crime therein in 1829, App. p. 41.

See also 'Population.'

Meerut, District of. Memorandum by Mr. Holt Mackenzie, upon the subject of public sales for arrears of revenue, App. p. 327—Letter from R. C. Glyn, Esq., collector of Meerut, to Holt Mackenzie, Esq., secretary to Government, containing statement relative to the number of sales, and particulars thereof, App. p. 332—Abstract statement of settlement in zillah Meerut, pergunnah Chaproulee, Mouzah Silanch, village Urslee, App. p. 334—Statements exhibiting the puttees; number and names of proprietary parcellers and their respective shares, App. p. 336—Quistbundee, or monthly revenue instalment, as proposed by the malgoozars, App. p. 338—Translation of the Ummul Dustuck, or agreement between Government and managers of revenue, App. p. 338—Puttee Ummul Dustuck, or agreement between landlord and tenant, App. p. 339.

Megna. See 'Arracan.'

Mehals. See 'Abkare Mehal.' 'Jungle Mehals.'

Melvill, Hon. William Leslie. (Analysis of his Evidence.)—Opinion upon the administration of civil and criminal justice in India, 625—Language in which the pleadings and proceedings in courts are taken, and opinion thereupon, 629—643—Method of examining witnesses and taking down evidence, 647—652, 657—659—Period of assizes and gaol delivery, 660—664—Nature of punishments, 665—669—Europeans, if admitted, to be subject to provincial courts, 670, 671, 679—689—Criminal law in India is the Mahomedan law modified, 672—678—Functions of the Mahomedan law officer, 680—686.

Power of the Governor-general to dispense with the sitting of the Mahomedan law officer in court, 686—688—Opinion upon the formation of a legislative council, 690—694, 698, 699, 714—Matters relating to the revenue should not be legislated for in India without communication with this country, 695—697—How far natives may be more generally employed in the administration of justice, 700—703—Increased powers of native judges in civil causes, 704—Europeans should be tried by native judge, under the superintendence of an European judge, 705, 706—Native judges should be properly remunerated, 708, 709—Treatment of native judges by European judges, 710—713.

Mesne Process. Not necessary that the powers of arresting and imprisoning alleged defaulters on mesne process, should be vested solely in the hands of collectors or in any hands; the power of distraining the personal property of defaulters, and of imprisoning them after judgment for the arrear claimed, if not satisfied by the process of distraint, being amply sufficient to enable landholders to realize their rents, Ross, App. p. 367.

Metcalf, Sir C. T. Minute by, dated 11th April 1831, containing opinion in favour of the union of the Judicial and Revenue branches of the public service; proposed modification of the civil administration by the division of the country into small districts, under an European officer as superintendent; necessity for maintaining the supreme judicial authority in the hands of Government; disadvantages of that system being abandoned; necessity for uniting the powers of magistrates and collectors in the provinces, whenever practicable with reference to the state of business; necessity that judges should be trained, by service in the revenue line; necessity for the union of the offices of tehsildar and thanadar, App. p. 437, 438.

Advantage of the abolition of existing courts of appeal in the Western Provinces, and the substitution of a Sudder Adawlut; advantage of individual agency over collective authorities; advantage to the office of civil judge of the duties of the courts of circuit; importance of the maintenance of village institutions, and gradual introduction of the trial by jury; proposed saving by Mr. Mackenzie's plan not to be relied on, every fresh scheme scheme calling for some increase of establishment; native judges should not be independent of the controlling power of European functionaries, who should have a power of final decision; native judges should not have jurisdiction over Europeans or East-Indians, or in matters in which the public revenue or rights of the state are concerned; how far retention of the office of register is necessary; decisions from moonsiffs should be appealed from to the principal sudder ameen, subject to a further appeal to the zillah or city judge, or of one appeal only to the European judge; appeals from the decisions of the sudder ameen or principal sudder ameen, by the zillah or city judge, with special appeal to the higher court, App. p. 439, 440.

Revival of the office of superintendent of police not necessary; manner in which the duties of the office might be more efficiently conducted; cause of failure in the system of commissioners of revenue and circuit; union of offices not advocated on the ground of economy; limitation proposed to be annexed to the employment of native judges in the administration of criminal justice; opinion upon the condition of thannadars in the Lower Provinces; advantages of conferring civil judicial powers on revenue officers during the progress of the settlement of the revenue in the Lower Provinces; Revenue Board not so efficient in the Western Provinces as individual agency; provincial courts should be retained in the Lower Provinces under certain regulations; in the Upper Provinces they should be abolished, and Sudder Adawlut established in their room; judges of the Sudder Adawlut in the Western Provinces should also be chief commissioners of revenue; manner in which trial by jury should be introduced into courts; dissatisfaction at present existing among natives, to be attributed to their natural antipathy to foreign conquerors; advantage of the permanent settlement where lands are in a state of advanced cultivation, but otherwise the periodical settlements most advisable; particulars of proposed improvements by Mr. Blunt, in the Western and Lower Provinces, and how far concurred in by Sir T. Metcalfe, App. p. 437—441.

Middle Men. Intermediate class between the ryots and government under the Mogul government, their rights and powers, Fortescue 479, 480.

Midnapore. Advisable that the commissioner should exercise the same powers in the district of Midnapore, which is to be annexed to Cuttack, App. p. 345.

Military Service. How far advantageous that the Company's service should be made altogether military, and selection for offices made therefrom, Hill 327; Bayley 904—907.

Mill, James. (Analysis of his Evidence.)—Opinion in favour of the abolition of supreme courts, and reasons, 1035—1040—Proposed change in the judicial establishment, and form of procedure, 1041—Defects in country courts as at present established, 1042, 1043, 1046, 1047—Evils of the present system of appeals, 1043—1045—Suggested improvements, 1048—Appeals should be to the Sudder Adawlut direct, 1048—1059—Advantage of zillah judges having concurrent jurisdiction with native judges, 1051—Advantage of native judges having power in criminal as well as civil cases, execution above moderate punishment being stayed for review by the Sudder Adawlut, 1052, 1054.

Hard labour and banishment more feared by natives than death, 1052, 1053—Method to be adopted with regard to the trial of Europeans, 1055—1057—Advantage of oral over written pleadings, 1058, 1059, 1062, 1063—Advantage of framing a code of laws, founded on the customs of India, 1060—Necessity for the law of inheritance as to land being that of the natives, the same as with respect to chattels, 1061—Courts in India being made as perfect as possible; appeals to England may be safely done away with, 1065, 1066—Examination upon the present and proposed method of educating young men intended for the Judicial department, 1067—1072.

Ministerial Officers. See 'Law-Officers.' 'Oaths.'

Miscellaneous Department. List of works in the department, which, since the year 1817, have been encouraged or patronized by the Bengal government, for promoting education among the natives, App. p. 124.

Misdemeanors. Extract from Regulation VII. of 1819, providing for the punishment of persons enticing away the wives or female children of fixed inhabitants of cities and large towns for the purposes of prostitution, App. p. 115, par. 226.

Mixed Race. See 'Anglo-Indians.'

Mocuddums. See 'Villages.'

Mofussil Record Committees. See 'Record Committees.'

Mookthas. See 'Agents.'

Moolivees. From what families they are derived, Clarke 45.

MOONSIFFS:

I. Generally.

Appointment of district moonsiffs, Clarke 69; Mackenzie 137—Distinction between the court of moonsiffs and the sudder ameen, and to whom appeals lie, Clarke 71—73—To what extent the decree of district moonsiffs is final, Clarke 78—Few complaints of those decrees, the judges being liable to be sued civilly and prosecuted criminally, Clarke 79—Period at which the authority of district moonsiffs was increased to its present extent, Clarke 80—Their jurisdiction, method of payment, and inferior qualifications, Mackenzie 120, 121—How far the talent and judicial qualifications of moonsiffs would be improved by increasing their emoluments, Mackenzie 127—Rank of moonsiffs of various degrees, Mackenzie 154, 155—Soundness of their decisions, Oldham 569, 570—Their powers considerably increased, Melville 626; Bayley 882—Their jurisdiction, and proposed extension of powers, Bayley 882, p. 111—Suggestions for a new mode of remunerating them, Campbell 992.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

1. Relating to Bengal.

i. Generally.

Number of suits instituted before, 1814—1820, App. p. 2—Comparison of suits instituted, 1814 and 1815—1817, App. p. 2—Suits decided, 1814—1820, App. p. 3—Suits depending at the beginning of 1815—1821, App. p. 5—Suits instituted, decided, and depending, 1821—1824; also comparison, 1817—1820, App. p. 9—Suits instituted, decided, and depending, 1825—1827, App. p. 28—Reduction of arrears, and delay therein, App. p. 6—Regular civil suits depending at the beginning and end of 1828, and admitted or re-admitted, and disposed of during that year before the moonsiffs in the Lower Provinces of Bengal, App. p. 546, 547—The like in the Western Provinces, App. p. 484, 485—Rules enacted regarding their duties, revised, amended, and consolidated into one Regulation by Regulation XXIII. of 1814; nature of their duties; further extended by Regulation II. of 1821; present constitution of the office defective from their emoluments fluctuating according to the number and nature of suits decided by them; suggestions for a salary and retiring allowance; also promotion for long service and good conduct; necessity for extending their numbers, App. p. 77—79, par. 78—86—Proposed extension of their powers to 300 rupees, without any restriction in regard to the limitation of time beyond what is contained in the regulations with reference to suits generally, App. p. 358.

Extension of their powers in 1814 and 1821, and Regulation in 1827, authorizing the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut to invest them with power to try claims to the amount of 1,000 rupees, Bayley, App. p. 353—The moonsiffs, when proper persons have been selected, are found extremely serviceable, and well fitted, from the local position they occupy, to render justice more easily accessible to the great body of the people, and to execute a variety of duties assigned to them in the interior of the districts by the superior tribunals; but to be more efficient they should be placed on a higher footing in respect to emolument, Bayley, App. p. 354—If they meet with liberal encouragement, their agency agency may be safely employed to a greater extent in the administration of justice ; consideration necessary as to the extent to which their powers may be enlarged, without occasioning the evils arising from too sudden and violent change in the established system, Bayley, App. p. 354—Proposed extension of their powers and jurisdiction, and proposed increase of salary in consequence, Bayley, App. p. 355.

Agreement in the principles of Mr. Bayley's minute with regard to moonsiffs ; their salaries should be fixed ; officers on the establishment and their allowances should be also fixed ; and controlled as to appointment and removal by the zillah judges, under the rules in force for the control by the provincial courts over the establishments of the judges and magistrates ; that they should be prohibited acting through other agency, and that officers of the establishment should be liable for malversation as other officers, Leicester, App. p. 360—Indispensable necessity for adding to the allowances of the moonsiffs ; but the additions proposed by Mr. Bayley are too small, and as they will but little increase the inducement they now have to discharge their duties faithfully, will produce little effect in raising the character of the native tribunals, Ross, App. p. 365 ; Turnbull, App. p. 393—They should have jurisdiction in cases of both real and personal property, as it is of importance to the prosperity of the community, that every possible facility should be afforded for obtaining a speedy adjustment of both descriptions of claims, Ross, App. p. 365—Observations as to their present and proposed number and jurisdiction, and manner in which their powers may be extended if their salaries increased, Turnbull, App. p. 397.

Better that moonsiffs should be left as they are ; they are generally cazees of those portions of their districts where their courts are situated ; their offices are necessary to the wants of the ryots and poorer classes of the people ; they ought not to be tempted to neglect suits of small for those of larger amount, and it may be found they are not exactly fitted for such responsible trusts as it is proposed to give them, Scaly, App. p. 401—By Regulation XXIII. 1814, the judges of the several zillahs and cities are empowered, subject to the approval of the Provincial Court, to nominate an establishment of moonsiffs, with local jurisdictions corresponding with those of the thannahs ; moonsiffs are compensated for their trouble in the trial of suits by the full value of the stamped paper on which the plaint may have been written, App. p. 462—Jurisdiction to the extent of 150 rupees ; they are prohibited from taking cognizance of any suit in which a British subject, European, Foreigner, or American is a party, App. p. 463—Regulation XLIX. 1803, establishing moonsiffs on a new principle, App. p. 630.

ii. Village.

Nothing in the report of the Sudder Court at Madras to encourage the introduction of similar establishments in Bengal territories ; they do not enjoy confidence of the people, and suits decided by them have afforded but little relief to the district moonsiffs, App. p. 126, par. 5.

iii. District.

Proposed establishment in every district of a court of primary jurisdiction, denominated the moonsiff's court ; proposed salary of the judge ; extent of jurisdiction of the court, Ross, App. p. 372, par. 42.

2. Relating to Madras.

i. Generally.

Table showing the number of suits instituted and decided in the years 1810, 1815, and 1820, and 1825, and depending at the end of each of those years in the Sudder Adawlut, in the provincial courts, and in the courts of the zillah judges, registers, sudder ameens, and moonsiffs, and the average delay of judicature in each class of courts, App. p. 540, 541.

ii. Village.

Number of suits instituted before, 1827—1829, App. p. 48—Number of suits decided before, 1827—1829, App. p. 48—Number of suits depending before, 1827—1829, App.

App. p. 48—Average delay, App. p. 49—Revised general statement, showing the number of village moonsiffs in the four divisions of the Madras Presidency, App. p. 154—Number of causes depending and disposed of before, 1817—1827, App. p. 156—Statement, showing the number of suits disposed of by the village moonsiffs in the several zillahs, from 1825 to 1827 inclusive, App. p. 157—Extract from Report of Sudder Adawlut, relative to the number of village moonsiffs; causes tried by them; character of their courts, as represented by authorities in the different provinces, App. p. 131—140—Extract from minutes of consultation of Madras Government under date 9th February 1830, in answer to observations by Sudder Adawlut upon the character of village moonsiffs, App. p. 212—Letter from the Court of Directors to the Madras Government, dated 11th April 1826, relative to the employment of village moonsiffs, App. p. 214—Answer of the Madras Government, dated 27th April 1827, App. p. 229—Minute by Sir Thomas Munro, extracted from Madras judicial consultations of 30th January 1827, upon the above subject, App. p. 233—Minute by J. H. D. Ogilvie, Esq., upon the same subject, App. p. 243—Resolution of Government upon that subject, App. p. 245—260.

See also 'Villages.'

iii. District Moonsiffs.

Number of suits instituted before, 1827—1829, App. p. 48—Number of suits decided before, 1827—1829, App. p. 48—Number of suits depending, 1827—1829, App. p. 48—Average delay, App. p. 49.

Number of appeals from, instituted 1827—1829, App. p. 49—Number decided 1827—1829, App. p. 49—Number depending 1827—1829, App. p. 49—Average delay, App. p. 50.

Statement, showing the number of suits disposed of by the district moonsiffs in the several zillahs, from 1825—1827 inclusive, App. p. 158, 159; in 1825, App. p. 245—Statement, showing the particulars of suits from 200 to 500 rupees, disposed of by the district moonsiffs in the several zillahs, in 1825, 1826, and 1827 respectively, App. p. 160, 161—Number of district moonsiffs in the four divisions under the Madras Presidency, App. p. 162, 163—Number of causes depending and disposed of before, 1817—1827, App. p. 164—Statement, showing the number of suits depending before the district moonsiffs, on the 1st January 1828, and the years in which they were instituted, App. p. 165—Statement, showing the number of appeal causes from the decision of district moonsiffs, disposed of by the several zillah courts, from 1825—1827 inclusive, App. p. 166—Statement, showing the number of appeals exceeding 200 rupees, from the decision of district moonsiffs, depending in the zillah courts, on the 1st January 1825 and 1828 respectively, App. p. 167—Statement, showing the particulars of the number of appeal causes, from the decision of district moonsiffs, disposed of by the several zillah courts, from 1825—1827 inclusive, App. p. 168, 169—Number of appeals instituted in 1825, from district moonsiffs' decrees; number decreed on merits, affirmed, or reversed; number dismissed for default; number adjusted by razeenamahs; total number of appeals disposed of by judges, registers, and sudder ameenas, in 1825, from decrees of district moonsiffs, App. p. 245.

Causes of the comparatively small number of appeals from the decisions of, App. p. 50—Suggestion for preventing delay by referring original suits instituted in the zillah courts to the district moonsiffs, App. p. 50—Comparison between the jurisdiction of the district moonsiffs at Bengal and Madras, App. p. 126, par. 6—Extract from report of Sudder Adawlut, containing information respecting courts of district moonsiffs, provided for by Regulation VI. of 1816 (or any subsequent Regulation), with special reference to the enlarged powers vested in the district moonsiffs by section iv. Regulation II. 1821, App. p. 140.

Extract from minutes of consultation of Madras Presidency, under date 9th February 1830, remarking upon observations made by Sudder Adawlut respecting district moonsiffs.

siffs, App. p. 212—Letter from Court of Directors to the Madras Government, dated 11th April 1826, on the subject of employing district moonsiffs, App. p. 214—Answer of the Madras Government, dated 27th April 1827, App. p. 229—Minute by Sir Thomas Munro, extracted from Madras judicial consultations of 30th January 1827, upon that subject, App. p. 233—Minute by J. H. D. Ogilvie, Esq., upon the same subject, App. p. 243—Resolution of Government upon that subject, App. p. 245—260—They have jurisdiction in suits to the value of 500 rupees, and may decide by punchayet any suits which both parties may agree to have so settled, App. p. 468.

See also 'Appeals.' 'Burdwan.' 'Courts of Justice.' 'Law-Suits.' 'Vailpund Moonsiffs.'

Moorshedabad. Approval of the removal of the public treasury and records from, to Calcutta, App. p. 18—The revenue board have recently stated that there are many important arrangements to be effected, some of them likely to be productive of considerable increase of revenue, which ought not to have been so long delayed, App. p. 340.

Salaries of the judges of the provincial court at, in the years 1813 and 1829, App. p. 454, 456—Salaries of the judges of the zillah and city courts at, in the years 1813 and 1829, App. p. 455, 458—Salaries of the commissioners of revenue and circuit at, in the year 1829, App. p. 457.

See also 'Crime.' 'Law-Suits.'

Mortgages. Regulation I. 1798, as to mortgages in the province of Behar, with right of possession after a certain time (called Bye-bil-wuffa), how to be dealt with, App. p. 603.

Mundul. See 'Villages.'

Munro, Sir Thomas. Minute by, in 1820, relative to the want of a law of entail, Hill 235—Opinion by, that the system of administering law and collecting revenue should not be altered without authority from England, Melvill 625—Letter from, relative to the hardship of young men losing their appointments from idleness and errors of youth, Empson 1096—Minute by Sir Thomas Munro, extracted from Fort St. George judicial consultations of 30th January 1827, relative to the abolition of zillah courts; upon the appointment of village and district moonsiffs; upon police officers extorting confessions from prisoners; upon the condition of the ryots with regard to revenue assessment; and upon other matters connected with the administration of justice and conduct and control of the police, App. p. 233—243.

See also 'Inheritance.' 'Revenue Department.'

Murder, Madras. Decrease of the crime, App. p. 19—Number of cases of, ascertained to have been committed, number of offenders not discovered, and number punished, in 1829, App. p. 38—Number of cases of murder and of robbery and murder, and number acquitted and convicted by the circuit court, and by the Foujdarry Adawlut, in certain years, viz. 1813, 1814, 1815, 1825, 1826, and 1827, App. p. 188—200—Abstract of the whole, App. p. 202—Number of persons apprehended and delivered over to the criminal judges, 1825—1827, charged with murder, and robbery and murder, App. p. 206, 207.

Proposed proceedings by magistrates, thannadars, and others, in cases of murder and other heinous and dangerous crimes, Ross, App. p. 377, par. 59—Regulation IV. 1822, Amendments of the Mahomedan law in cases of murder and insanity, App. p. 711—Statement of the number of persons convicted of murder or offences with murder, before the Sudder Nizamut Adawlut in Bengal, and sentences passed by that court in each year, 1816—1827, App. p. 518, 519.

Mutilation. In cases where it is prescribed by the Mahomedan law, it is commuted to imprisonment, Melvill 668—Regulation IX. 1793, In modification of the Mahomedan law, declaring that mutilation should not be inflicted, but should be commuted to imprisonment with hard labour, App. p. 700.

Myhee.

Myhee, East zillah north of the. Salary of the judge and criminal judge and of the register and senior assistant, in the year 1828-29, App. p. 470.

N.

Nagpore. Report from the resident upon the inefficiency of punchayets, when chosen by the parties themselves; difficulty of coming to a decision, from the punchayets considering themselves the partizans of the persons by whom chosen, and refusing to concur in an award against the interests of their own party; increased duties of the city courts in consequence; present system not likely to succeed better than the former one, App. p. 72, 73, par. 44—46.

National Feeling. Extent thereof among natives, Mackenzie 161—163.

NATIVES.

I. Generally.

Use of native agency might be extended by employing them jointly with Europeans, Clarke 92, 102—105—General want of morality in the natives, Clarke 93—97—They should be freely consulted on the subject of legislation, and reasons why they should not be allowed a vote in a legislative assembly, Clarke 116—118—How far natives sit upon juries in the presidencies; they should be admitted upon the grand jury, Mackenzie 216—219—Necessity for a freer admission of natives to situations of public trust and importance, Mackenzie 224—How far giving natives greater power, would weaken the security of the empire, Hill 415—417—Improvement in the character and intellectual acquirements of the natives, Hill 418—420—Want of character in natives, Oldham 566—581; Melvill 700.

Improvements in their character, Hamilton 719—723; Bayley 888—How far natives may be more generally employed in the administration of justice, Oldham 593; Melvill 700—703—Employment and powers of native judicial officers, Bayley 882—Expediency of employing natives, their breaches of duty and want of character being through want of proper remuneration, Fortescue 942—948, 955—Their capacity for office, Fortescue 949—951, 971—Suggestions by witness in 1806, for admitting natives to a share in government, and allowing them to administer justice, and how far carried into effect, Johnston 1115—Advantages of employing natives, and manner in which it would support the British Government, Johnston 1132—1136.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

1. Generally, or relating to Bengal.

Necessity for their employment in order to supply the wants of the judicial system, App. p. 65, par. 8; App. p. 77, par. 73—Manner in which proceedings are delayed in the tribunals, by the notorious disregard to truth so generally displayed by natives in giving evidence, and from their want of moral principle, App. p. 65, par. 12—In the present state of native society, the exercise of judicial authority, civil or criminal, cannot be entrusted to natives without subjecting them to European control and supervision, App. p. 121, par. 267—System originally introduced in 1793, was ill calculated to encourage the formation of a class of natives qualified by their education and character to fill high and responsible situations in the administration of justice; they were employed at first either in matters of only inferior importance, or under the immediate eye of the judges; necessity of having recourse to their assistance, caused their gradual employment, Bayley, App. p. 353.

The mode in which they have generally discharged their duties, encourages their further employment, Bayley App. p. 353—But to be distinguished by integrity and ability in discharge discharge of their duties, they should be granted adequate allowances, Bayley, App. p. 354; Ross, App. p. 365—Disadvantage of reports on conduct, or of the merit of individuals, or their comparative estimation among the people, being made to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut or the Government, as no blame being attributable is a sufficient security; and necessity of such periodical reports would impose an invidious task, liable to abuse and prejudice, and as being secret, most objectionable, Leycester, App. p. 361.

Necessity for the employment of natives for the more efficient administration of justice, the carrying it on by Europeans being fallacious; and no addition to the numerical strength of the European establishments, in the present state of the public finances, being able to afford more than a temporary relief, Ross, App. p. 364—Advantage of a more extended employment of native agency; little doubt, if due care taken in the selection and the situation of native judge raised to a proper standard of respectability, individuals would be found fully qualified by character, talent, and learning, to discharge their functions, Turnbull, App. p. 392—To whatever extent it may be determined to raise the powers of native tribunals, it will be of primary importance to provide for a vigilant and active control over their proceedings by the European authorities, Turnbull, App. p. 393.

Native courts should not have unlimited jurisdiction, and the generality of natives having suits to institute, would prefer courts superintended by Europeans, Scaley, App. p. 401—Necessity for extension of the powers of native functionaries, but the powers proposed to be conferred are too limited, and the salary inadequate, Rattray, App. p. 404—Opinion by the Governor-general upon the injustice of excluding natives from offices of trust and emolument, App. p. 411—Expediency of employing the agency of respectable and well qualified natives more extensively in the civil administration of the country, provided they are employed under European superintendence, Blunt, App. p. 418.

See also 'Administration of Justice.' 'Indigo-Planters.' 'Law-Suits, (Bombay).' 'Legislative Council.' 'Magistrates.' 'National Feeling.' 'Perjury.' 'Police.' 'Pressing.' 'Supreme Courts.' 'Zillah Courts.'

2. Relating to Bombay.

Advantage of the extent to which native jurisdiction has been given in civil suits, and there is no measure from which more advantage, financial and political, may be anticipated, Malcolm, App. p. 447—Necessity in the establishment of a good provincial police, of employment of natives to the exclusion of strangers, Malcolm, App. p. 451.

Native Commissioners. Regulation of 1830, extending the jurisdiction of native commissioners to the cognizance of all original suits of whatever amount; their jurisdiction extended with a view to economy and advantage of the class from whom the commissioners are taken; suits excluded from their jurisdiction; appeals from their decision above a certain amount to the judge or senior assistant; appeal from the decision on appeal of decisions of native commissioners to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, App. p. 59, 60, par. 38—42.

Regulations XL. 1793, XXXV. 1795, and XVIII. 1797, Upon the establishment and jurisdiction of the native judges styled commissioners, App. p. 629, 630—Regulations XXIII. 1114, and XIII. 1810, Containing revised and amended rules for the office of native commissioner, App. p. 631, 632—Regulation XIX. 1817, Extension of powers of native commissioners, App. p. 632.

Civil suits depending at the beginning and end of 1813, and instituted, decided, and adjusted during that year by the head and Mofussil native commissioners in the Lower Provinces under the Presidency of Bengal, App. p. 474, 475—The like in the Western Provinces, App. p. 476, 477.

See also 'Appeals.' 'Judges, 5.' 'Law-Suits.'

Native

Native Languages. See 'Languages.'

Native Officers. See 'Native Soldiers.'

Native Princes. Regulation IV. 1812, Relative to the prosecution and defence of suits in which native princes are parties, App. p. 609.

Native Public Servants. Regulations upon the appointment and removal of native public servants in all departments, App. p. 663—Regulations V. 1804, VIII. 1809, and II. 1813, Relative to the appointment and removal of native ministerial officers, App. p. 663, 664.

Native Soldiers. Advantages of Regulation XV. of 1816, in having furnished facilities for the adjudication of civil suits in which native soldiers are parties, App. p. 91, par. 151, 152—Regulation XV. 1816, making provision for the trial of suits in which native officers and soldiers are parties, App. p. 613.

Navy, Indian. See 'Rope.'

Nellore. Opinion by Mr. Smalley, principal collector of Nellore, that no measures were spared for rendering the village moonsiffs qualified to perform their duties, but they do not possess ability, and are incapable of reading and writing; still with the aid of the airnum they transact business, and although in some instances they may deviate from the letter of the Regulations, they do it as correctly as could be expected, and perhaps in the best manner suited to the people, App. p. 134—Salaries of the judges of the zillah courts at, in the year 1813 and 1828-29, App. p. 464, 466—Number of original suits and appeals depending at the beginning and end of the year 1815, and disposed of during that year in the zillah courts at Nellore; also amount of property in litigation in such suits, App. p. 530, 531.

Number of original suits depending at the beginning and end of 1828, and preferred and disposed of during that year in the zillah court at Nellore, App. p. 532, 533—Statement of the amount of property in litigation in the civil suits, including appeals, depending on 1st January 1828 and 1st January 1829, in the zillah court at Nellore; and amount in litigation in the original suits disposed of therein during the year 1828; also total amount of appeals disposed of in that year, App. p. 537—Statement of the number of appeals from the decrees of assistant judges, registers, and native officers, depending at the beginning and end of 1828, and disposed of during that year in the zillah court at Nellore, App. p. 538, 539.

General abstract of criminal trials on which sentences were passed by the Foujdarry Adawlut, from 1st January to 31st December 1815 at Nellore, App. p. 543—Abstract of the proceedings of the criminal courts and police at Nellore in the year 1817, App. p. 544, 545—The like in the year 1828, App. p. 546, 547—Statement of the operations of the criminal courts at Nellore from 1st January to 30th June 1829, not distinguishing the different offences, App. p. 554, 555—General Statement of the petty offences before the village police, district police, and magistracy, at Nellore, from 1st January to 30th June 1829, App. p. 558, 559—General statement of crimes and misdemeanours before the district police and magistracy at Nellore, from 1st January to 30th June 1830, App. p. 562, 563.

Nerbudda. See 'Saugor' and 'Nerbudda.'

Nizamut Adawlut. See 'Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut or Foujdarry Adawlut.'

Nujuf Ali Khan. Case of Nujuf Ali Khan, a prince of Persia, who sought refuge at Bombay, and having while travelling through the territories put one man to death and wounded another, in an affray, a question arose as to the necessity and policy of subjecting him to be tried for murder, in the zillah courts; difference of opinion of the council in Bombay in consequence, proceedings taken, and final orders for his disposal by the Supreme Government, Malcolm, App. p. 445.

Nuddea.

Nuddea. Number of summary and regular suits relative to exactions or demands, or arrears of land rent in Nuddea, 1815—1816, Turnbull, App. p. 395—Salaries of the judges of the zillah and city courts at, in the years 1813 and 1829, App. p. 455, 459—Suits instituted and depending before the zillah courts in, in the year 1813, App. p. 474, 475—In the year 1828, App. p. 480—Abstract statement of summary suits disposed of during the year 1828, and depending on 1st January 1828 and 1829, App. p. 498, 499—Statement of summary suits in the civil courts, on the 1st January 1829, and referred to the collectors for adjudication, and number decided and depending, App. p. 502.

Statement of crimes committed in, in the year 1813; persons concerned, number apprehended and committed for trial, and computed amount of property stolen and recovered, App. p. 506—The like in the year 1828, App. p. 508, 509—Persons committed for trial and convicted before the courts of circuit, and number apprehended and punished by magistrates and assistants for minor offences in the year 1828, App. p. 512, 513—Number of prisoners in gaol at, and causes of their confinement, App. p. 526, 527—Prisoners employed in private labour at, agreeably to the orders of the Sudder Nizamut Adawlut, App. p. 528.

O.

Oaths. In courts of justice may be advantageously dispensed with, Bayley 915—Solemn declaration admitted in certain cases in courts instead of an oath, and observations by the Bengal Government as to whether it would be expedient to abolish oaths altogether, App. p. 119, 120, par. 258—262—Regulation XVIII. 1817, Substituting declaration for oath of office by native ministerial officers, App. p. 614.

Offices. Offices civil servants eligible to on leaving college, Clarke 9.

See also 'Patronage.'

Officers. See 'Courts, II.' 'Promotion.'

Ogilvie, J. H. D. Minute by J. H. D. Ogilvie, Esq., member of council, Madras, upon the abolition of zillah courts, employment of moonsiffs, control and conduct of the police, and generally upon the administration of justice, App. p. 243.

Oldham, James O. (Analysis of his Evidence.)—Services in India, 534—536—Not beneficial to employ natives to a greater extent in the police, 537—How young men should be disposed of on arrival in India, 537, 547, 548—Native judicial situations not sufficiently remunerated, their rates of pay, 538—543—Duties and stations of Hindoo pundits and Mahomedan law officers, 543—546—Best method of education for judicial offices in India and England, 547—565—Want of character in natives, and how far Mahomedans might be selected for judicial offices, 566—581—In the event of European settlement, European judges and justices must be increased, increased expense thereby, 562—590—Importance of the presence of a European judge, 591, 592—Influence of zemindars in preventing impartiality in native juries, 593—598—Powers of judges and jurisdiction of law officers, 599—610—Examination of witnesses, 611—614—Duties of the vakeels, and how far heard vivâ voce, 615—621.

Old Provinces. See 'Bombay.'

Omiâh. Particulars respecting a Romoossee chief named Omiâh, who had disturbed the tranquillity of the country in the collectorate of Poonah, and evaded apprehension; but who subsequently submitted himself to Government, and furnished information leading to the conviction of one of the principal servants under the collectorate of Poonah, on charges of corruption and treason; proposed plans for the employment of Omiâh, and grounds of expediency for overlooking his past offences and securing his service in aid of the police, Malcolm, App. p. 445.

Opium. Observations upon Regulations relative to suits, complaints, and informations for recovery of fines, on account of illicit cultivation of the poppy, or the illicit manufacture, sale, &c. of opium, App. p. 90, par. 143.

See also 'Salt and Opium Board.'

Oriental Languages. Manner in which the study of, at Haileybury, prevents the study of the law, Empson 1079, 1100—1104.

Oude. Provinces of. Regulations I. II. IV. V. VI. VII. VIII. I.I. 1803, Introduction of the code of Regulations into the Ceded Provinces of Oude, App. p. 647, 648.

P.

Pardessus, Monsieur. Collection of information by witness for his work upon maritime law, Johnston 1151.

Pardons. Powers of Magistrates extended by Regulation X. of 1824, in regard to the offer of conditional pardons to accomplices or accessories, with a view to discovering the principal offenders, of convicting criminals, and recovering stolen property, App. p. 116, par. 236—Regulation X. 1824, Authorising magistrates and superintendents of police to tender pardons to persons not being principals, supposed to have been directly or indirectly concerned in certain crimes; magistrates to report their opinions to superintendents of police, who would sanction the offer of pardon upon certain conditions, App. p. 690—Regulation VI. 1796, XIV. 1810, Granting power to the Nizamut Adawlut to pardon or grant mitigation of punishment, App. p. 701, 707.

Parliament. See 'Legislation.' 'Legislative Council.'

Partition. See 'Divisions of Land.'

Patna. Proposed distribution of the country into divisions, to be placed under separate revenue commissioners, each to have a covenanted assistant; number of districts, amount of assessment, &c. App. p. 270—Salaries of the judges of the provincial court at, in the years 1813 and 1829, App. p. 454, 457—Salaries of the judges of the zillah and city courts at, in the years 1813 and 1829, App. p. 455, 458—Salaries of the Commissioners of revenue and circuit at, in the year 1829, App. p. 457—Civil suits depending at the beginning and end of the year 1813, and instituted, decided, and adjusted during that year in the zillah and city courts in the Patna division of the Bengal presidency, App. p. 474, 475—General summary of the number of civil suits depending at the beginning and end of 1813, and instituted, decided, and adjusted during that year in the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, the provincial and zillah courts in the Patna division of the Bengal presidency, App. p. 478.

Abstract of the total number of regular civil suits and appeals depending, and decided or adjusted in each of the zillah or city courts, the provincial courts, and the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut in the year 1828, in the Patna division of the Bengal presidency, App. p. 481—Regular civil suits depending at the beginning and end of 1828, and admitted or re-admitted and disposed of during that year before the judges and other officers of the several zillah and city courts in the Patna division, App. p. 484, 485—Statement showing the total value or amount in sicca rupees of regular suits, whether original or in appeal, depending in the several civil courts on 1st January 1829 in the Patna division, App. p. 489—Abstract statement of summary suits disposed of during the year 1828, and depending on the 1st January 1828 and 1829, in the Patna division, App. p. 500, 501—Statement —Statement of summary suits in the civil courts at Patna 1st January 1829, and referred to the collectors for adjudication, and number decided and depending, App. p. 503.

Statement of crimes ascertained to have been committed in the Patna division in 1813, the number of persons supposed to have been concerned, the number apprehended and committed for trial, and computed amount of property stolen and recovered, App. p. 506, 507—The like in the year 1828, App. p. 508, 509—Statement of the number of persons committed for trial and convicted before the courts of circuit, and the number apprehended and punished by the magistrates and their assistants for minor offences in the Patna division in the year 1828, App. p. 512, 513—Comparative statement of the number of prisoners in the gaols in the Patna division, on 31st December 1827 and 1828, App. p. 524, 525—Number of prisoners in the gaols in the Patna division on 31st December 1828, and causes of their confinement, App. p. 526, 527—Prisoners employed on private labour, agreeably to the orders of the Sudder Nizamut Adawlut in the Patna division, App. p. 528.

Patna Provincial Court. Statement of regular causes, original suits, and appeals, depending, admitted and disposed of therein since the court has consisted of four judges, viz. 1815—1829, App. p. 492.

PATRONAGE.

I. In England.

Advantage of Mr. Wynn's plan in giving appointments to public schools and universities, Mackenzie 175—177.

II. In India.

Selection to office and qualifications rest entirely with the Governor-general, Clarke 11—14, 36—41—Manner of limiting situations to be held by natives, if necessary to keep up the present system of patronage, Johnston 1136.

Pauper Suits. Regulation XLVI. 1793, Relative to admission of paupers to sue in the civil courts, App. p. 601—Regulation III. 1802, Relative to security for appearance of defendants in pauper suits, App. p. 606—Regulation XXVIII. 1814, Consolidating and amending the rules concerning pauper suits, App. p. 612.

Peace. See 'Recognizances.'

Penal Correction. Nature of penal correction (Tazeer) inflicted under the third class of judicial retribution, according to the Mahomedan law, App. p. 676.

Penalties. Improved state of the police has enabled the Bengal government to mitigate extent of penalties formerly annexed to serious crimes, and for more accurately defining them, App. p. 119. par. 252, 253—Evidence necessary to the infliction of the penalties under the first head of judicial retribution according to the Mahomedan law, App. p. 673—Specific penalties (Hudd) attached to certain offences according to the Mahomedan law, App. p. 673.

See also 'Fines.' 'Forfeitures.'

Pensions. Entitling native judges to retiring pensions might ensure honesty, Oldham 574—Confirmation of hereditary pensions should be by Government; local commissioners should decide on life pensions when amount within that which leaves the cognizance to the board, and the board should decide upon those of a larger amount; both should submit quarterly statements of decisions, App. p. 268.

Peons. Method of paying peons and ameens, Mackenzie 428, 429.

Pergunnahs. See 'Twenty-four Pergunnahs.'

PERJURY.

I. Generally.

Punishment for, Clarke 94, 95—Which does not act upon the natives as a stain in society, society, Clarke 96, 97—Manner in which the crime is expiated by the Mahomedan law, Bayley 915; App. p. 119, par. 257.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

Prevalence thereof, and best method of preventing it, App. p. 220—Agreement by the court with Sir John Malcolm and Mr. Newnham, in objecting to attempt to assimilate the provisions of Bombay Regulations to those of the English law, or to consult the advocate-general on the propriety of providing for its definition and punishment by express enactment; law providing for punishment of instigation to perjury, renders any separate enactment for the punishment of subornation of perjury unnecessary; but the subject will be more properly brought to a determination by the Bombay government, after reference to the judges of the Sudder Adawlut, App. p. 59, par. 35—7.

Regulations by which the punishment of perjury has been limited, and the powers to be respectively exercised by courts of circuit and Nizamut Adawlut more clearly defined, App. p. 117, par. 242—Statement of the number of persons convicted of perjury before the Nizamut Adawlut in Bengal, and of sentences passed by that court in each year, 1816—1827, App. p. 518, 519—Regulation III. 1801, Relative to committals for perjury before the civil courts, App. p. 606—Regulation XVII. 1797, Prescribing specific punishments by imprisonment, corporeal punishment, and public exposure for the crime of perjury, which by the Mahomedan law was declared punishable according to the discretion of the judge, App. p. 702—Regulation II. 1807, For the more effectual punishment of perjury; definition of perjury; method of punishment, App. p. 706.

Permanent Settlement. See 'Zemindary Settlement.'

Persian Language. Pleadings in civil cases conducted in, Melvill 629—Evidence taken therein, Melvill 647; Bayley 916—List of works in this language which, since the year 1817, have been encouraged or patronized by Government for education of natives, App. p. 125.

See also 'Qualification.'

Person. Comparative statement of sentences for offences against property and against the person, and other crimes, passed by the courts of circuit in Bengal, 1816—1826, Bayley, p. 134, App. p. 25—27—Comparative statement of sentences for offences against property and against the person, and other crimes passed by the magistrates in the Lower and Western Provinces of Bengal, 1826 and 1827, Bayley p. 135; App. p. 25—27.

Personal Property. Regulation XII. 1797, declaring decrees of provincial courts final to 5,000 rupees for personal property, App. p. 619.

Petitions of Suit. Persons aggrieved by acts of the revenue authorities should be authorized to sue in the courts for redress, if denied by the local commissioners, with power of special appeal to the Board of Revenue, or Government, App. p. 267.

Petitions, connected with Revenue management. No change should be made in the management of villages, excepting the necessary transfers on deaths and the like, or when parties agree, without a report to the Board; order of local commissioner should give immediate possession when within cognizance of revenue authorities, App. p. 268.

Petty Offences. By what description of magistrates they should be tried; eagerness with which the most trifling abuse, or most trivial blow could be construed into an assault, and be the cause of an appeal to judicial interference, App. p. 114, par. 217—219—Inconvenience not much felt by want of speedy redress for abusive language, calumny, and inconsiderable assaults, App. p. 114, par. 220—Manner in which they are disposed of by the sudder ameens, App. p. 114, par. 221.

Pilgrim Taxes. Regulations IV. and V. 1806; IV. 1809, and XI. 1810, For the protection of pilgrims resorting to Juggernath from undue exactions on the part of officers of the temple or of Government; provision for the manner of levying the tax; general superintendence of the collection and control of officers employed therein vested in the Board

Board of Revenue at Calcutta ; provision for preventing the evasion of a higher rate of tax by persons assuming a character inferior to that belonging to them ; also to exempt a particular class of mendicants from the payment of the tax ; above Regulations rescinded and the superintendence of the temple and its interior economy vested in the rajah of Khoordah, to be held during good conduct : extent of fines authorized to be imposed by him and of his powers ; account of offerings and presents to be rendered to the collector ; the collector of the tax to be subject to the collector of Cuttaak ; provision for the classification of pilgrims and amount of tax they were severally to pay ; powers of the collectors over pilgrims with regard to remaining in the town after expiration of their license, App. p. 829, 830—Regulation XVIII. 1810, Establishing rules previously enacted for collection of the duties on pilgrims resorting to the confluence of the rivers Ganges and Jumna, at Allahabad ; provision for continuance of the tax previously collected, and specifying rate at which it was to be levied, and the mode of admission to the banks of the river ; collection of duty placed under the direction of the collector of revenue at Allahabad, App. p. 831.

Plaintiffs. How far plaintiff can sue for less than his full demand, and recover the remainder afterwards, Mackenzie 448—455.

Plaintiffs and Defendants. Proposal that plaintiffs should be allowed the option of preferring their claims either in the court of the moonsiff of the district in which the defendant may reside, or the disputed property be situated, or in the court of sudder ameen ; defendants having a right to require suits instituted against them in the court of sudder ameen, under 1,000 rupees, to be transferred to the moonsiffs, and above 1,000 rupees to be transferred to the sudder ameens, Ross, App. p. 373, par. 43.—Litigants to be allowed to prosecute or defend their suits, either in person or by agent or attorney ; stipulation for remuneration by such agent, and manner of regulating such remuneration, App. p. 374, par. 48.

PLEADERS, NATIVE.

I. Generally.

Appointment of vakeels or native pleaders ; their qualifications, Clarke 53, 54, 57, 58, 61 ; Mackenzie 153—How they are remunerated, Mackenzie 122—They are paid by a per-centage on the value of the causes, Mackenzie 141—143—Situation of vakeel in the inferior courts not considered respectable, Mackenzie 140—Rank of vakeels of various degrees, Mackenzie 154, 155—Regulation of vakeels' fees, Mackenzie 431—447—Their duties, and how instructed, Mackenzie 468, 469 ; Oldham 615—621.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

Progress of institutions established for the better education of natives, and the operation of Regulation XI. of 1826, will gradually fill civil courts with pleaders better qualified than at present ; extract from report of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut relative to them ; facility given to the administration of justice by their constant attendance ; instances of misconduct among them not frequent ; evils of their discontinuance, App. p. 81, par. 105, 106—Fees of pleaders as they affect usual costs of suits are not oppressive, or such as discourage the prosecution of just claims ; it must be proportionate with the cause of action, and may be dispensed with in case of poverty ; observations as to deposits of pleaders' fees under certain regulations, App. p. 82, par. 106.

Regulations VII. 1793 and VIII. 1797, Upon the appointment and duties of vakeels or native pleaders in the civil courts, App. p. 626—Regulations XXVII. 1814 and IX. 1831, Consolidating and amending the rules regarding vakeels, App. p. 627—Regulation XI. 1826, Qualification for admission to practise as vakeel, App. p. 628—Advantage of men of all classes being admitted to plead in the several courts, from the circumstance that only individuals of superior ability and knowledge would practise as professional sional pleaders, and who would have the strongest inducement to exert themselves in the advocacy of the causes undertaken by them, Ross, App. p. 374, par 48.

See also 'Fees.'

PLEADINGS.

I. Generally.

Pleadings and motions in the native courts are in writing, Clarke 55; Oldham 615—Nature of the pleadings and judges' decrees, Clarke 62—66—Forms of native courts are simple, Mackenzie 229—There are no pleadings in criminal cases, Melville 627, 628—Disadvantages of the present method of preparing them, Mill 1046—Advantages of oral over written pleadings, Mill 1058, 1059, 1062, 1063.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

Forms of pleading, proceeding, and process, were defined by Regulation XXVI. of 1814, and are as simple and summary as is consistent with the ends of substantial justice; description of pleadings that have been dispensed with, App. p. 80, par. 99—102.

See also 'Judges, Native.' 'Language.' 'Persian Languages.'

POLICE.

I. Generally.

Situations in, not sufficiently remunerated, Oldham 537—Not beneficial to employ natives to a greater extent in the police, Oldham 537, 538—Improvements latterly in the management thereof, Bayley 915—Extent and description of police jurisdictions in Bengal, Bayley, p. 126.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

1. Relating to Bengal.

Letter from the Bengal Government to the Court of Directors, dated 22d February 1827, relative to the police and grants of land and allowances for their support, App. p. 92—Objections to their being vested with power to hold proceedings in petty criminal cases, and to inflict punishment by fine, imprisonment, and flogging, as sanctioned by Regulation IV. of 1821, of the Madras code, App. p. 127, par. 15—Advantages of the high state of efficiency of the police to what it was twenty years ago, and means by which it has been attained, Bayley, App. p. 357—Establishment of police proposed to be maintained under witness's arrangement for the administration of criminal justice, Ross, App. p. 378, par. 64.

Regulation XI. 1831, Relative to the police of the Ceded and Conquered Provinces, App. p. 651—Regulation XIII. 1805, Relative to the system of police for Cuttack, App. p. 652—Regulations for the establishment of and maintenance of an effective police, App. p. 713—Regulation XXII. 1793, Abolition of zemindary police and establishment of the darogah system, App. p. 714—Regulation XXIII. 1793, Establishment of police tax, App. p. 714—Regulation IV. 1797, Inquests by darogahs, App. p. 715—Regulation VI. 1797, Abolition of the police tax, App. p. 715—Regulation XVIII. 1805, Zemindary police brought into operation, App. p. 715—Regulations XI. 1806, VI. 1825, Assistance to be afforded to troops on march, App. p. 716—Regulation IX. 1807, Duties and powers of native officers of police, App. p. 716—Regulation XI. 1807, Appointment of ameens of police, App. p. 717—Regulation IX. 1808, Proclamation of rewards for apprehension of decoits, App. p. 717—Regulation X. 1809, Superintendents of police for three divisions established at Calcutta, App. p. 718—Regulation VI. 1810, Penalties for zemindars not co-operating in the suppression of gang robbery, App. p. 719.

Regulation

Regulation VIII. 1810, Superintendents of police for the Upper Provinces established, App. p. 719—Regulation XVI. 1810, Proclamation of rewards for apprehension of decoits, App. p. 719—Regulation I. 1811, Rules for the discovery and apprehension of receivers of stolen goods, App. p. 720—Regulation VII. 1811, Powers of police darogahs, App. p. 720—Regulation III. 1812, Native police, App. p. 720—Regulation XXI. 1812, Licenses to certain trades, App. p. 721—Regulations XIII. 1813, III. IX. and XVI. 1814, City and police assessment, App. p. 721—Regulation VIII. 1814, Inhabitants in general to assist in keeping the peace, App. p. 722—Regulation XIII. 1814, The office of cutwal abolished, App. p. 722—Regulation XVII. 1816, Appointment and duties of native police, App. p. 722—Regulation XXII. 1816, Appointment and duties of the native town police, App. p. 723—Regulation XX. 1817, Consolidated and amended general police regulation, App. p. 723—Regulation XII. 1818, Suspension of arrest, App. p. 725—Regulation VI. 1819, Police ferries, App. p. 726—Regulation III. 1821, Arrest of suspicious gangs, App. p. 726—Regulation V. 1822, Apprehension of proclaimed decoits, App. p. 726.

2. Relating to Madras.

Criminal charges before, and disposal of prisoners, App. p. 38—41—Statement showing the number of persons apprehended, released, and punished, together with the nature of all punishments inflicted by the several heads of district police, 1825—1827, App. p. 208, 209—Abstract of the proceedings of the criminal courts and police in the year 1817; also, the extent and population (in 1822) of the districts, App. p. 544—A similar statement for 1828, App. p. 546—Statement of the proceedings of the village police, district police, and magistracy of each zillah, 1st January to 30th June 1829, with reference to petty offences, App. p. 558—A similar statement, distinguishing the offences, but not the districts, App. p. 560—Observations upon the mode of their exercising their duties, App. p. 42; App. p. 127, 128, par 16—19.

Letter from J. M. Macleod, secretary to Government, Madras, to H. Shakespear, Esq., secretary to Government, Fort William, enclosing letter from register to the court of Sudder Adawlut, Madras, explaining causes of delay in preparing report upon the practical operation of the changes made in the system of administration of justice and police, App. p. 129—Abuse of power by district police officers in regard to punishments inflicted by them; gross falsification of dates made by them in order to conceal their violation of Regulations in respect to the time allowed for detaining an accused person in custody before forwarding him to the criminal judge, App. p. 145, par. 64—66—Extract of report from Sudder Adawlut showing how far the rules contained in Regulation II. of 1816, or in any subsequent Regulation for the establishment of a general system of police throughout the territories subject to the government of Fort St. George, have been found efficient and successful in accomplishing the objects intended by them, App. p. 148.

Extract from minutes of consultation, Madras, in answer to observations by Sudder Adawlut relative to the police, App. p. 212—Letter from Court of Directors to Madras Government, dated 11th April 1826, relative to the conduct and control of the police, App. p. 214—Answer of the Madras Government, dated 27th April 1827, App. p. 229—Animadversions by Court of Directors on cruelty of police officers, particularly in extorting confessions by torture, App. p. 221—224, par. 26—28—Answer by the Madras Government upon that subject, App. p. 231, par. 8—Minute by Sir Thomas Munro upon that subject, extracted from Madras judicial consultations of 30th January 1827, App. p. 233—243, par. 13—Minute by J. H. D. Ogilvie, Esq., upon the same subject, App. p. 243—Resolutions of Government on the same subject, App. p. 245—260.

3. Relating to Bombay.

Magisterial duties combined with the territorial, and there are good reasons for their continuing to be so, from the collector alone possessing information of the state of the districts districts under his authority, and the character and condition of their inhabitants; many improvements have been made, and are in progress in the police administration; restoration of the efficiency of the native police in the Southern Concan, and benefit likely to be derived in the Northern Concan from effecting the same object; difficulty of establishing a good police in districts inhabited by predatory tribes, which have been increased, by extending the laws in their minutest forms and processes to districts and communities, to whose condition, character, and habits, they are not adapted, and whom they often furnish with increased means of evading punishment; statement of the best means of establishing a good police through the provinces, subject to the Bengal presidency, Malcolm, App. p. 450.

POO—PRE.

See also 'Benares.' 'Judges, European.' 'Natives.' 'Superintendent of Police.'

Poonah Gaol. It is constructed on the most approved plan; care taken with regard to the health of the prisoners, and in giving work to those confined therein, Malcolm, App. p. 449.

Poonah Zillah. Nomination of a joint judge and session judge, to afford temporary assistance in reducing arrears, approved of by the Court of Directors, App. p. 59, par. 34—Punchayets less resorted to than formerly, from the improved system of administration, App. p. 72, par. 43—Salary of the judge and criminal judge, and of the register in the year 1828-29, App. p. 470.

Population. Of England and Wales; Ireland; Bengal Provinces; France; Austria, Evid. p. 139—Spain, Evid. p. 141—Benares, App. p. 23—Ceded and Conquered Provinces, App. p. 23—Masulipatam, App. p. 41—Bombay Old Provinces, App. p. 63—Deccan, App. p. 63—Certain provinces subject to the Bengal regulations, App. p. 120, par. 264—Certain former zillahs and united zillahs under the Madras Presidency, App. p. 215.

Possession. Disputes regarding the right of possession in land crops or watercourses, adds to the number of suits in courts, App. p. 65, par. 8—Contested claims to possession of lands, crops, wells, and watercourses, has been transferred to magistrates, leaving parties, if dissatisfied with their award, to institute a civil suit, App. p. 117, par. 237—Regulation XLIX. 1793, By which courts authorized to reinstate landholders, &c. by summary process, on proof of violent dispossession, App. p. 601—Regulation VI. 1813, Giving reference to arbitration of suits regarding title to and possession of land crops, &c., App. p. 610.

Necessity for the abolition of Regulation XV. of 1824, from its causing a system of oppression and chicanery; its inducements to infringe the peace by causing an affray or an indication thereof, and getting a case before a magistrate, where, though in the absence of possession for fifty years, a bribed report from a thannah, and a few tutored witnesses, will give man a tolerable chance of ousting the rightful owner, who is taken off his guard, and destitute of his defences by a summary proceeding in a criminal court, Leycester, App. p. 361—Regulation XV. 1824, Vesting primary cognizance of disputes regarding possession of land, crops, or water, in magistrates, App. p. 690.

See also 'Summary Suits.'

Potails. See 'Villages.'

Price of Blood. See 'Compensation.'

Predatory Tribes. Where the inhabitants of a rugged and mountainous part of the country are hereditary plunderers, as great a proportion of them as is required should be employed in preserving the peace, it being only by giving them a stake in the general welfare, that it can be hoped to make them converts to the cause of good order; advantage of such a plan over severity, which only succeeds for a time, causes distress, and excites a spirit of revenge, Malcolm, App. p. 451.

Pressing. Regulation III. 1820, Prohibiting the pressing of inhabitants of towns or villages to carry baggage from stage to stage, and requiring magistrates to investigate complaints, and to punish persons convicted of the offence, App. p. 688.

Primogeniture

Primogeniture. Law of primogeniture, if considered by Europeans a matter of importance, may be conceded, Mill 1061.

See also 'Inheritance.'

Prisons. See 'Gaols.'

Prisoners, Bengal. Statement of the number of prisoners in each of the zillah and city gaols on the 31st December 1828, and of the causes of their confinement; also a comparative statement of the number of prisoners within each division on the 31st December 1827 and the 31st of December 1828, App. p. 524—Statement of the number of prisoners in the Lower Provinces employed in private labour, agreeably to the orders of the Nizamut Adawlut; showing the amount gained by their labour, and the proportion paid to the prisoners, App. p. 528.

See also 'Crime.' 'Gaols.'

Private Tuition. Method thereof, and in what manner teachers remunerated, Mackenzie 129—132, 135.

Privileged Persons. System of exemptions from the ordinary course of justice enjoyed by privileged persons at Bombay Presidency to be re-considered; lists to be revised and names of those having no pretensions to privilege to be struck out; new names not to be added without reference home, and every opportunity taken of reducing lists, App. p. 61, par. 50.

See also 'Rent-free Grants and Claims.'

Professorships. Advantage of the establishment of, in the Universities, for qualifying young men for judicial situations, Johnston 1128.

Promotion. No rule of, for judicial offices, Clarke 11—14, 36—41—Extent to which character entitles further advancement, Clarke 36, 37—Appointments to judicial offices not always by degrees, Clarke 38—41—Present rule of promotion in the Revenue and Judicial departments with salaries attached, and disadvantages of the present system, Hamilton 825—830.

See also 'Zillah Judges.'

PROPERTY.

Papers laid before the Committee.

1. Relating to Bengal.

Comparative statement of sentences for offences against property and against the person, and other crimes passed by the courts of circuit in Bengal, 1816—1826, Bayley, p. 134, App. p. 26, 27—Comparative statement of sentences for offences against property, and against the person and other crimes, passed by the magistrates in the Lower and Western Provinces of Bengal in 1826 and 1827, Bayley, p. 135, App. p. 26, 27—Statement of appeals, regular and special, depending and disposed of before the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, in 1828, with the amount of the property in question, App. p. 351—Statement showing the total value or amount in sicca rupees of regular suits, whether original or in appeal, depending in the several civil courts on 1st January 1829, App. p. 488, 489.

2. Relating to Madras.

Value of property litigated in courts, App. p. 51—Statement of the number of original suits and of appeals, depending at the beginning and end of 1815, and disposed of during that year, in each of the zillah and subordinate courts under the presidency of Madras; also the amount of property in litigation, App. p. 530—Statement to the same effect for the year 1828, App. p. 532—Statement of the amount of property in litigation, in the suits depending in the several zillah courts, on 1st January 1828 and 1st January 1829, and in the suits disposed of during that year, App. p. 537.

3. Relating to Bombay.

Statement of the number of original suits depending at the beginning and end of 1829, and instituted and disposed of during that year, in each of the zillah courts; showing by which of the functionaries they were disposed of, and the amount of property in litigation in them; also the extent and population of the zillahs, App. p. 567.

Proprietors. See 'Land.' 'Zemindars.'

Prosecutors. Evils of the extent of their journeys, and necessity for avoiding their repetition, App. p. 221—Inconveniences of their journeys lessened by increased powers of magistrates, App. p. 117, par. 238.

Prostitution. See 'Misdemeanors.'

PROVINCIAL COURTS.

I. Generally.

Functions of the provincial court, Clarke 34; Mill 1042—Capital cases must be confirmed by the Sudder Foujdarry Adawlut, before being carried into execution, Clarke 34—Provincial courts might be done away with, Mackenzie 150—Proposed abolition thereof, Bayley 882, p. 111, App. p. 358.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

1. Relating to Bengal.

Number of suits instituted therein, 1814—1820, App. p. 1; 1821—1824, App. p. 9; 1825—1827, App. p. 28—Comparison of suits instituted 1814 and 1815—1817, App. p. 2—Suits decided 1814—1821, App. p. 3; 1821—1824, App. p. 9; 1825—1827, App. p. 28—Suits depending at the beginning of 1815—1821, App. p. 5; 1821—1824, App. p. 9; 1825—1827, App. p. 28—Comparison of suits instituted and decided, 1817—1820, and 1821—1824, App. p. 10—General summary of the number of civil suits depending at the beginning and end of 1813, and instituted, and decided or adjusted during that year, in the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut and the provincial and zillah courts, App. p. 478—Abstract of the total number of regular civil suits (including appeals), depending at the beginning and end of 1828, and disposed of during that year, in each of the provincial courts, App. p. 480—General abstract statement of regular suits, whether original or in appeal, depending on 1st January 1828 and 1829, in the provincial courts in the Western and Lower Provinces, App. p. 491—Statement of the number of regular suits (original and in appeal) depending, admitted, and disposed of, in the several provincial courts in each year, since they have consisted of four judges, viz. from 1815 to 1828 inclusive, App. p. 492—Statement of the total number of regular suits and appeals depending before the provincial courts in the Lower and Western Provinces on 1st January 1815, compared with 1st January 1829, App. p. 495—Statement, showing the period which would elapse before the decision of regular suits depending on 1st January 1829, if calculated according to the number disposed of during the year 1828, App. p. 495—The like statement if calculated according to the average number of decisions passed during the last five years, App. p. 496, 497—Statement of the number of summary suits depending at the beginning and end of 1828, and disposed of during that year in the several provincial and district courts, App. p. 498—Suggestions for making them as originally only courts of appeal, App. p. 14—Provincial courts proposed to be abolished so soon as they shall have completed the business now depending before them, App. p. 358.

Proposal for dissolving the provincial courts; consequent necessity to put a stop to the institution of new claims before them of whatever description; their appellate jurisdiction to be transferred to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, Bayley, App. p. 356—Total amount of salaries of the judges of the provincial courts, Bayley, App. p. 357—Disadvantages of the abolition of the provincial courts, from the fact that more work cannot be be done with fewer hands, or that it can be done so well at less expense; observations upon the proposed means of expediting justice and getting through more business, and showing the impossibility of the proposition answering, Leicester, App. p. 360.

No objection can be urged to the abolition of the provincial courts; the advantage of allowing an immediate appeal from the zillah courts to the tribunal of highest authority being obvious, Ross, App. p. 366—Doubts whether the abolition of the intermediate controlling authority of the provincial courts will not be attended with hazard to the efficiency of the whole scheme; necessity at present for check over the conduct of both Native and European tribunals, which necessity will increase under the new system; advantage of the provincial courts, and confidence with which they are looked up to by the natives; disadvantages of transferring their duties to a new and the present Sudder Adawlut; if they are abolished an intermediate authority between the native and zillah judge must be established, Turnbull, App. p. 393—Proposed number of provincial courts, number of judges, their original and appellate jurisdiction; each judge to exercise the full powers of the court, Turnbull, App. p. 399.

Evils of their total abolition; at all events they should not be abolished till it is seen whether the zillah courts can exercise a sufficient superintendence over the native courts with increased powers, Sealey, App. p. 401—Concurrence in the plan for their abolition, and the substitution of a Sudder Adawlut, Metcalfe, App. p. 439—They should be retained in the Lower Provinces under the system which separates the judicial from the other branches of the administration, until they can be dispensed with; in the Upper Provinces they should be abolished, and a sudder court established; duties of such a court, Metcalfe, App. p. 442—Salaries of the judges of, in the years 1813 and 1829, App. p. 454, 456—Jurisdiction of the provincial courts in suits exceeding 5,000 rupees value, unless plaintiff prefers the zillah court, which he may if the suit does not exceed 10,000 rupees; decisions final in appeals from the zillah courts, unless a special appeal allowed; they have no criminal jurisdiction, App. p. 462.

Regulation III. 1829, Abolishing the offices of Mahomedan and Hindoo law officers in the provincial courts, App. p. 616—Regulations V. 1793, V. 1794, Upon the establishment, constitution, and jurisdiction of the provincial courts, App. p. 617, 618—Regulation XLVII. 1793, Number of judges necessary to pass a decree, App. p. 619—Regulation XII. 1797, Declaring decrees of provincial courts on appeal final to 5,000 rupees for personal property, App. p. 619—Regulation V. 1798, Declaring decrees of provincial courts final to 5,000 rupees for real property, App. p. 619—Regulation I. 1807, Powers of a single judge of a provincial court extended, App. p. 619—Regulation XIII. 1808, Original jurisdiction given to provincial courts, App. p. 619—Regulation XIII. 1810, Powers of single judges increased, App. p. 620—Regulations V. 1814 and I. 1826, Increasing the number of judges of the provincial and circuit courts, App. p. 620—Regulation XXV. 1814, Amending the constitution and jurisdiction of the provincial courts, App. p. 620—Regulation III. 1829, For supplying the place of a third judge, when two judges of a provincial court differed in opinion, App. p. 621.

2. Relating to Madras.

Number of suits instituted before, 1827—1829, App. p. 48—Number of suits decided, 1827—1829, App. p. 48—Number of suits depending at the end of the period, 1827—1829, App. p. 48—Average delay therein, App. p. 49—Number of appeals from the decisions of, instituted 1827—1829, App. p. 49—Number of appeals decided 1827—1829, App. p. 49—Number of appeals depending 1827—1829, App. p. 49—Average delay therein, App. p. 50.

Abstract of causes and appeals decided in the provincial courts during the year 1815, compared with 1825, App. p. 184, 185—Statement of original suits and appeals depending at the beginning and end of 1815, and decided during that year in the Sudder Adawlut and provincial courts, App. p. 530—Statement to the same effect for the year 1828, App. p. 536—Table, showing the number of suits instituted and decided in the years 1810, 1815, and 1820 and 1825, and depending at the end of each of those years in the Sudder Adawlut, in the provincial courts, and in the courts of the zillah judges, registers, sudder ameens, and moonsiffs, and the average delay of judicature in each class of courts, App. p. 542, 543—Suits decided therein always involve property to a large amount, and parties can generally afford the expense of an appeal, App. p. 50—Salaries of the judges of the, in 1813 and 1828-9, App. p. 464, 465—They may try such original suits as are referred to them by the sudder court, but as in Bengal their jurisdiction is chiefly appellate; circuit duties are performed twice a year by the judges of these courts, App. p. 467.

3. Relating to Bombay.

Statement of the number of appeals on the file of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, and of the provincial court for Guzerat (since abolished), at the beginning and end of 1829, and disposed of by those courts within that year; also the pecuniary amount of the appeals decided, App. p. 569—Salary of the chief and second judge of the court of appeal and circuit in Guzerat, in the year 1828-29 (since abolished), App. p. 469.

See also 'Appeals.' 'Burdwan.' 'Europeans.' 'Law-Suits.' 'Zillah Courts.'

PUNCHAYETS.

Papers laid before the Committee.

1. Relating to Bengal.

Punchayets under Hindoo law and practice of former ages had no jurisdiction but in causes voluntarily submitted to them; manner in which their awards were open to appeal, advantages of voluntary arbitration, and causes of the reluctance of natives in resorting to this means of settling their differences, App. p. 70, pars. 32—35—Evils of the punchayet system; opinions against its introduction; statements by different functionaries of the abuses attendant upon its practice; viewed as a fixed tribunal for the administration of civil and criminal justice, it is the institution of rude and barbarous times rather than of countries with a dense population, and in which trade and commerce are rapidly extending; evils of its introduction in tracts of the dominions where it had not previously existed, or had been forgotten, App. p. 70—76, pars. 36—72—Failure by them in the performance of their duty in making assessments for, and in exempting their friends from serving the office of village police, App. p. 93, par. 165—167.

2. Relating to Madras.

Number of suits decided by, 1827—1829, App. p. 48—Number of suits depending before, 1817—1827, App. p. 48—Average delay, App. p. 49—Number of causes depending and disposed of before the village and district punchayets, 1817—1827, App. p. 170, 171—Statement, showing the number of suits depending on 1st January 1827, before the district punchayets and village punchayets; as also, the years in which those suits were instituted, 1818—1827, App. p. 172—Statement showing the number of causes brought before the collectors in the several divisions under section iv. Regulation XII. of 1816, and section xviii. Regulation V. of 1822, and referred by them to punchayets, 1816—1828, App. p. 210, 211.

The village and district punchayets are represented as being held in little estimation; the prevalence of punchayets in former times was more matter of necessity from want of other tribunals than the effect of a prepossession in favour of an ancient institution, App. p. 126, par. 9—Extract from report of Sudder Adawlut containing information respecting the village punchayets provided for by Regulation V. 1816, and district punchayets provided for by Regulation VII. 1816, and any subsequent regulations, App. p. 140—Extract from minutes of consultation of Madras Presidency, in answer to observations by Sudder Adawlut respecting punchayets, App. p. 212.

3. Relating

3. Relating to Bombay.

Extract from Bombay Regulation IV. of 1827, As to the most advisable method of employing punchayets, App. p. 126 in note.

See also 'Juries, Native.'

Pundits. Certificate of qualification for pundits, Clarke 59—From what families they are derived, Clarke 68—Their knowledge and qualifications, Mackenzie 126—Duties and stations of Hindoo pundits, Oldham 543—546.

See also 'Law Officers.'

PUNISHMENTS.

I. Generally.

Nature thereof, Melville 665—669—Have of late years been much mitigated, Bayley 915—Powers of magistrates, assistants, and Hindoo and Mahomedan law-officers, with regard to, Bayley 126—Powers of the court of circuit with regard to, and appeal to, and revision by the Nizamut Adawlut, Bayley, p. 127.

II. *Papers laid before the Committee.*1. Relating to Bengal.

Principles of punishment according to the Mahomedan law, App. p. 667—Regulation XII. 1818, Conferring on magistrates the power of punishing in cases not greatly aggravated, of housebreaking and of receiving stolen goods; objects in view in granting this power; cases in which magistrates were not empowered to punish; extent of the power of punishment granted, App. p. 687—Regulation VII. 1819, Empowering magistrates to punish cases of seduction of females from their houses and families; of the abandonment by men of their wives and families; of the failure of workmen or servants to complete their engagements; extent of the powers of punishment, App. p. 687—Regulation VI. 1824, Extension of the powers of magistrates to punish in cases of repetition of crimes, App. p. 689—Regulation XVII. 1817, Amendments of the Mahomedan law in regard to punishments and evidence, App. p. 709—Regulation XII. 1825, Modification of the powers of courts in regard to punishment, App. p. 712.

2. Relating to Madras.

Statement showing the nature of all punishments inflicted by the several heads of district police, magistrates, criminal judges, and courts of circuit, and by the Foudarry Adawlut, 1825—1827, App. p. 208, 209—Statement of the operations of the courts of circuit in the same period; showing the number of acquittals, punishments of different kinds, and references to the Foudarry Adawlut in each of the four divisions, App. p. 550—A similar statement, exhibiting the acquittals, punishments, &c. for each crime or misdemeanor, App. p. 552—Statement of the operations of the criminal courts during the same period, exhibiting the acquittals, punishments, &c. for each crime and misdemeanor, App. p. 556.

3. Relating to Bombay.

Number of persons punished by the several authorities in the Old Provinces and the Deccan, 1825—1828, App. p. 62.

See also 'Discretionary Punishment.' 'Example.'

Purneah. Salaries of the judges of the zillah and city courts at, in the years 1813 and 1829, App. p. 456, 459—Civil suits depending at the beginning and end of 1813, and instituted, decided, and adjusted during that year in the zillah court at Purneah, App. p. 474, 475—Abstract of the total number of regular civil suits and appeals depending and decided or adjusted in the zillah court at Purneah in the year 1828, App. p. 481—Regular civil suits depending at the beginning and end of 1828, and admitted or re-admitted and and disposed of during that year by the judges and other officers of the zillah court at Purneah, App. p. 484, 485—Statement showing the total value or amount in sicca rupees, of regular suits, whether original or in appeal, depending in the civil courts at Purneah on 1st January 1829, App. p. 488, 489—Abstract statement of summary suits disposed of during the year 1828, and depending on the 1st January 1828 and 1829, in the civil courts at Purneah, App. p. 500, 501.

Statement of crimes ascertained to have been committed in Purneah in 1813; number of persons supposed to have been concerned; number apprehended and committed for trial; and computed amount of property stolen and recovered, App. p. 506, 507—The like in the year 1828, App. p. 508, 509—Statement of the number of persons committed for trial and convicted before the courts of circuit, and number apprehended and punished by the magistrates and their assistants for minor offences in Purneah in the year 1828, App. p. 512, 513—Number of prisoners in gaol at Purneah on 31st December 1828, and causes of their confinement, App. p. 526, 527—Prisoners employed on private labour in Purneah, agreeably to the orders of the Sudder Nizamut Adawlut, App. p. 528.

Putwarry, Office of. Regulation XII. 1817, Enacting that every village should have a separate putwarry, and that zemindars should report names of putwarries within their estates, and that collectors should keep registers of putwarries; nomination to the office to be in the zemindar, subject to objection on the part of the collector, on which superior Boards to determine; zemindars failing to appoint, to be subject to a daily fine; and to remove putwarries without sanction of collector; duties of putwarries; method of paying them; powers of collectors over them, App. p. 828—Regulation I. 1819, Extending the foregoing rules to the Lower Provinces of Bengal, also extending the rules regarding the office of canoongoe to those districts, App. p. 829.

See also 'Canoongoe Institution.'

Q.

Qualification. Best method of, for judicial offices, Clarke 81, 106—109—Necessity for greater care in the qualification of Europeans for country judges, Mackenzie 174—Method of obtaining the necessary qualification in Persian and in judicial knowledge, Hamilton, 857—863, 869—871—Manner in which an open system might best secure the maximum of qualification, Empson 1110—Qualifications necessary for judicial situations, and how the test to be applied, Johnston 1126—1129—Regulation XI. 1826, Respecting the qualification of law-officers, App. p. 657.

See also 'Education.' 'Schools (Public).'

R.

Rajahmundry. Salaries of the judges of the zillah courts at, in the year 1813, App. p. 465—Number of original suits and appeals depending at the beginning and end of the year 1815, and disposed of during that year in the zillah court at Rajahmundry, and amount of property in litigation in such suits, App. p. 530, 531—The like in the year 1828, App. p. 532, 533—Statement of the number of appeals from the decrees of assistant judges, registrars, and native officers, depending at the beginning and end of 1828, and preferred and disposed of during that year in the zillah court at Rajahmundry, App. p. 538, 539.

Abstract of the proceedings of the criminal courts and police at Rajahmundry in the year 1817, App. p. 544, 545—The like in the year 1828, App. p. 546, 547—Statement of the operations of the criminal court at Rajahmundry, from 1st January to 30th June 1830 (not distinguishing the different offences), App. p. 554, 555—General statement of petty offences before the village police, district police, and magistracy at Rajahmundry, from 1st January to 30th June, 1829, App. p. 558, 559—General statement of crimes and misdemeanors before the district police and magistracy at Rajahmundry, from 1st January to 30th June 1829, App. p. 562, 563.

Rajeshahye. Salaries of the judges of the zillah and city courts at, in the years 1813 and 1829, App. p. 456, 459—Civil suits depending at the beginning and end of 1813, and instituted, decided, and adjusted during that year in the zillah court at Rajeshahye, App. p. 474, 475—Abstract of the total number of regular civil suits and appeals depending and decided or adjusted in the zillah court at Rajeshahye in the year 1828, App. p. 481—Regular civil suits depending at the beginning and end of 1828, and admitted or re-admitted and disposed of during that year by the judges and other officers of the zillah court at Rajeshahye, App. p. 484, 485—Statement showing the total number or amount in sicca rupees of regular suits, whether original or in appeal, depending in the civil courts at Rajeshahye on 1st January 1829, App. p. 488—Abstract statement of summary suits disposed of during the year 1828, and depending on the 1st January 1828 and 1829, in the civil courts at Rajeshahye, App. p. 500, 501.

Statement of crimes ascertained to have been committed in Rajeshahye, in 1813; number of persons supposed to have been concerned; number apprehended and committed for trial; and computed amount of property stolen and recovered, App. p. 506—The like in the year 1828, App. p. 508, 509—Statement of the number of persons committed for trial and convicted before the courts of circuit, and number apprehended and punished by the magistrates and their assistants for minor offences in Rajeshahye in the year 1828, App. p. 512, 513—Number of prisoners in gaol at Rajeshahye on 31st December 1828, and causes of their confinement, App. p. 526.

Rajmahal. Regulations I. 1796 and I. 1827, Administration of criminal justice in Rajmahal and Boglepore, App. p. 645, 646.

Ramavisdars. See 'Collectors.'

Ramghur, Bengal. Salaries of the judges of the zillah and city courts at, in the years 1813 and 1829, App. p. 456, 459—Civil suits depending at the beginning and end of 1813, and instituted, decided, and adjusted during that year in the zillah court at Ramghur, App. p. 474, 475—Abstract of the total number of regular civil suits and appeals depending and decided or adjusted in the zillah court at Ramghur, in the year 1828, App. p. 481—Regular civil suits depending at the beginning and end of 1808, and admitted or re-admitted and disposed of during that year by the judges and other officers of the zillah court at Ramghur, App. p. 484, 485—Statement showing the total value, or amount in sicca rupees of regular suits, whether original or in appeal, depending in the civil courts at Ramghur, on 1st January 1829, App. p. 489—Abstract statement of summary suits disposed of during the year 1828, and depending on the 1st January 1828 and 1829 in the civil courts at Ramghur, App. p. 500, 501.

Statement of crimes ascertained to have been committed in Ramghur in 1813; number of persons supposed to have been concerned; number apprehended and committed for trial, and computed amount of property stolen and recovered, App. p. 506—The like in the year 1828, App. p. 508, 509—Statement of the number of persons committed for trial and convicted before the courts of circuit, and number apprehended and punished by the magistrates and their assistants for minor offences in Ramghur in the year 1828, App. p. 512, 513—Number of prisoners in gaol at Ramghur on 31st December 1828, and cause of their confinement, App. p. 526.

Rape. Is brought within the cognizance of highest criminal courts; regulations made respecting the crime are sufficient for the purpose, App. p. 115, par. 225, 226.

Rattray, R. H. Minute by R. H. Rattray, Esq., one of the judges of the Sudder Adawlut, on Mr. Bayley's minute suggesting improvements in the judicial and revenue administration; tion; evils of changes in the administration transferring judicial powers to the collectors; disadvantages of establishing a Sudder Adawlut in the Upper Provinces; the present Sudder Adawlut considered as the supreme court, and looked up to with confidence, which confidence would not be placed in a second Sudder Adawlut, as it would be viewed as a subordinate court, and the business would not be so well conducted; evils of any difference of opinion between the two courts; evils of making the sudder court subordinate to the Government; advantage of any alterations in the judicial system being grounded on previous system of judicial administration, and not being innovation, good in theory but deficient in practice, App. p. 402—408.

Razeenamah. Evils of fictitious suits being instituted and settled by, for the purpose of obtaining Government fees, App. p. 51.

Real Property. Law of real property not to be extended to India, Mackenzie 183, 184—Regulation V. 1798, Declaring decrees of provincial courts final to 5,000 rupees for real property, App. p. 619.

Recognizances. Regulation IV. 1825, Defining the powers to be exercised by the criminal courts in taking recognizances for keeping the peace, with or without security of persons bound on the prisoners' behalf; magistrates authorized to take recognizance for one year; courts of circuit and Nizamut Adawlut for three years; further regulating the taking recognizances, App. p. 691.

Record Committees. Advantages to be derived from their establishment, in furnishing a satisfactory system of registration and record, and in relieving courts of justice from a mass of oral testimony, which has seriously retarded their proceedings, App. p. 86, par. 121, 122.

Records. Evils of the delay in transmitting them from the courts of circuit to the superior courts, App. p. 45—Regulation XVIII. 1793, Appointing keepers of records, and directing reports to be made from respective courts of justice of business performed therein, App. p. 600—Regulation VII. 1829, Amending the law with regard to reports and calendars, App. p. 617.

See also 'Land.' 'Rights and Tenures.'

REGISTERS:

I. Generally.

Length of service in the Revenue department, previous to obtaining the office of registrar, Clarke 17—19—Jurisdiction of, Mackenzie 121—Registrars are too young and inexperienced to be fit to exercise judicial functions, Hill 405—Present power and proposed discontinuance of office, Bayley 882, p. 111.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

1. Relating to Bengal.

Number of suits instituted therein, 1814—1820, App. p. 1; 1821—1824, App. p. 9; 1825—1827, App. p. 28—Comparison of suits instituted, 1814 and 1815—1817, App. p. 2—Suits decided, 1814—1821, App. p. 3; 1821—1824, App. p. 9; 1825—1827, App. p. 28—Suits depending at the beginning of 1815—1821, App. p. 4; 1821—1824, App. p. 9; 1825—1827, App. p. 28—Comparison of suits instituted and decided, 1817—1820, and 1821—1824, App. p. 10—Civil suits depending at the beginning and end of the year 1813, and instituted, decided, and adjusted during that year by the registrars, in the Lower Provinces of Bengal, App. p. 474, 475—The like in the Western Provinces, App. p. 476, 477—Regular civil suits depending at the beginning and end of 1828, and admitted or re-admitted and disposed of during that year before the registrars in the Lower Provinces of Bengal, App. p. 484, 485—The like in the Western Provinces, App. p. 486, 487—General abstract statement of regular suits, whether original or in appeal, depending on 1st January 1828 and 1829 respectively, in the the registers' courts in the Western and Lower Provinces, App. p. 491—Statement of the total number of regular suits and appeals depending before the registers' courts in the Lower and Western Provinces, on 1st January 1815, compared with 1st January 1829, App. p. 495—Statement showing the period which would elapse before the decision of regular suits depending on 1st January 1829, if calculated according to the number disposed of in the registers' courts during the year 1828, App. p. 495—The like statement, calculated according to the average number of decisions passed during the last five years, App. p. 496, 497—Advantages of stationing a registrar or sub-collector vested with the powers of joint magistrate, and with local jurisdiction over certain districts remote from the sudder station, App. p. 120, par. 265, 266.

Proposed discontinuance of the office of register, and special sudder ameens established for determining suits from 1,000 rupees to 5,000, and appeals from the ordinary sudder ameens, App. p. 358—Proposed employment of the register of civil courts, in such duties as the zillah judge may think necessary, in reference to their qualifications, and after a certain period of service, and on special report by the zillah judge to Government, to be entrusted with higher powers according to their capacity; gradual increase of salary in such case, Turnbull, App. p. 398—Manner in which registers of acknowledged judgment and experience might lend their aid in assisting the judges of the native courts, particularly if their powers were extended to those proposed to be given to the first class of sudder ameens, Sealey, App. p. 402.

Evils of the abolition of the office of register, which for the purposes of superintendence as well as for the relief of the zillah or city judge, it is indispensably necessary to maintain, Blunt, App. p. 418—Proposed appointment of a register to the civil court, being also assistant to the magistrate in the Western and Lower Provinces, Blunt, App. p. 436—Not necessary to retain the office of register for the purpose of superintending the native judges; the control over them, and the trial of appeals from their decisions, would be preferably exercised by the European judge on account of his greater experience; the register must often be a young man more fit to be taught by native judges than to control them; in what the office of register would be useful, Melcalfe, App. p. 440, 443.

Jurisdiction of, when special, empowered as registers and joint magistrates, is to exercise most of the powers of the magistracy in some specified portion of a district; authorized to decide causes exceeding 500 rupees in value; judges may refer for the decision of registers suits not exceeding 500 rupees in value, App. p. 463.

Regulation VIII. 1794, Granting powers to registrars to pass decrees, App. p. 602—Regulation III. 1800, Containing extension of the powers of registrars, App. p. 605—Regulation XLIX. 1803, Containing further extension of the registrar's jurisdiction, App. p. 606.

2. Relating to Madras.

Number of suits decided by, 1827—1829, App. p. 48—Number depending, 1827—1829, App. p. 48—Average delay, App. p. 49—Number of appeals from, instituted 1827—1829, App. p. 49—Number decided, 1827—1829, App. p. 49—Number depending, 1827—1829, App. p. 49—Average delay, App. p. 50—General statement, showing the number of original suits for an amount or value under 500 rupees and above ten rupees, and for an amount or value of ten rupees and under, decided by the zillah judges, registers, and sudder ameens, in 1825, App. p. 186, 187—Table showing the number of suits instituted and decided in the years 1810, 1815, and 1820 and 1825, and depending at the end of each of those years, in the Sudder Adawlut, in the provincial courts, and in the courts of the zillah judges, registers, sudder ameens, and moonsiffs, and the average delay of judicature in each class of courts, App. p. 540, 541.

See also 'Appeals.' 'Burdwan.' 'Land.' 'Law-Suits, Madras.' 'Rent.'

Registrar of Court of Appeal in India. Advantage of such an officer; of what his duties should consist, Johnston 1145.

Registry Offices. Necessity for transfers of land being registered, in a similar manner to those in Middlesex and Yorkshire, Bayley 892—Regulations XXXVI. 1793 and IV. 1824, Appointing offices for registering deeds of sale, gift, and mortgage, leases, assignments, wills, &c., App. p. 600—Manner in which intermediate authority, proposed to be appointed between native and zillah courts might be intrusted with the registry of deeds and other miscellaneous duties now performed by the zillah registers, Turnbull, App. p. 394.

REGULATIONS.

I. Generally.

Rights of ryots not settled by, Fortescue 503—505, 509—511—Regulations of Lord Cornwallis in 1793, as to rights of zemindars and ryots, and how far acted up to, Fortescue 518—533.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

1. Relative to the Administration of Civil Justice.

Prefatory note to App. No. VI. on the subject of Regulations, App. p. 590—Abstract of the Regulations of the Bengal Government for the administration of civil justice, arranged under appropriate heads, App. p. 591—Table, showing where each of the Regulations in the Appendix is to be found, App. p. 833—Authority and form of Regulations upon legislation, App. p. 592—Part the First, (A.) Regulations upon the constitution of the zillah and city courts, and general rules of practice in the zillah and other civil courts, App. p. 594—(B.) Powers and duties of the provincial courts of appeal, App. p. 617—(C.) Powers and duties of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, App. p. 621—(D.) Appeals to the King in Council, App. p. 624—(E.) Vakeels, App. p. 626—(F.) Native Commissioners, App. p. 629—(G.) Fees on the institution of suits and appeals and stamp duties, as affecting the administration of justice, App. p. 635—Part the Second; Special Regulations having operations in particular provinces and districts; (A.) Benares; Rajmahal; Jungle Mehals, Twenty-four Pergunnahs, App. p. 642—(B.) Ceded and Conquered Provinces, Bundelcund and Kumaon, App. p. 647—(C.) Cuttack, App. p. 652—Part the Third; (A.) Rules relative to European public officers of Government, App. p. 655—(B.) Rules relative to Europeans not in the public service, App. p. 659—(C.) Appointment and removal of native public servants in all departments, App. p. 663.

2. Relative to the Administration of Criminal Justice.

Abstract of the Regulations of the Bengal Government for the administration of criminal justice, arranged under appropriate heads, App. p. 665—Sketch of the general principles of the Mahomedan criminal law, App. p. 666—Part the First; (A.) Appointment, powers, and duties of magistrates in the apprehension and committal of offenders, and in punishing certain offences, App. p. 678—(B.) Constitution and jurisdiction of the courts of circuit and commissioners of circuit, App. p. 692—(C.) Constitution and jurisdiction of the Sudder Nizamut Adawlut, App. p. 698—(D.) General rules for the administration of criminal justice, and modifications of the Mahomedan law, App. p. 699—Part the Second; Regulations for the establishment of, and maintenance of an effective police, App. p. 713—Part the Third; Regulations for checking superstitious practices, &c., App. p. 727.

3. Relative to the Administration of Affairs in the Revenue Department.

Abstract of the Regulations of the Bengal Government for the administration of affairs in the Revenue department, arranged under appropriate heads, App. p. 732—Part the First; (A.) Rules relative to the assessment of the revenue; rights of zemindars and tenants; powers and duties of the revenue officers of Government, deliberative and executive, App. p. 733—(B.) Rules for the recovery of arrears of revenue due to the Government.

Government, and sales of land in discharge of such arrears, or in satisfaction of decrees of courts of justice, App. p. 754—(C.) Rules for the recovery of arrears of rent due to those who pay the revenue to Government, and regarding summary suits on that account, App. p. 767—(D.) Rules regarding the registry and division of estates, and of their subdivisions, App. p. 774—(E.) Rules relative to the right of holding lands free from, or at a low rate of assessment, and to other alienations of the revenue of Government; and regarding money pensions, App. p. 780—(F.) Powers and duties of the boards of revenue, as courts of wards, App. p. 794—Part the Second; (A.) Special Revenue Regulations for Benares and certain districts in the Lower Provinces, App. p. 799—(B.) Special Revenue Regulations for the Ceded and Conquered Provinces, Bundelcund and Kumaon, App. p. 807—(C.) Special Revenue Regulations for Cuttack, App. p. 822—Part the Third; Miscellaneous Rules in the Revenue department, App. p. 825.

4. Bombay Regulations.

Incorrectness in the translation of Government Regulations; necessity for their early revision and correction, Malcolm, App. p. 447—Advantage of the Bombay code of Regulations of 1827, Malcolm, App. p. 447.

Religion. Laws that are followed in cases of parties being of different faiths, Mackenzie 230.

Remembrancer of Legal Affairs. See 'Superintendent.'

Remissions of Revenue. Suggestion by territorial secretary in his report to the Governor-general, that remissions of revenue should not be made without the sanction of Government, App. p. 267.

Removal. See 'Deportation.'

Renny, Mr. See 'Rope.'

RENT.

I. Generally.

Proportion of produce ryots were liable to pay under the Mogul government, Fortescue 481, 494—Payment in proportion to the produce lost sight of in Bengal, Fortescue 495—How far zemindars raise the rent of ryots, and as to their right to do so, Fortescue 484, 493, 502, 507, 510.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

1. Generally.

Advantage of Regulation XIX. of 1817, in preventing unnecessary hardships to individuals under summary prosecution for alleged arrears of rent, App. p. 91, par. 154—Number of summary suits for land rent disposed of by the judges, registers, and collectors, 1821—1824, App. p. 15—Suggestions with respect to the jurisdiction of the different courts with regard to, App. p. 15, 16—Observations upon the enactment for the adjustment, by revenue officers, of disputes relating to arrears and exactions of rent, between landholders or farmers and their under-tenants, App. p. 88—Necessity for imposing checks against abuse of power which landholders are allowed to exercise for enforcing payment of the rents due to them by their ryots, Turnbull, App. p. 396.

2. Regulations relative to Rent.

Regulation XXXIII. 1795, Containing rules relative to rent of lands, App. p. 660—Regulations XVII. 1793 and XXXV. 1795, Recovery of arrears of rent due to proprietors by dependent talookdars, under-farmers, and ryots, App. p. 767, 768—Regulation VIII. 1794, For expediting the proceedings on account of arrear of rent, App. p. 768—Regulations XXXV. 1795, XL. 1793, and VIII. 1796, Improvement of the rules for distraint, App. p. 768—Regulations VII. 1799, III. 1812, II. 1805, Further improvement of the rules for distraint, App. p. 770—Regulations V. 1812, II. 1821, Modification of the rules for recovery of arrears of rent, App. 771—Regulation XXIV. 1814, Summary suits declared cognizable by registrars of their own authority, in certain cases, App. p. 772—Regulation XIX. 1817, Summary suits rendered referable to collectors for report, App. p. 772—Regulations VIII. 1819 and I. 1820, Liability of the tenure termed putnee to be sold for arrear due to the zemindar, App. p. 772—Regulation XIV. 1824, Summary suits rendered referable to collectors for adjudication, App. p. 773.

See also 'Revenue Department.' 'Summary Suits.'

Rent-free Grants and Claims. Decision of the local commissioners should be sufficient in cases when they are for resumption, allowing appeals to the courts or special commission, App. p. 388.

Reports. Reports of conduct, or as to the merit of individuals, or their comparative estimation among the people, should not be made to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut or the Government; it is a sufficient security when no blame is imputable, and the necessity of such periodical reports would impose an invidious task, liable to abuse and prejudice, and, as being secret, most objectionable, Leycester, App. p. 361.

See 'Records.' 'Sudder Dewanny.'

Retaliation. Crimes for which retaliation (kisās) is allowed by the Mahomedan law, App. p. 669—Circumstances requisite to the enforcement of retaliation, and those which exclude or bar it, App. p. 671—Retaliation of death, App. p. 671—Retaliation for bodily injury, App. p. 672—Regulations IV. 1797, VIII. 1799, Modification of the Mahomedan law of retaliation, App. p. 703—Regulation 1801, Modification of the Mahomedan law of retaliation of death and bodily injury, App. p. 703.

Retribution, Judicial. Principles of the Mahomedan law allowing judicial retribution: first class of judicial retribution; retaliation (kisās); compensation, or the price of blood (deyul), App. p. 669—Second class of judicial retribution; specific penalties (hudd), App. p. 673—Third class of judicial retribution; penal correction (tagar); punishment for example (scasut), App. p. 676.

Revenue. Matters relating to the revenue should not be legislated for in India without communication with this country, Melville 625, 695—697.

See also 'Circuit.' 'Debts.' 'Police.' 'Remissions of Revenue.' 'Revenue Boards.' 'Revenue Department.' 'Settlements.' 'Suspension of Revenue.'

Revenue Boards. The present boards neither adequately superintend the executive officers of the districts under their authority, nor afford to Government that aid in the administration of revenue affairs which its other avocations render it indispensably necessary to require, App. p. 332—Statement, showing the increase and decrease of expense in allowances to covenanted civil servants, that will result from the proposed appointment of a general revenue board, and of commissioners of revenue and circuit, with eventual alteration in the office of judge of appeal, App. p. 350—Feeling of the necessity of a court of last resort at the presidency, and want of confidence in courts in the interior, occasioned the suppression of the revenue boards therein, Leycester, App. p. 360.

Proposed abolition of the sudder board of revenue; the business of preparing periodical reports of the general state of revenue for the information of Government, and of submitting to the Government the reports made by commissioners employed in making settlements, being provided for by adding two deputies to the establishment of revenue secretary, with certain salaries, Ross, App. p. 372, par. 38—Opinion of the Governor-general that a board of revenue is indispensable for regulating the settlement in the Upper Provinces; that two members will be sufficient, and that the board should, under any circumstances, be stationed at Allahabad, App. p. 416—The like opinion upon the expediency of maintaining the revenue board at Madras, but reducing the number to two members would promote economy without impairing efficiency, App. p. 417.

Proposed constitution of a sudder board of revenue in the Western and Lower Provinces, and having a co-extensive jurisdiction with that of the Sudder Adawlut, exercising a general general control over every branch of revenue affairs, Blunt, App. p. 436; Metcalfe, App. p. 443—If local superintendence beyond that of revenue commissioners is necessary, it will be more efficiently exercised by individuals than by a board; for directing and controlling settlements of land revenue, special commissioners might be appointed; permanent continuance of a revenue board in the Western Provinces not desirable; if any board necessary, one is enough; a board not so efficient as an individual, Metcalfe, App. p. 441, 442.

Revenue and Circuit, Commissioners of. See 'Circuit.'

REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

I. Generally.

Sir Thomas Munro placed servants in the Revenue department first, as the best qualified to obtain knowledge, Clarke 15—Revenue the most lucrative line of promotion, Clarke 42—Disadvantages of blending the Revenue and Judicial departments, Melville 625; Hamilton 751, 802—808, 825—830, 864—868, 872—874, 877; Bayley 883—885.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

1. Generally.

Observations upon regulations made for investing revenue officers with the power of determining on rights regarding land, including adjustment of disputes regarding rents, App. p. 86, par. 122—Observations upon regulations made, under which questions relative to the resumption of lands held free of assessment, under an illegal or invalid title, are made cognizable by the revenue officers, App. p. 89, par. 136, 137—Observations upon such rules of a local nature as have for their object the adjustment of special matters connected with the revenue administration, without adding to the business of the ordinary courts, App. p. 90, par. 138—Observations upon rules relative to other branches of the revenue, unconnected with land, which have for their object to relieve the civil courts from the adjustment of cases of that nature, App. p. 90.

Letter in the Revenue department from the Bengal Government to the Court of Directors, dated 10th December 1828, with its enclosures, App. p. 260—Minute by the Governor-general upon the defective superintendence of the executive revenue officers, and directing Secretary to Government, in the Territorial department, to report on the subject, App. p. 263—Report of the secretary upon that subject, App. p. 263—Proposed distribution of the country into divisions, to be placed under separate revenue commissioners, each to have a covenanted assistant, App. p. 270—Expense of the above plan, and present charges, showing amount of ultimate saving, App. p. 272, 273—Proposed distribution of the Western Provinces into divisions, each to be placed under two commissioners, exercising the powers of judges of the provincial court of appeal and circuit along with those of revenue commissioners, and each commissioner to be specially responsible for the affairs of a distinct portion of the division, App. p. 275.

Resolution of Government for establishing, in the Revenue department, a better system of direction and control, App. p. 332—Observations upon the new system for the superintendence of revenue and criminal justice, and upon its being undesirable that any extensive change in the course of civil justice should take place until the new scheme shall have been fairly introduced, and carried into practical operation, Leycester, App. p. 362—Necessity that the judicial and revenue authorities should be separated, the latter being subjected to the control of the former, Ross, App. p. 368—Proposed suggestions for the better administration of the Revenue department, Ross, App. p. 368—Schedule showing the amount of the present and proposed establishments for the revenue and judicial administration of the provinces subject to the operation of the Bengal Code of Regulations, App. p. 381—Concurrence by the Governor-general in Mr. Mackenzie's minute against the impolicy of arbitrary separation of the Judicial and Revenue nue departments, App. p. 409.—Opinion in favour of the union of the revenue and judicial branches of the public service, Metcalf, App. p. 437.

2. Regulations relative to the Revenue Department.

ABSTRACT of the Regulations of the Bengal Government for the administration of affairs in the Revenue Department, arranged under appropriate heads, App. p. 732.

Part the First: Land Revenue.—General.

(A.) Rules relative to the assessment of the revenue; rights of zemindars and tenants; powers and duties of the revenue officers of Government, deliberative and executive, App. p. 733.

(B.) Rules for the recovery of arrears of revenue due to the Government and sales of land in discharge of such arrears, or in satisfaction of decrees of courts of justice, App. p. 754.

(C.) Rules for the recovery of arrears of rent due to those who pay the revenue to Government, and regarding summary suits on that account, App. p. 767.

(D.) Rules regarding the registry and division of estates, and of their subdivisions, App. p. 774.

(E.) Rules relative to the right of holding lands free from, or at a low rate of assessment, and to other alienations of the revenue of Government, and regarding money pensions, App. p. 780.

(F.) Powers and duties of the Boards of Revenue as courts of wards, App. p. 794.

Part the Second: Land Revenue.—Special.

(A.) Special Revenue Regulations for Benares, and certain districts in the Lower Provinces, App. p. 799.

(B.) Special Revenue Regulations for the Ceded and Conquered Provinces, Bundelcund and Kumaon, App. p. 807.

(C.) Special Revenue Regulations for Cuttack, App. p. 822.

Part the Third: Land Revenue.—Miscellaneous.

Miscellaneous rules in the Revenue Department, App. p. 825.

See also 'Land Revenue.' 'Promotion.'

Revenue Laws. Method of forming of code of, Bayley 892.

Revenue Secretary. Proposed addition of two deputies to the office of, for the purpose of transacting the business of commissioner of revenue, established by Regulation I. 1829, and of the sudder board of revenue, Ross, App. p. 372, par. 38.—Opinion by the Governor-general, that if an arrangement should be made for dividing the administration of the Upper and Lower Provinces, that the secretary of the Revenue department may conduct the whole correspondence with the commissioners in the Lower Provinces; but if no such separation should take place, the details would too much overload the Government, App. p. 416.

Revenue Suits. Regulation VII. 1828, Limiting power of the rajah of Benares in revenue suits, App. p. 644.

See also 'Benares.' 'Summary Suits.'

Ricketts, Mr. Paper containing copies of a letter from Mr. Ricketts, agent of East-India to Sir A. Johnston, on 6th May 1830, and Sir A. Johnston's answer, explaining the line of policy he would advise the British Government to adopt with respect to all East Indians in British India, Johnston, p. 238.

Rights and Tenures. Manner in which litigation is caused in courts, by disputed claims connected with the rights, tenures, and interests of the proprietors and occupiers of land, App.

App. p. 65, 66, par. 12—16—Observations upon the measures taken for the formation and preservation of an accurate record of the rights and interests of the different classes who own or occupy land, with a view to the attainment of greater facility in the adjudication of those rights by the judicial tribunals, App. p. 85.

Road Labour. Employment on the road for prisoners confined in gaols at Bombay, has been almost wholly discontinued; it was found comparatively unprofitable, and diminished the effect of punishment, by the liberty of intercourse it gave to the prisoners with their friends, besides the strong guards it required to watch them, Malcolm, App. p. 449.

ROBBERY.

I. Bengal.

Method to be adopted in cases of robbery by violence, and other heinous and dangerous crimes; of giving power to magistrates, thanadars, and others, for the investigation and punishment thereof, Ross, App. 377, par. 59.

II. Madras.

Number of crimes of, ascertained to have been committed, offenders not discovered, and number punished, 1826—1829, App. p. 38—Number of cases of robbery and murder, and of robbery, and number acquitted and convicted by the circuit court, and by the Foujdarry Adawlut, in certain years; viz. 1813, App. p. 188; 1814, App. p. 190; 1815, App. p. 192; 1825, App. p. 196; 1826, App. p. 198; 1827, App. p. 200—Abstract of the whole, App. p. 202—Statement of the number of persons apprehended and delivered over to the criminal judges, 1825—1827, charged with robbery and murder, and robbery, App. p. 206, 207.

See also 'Crime.'

Rohilcund. Proposed distribution of the country into divisions, to be placed under separate revenue commissioners, each to have a covenanted assistant; number of districts, and amount of assessment, App. p. 270.

Rope. Advantage of the establishment of a rope-walk in Tannah gaol, and manner in which it will cause a revenue to Government, Malcolm, App. p. 520—Excellence of the coir-rope when manufactured with the science and care of that furnished by Mr. Renny at Baucoote; the use of this rope is gradually superseding that from England, for use in the Indian navy; great saving thereof to Government, Malcolm, App. p. 450 (note).

Ross, A. Minute of A. Ross, Esq., one of the judges of the Sudder Adawlut, in reference to Mr. Bayley's minute, proposing plan for the improvement of the administration of civil justice; expectation of carrying on the administration of civil and criminal justice by the aid of Europeans only, is utterly fallacious, consequent necessity for extended employment of natives; proposed addition of allowances both to moonsiffs and sudder ameens is too small; objections to limiting the powers of moonsiffs and sudder ameens to 5,000 rupees; confining to the European zillah courts the cognizance of all original suits exceeding 5,000 rupees, will subject parties in causes exceeding the proposed limit to all the disadvantages and evils of imperfect investigation and dilatory decision now experienced; advantages of the dissolution of the provincial courts; establishing a sudder court in the Western Provinces is objectionable and unnecessary, as the end in view may be better attained and at a less expense, by adding to the number of judges of the sudder court at the presidency, App. p. 364—366.

Necessity for the judicial and revenue authorities being separated, the latter being made subject to the former; improvements suggested in the Revenue department; advantage of attachment over public sale in cases of arrears of revenue; advantages of settlements being made for long periods; proposal as to landholders engaging with Government granting leases for twenty-five years; method to be adopted for effecting a temporary settlement; tlement ; proposed salaries of revenue commissioners ; office of commissioner of revenue established by Regulation I. 1829, and sudder board of revenue might be abolished, the duties being transferred to the office of secretary in the Revenue or Territorial department ; office of commissioner established by Regulation III. 1828, might be abolished, the suits committed to their cognizance being more satisfactorily investigated before the ordinary tribunals ; saving in the revenue by the adoption of the proposed system, App. p. 366—372.

Improvements suggested in the administration of civil justice ; moonsiffs and sudder ameens should try all descriptions of suits and for any amount ; proposed powers of appeal to the zillah court ; salaries to be attached to the offices of moonsiff, sudder ameen, and zillah judge of appeal ; litigants to prosecute or defend their suits either in person or by agent ; regulation with regard to pleaders' fees ; number of original suits instituted in the Lower and Western Provinces in 1828 ; estimate of number of original causes of all descriptions to be decided on trial of their merits under proposed arrangement ; also estimate of the business of appeal of the zillah courts ; improvements suggested in the administration of criminal justice ; proposed jurisdiction of the police and magistrates in cases of theft or robbery unattended with personal violence ; the like in cases of murder, robbery by violence, or other heinous and dangerous crimes ; powers to be vested in zillah magistrates ; powers to be vested in zillah criminal judges ; proposed scale of government police establishments ; estimate of business of the sudder court under the proposed arrangement ; necessity for an addition to the number of judges of the sudder court, App. p. 372—381.

Schedule, showing the amount of the present and proposed establishments of the revenue and judicial administration of the provinces, subject to the operation of the Bengal Code of Regulations, App. p. 381—Extracts from a minute of Mr. Ross, judge of the court of Nizamut Adawlut, relative to the administration of criminal justice in the provinces subject to the Bengal Government, dated 21st July 1827 ; necessity for witnesses being examined in criminal cases on the spot where the crime committed, with a view of arriving nearer the truth ; necessity for the office of darogah being properly filled, App. p. 388.

Extracts from a letter from the Secretary to Government in the Judicial department to the register of the court of Nizamut Adawlut, dated 12th September 1827, communicating observations of Government on the suggestions contained in the minute above quoted from, App. p. 389—Extracts from a minute by Mr. Ross, judge of the court of Nizamut Adawlut, dated 5th February 1828 ; observations upon the practice of magistrates giving judgment upon written depositions without having the witnesses before them, App. p. 389—392.

See also ' Sylhet.'

Rungpore. Salaries of the judges of the zillah and city courts at, in the years 1813 and 1829, App. p. 456, 459—Civil suits depending at the beginning and end of 1813, and instituted, decided, and adjusted during that year in the zillah court at Rungpore, App. p. 474, 475—Abstract of the total number of regular civil suits and appeals depending and decided or adjusted in the zillah court at Rungpore in the year 1828, App. p. 481—Regular civil suits depending at the beginning and end of 1828, and admitted or rejected and disposed of during that year by the judges and other officers of the zillah court at Rungpore, App. p. 484, 485—Statement, showing the total value or amount in rupees of regular suits, whether original or in appeal, depending in the civil court at Rungpore on 1st January 1829, App. p. 488—Abstract statement of summary suits disposed of during the year 1828, and depending on the 1st January 1828 and 1829, in the civil courts at Rungpore, App. p. 500, 501.

Statement of crimes ascertained to have been committed in Rungpore in 1813 ; number of persons supposed to have been concerned ; number apprehended and committed for trial and computed amount of property stolen and recovered, App. p. 506—in the year 1828, App. p. 508, 509—Statement of the number of persons committed for trial and convicted before the courts of circuit, and number apprehended and punished by the magistrates and their assistants for minor offences in Rungpore, in the year 1828, App. p. 512, 513—Number of prisoners in gaol at Rungpore on 31st December 1828, and causes of their confinement, App. p. 526.

See also 'Sylhet.'

Rutnagherry Gaol. Is constructed on the most approved plan; pains taken to render it healthy and to give work to those confined therein, Malcolm, App. p. 449.

Ryots. Their rights to the soil, and powers of the zemindars over them, Fortescue 477, 478, 482—493, 496—533—Injuries to which they are exposed from excess of collections or undue exactions made from them by the zemindars and their under-tenants, one cause of extended litigation, App. p. 65, par. 8—Manner in which the law of arrest should be amended to prevent the abuse attendant thereon, by putting the court in possession of the plaintiff's case before the ryot is thrown into gaol, or some cause of detention shown, instead of his being committed at the mere application of the zemindar, being in the mean time ejected of his tenure, his property distrained and sold, and himself turned out of gaol a beggar, soon to be brought in again as a robber, Turnbull, App. p. 396.

See also 'Courts, I.' 'Khoodcasht Ryots.' 'Leases.' 'Regulations.' 'Rent.' 'Zemindars.' 'Zemindarry Settlements.'

S.

SALARIES.

I. Generally.

Native judicial situations not sufficiently remunerated; their rates of pay, Oldham 538—543—Salaries of commissioners of circuit, zillah judges, magistrate, and assistant, Hamilton 878—881.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

1. Generally.

Suggestions respecting salaries, under a plan for changing the system of administration of the revenue, App. p. 272—281—Statement showing the increase and decrease of expense in allowances to covenanted civil servants that will result from the proposed appointment of a general revenue board and of commissioners of revenue and circuit, with eventual alteration in the office of judge of appeal, App. p. 350—Proposed extension of allowances to moonsiffs and sudder ameens upon extending their duties, in order to give them a proper and liberal encouragement, Bayley, App. p. 355, 360; Ross, App. p. 364; Turnbull, App. p. 393—Total amount of salaries of the judges of the provincial courts, App. p. 357.

Allowances proposed by Mr. Bayley, for both moonsiffs and sudder ameens are too small, and by increasing but little the inducement to discharge their duties faithfully will not produce any material effect in raising the character of the native tribunals, Ross, App. p. 365; Turnbull, App. p. 393; Rattray, App. p. 404—Proposed salary to revenue commissioners under proposed plan for periodical settlement in the Western Provinces, Ross, App. p. 372, par. 35—Proposed salaries and allowances for establishments of moonsiffs, sudder ameens, and zillah courts of appeal under proposed arrangement, Ross, App. p. 372, 373—Impolicy of employing irresponsible individuals on low salaries; necessity for increasing the salaries of the head native officers of collectors' establishments, App. p. 411.

2. Relating to Bengal.

Salaries of the judges of the Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut; of the six provincial vincial courts ; of the zillah and city courts at Bengal, in the year 1813, App. p. 454, 455

—The like in 1829, including the commissioners of revenue and circuit, App. p. 456—461.

3. Relating to Madras.

Salaries of the judges of the Sudder and Foujdarry Adawlut, and the provincial and zillah courts at Madras, in the year 1813, App. p. 464—The like in 1829, including the auxiliary courts, App. p. 465—467.

4. Relating to Bombay.

Salaries of the judges of the Sudder Dewanny and Foujdarry Adawlut, and judges of the several courts, under the presidency of Bombay, in the years 1813 and 1829, App. p. 469, 470.

See also 'Judges.' 'Moonsiffs.' 'Promotion.' 'Sudder Ameens.'

SALES OF ESTATES.

I. Generally.

Reluctance of Government to sell ancient zemindaries in Madras, and in case of arrears have taken the zemindars' affairs into their own hands, Hill 269—275—Sequestration has answered better than sale, Hill 281—No fear of loss to the revenue, if power of sale for arrears removed, Hill 282—285.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

Observations upon regulations passed for the correction of various irregularities arising out of the practice of realizing arrears of revenue due to Government by public sale, App. p. 88, 89, par. 129—135—Revision of public sales to be prosecuted by the revenue commissioners, with the agency of the collectors or subordinate revenue officers, App. p. 261, par. 6—Sales in the Western Provinces seldom made at present; their final confirmation should be reserved to Government; they may operate as a severe forfeiture in individual cases, and if numerous, may affect the peace of the country; local commissioners to authorize usual advertisements in provincial and permanently-settled districts, giving the Board a special power of appeal; transmission of sale statements in many districts from their enormous bulk is an useless and cumbrous form; sales under decrees of court should be made by order of local commissioners with reference to the Board or Government, App. p. 267.

Evils to Government and distress to individuals, caused by the revolution attendant upon public sales; compensation that should be made to parties suffering therefrom, App. p. 347—Observations upon Regulation I. 1821, and reasons urged by Government for the upholding that Regulation, on the ground of injury done during the first two triennial settlements, by forced permutations of property through iniquitous practices, by which public sales and transfers were procured; the unbounded influence of tehsildars, and the perversion of such influence for the purposes of personal aggrandizement; period to which the limit of those sales fixed, Leycester, App. p. 362, par. 24, 26, 29—Remarks by the late Mr. Dorin against the above Regulation, from its casting an undeserved slur on the established courts, their constitution, and proceedings; from its unavoidably doing away with all confidence on the part of the natives in the stability of the laws, and the tenet of property; the confusion the property of the country will be thrown into in consequence of evils of the unlimited discretion placed in the commissioners; constitution of the courts dangerous and difficult, Leycester, App. p. 362, par. 25—Proposition for having recourse to attachment instead of advertisement for sale in cases of arrears of revenue in the Western Provinces; disputes among the co-sharers having an interest in the estate being the most frequent cause of arrears; attachment is the only process by which revenue can be secured; manner in which attachments should be judiciously carried into execution; further advantages of the adoption of such a plan, App. p. 369.

See also 'Debts.' 'Divisions of Land.' 'Zemindars.'

Salmon, Mr. Extract from a minute by Mr. Salmon, member of the Board of Revenue of the Lower Provinces, against the transfer of magisterial duties to collectors, App. p. 108, par. 189.

Salsette. Salary of the judge at Salsette, in the year 1812-13, App. p. 469.

Salt. Observations upon regulations vesting officers in the Salt department with judicial powers in cases of complaints or informations for recovery of fines and penalties for illicit dealings in salt, App. p. 90, par. 144.

Salt and Opium Board. Opinion of the Governor-general in favour of the recommendation of the Finance Committee for the substitution of a single Commissioner for the Board of Salt and Opium, and for transfer of the duties now exercised by the same Board, under the designation of the Marine Board to the Military Board, and of all the executive duties of the Marine Department to the master attendant, App. p. 416.

Sarun. Salaries of the judges of the zillah and city courts at, in the years 1813 and 1829, App. p. 456, 459.—Salaries of the commissioners of revenue and circuit at, in the year 1829, App. p. 457.

Sauger and Nerbudda Territories. Bengal Regulations have not extended to those territories; object has been to maintain in vigour such of the native institutions as could be rendered available for the purposes of good government, particularly punchayets; difference in the opinion of assistants with regard to punchayets; not safe to refer any criminal cases thereto; cases that are usually referred thereto; intrigues of parties prevent decision, App. p. 73—75, par. 47—59.

Schools, Public. If writers selected from public schools, the required legal qualification might be obtained by private study, Mackenzie 185, 186.

See also 'Patronage.'

Scotch Bar. Advantage of mixing gentlemen connected therewith, in a legislative council, Melville 714.—Advantages of professorships for educating young men for judicial situations, similar to those at Edinburgh for educating men for the Scotch bar, Johnston 1128.

Seasut. See 'Example.'

Secretary. See 'Territorial Secretary.'

Sealey, C. T. Minute by C. T. Sealey, Esq., one of the judges of the Sudder Adawlut, in answer to Mr. Bayley's minute; advantage of establishing a Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut in the Upper Provinces, from the satisfaction it would give the people in those provinces having occasion to resort to the court, and would be hailed by all classes as a great boon; great evils of abolishing the provincial courts, particularly as it would make the present Sudder Adawlut more incapable of getting through its business, if it had the business of the provincial courts transferred to it; disadvantages of increasing the business of the zillah and city courts; disadvantage of allowing native judges to decide suits to an unlimited amount, from the alarm, dissatisfaction, and distrust that would be caused among the native subjects thereby, App. p. 400.

Courts superintended by Europeans are generally preferred; courts of moonsiffs and sudder ameens should be left as they are, and a superior class of sudder ameens appointed to decide suits from 1,000 to 5,000 rupees; appeals from the decision of the moonsiffs, to be made to the sudder ameens of the first class, open to special appeal to the zillah and city judges; manner in which assistance of junior civil servants might be made use of; proposed extent of their jurisdiction; offices of judge, magistrate, and collector, should be separate in each district; changes to be declared permanent, in order to allay distrust among the natives; advantages of Lord Cornwallis's plan, and evils of breaking in upon his system, App. p. 401, 402.

Secret Larceny. See 'Larceny.'

Security. Regulation VIII. 1818, Enacted for the purpose of defining more exactly the power to be exercised in the requisition of security for good behaviour; cases in which security to be required, amount thereof, and general regulations relating thereto, App. p. 686—Regulation VIII. 1808, Providing for the taking security for good behaviour of persons liberated after a charge of gang-robbery, App. p. 707.

See also 'Detainers.'

Seharunpore. Information relative to the state of property as existing under a variety of tenures therein, is more satisfactorily shown in the Reports of Mr. Cavendish, who had been trained in the Delhi territory, than is to be found in the accumulated records of twenty years, and have been recognized by Government as possessing the highest value, App. p. 346—Revenue and judicial administration of Seharunpore, was for a considerable time imperfectly calculated to meet exigencies; disorders occasioned by the usurpations of the revenue farmers and sudder malgoozars, and by the abuses of an ill-controlled police, are still but imperfectly corrected; means of remedying those evils, App. p. 346—Salaries of the judges of the zillah and city courts at, in the years 1813 and 1829, App. p. 456, 461—Regulation IV. 1828, Re-establishment of the zillah North Seharunpore, App. p. 649.

Sentences. Comparative statement of sentences for offences against property, and against the person, and other crimes, passed by the courts of circuit in Bengal 1816—1826, Bayley, p. 134; App. p. 26, 27—Comparative statement of sentences for offences against property, and against the person, and other crimes, passed by the magistrates in the Lower and Western Provinces of Bengal, 1826 and 1827, Bayley, p. 135; App. p. 26, 27.

(No. 1.) List of persons sentenced by criminal courts in Bengal, to transportation or imprisonment, 1816—1827, Bayley, p. 136.

(No. 2.) List of persons sentenced to temporary imprisonment, arranged according to the sentences, extracted from Table 1, Bayley, p. 137.

(No. 3.) Extract from statements, ordered by the House of Commons to be printed, 23d February 1829, showing the number of persons in England and Wales sentenced to death, transportation, or imprisonment, in seven years, 1822—1828, Bayley, p. 137.

(No. 4.) Summary of the numbers in Table 3, arranged under heads to correspond nearly with those of Tables 1 and 2, Bayley, p. 138.

(No. 5.) Summary of the numbers in Table 1, for four years, viz. of those referring to the Nizamut Adawlut and Magistrates, 1824—1827, and of those referring to the courts of circuit, 1823—1826, Bayley, p. 138.

(No. 6.) Total of the numbers in Table 3, for four years, 1825—1828, and of those in Table 5, for four years, 1823—1826 and 1824—1827 compared, Bayley, p. 139.

(No. 7.) Yearly average of the numbers in Table 6, and the same in proportion to the population of the two countries, supposing England and Wales to contain thirteen millions of inhabitants, and the Bengal provinces sixty millions, Bayley, p. 139—In Ireland, Bayley, p. 140—State of crime, sentences, and averages to population in France and Austria, Bayley, p. 140—In Spain, Bayley, p. 140.

(No. 8.) Sentences to death or imprisonment for life, in the Lower and Western Provinces of Bengal, compared, Bayley, p. 141.

(No. 9.) Sentences to death, and transportation or imprisonment for life, in six years ending 1827; and executions in the same period in England and Wales, and in the Lower and Western Provinces of Bengal, compared; also the yearly averages, and the same in proportion to the population, supposing the Lower Provinces to contain forty millions, and the Western Provinces twenty millions of inhabitants, Bayley, p. 142.

Number of persons punished by the criminal judges and superior courts in the Old Provinces and the Deccan, and nature of the punishments, 1825—1828, App. p. 686.

Sequestration.

Sequestration. See 'Sales of Estates.'

Settlements. Suggestions that commissioners should report to the Board for eventual reference to Government, all orders issued or decisions passed by them on important points of general application; reports should be made by October in each year, of work done by the collector in the preceding season, with the required statement by the commissioners to the Board, and by the latter to Government; the Board should be furnished for reference, with minutes of settlement for each village and with printed forms, App. p. 267—In the event of periodical settlements in the Western Provinces and in Cuttack being continued, the period between the adjustment should be long; suggestion for the period of settlements not permanent, being twenty-five years, that being the period supposed to be required for a return with the ordinary rate of profit, of capital laid out on land with a view to permanent improvement, App. p. 370, 371.

Landholder engaging with Government to be competent to grant leases for twenty-five years; which leases, although extending beyond the term of the Government settlement during which they might be granted, should not be liable to be annulled at the formation of the new settlement on certain conditions; manner in which such an assessment would be nearly as favourable as a permanent settlement; statement of the objects to be accomplished in forming a temporary settlement on the principle above suggested, Ross, App. p. 370—372, par. 28—40—In cases of waste lands or in a backward state of cultivation, their improvement and advancement may be encouraged by periodical settlements until they yield an adequate revenue, and reach that state in which a permanent settlement would be unobjectionable; periodical settlements should be made for long periods, Metcalf, App. p. 443.

See also 'Sales of Estates.' 'Zemindary Settlement.'

Shakespeare, Mr. Particulars of his plan for establishment of village police, independent of the power of the zemindars, App. p. 94, par. 169, 170—Extract from his police report of 1819, upon the necessity of disuniting the offices of judge and magistrates, the duties of each being incompatible with the other, App. p. 111, par. 206.

Sheristadar. His duty, Mackenzie 463—466.

Sholapore. Salary of the senior assistant judge at Sholapore in the year 1828-29, App. p. 470.

Shoorb. See 'Drunkenness.'

Sirdars' Claims, Agent for. Jurisdiction of the agent for sirdars' claims extended by Regulation I. of 1831, to the cognizance of suits connected with the land in certain cases, and which, by General Regulations, were under the collector; disapprobation by the court of adopting those measures without previous reference home; distinct report to be sent home respecting these alterations, App. p. 60, 61, par. 48, 49—General reports of business in the civil courts to include an account of cases before the agent for sirdars' claims, App. p. 61, par. 51.

SLAVERY.

I. Generally.

Suggestions relative to slavery in the East-Indies, Johnston 1152, 1153.

II. Ceylon.

Abolition of domestic slavery in Ceylon, Johnston 1115—Number of slaves in Ceylon in 1816, Johnston 1153—Account of measures adopted by Sir Alexander Johnston for the abolition of domestic slavery on the island of Ceylon, Johnston, p. 206—Paper containing extracts from the eleventh report of the Directors of the African Institution, and from the appendix, and giving a detailed account of the circumstances connected with the resolution passed on the 15th July 1816, by proprietors of domestic slaves in Ceylon, declaring free all children born of their slaves after 12th August 1816, Johnston, p. 268.

Extract

Extract letter from Sir Alexander Johnston, dated 22d July 1816, Johnston, p. 239—Letter from same to the Dutch special jurymen of the province of Columbo, dated 10th July 1816, p. 239—Their answer, dated 14th July 1816, p. 240—Resolutions of Dutch special jurymen at a meeting held at Columbo on 15th July 1816, for the eventual emancipation of children born of slaves, p. 241—Answer of Sir A. Johnston, dated 21st July 1816, to address of Dutch special jurymen, p. 242—Answer of Sir A. Johnston, dated 22d July 1816, to address by the jurymen of the different castes of natives at Columbo, Johnston, p. 242.

Smith, C. His opinion in favour of establishing a separate Court of Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut in the Western Provinces, App. p. 82, par 110.

Soldiers. See 'Native Soldiers.'

Spain. Statement of offences which have formed the subject of judicial proceedings in Spain in 1826, Bayley, p. 140.

See also 'Population.'

STAMPS.

I. Generally, or relating to Bengal.

Nature of institution and miscellaneous stamps, Mackenzie 426, 427—The present authorized stamp duties as affecting the usual costs of suit in the zillah and city courts are not oppressive, or such as discourage the prosecution of just claims; further observations relative to stamp duties, App. p. 82, par. 106—Manner in which the value of stamped paper, used under proposed arrangement for better administration of justice, will diminish or reduce to nothing the expenditure as compared with the object in view, Leycester, App. p. 361—Proposal that the levy of fees payable under existing regulations on the institution and during the trial of suits and appeals, should be postponed till after the decision of the question in litigation, and then levied, with other costs, from the losing party; advantages of such a plan, Ross, App. p. 374—Moonsiffs are remunerated for their trouble in the trial of such suits as may be referred to them by the full value of the stamped paper on which the plaint may have been written, App. p. 462.

Regulation VI. 1797, Establishing a stamp duty on law papers and money securities, App. p. 636—Regulation X. 1797, Extension of stamp duties to criminal cases, App. p. 637—Regulation VII. 1800, Further extension of stamp duties on money securities, App. p. 637—Regulation LXIII. 1803, Modification of the rules for stamps on law papers, App. p. 638—Regulation I. 1814, Consolidated and amended stamp regulation, App. p. 638—Regulation III. 1817, Diminishing rate of stamps and fees on petty suits, App. p. 640—Regulation XVI. 1824, Extended application of stamps to securities, &c., App. p. 640—Regulation XII. 1826, Stamp duties prescribed within the town of Calcutta, App. p. 640—Regulation X. 1829, Consolidation of previous rules, App. p. 641—Regulation XIII. 1806, For the prevention and punishment of the forgery of stamps, and of the unauthorized sale of them, by providing for the appointment of special agents, under written sunnuds from the magistrates, and rendering it penal to vend stamps without such appointment; trial and punishment of persons charged with forging or uttering forged stamped paper, App. p. 706.

II. Relating to Bombay.

Fluctuations in the number of suits in courts in consequence of the changes in the regulations relative to stamps; opinion by Mr. Elphinstone in favour of removing the tax from suits under the value of 100 rupees; observations upon the propriety of the same made for the removal of the stamp tax on those suits, and disadvantages of it, rescinded, App. p. 53—56.

See also 'Decrees.' 'Fees.'

State Offences. Regulation by which provision has been made for bringing prisoners under the revision of Government cases of all prisoners confined by the Government for reasons of state, and for their being properly treated while in custody App. p. 118, par. 246.

Statutes. See 'Legislation.'

Stealth. See 'Larceny.'

Stolen Property. Powers vested in magistrates for trial of persons charged with buying or receiving stolen property under a certain amount, App. p. 116, par. 232—Statement of crimes ascertained to have been committed in the several zillahs; the number of persons supposed to have been concerned, and the computed amount of property stolen and recovered, in the year 1813; also the number of persons concerned in those crimes, who were apprehended and brought to trial in the Western Provinces, App. p. 506.

Strachey, Sir Henry. See 'Allahabad.'

Stuart, Mr. Remarks by, on the advantages of establishing a separate court of Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut in the Western Provinces, App. p. 83, par. 113.

Study of the Laws. See 'Judicial Offices.' 'Laws.'

Sub-collectors. See 'Collectors.'

Subdivisions of Land. See 'Divisions of Land.'

Succession. See 'Fees.' 'Inheritance.'

SUDDER AMEENS.

I. Generally.

Jurisdiction thereof, Clarke 69; Mackenzie 120, 121—Distinction between it, and the court of moonsiffs, and to whom appeals lie, Clarke 71—73—Their character, and amount of salary, Mackenzie 119; Oldham 568—Sudder ameens are generally men of talent and judicial knowledge: principles on which their decisions are guided, Mackenzie 124—126—How appointed, Mackenzie 137, 138—The amount of their jurisdiction might be increased, Oldham 591—Their establishment in 1803, Bayley 882—Present powers and proposed increase thereof, Bayley 882.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

1. Bengal.

Number of suits instituted therein, 1814—1820, App. p. 1; 1821—1824, App. p. 9; 1825—1827, App. p. 2—Comparison of suits instituted, 1814 and 1815—1817, App. p. 2—Suits decided 1814—1821, App. p. 3; 1821—1824, App. p. 9; 1825—1827, App. p. 28—Suits depending at the beginning of 1815—1821, App. p. 5; 1821—1824, App. p. 9; 1825—1827, App. p. 28—Comparison of suits instituted and decided, 1817—1820, and 1821—1824, App. p. 10—Statement of the number of foudjarry cases referred, under Regulation III. 1821, to the law-officers and sudder ameens of the several zillahs in the Western Provinces, and decided by them in 1827 and 1828, App. p. 516—Regular civil suits depending at the beginning and end of 1828, and admitted or re-admitted and disposed of during that year before the sudder ameens, in the Lower Provinces of Bengal, App. p. 484, 485—The like in the Western Provinces, App. p. 486, 487.

Reduction of arrears and delay therein, App. p. 6—Manner in which their jurisdiction might be extended, App. p. 13—Rules regarding the duties of these officers revised, amended, and consolidated into one regulation by Regulation XXIII. of 1814; nature of their duties; extended by Regulation II. of 1821, App. p. 77, par. 78—Greater powers with which they are invested by Regulation II. of 1821, and Regulation XIII. of 1824; increase of their salaries, and advantages thereof; aid rendered by these officers to the magistrates, App. p. 81, par. 87—92—Situation of sudder ameens more respectable in point of salary as in other respects; manner in which their proceedings are strictly superintended by magistrates, App. p. 114—Comparison of the powers powers of sudder ameens at Madras and Bengal, and advantages of extended powers of the latter, App. p. 126, pars. 7, 8.

Proposed extension of powers to 1,000 rupees generally, and appeals from the moon-siffs as before, Bayley, App. p. 355, 358—Office of register proposed to be discontinued, and special sudder ameens established for determining suits from 1,000 to 5,000 rupees, and appeals from the ordinary sudder ameens, Bayley, App. p. 355, 358—Establishment of the office of sudder ameens in 1803, who were invested with power to determine claims referred to them for real and personal property to the amount of 100 rupees; further extension of their powers in subsequent years, Bayley, App. p. 353.

They are now generally men of experience and legal learning; they are assimilated in religion, manners, habits, and customs with the people, and they are generally regarded with respect and confidence, both by Europeans and natives, Bayley, App. p. 353; Ross, App. p. 364—If they meet with liberal and due encouragement, their agency may be safely employed to a greater extent than at present in the administration of justice; consideration necessary as to the extent to which their powers may be enlarged without occasioning the evils arising from too sudden and violent change in the established system, and also what other modifications will be necessary to adapt the system to such an alteration, Bayley, App. p. 354.

Agreement in the principles of Mr. Bayley's minute on the subject of sudder ameens; their salaries should be fixed; officers on the establishment and their allowances should be also fixed and controlled as to appointment and removal by the zillah judges, under certain rules; they should be prohibited acting through other agency, and the officers of the establishment should be liable for malversation, as all other officers, Leycester, App. p. 360—Disadvantages of a secondary class of sudder ameens, Leycester, App. p. 360—Sudder ameens should sign their own processes, use a public seal, and no witness should be examined excepting in their presence, Leycester, App. p. 361.

Indispensable necessity for increasing the allowances; but those proposed by Mr. Bayley are too small, and will but little increase the inducement they now have to discharge their duties faithfully, and consequently will not produce any material effect in raising the character of the native tribunals, Ross, App. p. 365—They should have jurisdiction in cases of both real and personal property, it being necessary that every facility should be afforded for obtaining a speedy adjustment of both description of claims; much benefit derivable from the courts of sudder ameens will be lost by the proposed limitation of their powers to the trial of suits not exceeding 5,000 rupees, Ross, App. p. 365.

Proposed establishment in every zillah of one superior court of primary jurisdiction, denominated the sudder ameen's court; extent of its jurisdiction and salary of the judge, Ross, App. p. 372, par. 42—Suggestion for increasing their jurisdiction above 5,000 rupees, if properly superintended by European courts, Turnbull, App. p. 394—Suggestion for the establishment of two classes of sudder ameens; their proposed duties and salaries, and number of each class necessary, Turnbull, App. p. 398—Advantage of leaving the present sudder ameens as they are and appointing a superior class of sudder ameens, with extended jurisdiction, as proposed by Mr. Bayley, Sealey, App. p. 401.

Magistrates may refer to them for trial all complaints of abusive language, calumny, considerable assaults or affrays, and petty thefts; powers of punishment; suits to the value of 1,000 rupees referred to them for trial; appeals from decisions of moon-siffs referred to them; prohibited from taking cognizance in any suit in which a British subject, European Foreigner, or American, is a party, App. p. 463—Regulation XLIX. 1805. Relative to their establishment, App. p. 630—Regulation XV. 1805, Declaring officers to be ex officio sudder ameens, App. p. 631—Regulations II. 1821, III. 1821, IV. 1827, Extending powers of sudder ameens, App. p. 632—Regulation V. 1801, Establishment of principal and subordinate sudder ameens, with extended jurisdiction, App. p. 633.

2. Relating to Madras.

Number of suits decided before 1827—1829, App. p. 48—Number of suits depending before 1827—1829, App. p. 48—Average delay, App. p. 49—Number of appeals from, instituted 1827—1829, App. p. 49—Number decided, 1827—1829, App. p. 49—Number depending, 1827—1829, App. p. 49—Average delay, App. p. 49—Extract from report of Sudder Adawlut, containing information respecting the courts of sudder ameens, provided for by Regulation VIII. 1816, and subsequent regulations, App. p. 142.

Number of sudder ameens, as they stood on the 1st January 1827, App. p. 173—Number of original causes depending and disposed of, and number of appeals depending and disposed of by sudder ameens, App. p. 174, 175—Statement, showing the years in which the original suits and appeals depending before the sudder ameens on the 1st January 1828, were filed, App. p. 176, 177—Statement, showing the number of regular and special appeals from the decisions of the sudder ameens, preferred to and disposed of by the several zillah courts for 1825, 1826, and 1827 inclusive; and also the manner in which they were disposed of, App. p. 178, 179.

General statement, showing the number of original suits for an amount or value under 500 rupees, and for an amount or value of 10 rupees and under, decided by the zillah judges, registers and sudder ameens, in 1825, App. p. 186, 187—Tables showing the number of suits instituted and decided in the years 1810, 1815, and 1820 and 1825, and depending at the end of each of those years in the Sudder Adawlut, in the provincial courts, and in the courts of the zillah judges, registers, sudder ameens, and moonsiffs, and the average delay of judicature in each class of courts, App. p. 542, 543.

See also 'Appeals.' 'Arrears.' 'Burdwan.' 'Delays.' 'Jessore.' 'Law-Suits.' 'Summary Suits.'

SUDDER DEWANNY, Nizamut or Foujdarry Adawlut.

I. Generally.

Proposed amendment in its proceedings to train the junior servants for the practical administration of justice, Clarke 81, 106, 109—Its knowledge of the proceedings of the lower courts upon reviewing them, Clarke 81, 82, 83—Necessity for English lawyer on the bench of, Clarke 110—Improvement by joining the sudder and supreme courts, Mackenzie 182, 183.

Costs of suit in an appeal to, Mackenzie 421—Reference to, in cases of difference of opinion between judges and law-officers, Melville 684—Proposed improvement therein, Bayley 882, p. 81—Appeals to from the court of circuit; general duties of the court, Bayley, p. 93—Scale showing the manner in which they revise the judgments of inferior courts, Bayley, p. 93—Its jurisdiction; Mill 1042—Is the best tribunal in India, Mill 1048.

II. *Papers laid before the Committee.*1. Generally, or relating to Bengal.

i. Minutes, or observations relating to, or proposing amendments therein.

Minute by W. B. Bayley, Esq., proposing certain alterations in the Revenue and Judicial departments, dated 5th November 1829, App. p. 352—Minutes of the judges of the Sudder Adawlut, in reference to Mr. Bayley's minute, App. p. 359—Of Mr. Leycester, App. p. 359—Of Mr. Ross, App. p. 364—Extract from another minute of Mr. Ross, App. p. 388—Of Mr. Turnbull's minute, App. p. 392—Of Mr. Sealey's minute, App. p. 400—Of Mr. Rattray's minute, App. p. 402.

Observations upon the proposition for forming a separate Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut, in the Western Provinces; proposed constitution thereof; opinions of Mr. Smith, judge of the Benares court of circuit; of the Marquis of Hastings and of Mr.

Stuart thereupon, App. p. 82—85, pars. 107—114—Proposed establishment of two sudder courts, one for the Lower Provinces, on the same establishment as before, and the other for the Western Provinces; proposed constitution thereof, App. p. 359—Necessity for an additional number of judges from the arrears of business therein, more particularly as new arrangements will cause an increase of business therein, Bayley, App. p. 356—Necessity for establishing a separate Sudder Adawlut in the Upper Provinces, the expense of which will be lessened by the abolition of the provincial courts, Bayley, App. p. 357—Increasing the number of judges of the present court will not give such effectual control over remote districts, as establishing a second sudder court, Bayley, App. p. 357—Great saving of expense, by instituting a separate sudder court instead of increasing the judges of the provincial courts, Bayley, App. p. 367.

Objection to the establishment of a second court of Sudder Adawlut, from the impossibility to dissuade the people that there must be a court of last resort at the seat of Government; impossible that a sudder court in the interior can be looked up to with confidence and respect by the European or native public, or by Government, which is essential to its well doing, or that the same sources of intelligence can ever be within its reach, Leycester, App. p. 360—Proposition for the establishing a sudder court in the Western Provinces is both objectionable and unnecessary, as the end in view may be attained not only better but at a less expense, by adding to the number of judges of the sudder court at the presidency: observation showing that little time would be saved in the hearing appeals by its establishment; reasons why adding to the number of judges of the present sudder court should be preferred; economy of such a plan; uniformity in the interpretation of the laws, being essential to its beneficial operation, such is more likely to be preserved by a single controlling tribunal, than by two possessing equal authority; authority of a supreme controlling tribunal must be in proportion to the confidence felt by the people in its decisions, which would be greatest when that court stationed at the presidency; whatever powers the second court might be intrusted with, it would always be considered by the people as subordinate, Ross, App. p. 366, pars. 10—12.

Estimate of civil and criminal business that will probably have to be disposed of by the courts of Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut, under proposed system of civil and criminal jurisdiction, Ross, App. p. 379, par. 70—Necessity for the appointment of a sixth judge, Ross, App. p. 380, par. 72—Proposed powers, and appellate jurisdiction; powers to be intrusted to single judges of the court; particularly with regard to correction of proceedings of subordinate courts, with admitting an appeal pro forma; also proposed extension of jurisdiction of the judges of the Nizamut Adawlut in criminal cases, Turnbull, App. p. 400.

Necessity for the establishment of a Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut in the Upper Provinces, but it must not be purchased at the expense of the abolition of the provincial courts; heavy and oppressive nature of the present business of the sudder court, which difficulty the new court will have to contend with, Sealey, App. p. 400—Presumed advantages from institution of a second Sudder Adawlut, are altogether imaginary; objections thereto, from the Sudder Adawlut having been the one supreme court of the country from the first, from its having been regarded by all classes as a tribunal of the last resort to which they might and did look with confidence, and from its being stationed at the presidency; court in the Upper Provinces will always be considered subordinate, and natives will not consider they have had the same justice they would have had at the presidency; popular feeling of the country decidedly against such a measure; statement of objections to the measure generally, Rattray, App. p. 401.

Disadvantage that will attend the Sudder Adawlut being dependant upon the Government, and its decrees liable to revision thereby, Rattray, App. p. 407—Opinion by the Governor-general against the plan proposed by Mr. Mackenzie, and showing that Regulation II. 1801, on that subject is unalterable, App. p. 409—Opinion of Mr. Blunt against the proposed plan, Blunt, App. p. 423—Proposed constitution of a Sudder a Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut in the Western and Lower Provinces, Blunt, App. p. 436; Metcalf, App. p. 443 — Opinion in favour of maintaining the supreme judicial control in the hands of Government, and evils of its having been abandoned, Metcalf, App. p. 438.

Opinion in favour of the substitution of a Sudder Adawlut for the present provincial courts, Metcalf, App. p. 439 — Jurisdiction of the Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut in 1829; it has cognizance of all matters relating to the administration of criminal justice and police; grants remission or mitigation of punishment where fatwah of law officers unduly severe; no sentence of death, transportation, or perpetual imprisonment, carried into execution without revision of the trial by the Sudder Dewanny; cases in which judges differ from their law-officers, are referred for the orders of the sudder court; empowered to revise proceedings of any of the courts, and suspend judges of the provincial and zillah courts; in civil cases may direct suits exceeding the value of £5,000 to be tried originally before them, but their jurisdiction is chiefly appellate; decision final in all cases, unless the decree appealed against is for a larger sum than £5,000, in which case an appeal lies to the King in Council; cases in which they may admit second or special appeals from the inferior courts; their construction of the Regulations is final, App. 462.

ii. Civil Suits.

Number of suits instituted therein 1814—1820, App. p. 2; 1821—1824, App. p. 9; 1825—1827, App. p. 28 — Comparison of suits instituted 1814 and 1815—1817, App. p. 2 — Suits decided 1814—1820, App. p. 3; 1821—1824, App. p. 9; 1825—1827, App. p. 28 — Suits depending at the beginning of 1815—1821, App. p. 5; 1821—1824, App. p. 9; 1825—1827, App. p. 28 — Comparison of suits instituted and decided 1817—1820 and 1821—1824, App. p. 10 — Suits instituted, decided, and depending at the end of the year, with delay according to the rate of decision in the preceding year, and according to average of the four years 1821—1824, App. p. 11.

General summary of the number of civil suits depending at the beginning and end of 1813, and instituted, and decided or adjusted during that year in the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut and the provincial and zillah courts, App. p. 478 — Abstract of the total number of regular civil suits (including appeals) depending at the beginning and end of 1828, and disposed of during that year in the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, App. p. 480 — A statement of appeals, regular and special, depending and disposed of before the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut in 1828, with the amount of the property in question, App. p. 486 — General abstract statement of regular suits, whether original or in appeal, depending on the 1st January 1828 and 1829 respectively, before the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, App. p. 491.

iii. Criminal Cases.

Statement of the number of persons convicted before the Nizamut Adawlut (specifying their crimes), and of the sentences passed by that court in each year from 1816 to 1827 inclusive, App. p. 518 — Abstract of the returns of persons sentenced to punishment by the court of circuit, without reference to the Nizamut Adawlut, in each year from 1816 to 1826 inclusive, App. p. 520 — Statement of the number of prisoners in the Lower Provinces employed in private labour, agreeably to the orders of the Nizamut Adawlut; showing the amount gained by their labour, and the proportion paid to the prisoners, App. p. 528.

iv. Regulations respecting.

Regulation XXXVII. 1795, Relative to reports to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, of work performed by the subordinate courts, App. p. 602 — Regulation VI. 1793, Constitution and jurisdiction of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, App. p. 621 — Regulation II. 1801, Separation of the legislative and judicial functions of the Government, App. p. 622 — Regulation X. 1805, Chief justice of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut not to be a member of the council, App. p. 622 — Regulation XV. 1807, A member of council council to be chief judge of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, App. p. 623—Regulation XIII. 1810, Powers of single judges of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, App. p. 623—Regulation XII. 1814, Constitution of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut modified, App. p. 623—Regulation XXV. 1814, Amending the constitution and jurisdiction of the Sudder Dewanny and Foujdarry Adawlut, App. p. 623—Regulation IX. 1831, Enlarging the powers of single judges, App. p. 623—Regulation VI. 1831, Establishing a Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut for the Western Provinces, App. p. 650—Regulations upon the constitution and jurisdiction of the Sudder Nizamut Adawlut, App. p. 698—Regulation IX. 1793, and II. 1801, Constitution of the Sudder Nizamut Adawlut, App. p. 698—Regulation IX. 1831, Powers of single judges in the Nizamut Adawlut, App. p. 698.

2. Relating to Madras.

i. Generally.

Letter from register, explaining cause of delay in preparing report upon practical operation of changes in the administration of justice and police, App. p. 129—Another letter from the register, transmitting extract of court's proceedings, App. p. 130—Extract from proceedings of court of Sudder Adawlut, under date 23d April 1829, App. p. 130—Salaries of judges of, in the year 1813 and 1828, 1829, App. p. 464, 465—It is the chief civil and criminal court, with the same jurisdiction as the sudder court at Calcutta, but suits of any amount may be appealed to the King in Council, App. p. 467.

ii. Civil Suits.

Statement of original suits and appeals depending at the beginning and end of 1815, and decided during that year, in the Sudder Adawlut and provincial courts, App. p. 530—Statement to the same effect for the year 1828, App. p. 536—Table, showing the number of suits instituted and decided in the years 1810, 1815, and 1820 and 1825, and depending at the end of each of those years, in the Sudder Adawlut, in the provincial courts, and in the courts of the zillah judges, registers, sudder ameen, and moonsiffs, and the average delay of judicature in each class of courts, App. p. 542, 543.

iii. Criminal Cases.

Acquittals and punishments before the Foujdarry Adawlut, periodically between 1819—1829, App. p. 40—Persons sentenced to death, transportation or imprisonment by the Foujdarry Adawlut, 1819—1829, App. p. 40, 41—Capital sentences passed by the Foujdarry Adawlut, 1803—1818, App. p. 41—Number of cases of murder, robbery and murder, robbery, housebreaking and theft, and number acquitted and convicted by the Foujdarry Adawlut in certain years; viz. 1813, App. p. 188; 1814, App. p. 190; 1815, App. p. 192; 1815, App. p. 196; 1826, App. p. 198; 1827, App. p. 200—Abstract of the whole, App. p. 202—Statement, showing the number of persons apprehended, released and punished, together with the nature of all punishments inflicted by the Foujdarry Adawlut, 1825—1827, App. p. 208, 209.

Statement of the number of trials in which, and of prisoners in whom, sentence was passed by the Foujdarry Adawlut in 1815, and the nature of the sentences, App. p. 543—Statement of the operations of the Foujdaree Adawlut, from 1st January to 30th June 1829, App. p. 548—Statement of the operations of the courts of circuit in the same period: showing the number of acquittals, punishments of different kinds, and references to the Foujdarry Adawlut, in each of the four divisions, App. p. 550—A similar statement, exhibiting the acquittals, punishments, &c. for each crime or misdemeanor, App. p. 606.

3. Relating to Bombay.

Number of suits instituted, decided and depending, 1825—1829, in the Old Provinces and in the Deccan, App. p. 52—Arrears therein; correspondence between the Court and Government relative to the cause thereof, and necessity for prescribing peremptorily enforcing some distinct course, to prevent the accumulation of suits, App. p. 57, 58—Statement of the number of appeals on the file of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, and of the provincial court for Guzerat (since abolished), at the beginning and end of 1829, and disposed of by those courts within that year; also, the pecuniary amount of the appeals decided, App. p. 623—Proceedings taken with regard to the removal of the Sudder Adawlut from Surat to Bombay, and reasons of the Governor being adverse thereto, Malcolm, App. p. 445—Salaries of the judges of the court of Sudder Adawlut, court of circuit and appeal, in the year 1812-13, and of the Sudder Dewanny and Sudder Foudjarry Adawlut, in the year 1828-29, App. p. 469.

See also 'Appeals.' 'Law-Suits' (II. 2.) 'Supreme Court.'

Summary Suits. Summary process cannot be entirely dispensed with, but should be instituted before the collector instead of before the judge; they clog the files of the court, and increase the miscellaneous business, while, with the decision of them, the courts have nothing to do; smallness of the amount, and distance parties reside from the sudder station, occasion inconvenience to the agricultural community, and render it desirable that the means of adjusting revenue suits should be brought home to their own doors, Bayley, App. p. 356—Proposed plan respecting the hearing of summary suits; disadvantages of a summary suit open to regular suit, Leycester, App. p. 360—Necessity for the abolition of Regulation XV. 1824, as not answering its object, as spreading far and wide a system of oppression and chicanery never known before; it holds out inducements to infringe the peace, by its being only through an affray or indication thereof that a man can get his case before a magistrate, and although having no possession, a bribed report from a thannah and some tutored witnesses will give him a chance of ousting the rightful owner, who is taken off his guard, and destitute of defence, by a summary proceeding in a criminal court, Leycester, App. p. 361.

Collectors have never yet speedily decided summary suits for rent, nor are their courts peculiarly adapted for the cognizance of such suits; they are less so than the courts of the zillah judges, the uncertainty of their position rendering them more difficult of access to the parties between whom disputes about the rent arise; summary suits being often decided upon a hasty and imperfect inquiry, must often be wrong, and often made the instrument of oppression, and would not be necessary were the court of moonsiffs placed on a respectable footing; manner in which they would be sooner disposed of in the moonsiffs' courts, Ross, App. p. 367—Number of summary suits instituted in the Lower and Western Provinces of Bengal in the year 1828, Ross, App. p. 374—Observations as to whether summary suits might not be abolished, and all suits of that nature decided on a full investigation of their merits, open to one appeal of right, and another on good cause shown, provision being made for empowering courts, in any stage of the cause, to order summarily what may be necessary for securing the rights of parties, subject to the final award; general remarks upon the present system of summary suits, method of trial, and inconvenience parties subject to, Turnbull, App. p. 394.

Number of summary and regular suits relative to demands and exactions or arrears of rent in the zillah of Burdwan, in Nuddea and in the Twenty-four Pergunnahs, 1815-1816, Turnbull, App. p. 395—Statement of the number of summary suits depending at the beginning and end of 1828, and disposed of during that year, in the several provincial and district courts, App. p. 498—Statement of summary suits under reference to the collectors for adjudication, and disposed of by them, in 1828, App. p. 502—Regulation XLIX. 1793, Directing persons forcibly dispossessed of lands or crops, to prefer their claim before the civil court of the zillah, whereupon the judge was immediately to institute a summary proceeding, taking evidence of the fact of dispossession, and, without inquiry into the merits of the dispossessor's claim, to cause the disputed land to be restored, and damage to be made good, with costs, App. p. 601.

See also 'Law-Suits.' 'Rent.' 'Revenue Suits.' 'Zillah Courts.'

Sugar. See 'Indigo.'

Sunderbunds.

Sunderbunds. Regulation IX. 1816, Appointment of a commissioner in the Sunderbunds, App. p. 806—Regulations XXIII. 1817 and VIII. 1811, Rights in land formed by alluvion and dereliction of waters, App. p. 806.

Superintendent of Legal Affairs. Eminent advantage to Government of the office of superintendent and remembrancer of legal affairs, constituted under Regulation VIII. of 1816, particularly from the able officers by whom it has been filled, App. p. 91, par. 149, 150—Regulation VIII. 1816, Constituting office of superintendent and remembrancer of legal affairs, App. p. 613—Regulation XIII. 1829, Abolishing office of remembrancer of legal affairs, and establishing rules in force previous to the constitution of the office, App. p. 617.

Superintendent of Police. Office of, abolished, as no longer likely to be useful in a degree commensurate with the expense, App. p. 261, par. 5—Office of superintendents to be abolished, and commissioners of revenue and circuit will, for their respective divisions, perform all the duties and exercise all the powers now belonging to the superintendents, with certain exceptions, App. p. 347—Evils of the powers vested in the commissioners of revenue and circuit, as superintendents of police, to commit for trial, and use authority of magistrates, in the former, contrary to express law, trying his own commitments, or some other officer must be appointed; and in the latter, removing the supervision and control deemed necessary safeguards for the people, Leycester, App. p. 363.

Evils of the abolition of the office of superintendent of police, particularly in the Lower Provinces; advantages of such an officer for the control of the police; manner in which he should be selected, and powers with which invested, Blunt, App. p. 422—Proposed appointment of a superintendent of police in the Lower Provinces, Blunt, App. p. 436—Not necessary to revive the office of superintendent of police; local commissioners ought to superintend the police more efficiently than an officer exercising general control; the institution of a separate superintendent of police would place collectors and magistrates under two superiors; and evils thereof: state of the police has not deteriorated since the abolition of the office of superintendent, Metcalfe, App. p. 440, 444.

Superstitious Practices. Regulations for checking superstitious practices, App. p. 727.

SUPREME COURT.

1. Generally.

Proposed plan for a supreme court in the place of the King's court and of the Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut, Mackenzie 170—172—Opinion in favour of the abolition of supreme courts, and reasons, Mill 1035—1040—Suggestions for establishing a supreme court at each of the presidencies, Johnston 1118.—Parts of India in which notice was attracted of disputes between Government and the judges at Bombay, Hill 361, 362—Feeling of the natives with regard to the supreme court, Hill 363, 364.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

Regulation XV. 1806, Directing when magistrates should commit European British subjects, or hold them to bail before the supreme court, they should forward the original depositions to the clerk of the Crown, and copies of them for the information of the Governor-general, App. p. 682.

See also 'Appeals.' 'Legislation.' 'Sudder Dewanny.'

Surat. Disapproval by the governor of Bombay of the plan for removing the Sudder Adawlut from Surat to Bombay; establishment of a court of circuit at Surat, and disapproval thereof by the Court of Directors, and proceedings in consequence, Malcolm, App. p. 445—Excellent management of the civil government at Surat, and efficiency of the police under an influential and experienced native, Malcolm, App. p. 452—

Salary

Salary of the judge and magistrate and of the assistant to magistrate in the year 1812-13, App. p. 469—Salary of the judge and criminal judge, and of the register and assistant, in the year 1828-29, App. p. 469.

Surikah-i-Kobra. See 'Highway Robbery.'

Surikah-i-Soghra. See 'Larceny.'

Suspensions of Revenue. Suspensions of revenue should not be continued without authority of Government beyond the current year, and those allowed by the local commissioners should be immediately reported to the Board, App. p. 267.

Sylhet. Mr. Ross, the revenue officer of Assam and the Hill country to the north-east frontier, vested with power of a judicial and revenue commissioner in the district of Sylhet and a portion of Rungpore, App. p. 262, par. 9—Salaries of the judges of the zillah and city courts at, in the years 1813 and 1829, App. p. 456, 459.

T.

Tannah Gaol. Advantages of fixing a dépôt gaol at the fort of Tannah: local and other advantages for that purpose, Malcolm, App. p. 450.

Tazeer. See 'Penal Correction.'

Tenure of India. See 'Government of India.'

Tenures. See 'Land.' 'Rights and Tenures.'

Tehsildars. Unadvisable at once to discontinue the tehsildarree establishments; those establishments might be maintained on a reduced scale as a temporary arrangement; plan for employing the canoongoes as tehsildars, Ross, App. p. 369.

Proposed appointment of tehsildars and subordinate officers of police and revenue; the office of police thanadars being discontinued in the Western Provinces, Blunt, App. p. 436; Metcalf, App. p. 443.

See also 'Thanadars.'

Territorial Department. List of works in this department, which, since 1817, have been encouraged or patronized by the Bengal Government for education of natives, App. p. 125.

Territorial Secretary. His report upon the defective state of the revenue and judicial system, and suggestions for improvement therein, App. p. 263.

Thanadars. Proposed thannah or mofussil jurisdictions to be maintained under proposed arrangement for administration of criminal justice and amount of salaries, Ross, App. p. 378, par. 64—Concurrence by the Governor-general in the propriety of uniting the office of tehsildar with that of thanadar in those districts where it may be resolved to unite the offices magistrate and collector, App. p. 410—Opinion of Sir C. T. Metcalf in favour thereof, Metcalf, App. p. 439—Opinion by the Governor-general that the present thanadars should not be altogether excluded from employment; best means of improving the condition of the thanadars in the Lower Provinces, recommended to the consideration of the Vice-President in Council, App. p. 410—Number of thannahs under the Bengal presidency and establishment of moonsills, with local jurisdictions corresponding therewith, App. p. 462.

See also 'Tehsildars.'

Theft. Powers vested in magistrates for trial of persons charged with thefts under a certain amount, App. p. 116, par. 232—Number of cases of theft, and number acquitted and convicted by the circuit court and by the Foujdarry Adawlut in certain years: viz. 1813, App. p. 189; 1814, App. p. 191; 1815, App. p. 193; 1825, App. p. 197; 1826, App. p. 199; 1827, App. p. 201—Abstract of the whole, App. p. 202—Statement, showing the number of persons apprehended and delivered over to the criminal judges, 1825—

1827, charged with theft, App. p. 206, 207—Proposed jurisdiction of magistrates and others in cases of theft unattended with personal violence, Ross, App. p. 377, par. 58.

See also 'Crime.'

Titles. Observations upon rules under which all questions relative to the resumption of lands held free of assessment under an invalid or illegal title, are made cognizable by revenue officers, App. p. 89, par. 136, 137—Provision made for investigation of cases where Government revenue is alleged to be appropriated by individuals without a valid title, App. p. 262, par. 7—Regulation VI. 1813, Reference to arbitration of suits regarding title to and possession of land, crops, &c., App. p. 610.

Torture. Instances of torture to obtain confessions and evidence, Campbell 1011—1014; App. p. 221, 224—Description of the kittee or hand torture, and other tortures formerly made use of, Campbell 1016.

Towjhees. Monthly towjhees of collectors should be furnished to the local commissioners corresponding statements in abstracts to be obtained by the board from the accountant's office at the presidency quarterly, or when required, App. p. 268.

Trades. Persons of all classes in gaols in Bombay are compelled to learn useful trades, and must, in many instances, be reclaimed from an idle and vicious life to habits of industry, from their daily instruction and employment, App. p. 449.

TRANSPORTATION:

I. Generally.

List of persons sentenced by the criminal courts in Bengal to transportation, 1816—1827, Bayley, p. 136, 142—Number of persons in England and Wales sentenced to transportation, 1822—1828, Bayley, p. 142.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

Number of persons in the Lower and Western Provinces sentenced to transportation by the Nizamut Adawlut, 1816—1827, App. p. 27—Number of persons sentenced to transportation by the Foujdarry Adawlut at Madras, 1819—1829, App. p. 40; 1825—1827, App. p. 209—Sentence of transportation cannot be carried into execution without a previous revision of the trial by this court, App. p. 462—Regulation XIV. 1811, Abolishing transportation for life beyond sea, and establishing perpetual imprisonment in Allepore gaol, and for employment of the convicts, App. p. 708—Regulation IX. 1813, Restoring the punishment of transportation, and directing those sentenced thereto to be sent to such of the British settlements in Asia as the Governor-general should appoint, App. p. 708.

See also 'Crime.'

Trials. See 'Crime.' 'Law-Suits.'

Truth. Habitual disregard thereof pervading the bulk of the native community, Bayley 945—Proceedings of all tribunals delayed and embarrassed by the notorious disregard for truth generally displayed by natives in giving evidence, App. p. 65, par. 12, App. p. 119, par. 255.

Turnbull, M. H. Minute by M. H. Turnbull, Esq., one of the judges of the Spadder Adawlut, in answer to Mr. Bayley's minute, proposing improvements in the administration of justice, App. p. 392—400.

Twenty-four Pergunnahs. Number of summary and regular suits relative to demands and exactions, or arrears of land rent, instituted in the Twenty-four Pergunnahs, 1815-16, Turnbull, App. p. 395—Salaries of the judges of the zillah and city courts therein in the years 1813 and 1829, App. p. 456, 459—Regulations VII. 1806 and XVI. 1813, Establishing a separate civil court for the Twenty-four Pergunnahs, App. p. 646.

U.

Universities. See 'Patronage.' 'Professorships.'

Usury Laws. Amendment necessary therein, Bayley 897—899.

V.

Vailpund Moonsiff. Number of suits instituted; value of property claimed; fees paid; number of suits dismissed, decreed, and number of razenamahs; and observations thereupon, App. p. 51.

Vakeels. See 'Pleaders, Native.'

Value of Property litigated. See 'Property.'

VILLAGES and HEADS OF VILLAGES:

Papers laid before the Committee.

1. Bengal.

Number of villages in the Bengal Provinces to which the code of regulations extends, App. p. 68, par. 22—No persons therein possessing the influence, authority, &c. appertaining to persons contemplated by the court as the natural or permanent heads of village institutions, App. p. 68, par. 22—Manner in which in Bengal especially the real head of the village is either the proprietor of the village or paid agent of the zemindar, and the oppressor of the cultivating classes by undue exactions; consequent evils of conferring judicial powers on them, App. p. 68, par. 23—Evils anticipated from conferring judicial powers on heads of villages at Madras, App. p. 68, par. 24.

Manner in which the title of mundul, or mocuddum or head of village has been obtained, and difficulty in the way of appointing them village moonsiffs, from the influence of the zemindar, App. p. 68, 69, par. 25—27—Extent of the powers proposed to be invested in heads of villages as village moonsiffs, and manner in which it would produce evils to that class for whose benefit it was intended, App. p. 69, 70, par. 27—31—Maintenance of the village institutions an object of the highest importance, Metcalf, App. p. 439.

2. Madras.

Their powers of authority, and punishment of the potails as heads of villages; authorized to decide without appeal suits to the value of ten rupees; are also empowered with a punchayet to decide any cases which both parties may be desirous of having so settled; number of potails, but very few of them act, App. p. 468.

3. Bombay.

The village system should be strictly maintained, or restored where it has decayed; necessity for the patell being well supported and rendered responsible within his circle; this in all settled countries, where practicable, is the foundation of all good police, and many sacrifices should be made before it is abandoned, for it is familiar to the people and efficient to the object, Malcolm, App. p. 450.

Village Watchmen. Observations relative to grants of land to zemindars and others for remunerating watchmen and police of villages, and particularly as to evils of the system, App. p. 92.

W.

Warden, Mr. His objection to the removal of the stamp tax from suits under Rs. 100 value, on the ground of its being injurious to the revenue, and vexatious to the administration of justice, App. p. 53.

Wards, Court of. Accounts of all estates under the court of wards to be examined and audited by the local commissioners, they furnishing such statements in regard to them as may be required by the court, and remit through the Board all money belonging to wards that are invested in Company's paper by the Government agents, App. p. 368.

Regulations X. 1799, XII. 1799, I. 1800, Constitutions and authority of Court of Wards, App. p. 794.—Regulation XXVI. 1793, Extending period of minority to the end of the eighteenth year, App. p. 796.—Regulation I. 1793, Provision for the care of small estates of disqualified proprietors, and for permitting them to manage their own estates when duly qualified, App. p. 796.—Regulation I. 1793, Declaring the proper objects of the jurisdiction of the Court of Wards, App. p. 797.—Regulation VII. 1796, Profligacy and contumacy not to be grounds for the interference of the Court of Wards, App. p. 797.—Regulation VI. 1822, Appointment of managers by the Court of Wards, App. p. 798.

Watchmen. See 'Village Watchmen.'

WITNESSES.

I. Generally.

Native witnesses give their evidence more with regard to their own interest than the truth, Clarke 85.—Method of examining witnesses, Oldham 611—614; Melville 647—652, 657—659.—Disadvantages in the way of attendance of witnesses, Mill 1046.—Suggestions for improving the practice relative to, Mill 1056, 1059.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

Evils of the extent of their journeys, and necessity for preventing their being unnecessary, App. p. 43.—These inconveniences have been lessened by the extra powers granted to magistrates, App. p. 117, par. 238.—Necessity that witnesses before sudder ameens should only be examined in the presence of the sudder ameena, Leycester, App. p. 301.—Evils of magistrates adjudicating upon the evidence of witnesses not examined before them, but that practice being necessary, advantage of substituting depositions taken by native officers in the mofussil for those taken by native officers at the sudder station of the zillah; from there being a greater check in an examination on the spot where any crime committed, and the truth being more likely to be elicited, Ross, App. p. 388—392.—Regulation IX. 1795, Containing additional rules of practice for ensuring the attendance of witnesses before courts of circuit, especially those on behalf of prisoners, App. p. 682.

See also 'Evidence.'

Works, Public and Private. Regulation XXXIII. 1793, Providing for the repair of certain embankments, and to encourage proprietors to improve embankments, App. 825.—Regulation VI. 1806, Superintendence of public embankments and water-works in each district, vested in a committee, App. p. 826.

Wounding. Regulation XII. 1820, Defining the punishment for wounding, with intent to murder, App. p. 712.

See also 'Maiming.'

Writers. Disadvantages of educating more men for service in India than would be wanted, Hill 341.

See also 'Civil Servants.' 'Schools, Public.'

Wynn, Mr. His plan relative to education, appointment, and qualification of writers, MacKenzie 176—180.—His plan for extending right of sitting on juries to natives within the jurisdiction of the supreme courts of the three Presidencies, founded on a letter from Sir Alexander Johnston, Johnston 1116.

See also 'Patronage.'

Z.

ZEMINDARS.

I. Generally.

493, 496—533—Originally Government collectors, how remunerated, Fortescue 496—
498—Powers and possessions of ancient zemindars, and laws of descent, Hill 243—
253—Influence of zemindars in preventing impartiality in native juries, Oldham 593—598—Zemindars and natives of power would not prevent impartiality in native judicial officers, Fortescue 955.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

Statement of the principal objects contemplated in the draft regulation proposed by
Mr. Harington for more fully declaring and securing the rights of zemindars, ryots, &c., App. p. 66, 67, par. 17—19—Employment of zemindars in the management of the police, in their respective districts, unsafe and inexpedient, App. p. 94, par. 172—Arrests cannot be dispensed with without endangering the rights of zemindars; regulations that should be made upon that subject to prevent the abuse and oppression the right of arrest is frequently made the instrument of, Turnbull, App. p. 326.

See also 'Debts.' 'Juries, Native.' 'Rent.' 'Sales of Estates.' 'Villages.'

Zemindary Settlement. Precipitation in carrying into effect has caused arrears of suits in European courts, Bayley 886—App. p. 65, par. 12—Defect therein in not ascertaining the exact rights of the ryots, Fortescue 506—Observations upon that subject, App. p. 35—Advantage of the permanent settlement whenever it can be effected without manifest sacrifice of revenue, Metcalf, App. p. 442.

See also 'Courts, I.'

Zillahs. Proposed distribution of the country subject to the Behgal code of Regulations into certain zillahs, for the purpose of better administering the Revenue department; proposed number of collectors, their duties and salaries, Ross, App. p. 368—Proposed distribution of the provinces into districts containing a certain extent of population, every ten districts forming a zillah, for the establishment of an efficient system of civil judicature, Ross, App. p. 372, par. 42.

ZILLAH COURTS.

I. Generally.

Their jurisdiction, Mackenzie 121; Mill 1042—Proposed extension thereof, Bayley
882—Natives feel the zillah courts irksome, Hill 396—Cost of suit and defence therein, Mackenzie 421.

II. Papers laid before the Committee.

1. Relating to Bengal.

Tendency of Regulation XIX. of 1817, to relieve superior tribunals, by increasing the amount of suits allowed to be brought in the zillah or provincial courts, App.
p. 91, par. 153, 154—Regulations relative to the constitution and jurisdiction of the zillah and city courts, and general rules of practice in the zillah and other civil courts,
App. p. 594—Regulation III. 1793; As to establishment, constitution, and jurisdiction of zillah and city courts, App. p. 595—Regulation XII. 1808, Limiting jurisdiction of zillah courts to 5,000 rupees, App. p. 609—Regulations XXIV. 1814, and II.
1815, Containing amendments in the constitution and jurisdiction of the zillah courts, App. p. 610—Regulation XIX. 1817, Granting option to sue in the provincial or zillah courts in certain cases, App. p. 614.

2. Relating to Madras.

Appeals from decisions of zillah judges compared with those of registers and sudar ameens, are proportionably few, from parties being subject to inconvenience and expense from distance of provincial court from suitors, and costs being considerable,
App. p. 50—Letter from the Court of Directors to the Madras Government, dated 11th April 1826, upon the subject of the abolition of the zillah courts, App. p. 214—
Answer of the Madras Government, dated 27th April 1827, App. p. 229—Answer to par. 11 of letter from Madras Government of 4th January 1822, relative to want of formal regulation for abolishing zillah courts, App. p. 229.

Minute by Sir T. Munro, extracted from judicial consultations of Madras of 30th January

January 1827, upon that subject, App. p. 233—Minute by J. H. D. Ogilvie, Esq., upon the same subject, App. p. 243—Resolutions of the Government upon the same subject, App. p. 245—Salaries of the judges of the zillah courts, in the year 1813 and 1828—29, App. p. 464, 466—May try original suits to any amount, and hear appeals from inferior jurisdictions as in Bengal; assistant judges limited to the trial of suits not exceeding 5,000 rupees; criminally they may try offences not attended with loss of life or aggravating circumstances; extent of their power of punishment, App. p. 468.

See also 'Appeals.' 'Burdwan.' 'Crime.' 'Law-Suits.

Zillah Court of Appeal. Proposed establishment in every zillah of one court to superintend and regulate the proceedings of the primary courts by hearing appeals from their decisions, denominated the Zillah Court of Appeal; salary of the judge, Ross, App. p. 373, par. 42.

Zillah Judges. Extent of punishment exercised by the zillah judge, Clarke 33, 34—Service of the civil servants previous to their appointment as zillah judge, Clarke 35—Promotion of zillah judge, Hamilton 875—877—Amount of duty assigned to them is greater than they can accomplish, Mill 1043, App. p. 77, par. 74-76—Advantage of zillah judges having concurrent jurisdiction with native judges, Mill 1048—1051.

Manner in which they might afford occasional relief to provincial courts, App. p. 14—Amount of salaries in 1813 and 1829, App. p. 455, 458—Their jurisdiction as judges and magistrates, App. p. 463—Original jurisdiction proposed to be restricted generally to suits the amount of which is not less than 5,000 rupees, and to the cognizance of appeals from the native judicial functionaries; jurisdiction in summary suits for rent transferred entirely to the collector, Bayley, App. p. 358—Regulation III. 1824, Extension of the special powers of zillah registrars, App. p. 615—Objection to the proposition of Mr. Bayley, of confining to the European Zillah Courts the cognizance of suits exceeding 5,000 rupees in amount, Ross, App. p. 358, 365.

Powers proposed to be vested in the zillah criminal judge, for holding sessions of gaol delivery for his zillah, Ross, App. p. 378, par. 62—Necessity for relief to zillah judges, they being the immediate appellate and controlling jurisdiction over the native tribunals, Turnbull, App. p. 393—Proposed salary of zillah judges, and their jurisdiction and powers as civil and criminal judges, Turnbull, App. p. 398—Proposed appointment of a zillah, or city civil and criminal judge, in each district or city in the Western Provinces, Blunt, App. p. 436; Metcalfe, App. p. 443.

Extract from report by Sudder Adawlut, Madras, containing information how far provisions made by Regulation X. of 1816, for constituting the judges of the zillah civil courts to be also criminal judges in their respective zillahs, have answered the purpose, App. p. 148.

Zillah Magistrates. Proposed duties and powers of Zillah Magistrates in criminal cases, Ross, App. p. 377—Regulation II. 1796, Declaring zillah and city magistrates to be justices of the peace, and providing as such that they should receive complaints from European British subjects, having first duly qualified by taking the necessary oaths, App. p. 681.

